Serena: “With Balleroy’s absence, considering that no flying dragon squadron composed of undead has emerged, the value in retaining my living flying dragon squadron has fallen. If there are any fronts of the battle with unfavorable prospects, have them be deployed there. They'll overturn any disadvantage in the blink of an eye."

Anastasia: "That's right. It's a foolish plan to deploy assets one by one, but it's just sloppy gamblin' to be pushed back while keepin' the units with high offensive capability in reserve. I agree that it's fine to use 'em. Only…"

Otto: "—It is concerning that it seems as if the opponent does not have a flying dragon squadron."

Anastasia furrowed her thin eyebrows in concern, and Otto muttered the following words in her stead. In response to their concern, Serena slightly exhaled a "hmm", and,

Serena: "There's not a high probability that any undead flying dragon riders have successfully paired up with their deceased flying dragon… be that as it may, it's certainly unnatural that there have been absolutely none. In that case—"

Otto: "—Rather than the usual application of a flying dragon squadron, there is a high possibility that one is being used in an unorthodox manner, correct?"

Serena: "Unorthodox… that's…"

And, it happened right as she was about to reach the heart of the matter. —With such force as if to break the door of the command center, somebody had come rushing in with a report.

Out of breath, the messenger made an urgent expression as they shouted "Excuse me!" in a quavering voice. Receiving that, Berstetz, who had been looking down at the map, raised his head,

Berstetz: "To the point."

Messenger: "Yessir! A target requiring caution has appeared! Enemy flying dragon squadron, confirmed!"

Serena: "—Have they come?"

Hearing the messenger's report, Serena's expression grew severe, as if to say that someone who ought to have come had finally arrived.

Then, Serena looked closely out the window, searching for signs of the enemy in the sky.

But, she could not find the enemy flying dragon squadron. Behind the suspectful Serena, the messenger proceeded with the continuation of the report.

That was—

Messenger: “—The enemy flying dragon squadron has passed over the large mountain behind the great fortress, and has invaded the airspace above the fortifications! They are deploying enemy soldiers, the undead have breached the city!”

2

—Medium O’Connell possessed the Divine Protection of Morale.

To speak plainly, the Divine Protection of Morale was something that would boost the physical capabilities of one’s body in concert with how roused their spirits and determination were.

Medium was unaware of her own Divine Protection, and even her older brother Flop did not know that his younger sister was the possessor of a Divine Protection. Only, at times when she had to persevere, power would surge within her as she thought “I gotta do my best!”, and as her brother would tell her “Do your best!”, she felt the sensation of power surging within her.

Hence, with the specifics unknown to them, the siblings’ relationship of supporting each other had always remained the optimal solution, and that rare precedent was also the secret behind the strength of the O’Connell siblings.

But, the troublesome aspect of the Divine Protection of Morale was undoubtedly that fluctuations in one’s mood influenced their ability; while the elevation of one’s feelings would enhance their abilities, it was a double-edged sword: to the extent that their feelings were down, they would become unable to display their capabilities.

Ergo, it could be called the most suitable Divine Protection for the bright, positive Medium, but it had backfired when events sorrowful to the greatest degree had occurred within her life.

There were three times in the past when Medium, who was like the personification of a positive attitude, had been depressed.

The first was when a member of her family, Miles, had died.

The second was when another member of her family, Balleroy, had died.

And the third, was when she found out that Balleroy, who should have been dead, had been turned into an undead.

During the first and second times, she thoroughly wept and cried, and it took her several days to recover.

The impact from the third time was not something inferior to those past two times, but there was no time for her to spend a few days crying due to the grievous event.

If so, did Medium participate in the battle with a face stained with tears, disheartened as it was?

—Certainly, that had not been the case.

Medium O'Connell had stopped crying in a true sense.

It was not as if the sorrowful event of the third time had not resonated as much as the first and second times. As an impact of the greatest degree in her life until now, it ripped her chest, her mind, and surely her heart to shreds.

However, as Medium hugged her knees and cowered, Flop did not leave her alone.

Flop: "Dear sister, I'm sorry I hadn't said anything. It was a situation in which people who had died were being resurrected one after another. It was not as if I hadn't considered the possibility that Balleroy was revived."

The coupled dragon carriages had arrived at the Fortified City, and

Medium continued to shut herself away in the room allocated to her; having come to her side, Flop spoke so regarding their encounter with the undead Balleroy.

When she heard her brother’s words, Medium felt the sentiment, “As expected of big bro!”, but she had been unable to say it aloud like usual.

Contrary to having feelings of wanting to condemn her brother for having not told her, she questioned why she had been unable to notice, and hated her own stupidity for never thinking about anything.

By nature, she was not very good at thinking. That was why she always left that duty up to Flop.

That was why, in exchange, it was her job to rampage, she was happy with it being divided up that way. And yet, it was weird for her to now lament her own slow brain.

No, that was not it.

Medium: “I really love you, big bro.”

Flop: “Ahh, thank you, that makes me happy. I love you too of course.”

Medium: “I also really love Sisrena, and I really love Big Bro Miles too.”

Flop: “I know. I’ve never doubted that. Of course, I also love those two.”

Medium: “…I really love Ballebro as well.”

Flop: “Yeah.”

While burying her head into her knees, Medium sniffled as she falteringly spoke. Kneeling down on one knee, Flop listened to her with a calm look on his face. She was grateful that for the last one, when she had spoken about Balleroy, he had just responded with a short nod of his head.

She was grateful, but she was also frustrated.

Medium: “Even though I really love them, I haven’t been thinking about the people I love.”

The possibility that the deceased Balleroy would be resurrected as an undead.

Flop had said that he had been unable to say it, but he had still thought about it. On the other hand, Medium had not even considered it.

That was not because Medium was slow in the head, but because she had been averting her eyes.

Even though she loved her family, even though it was the family she loved, she had not realized it because she had been averting her eyes. —Even though Medium had once regretted that very act to the point of death once before.

Medium: “When Big Bro Miles died, and then after that, Ballebro went and did that thing and also died, I was so frustrated with myself.”

She thought it would have been better if she had been by his side back then, even if he would have hated her or kept her away.

It would have been better for his sibling to make a noisy, loud, annoying racket by his side, and make it so Balleroy could not polish his plan to swoop down on Abel.

Because she had not done that, she had ended up letting Balleroy die.

Even though Medium should have been aware.

She should have been aware that after Miles died, Balleroy would start to worry himself with those sorts of thoughts.

After all, Balleroy was—

Flop: “—Medium, I won’t be going to the Imperial Capital. My wounds haven't finished healing, and I don't have any fighting ability. I'd certainly be a burden. But, you're different."

Medium: "Big bro…"

Flop: "I think Balleroy will be in the Imperial Capital. Being this backed into a corner, the only chance our side has to turn the tables is to defeat the oppositions' leader, who's likely in the Imperial Capital. If the opposition can predict that His Excellency the Emperor-kun will be going there, then…"

Medium: "Mm, yeah."

She knew what Flop was trying to say, even if he did not say everything.

When fighting, Balleroy would always choose the method with the fastest conclusion. That did not change when he became a soldier, and it did not change when he became a Divine General; it was a fundamental part of Balleroy's personality.

Balleroy would undoubtedly target Abel. Therefore he was in the Imperial Capital.

Therefore, if she went to the Imperial Capital, she would meet him.

Flop: "It seems like you've cheered up a little, haven't you?"

Medium: "…As expected of big bro, you really know me well."

Flop: "Ha-ha-ha, that's because I've been Medium's big brother for a long time now! Well then, as a brother who can't go to the Imperial Capital, I'll exhaust all means necessary for the sake of my sister!"

Medium: "Means?"

Wiping her teary face, Medium tilted her head with bloodshot eyes. Seeing his sister's state, Flop placed his hands on his hip, and while smiling,

Flop: "You know, even if you say you want to go, we don't know if His Excellency the Emperor-kun will accept. So in order to make him accept, we should think hard about the flow of persuasion, right? You don't need to worry. I know His Excellency the Emperor-kun's weak point."

Medium: "Incredible! As expected of big bro! What's Abel-chin's weak point?"

Flop: "—Decidedly, it's love."

Raising a single finger, Flop spoke with full confidence.

If the one hearing that was anyone other than Medium, they would have all tilted their heads, not understanding what those words meant, and may have made a peculiar face.

But, no matter what Medium was told by Flop, she would give a broad smile and answer.

Medium: "As expected of big bro! I'm counting on you!"

3

—Thus, Medium O'Connell had obtained the qualification to participate in the ultimate decisive battle for the Imperial Capital.

Thinking back on it, it seemed like a miracle that so many coincidences had piled up for her to finally reach this point.

The first was at the Fortress City of Guaral. Ever since she and Flop had noticed Subaru, Rem, and Spica trying to enter that city, this strange course of events had begun.

Medium: "Thank you for meeting me and big bro back then, Subaru-chin."

Along the way, as the dragon carriage headed for the Imperial Capital, Medium had expressed her gratitude, to which Subaru was surprised.

With his body still in a smaller state, Subaru's profile looked like he was thinking about something with the utmost effort and a frightfully sharp look in his eyes, but only when he was told this did his eyes widen.

At once, Subaru became gentle, and with the tender face he would always face Rem and Spica with,

Subaru: "What are you talking about, Medium-san? If we're giving thanks, then I'm the one who should be grateful to you. Thinking about what things would be like if I hadn't met Medium-san and Flop-san back there, it makes me shudder."

And amid his bashfulness, he had provided the opportunity for Medium's selfishness to be granted.

A settlement with the undead-turned Magical Sharpshooter, Balleroy Temeglyph. —For that purpose, he had sent a tremendously reliable backer with her.

Medium: "Thank you for supporting me, Ros-chin."

Feeling her hair sway in the wind, Medium spoke these words of gratitude in the midst of the air.

The person she spoke them to, was a being who was carrying her horizontally while floating in the sky—a companion of Subaru and Emilia, the person lending Medium strength in her battle, Roswaal.

At Medium's thanks, he smiled with a "Nooo~ no",

Roswaal: "I am the one who ought to show gratitude to you for letting me accompany youuu~. As a matter of fact, the person you desire to face off against is an exceedingly formidable enemy. I wish to have as many cards in my hand as possible, even if only by a single card more."

Medium: "—? I'm not a card, I'm a woman you know?"

Roswaal: "I've blundered. You're the same type as Emilia-saaama~."

As Roswaal spoke that with a soft, wry smile, a question mark floated over Medium's head.

Perhaps he had meant it in the sense that she was not as heavy as she looked. In reality, Medium was quite tall for a woman, and she stood at around the same height as the tall Roswaal. Even so, he was easily carrying her.

But, Roswaal's speciality did not seem to be in his physical strength, but rather in his aptitude for magic. That was also the truth of how he was carrying Medium and flying in the sky like this.

When Medium had been at Serena's place, she had experienced flight many times, but all of those occasions were riding on flying dragons. This was her first time flying while being carried by a person.

However—

Medium: "The trick to flying in the sky is to believe in the person lending you flight, and to entrust everything to them!"

The experience she had once learned from a flying dragon rider she trusted, would now support Medium in this moment.

Whether that partner was a flying dragon or Roswaal, the method to gain wings was to believe.

Roswaal: "I'd like to tell Otto-kun and Petra-kun about your courage and trick, as they aren't quite accustomed to fliiight~."

Medium: "Is that so? Well then Ros-chin, wouldn't it be better for you to get along with the two of them more?"

Roswaal: "Ahhh~ hahaha, that's painful to my eaaars~."

Deepening his smile at her straightforward opinion, Roswaal slowly shook his head.

Seeing that reaction, Medium sensed that Roswaal was not really smiling deep down, and that it was a smile that attempted to deceive. He was probably not very good at getting along with people.

Medium had recently come to the realization that such people existed. Abel was also like that.

She did not understand why they would go out of their way to distance themselves from others—no, she was beginning to understand it a little now. By doing so, one could try to ensure that they would not be hurt.

Medium: “But, if you always do that, you’ll end up regretting it.”

Roswaal: “…”

Medium: “That’s why, I’ll make myself a role model for Ros-chin and Abel-chin.”

Right after Medium spoke, a fierce, thundering roar echoed beyond the flying duo.

It was to the east of Medium and Roswaal—in that place where thick clouds were accumulating one by one, there was present the form of a Dragon so fearsome that it caused the very world to tremble.

In accordance with what had been decided beforehand, Garfiel was the one who would fight the Dragon.

And while Garfiel was subduing the Dragon, everyone else would begin to move.

One grouping among them, was the combination of Medium and Roswaal.

Medium: “…”

She deeply inhaled, and deeply exhaled.

Once it began, there would be no going back. But, she was fine with that.

Medium: “Ros-chin.”

Roswaal: “Shall we get started? There’s no need to get worked up. —After all, I’m the strongest magician in the wooorld~.”

Right after Roswaal declared so, for a moment, Medium felt goosebumps over her entire body.

That was at the moment Roswaal had suddenly unleashed magic that was supernatural beyond anything Medium was capable of imagining, causing flames to be sent above the thick clouds that blanketed the Imperial Capital, targeting the Crystal Palace from directly above.

While using such a ultra-high-class magic technique, Roswaal progressed his flying magic with Medium still in his arms.

It was an intricate feat akin to one using their right arm to draw and their left arm to compose a song, while also using their mouth to recite verses of poetry and using their eyes and brain to decipher an unknown language.

But, for Medium, who did not understand its value, she had no valid reason to praise it as being amazing.

Therefore, Medium did not voice praise with her mouth, but instead demonstrated it through her actions.

Medium: “…”

Staring into the distant sky, a chain of bright-red flames exploding could be seen above the Crystal Palace within the deepest part of the Imperial Capital; cutting past the blossoming crimson balls of flame one after the other, a flying dragon soared at a high altitude.

Far, far away, many kilometers in the distance, as a small speck in the sky, it had been clearly seen by the current Medium as somebody whom she wished to see, with whom she wished to converse, and whom she wished to touch.

—Medium O’Connell possessed the Divine Protection of Morale.

The Divine Protection of Morale boosted one’s physical abilities in concert with how roused their spirits were, and it was the most suitable Divine Protection for the bright, positive Medium.

And now that Medium was before a person whom she had wanted to meet to an absolutely unbearable extent, the performance of her Divine Protection was manifesting its greatest, most powerful effects in all the time since she had been born.

The thing she wanted to do and the thing she must do coincided, and smashing through her regrets of the past, she clutched what her older brother had entrusted to her within her chest; together with a reliable ally, she would challenge a beloved visage.

Ergo, Medium spoke to Balleroy, who had likely seen her from far off in the distance.

Medium: “Jeez, I won’t let you go off wherever you please anymore. Come and talk to me properly, Ballebro.”

—The next moment, a bullet of light had been fired after a beat had passed, and Medium cut it down with her unsheathed barbarian sword.

Medium: “…”

Though the impact tore through her entire body, both Medium, and Roswaal who was carrying her, were uninjured.

And thus, separated by an ultra-long distance, the curtain rose on the fiercest bout of aerial combat in the history of the Empire.

Chapter 53: The Magical Sharpshooter

1

—Roswaal L. Mathers was the premier magician in the Kingdom, and in the world.

If one were to inquire about this to said person, he would mix in a fearless smile and a certain confidence, and affirm the notion with the condition that “For the present day, I guess that’s the caaase~”.

As Roswaal would note that it was the case in the current era, there would be no chagrin harbored in his expression. Instead, what would dwell within his heterochromatic eyes, would be a deep love and a feeling of loneliness which would appear to be yearning for something.

When he spoke of matters regarding magic, that was the ephemeral longing that would never disappear from inside of Roswaal, of which none were aware, save for Ram and Beatrice; even he himself was not aware of it.

Based on that, Roswaal’s position as the current greatest magician would not waver.

Declaring that to Medium O’Connell as she challenged the decisive battle, he soared through the sky with her in his arms, and confronted the Magical Sharpshooter who had ascended to high altitudes far in the distance—considering that Roswaal had confidence and pride in his own magic, he estimated the chances of victory here to be low.

Roswaal: “…”

Having infiltrated the skies of the Imperial Capital from the southwest of the city, Roswaal’s vision beheld the sight of the sky above the northernmost Crystal Palace being dyed a bright red, and many explosions of flame bloomed. Roswaal was the one who had sent in that fiery rain, but it was a pair of flying dragon and rider, flying up from the palace, that had transformed it into flaming explosions—or so it seemed.

The reason for the phrasing of “seemed” was because Roswaal’s eyes were incapable of locking on to a target moving at rapid speeds from a position several kilometers away.

That was not an issue of Roswaal’s eyesight. It was simply a matter of the human eye being unable to do so.

However, Medium and the opposing Magical Sharpshooter were both overcoming that limitation through the power of a Divine Protection and through some sort of other technique respectively, and had visually identified each other.

As proof of that—

Medium: “—Uu, kyaan!”

Together with an adorable war cry, Medium swung her barbarian sword while being carried in his arms.

She was flying in a state where she was completely depending on another. By no means could her balance have been good, but Medium’s barbarian sword still caught the approaching bullet of light, and with a sound akin to a splash of water, she cut it down.

Stuck by the impact, and feeling the severed light bullet pass behind them and dissipate to mana, Roswaal could not help but shudder at the speed and precision of that attack.

—That was a magical technique designed to kill, perfected to an unbelievable extent at the very height of expertise.

He could surmise that the fired light bullet was a kind of Yang Magic, but it was of a different lineage to that of Jiwald, which fired a heated ray of light; the technique of shooting such a bullet of light could not be classified into any category, and was an original creation.

He could not say anything for certain after only a brief moment of combat, but it likely involved preparing light in a similar form and nature to the icicles that Emilia would shoot out, and then piercing the opponent's vitals. One thing that ought to have been noted was how instead of a bullet of ice or earth, which retained a physical form, it was being done with light.

By ensuring that physical bullets would not remain in the wound, it would be difficult for an opponent to discern the true nature of the attack, and furthermore, the area around the wound would be scorched by the light, easily causing a serious wound to be sustained.

Roswaal: "Superb magic."

Roswaal praised it as an attack undoubtedly worthy of being called Magical Bullets.

If his opponent had devised this by himself, then he should have the talents to become a first-class magician. But then again, at this point, the person in question likely would not desire such prestige. From the viewpoint of an Imperial, he had already received the highest possible evaluation by being a Divine General.

Not to mention that it was difficult to imagine someone who was not living, but rather dead, to be wishing for such glory.

Roswaal: "To begin with, even during his lifetime, he was not a person who clung to fame or prestiiige~. I've heard about that from those who were close to him, and from the one who had witnessed his final moments."

For information about the Magical Sharpshooter—Balleroy Temeglyph, there was an unexpectedly large number of people who had known him during his lifetime, so Roswaal's ears had gained more chances than he had initially been hoping for to learn about him.

However, what he had heard from the O'Connell siblings was largely testimonials regarding his personality, and Serena had choked up with feelings of guilt that were uncharacteristic of her. So, Roswaal had been unable to obtain the tactical information he had desired from them, but—there had been an unforeseen competitor.

That was—

Roswaal: "—I would have never thought that Julius-kun was the talented individual who had defeated this Divine General."

Taking care so that Medium, who was boosting her concentration within his arms, would not hear, Roswaal organized his thoughts as he recalled Julius, who had looked as if he was worrying himself with thought.

As Anastasia's one and only Knight, he possessed a strong sense of duty, so he had supported his Lord all the way to the Vollachian Empire. The Finest of Knights had brought quite the valuable information regarding the formidable enemy whom Roswaal and Medium were challenging together.

—From the start, regardless of whether the battlefield was to be the Imperial Capital or the Fortified City, it was established that Roswaal would be the matchup for Balleroy Temeglyph.

That it was because Roswaal was an old acquaintance of Serena Dracroy, and that he had been entrusted with the duty of performing the last rites over Balleroy, whom she had looked after since he was a child, was not the case.

Roswaal also had emotions, but he always eliminated decisions that were based on emotion.

Naturally, the decision to have Roswaal be Balleroy's opponent was a strategic one.

It might be a little late to bring this up, but the Vollachian Empire and the Kingdom of Lugunica had been enemies for a long time.

There were treacherous relations between all of the Four Great Countries, but the fact that they all mutually recognized which among those relations required the most vigilance could not be altered.

Therefore, for the interval that the Kingdom was holding its Royal Selection, it was a remarkable historical achievement that it had signed a non-aggression treaty with the Empire, but that did not mean that the chilly relationship between the two countries had warmed up.

To make a long story short, the Kingdom of Lugunica had persisted with its vigilance of the potential enemy that was the Vollachian Empire, and it was always refining its countermeasures against the primary force that was the Nine Divine Generals, and the lookout force that was the flying dragon squadron.

Within those strategy meetings, it had been decided. —The Kingdom's magic regiment would oppose the Empire's flying dragon squadron, and its apex, Roswaal, would clash with the most powerful flying dragon rider.

Roswaal: "Be that as it may, I had never thought that I would be facing off against targets requiring such caution like the Vicious Old Man and the Magical Sharpshooter within the Empiiire~."

When the counter-Empire discussions were being held, those two individuals were recognized as the greatest threats.

Of course, when it came to individual military assets, the Blue Lightning and the Spirit Eater were the big two, but concerning them, the Kingdom also had a Sword Saint who would not lose out.

But, when it came to war, the presence of leadership was vital.

The best way to end a war would be to end the lives of the enemy's leaders. —And for that, what was feared more than the First and the Second, was the Vicious Old Man and the Magical Sharpshooter.

Ergo, Roswaal had also surmised the techniques and capabilities of the Magical Sharpshooter from rumors.

Roswaal had heard that in the end, he had risen up in rebellion and had lost his life without them ever having the chance to face off against each other, so his simulations had ended up becoming meaningless, but by some hapless twist of fate, this situation had been brought to fruition.

And then, upon ascertaining the skills of the real, not imagined, Balleroy Temeglyph, the strongest magician in the world, Roswaal, was convinced.

Roswaal: “—As expected, I caaan’t~ win this on my own.”

That was not in jest or sarcasm, nor was it that he had lost his nerve; Roswaal merely recognized that as the plain truth.

This was not a matter of his magic being inferior to military techniques, but that there was a difference in the playing field.

First of all, there was a difference in their mobility.

Able to use flying magic, Roswaal was one of the world’s leading individuals who was capable of solo flight, but his speed and maneuverability could not match that of flying dragons, experts in the field. If one were to challenge Balleroy head-on in an air battle, the best they would be able to do would be to get thrown off by his speed, and get shot down while being tossed about by his three-dimensional movements.

Secondly, there was a difference in the precision and objective of their respective methods of attack.

The Magical Bullets, mastered by Balleroy, were undoubtedly something that had been trained for the purpose of killing others, and it would be acceptable to say that their power and accuracy had been perfected.

In order to become a magician that his Teacher would not be ashamed of, Roswaal aimed to master every possible magic, but he was still far-off from the deep mysteries of magic, and even if his diversity overwhelmingly surpassed that of Balleroy, he could declare that he had nothing on the same level as this enemy who specialized in the field of killing a target.

And thirdly, there was a difference in their combat conditions.

It was a vexing matter, but that was the greatest obstacle in this matchup.

If one were to think about it, they would likely come to this conclusion, but if it was possible to do battle from a distant location and one-sidedly attack the opponent, it would be impossible to lose. That was naturally Roswaal's fighting style, and fighting from the greatest range that was possible for himself could be said to be the fundamental tactic for certain victory as a magician.

The problem was that even with his greatest attack range, it would still be a situation in which his opponent would have the upper hand.

Naturally, his opponent would thus not permit the one-sided attacks he had come to use until now. In order to avoid that situation, he would need to close to distance so as to not lose out in range, and then in the situation where the range advantage had been eliminated, he would need to turn it into a contest of their individual abilities.

But, the combat conditions imposed upon Roswaal would not allow for that prerequisite.

Subaru: "To be honest, having our allies taken out one by one from far away would be the most troubling thing. In order to not let the opponent perform that kind of rapid fire on us, do something to suppress him!"

For their assault on the Imperial Capital, when dividing up the members of the "Rescue from Destruction Squad", that was the duty Subaru had entrusted to Roswaal.

In truth, that had been a logical decision. Disregarding Halibel and Olbart, Roswaal did not intend to claim that he was the most powerful asset, but there was no doubt that he was the one who possessed the greatest range.

Emilia was also on the right track, but she lacked precision in her attacks, and she had no method of ascending to the sky where their opponent made their battlefield. It was a matter of course that this would be up to Roswaal.

As a result, in order to prevent the other allies from being targeted, Roswaal was forced to attack from a distance that was overwhelmingly favorable for his opponent, declaring war while attracting his opponent's attention to himself.

Roswaal: "As I had feared, even at this distance the opponent's attacks are delivered with precision. I've attracted his attention, but… I'll have to close the distance from here. This act really could result in my deaaath~."

The three aforementioned disadvantages should suffice to show just how troublesome that would be.

Against such a formidable enemy, he would have no choice but to fight with tactics and at a distance where the opponent would triumph. Furthermore, recognizing the difference in strength between them, Roswaal was convinced that his opponent was above him.

But, there was neither lamentation nor despair dwelling within his heterochromatic eyes.

That was because—

Medium: "Diyahh!"

Immediately after he thought he had seen a flash, the sound of water splashing and an impact jolted both Roswaal and Medium.

That was proof that Medium had succeeded in defending against the impact of the second bullet. While admiring Medium's skill in managing such a feat, Roswaal deepened his smile.

The reason for that smile was—

Roswaal: "Medium-kun, does it seem feasible?"

Medium: "Yeah! We can do it! It's like Ros-chin said… it seems like Ballebro is only aiming for my arms and shoulders!"

Balleroy: “Tsk—”

Witnessing the second bullet he had fired being cut down by the barbarian sword in the magnified vision of his left eye, Balleroy bit down on his molars at the improvement in skill of the girl he recognized, and at the viciousness of his opponent’s objective.

Within the scope he had created by bending light, he could grasp for certain that Medium, with her face brimming with motivation, and the man flying in the sky while carrying her, were gradually getting closer.

Their aim was obvious, it was a standard tactic in warfare to close the distance on an opponent who specialized in long-distance attacks.

The surprise attack of the flaming spheres from above the clouds, once that had failed, they had immediately shifted gears—that was not the case.

If there was anybody who thought that such a bland attack would hit before being noticed, there was truly something wrong with them. The intention of that attack was for it to be taken down. Though he understood that, it was an attack that he had no choice but to shoot down.

Since his opponent had fired the opening attack of this battle like that, he would commence an ultra-long-range battle in his own overwhelming favor—upon seeing Medium, Balleroy’s fighting spirit was paralyzed.

The reason why they had let the surprise attack be defended against, and had commenced with a battle in which he was the one with the advantageous range, was because their strategy built on the fact that Balleroy would have to choose whom to shoot with his Magical Bullets.

Balleroy: “Medi…!!”

The first and second shots, Medium had defended against both of the Magical Bullets that Balleroy had fired.

She had always been that way. When Medium was feeling down, she could be overpowered by even the unathletic Flop, and yet when she was filled with motivation, she would become an obstreperously rambunctious kid.

Neither Flop nor Miles could do anything about it, and despite being her favorite, Balleroy also had difficulty in dealing with her. Serena was not one to rebuke, so Medium's liveliness knew no bounds.

Be that as it may, he had never expected for her to be able to deflect his Magical Bullets.

Carillon: "—Kiryararahhh!"

Balleroy: "—. I gotcha, Carillon."

As Balleroy clenched his teeth, his beloved dragon flapped its wings and neighed in appeal to him.

Through the art of flying dragon taming, Balleroy and Carillon were tied to each other's existences through their souls—through the merging of Od with Od. Subjugating the innately ferocious flying dragons through that process, was the secretive technique of flying dragon taming.

Given that relationship, any wavering in Balleroy's thoughts and feelings was directly transmitted to Carillon. The inverse also held true, so Balleroy had also sensed Carillon's thoughts.

He understood. Medium's skill was not the only reason why the Magical Bullets had been defended against.

Balleroy had laid eyes upon the figure of someone who was essentially a younger sister to him making such an earnest expression, and that had been the reason why he had not shot through her with the ruthlessness of a warrior.

Balleroy: "Her limbs…"

If he could just shoot one of them off, Medium would certainly withdraw from the warfront.

The magician whom she was accompanying would also judge that there would be no benefit in flying with her if she were to suffer a serious injury. If possible, it would be better for it to be an arm instead of a leg. If it was an arm, there would be less difficulty in her life hereafter than there would be if it was a leg.

It would be best if he caused Medium to withdraw with a wound, shot down the magician, and then requested Sphinx to spare her life. If he did so, his anguish would disappear.

Anguish. Would. Disappear.

Balleroy: "—Let's go get 'em."

With the face of an undead that had lost all complexion, there was a definite fighting spirit dwelling within Balleroy's golden eyes.

It was not the expression of hesitating to attack Medium, which he had worn until a moment earlier, but rather that of finding the consensus between his disposition and his objective, and bringing it to fruition; it was the expression of the Magical Sharpshooter.

Balleroy: "…"

While harboring a fighting spirit within his golden irises, the heat from Balleroy's body completely subsided.

Closing his right eye, concentrating all of his attention into the scope with his left eye, he got up on his knees upon the back of his beloved dragon, fixed his spear in place, and created a sharply pointed bullet of light at its tip.

Balleroy was an unorthodox magician, and he had not refined anything except this one technique.

A single one of these shots consumed very little mana, and since it maximized the effect with a minimal number of required processes, it had a good affinity with his nature. —To settle things reliably, it was the embodiment of that approach.

Balleroy: "…"

While Balleroy was concentrating in that manner, Carillon similarly boosted its own concentration.

The moment he peered through his scope, and carefully observed the conduct of his target, he would have to neglect maintaining vigilance over the rest of his surroundings, so in Balleroy's stead when he did so, Carillon would maintain a field of vision over their environs.

His beloved dragon, who kept a lookout over their surroundings with the eyesight and instinctive alertness of a flying dragon, was absolutely indispensable to Balleroy as he established this tactic.

Balleroy: "If you're looking to throw down against me, then you're gonna hafta close the distance. But, did ya really think I'd letcha do that so easily while knowing that?"

He was surprised that something like flying magic existed, but the speed of their approach could not possibly be compared to that of a flying dragon rider. If he fell back by the same amount that his opponent was approaching, the distance between them would not close.

Of course, since there was a limit to how much he could fall back, the method of maintaining distance was not just falling back, but also making full use of maneuvering and elevation. But, that was not a problem.

There existed no boundaries in the vast sky. Hence, the battle technique of the Magical Sharpshooter had been established.

Balleroy: "—Hit."

Weaving a word with lips devoid of moisture, the tip of his spear suddenly shone with an intense brightness.

The moment the Magical Bullet was fired, there was no recoil or emotion whatsoever on Balleroy's part. There was only a quick flash of light, and the result brought about the sniping in less than a second.

Within his vision magnified by the scope, Medium had defended against the third Magical Bullet with her barbarian sword.

Her movements suggested that she had realized that Balleroy was aiming for her limbs. Whether that was her natural intuition, or advice whispered into her ear by the magician behind her, was unclear.

While admiring that as quite the impressive feat, Balleroy spilled out a long breath,

Balleroy: “—Hit, hit, hit, hit, hit.”

With that, he consecutively fired from the fourth shot to the eighth shot in a single breath.

Balleroy: “…”

Balleroy’s Magical Bullets had no recoil. Therefore, there was no impediment to shooting in rapid succession.

If there was a limitation, it would be the speed at which the bullets of light were created to be fired, but Balleroy had poured all of his talents for magic into mastering this Magical Bullet attack.

Five shots per second, light bullets that were fired at the same accuracy without the slightest bit of deviation—that was the basis for Balleroy Temeglyph being called the Magical Sharpshooter, and the reason he had attained the position of General First-Class.

Balleroy: “Hit, hit, hit, hit, hit.”

Fiercely swinging the barbarian swords in both of her hands, Medium frantically continued to repel the Magical Bullets.

That in itself was worthy of praise, but Balleroy’s remaining strength had not decreased in the slightest. The time that had passed was ten seconds at most, and if they continued for another ten or twenty seconds, Medium would definitely use up all of her strength.

If Balleroy indifferently approached that moment while firing his Magical Bullets—

Balleroy: "…"

For a moment, suspicion was yielded in the composed Balleroy's thoughts.

All the while, he still continued creating bullets of light and engaging in a ceaseless chain of sniper fire via his Magical Bullets, but it was this very situation that Balleroy harbored suspicion about.

Bringing Medium along with him for the surprise attack, this was the opponent who had imposed a considerable limitation on Balleroy's Magical Bullets.

Naturally, it was an enemy who had thrown down the gauntlet with the intention of facing Balleroy, so would they really implement such a half-hearted strategy like letting him break through simply by persisting with his signature move?

He could not help but find it strange and peculiar. That was, this very situation in which he could fully display his true nature.

Indeed, it happened right after Balleroy had finished contemplating.

Carillon: "—Kiryararahhh!"

In Balleroy's stead as he looked through his scope, Carillon gave a loud neigh as it kept vigilance over their surroundings.

While flying at high speeds through the sky above the Crystal Palace, his beloved dragon who had been maintaining a constant distance with the opponent made an appeal, and Balleroy turned his attention to the cause of Carillon's neigh.

From even higher than Balleroy and Carillon, who were high in the skies above, something was falling towards them.

Balleroy: "—Hk, you're really giving it to us, ain't'cha!"

As Balleroy grit his teeth and howled, what pierced the thick clouds and fell towards them, was a threat even more direct than the balls of flame that had targeted the Crystal Palace earlier.

—An enormous mass of ice, akin to the size of a small mountain, ferociously hurtled down from the sky towards the Imperial Capital.

3

Julius: “Fighting against Balleroy-dono in a location with no cover will prove to be fatal. After all, he is the greatest flying dragon rider of the Empire… an astounding master of his craft, with range in every conceivable direction.”

Following the advice that Julius had provided whilst he bore a grave look on his face, the aerial battle that Roswaal had been challenged to was the poorest choice of battlefield against the Empire’s finest flying dragon rider.

After all, there was nothing in the sky that could serve as cover. Forwards, backwards, left, and right went without saying, but his opponent was even able to guarantee range on the vertical plane, allowing for every direction in three dimensions; altogether, it was the worst possible environment.

It was normal for a warrior to prepare the most disadvantageous situation for their opponent, so if one were to go out of their way to meet their opponent’s conditions, and choose to fight with a disadvantageous situation for themself, then they would merely be an insane person.

So then, although there was nothing that could have been done regarding the conditions, would that make Roswaal an insane deviant who chose to allow his opponent to fight on a battlefield on which they excelled, at a range at which they triumphed, and with tactics which were their forte?

—Certainly, that was not the case.

Roswaal would not say that he was normal, but he understood that he was not one to burn with a longing for victory, nor was he one to eccentrically enjoy the disadvantages of a war situation.

He recognized his own abnormalities, but those abnormalities were not things he displayed in combat.

Therefore, Roswaal had not done anything so foolish as facing a battlefield on which he had no chance of winning.

Medium: “Ha! Ha! Haaaah!!”

Within Roswaal’s arms, Medium panted as steam rose from her body.

The high level of heat being transmitted into his palms was proof that the performance of her body was rising in response to her fighting spirit. At the same time, it was also proof that she had surpassed her limits several times in just ten seconds.

The dreadful rapid-fire ability of the Magical Bullets, even if it was clear that they were flying towards her in a manner that would avert a fatal wound, he was deeply impressed that Medium had successfully repelled fifty of the approaching bullets.

But, they did not have another ten seconds. Hence, Roswaal progressed the battle to the next stage.

—Breaking through the clouds that hung over the Imperial Capital, an enormous mass of ice was plummeting from the heavens towards the city’s surface.

A mass of ice so mighty that one could have easily mistaken it for a mountain, Roswaal was naturally the one who had made it fall. However, if he produced a block of ice of that size, no matter how much pride Roswaal had as being the world’s greatest magician, he would barely have any mana remaining after the fact.

Therefore, he had gotten Emilia, who possessed excessive amounts of mana, to create the block of ice.

Roswaal: “She still had so much energy after creating something to that extent. Truly, it is an absurd notion.”

Having performed a marvel equivalent to creating an iceberg, Emilia calmly followed Subaru’s orders and confronted a different battlefield. As reliable as that was, when he considered the possibility that he might have to confront her adversarially one day, it gave him quite the headache.

However, in this moment, he would depend on that reliability, and would proceed with the stratagem of bringing down the iceberg.

It had been uncertain if all of Roswaal's mana could be used to produce such an enormous iceberg, but it would not have been too much if he were to simply maintain that which Emilia had created, and keep it afloat.

He had been keeping it on standby since the balls of flame had been brought down, and now, in this moment, he released it from its yoke.

Roswaal: "…"

The attack had the same mass as if a mountain was falling from the sky, but its aim was not to flatten Balleroy from overhead as he flew around in the air. It would be a briefer story if such a thing could be done, but it would likely not be very difficult for Balleroy to escape from the area of damage that the iceberg would inflict.

Hence, the reason for bringing the iceberg down was not to attack Balleroy. —It was to serve as an obstacle.

Roswaal: "If there's no cover, then I had better create some."

Right after he muttered this, Roswaal narrowed his eyes, and then cracks immediately began to form throughout the entirety of the iceberg.

That moment, a high-pitched noise pierced the sky, just as if glass that filled the air had all shattered at once, and the subsequent phenomenon that occurred might have even appeared as if the sky was crumbling.

The iceberg shattered, and as fragments scattered about, chunks of ice chaotically fell towards the ground.

Though the phrasing of shattered had been used, they were fragments of a mountain. Each individual fragment was around the size of a building or a dragon carriage, so it was identical to an avalanche of icebergs tumbling down from the sky.

It was a sight akin to taking a box filled with small pebbles and sand, and turning it upside down over a flowerbed—

Roswaal: “This, is the true ability of a magician.”

If one could engage in a one-sided attack from a distance at which they excelled, it would be impossible to lose.

That such was the fundamental tactic for certain victory for a magician, had been mentioned earlier. Therefore, Roswaal preferred a fighting style that conformed to that fundamental, and thus he put it into practice.

In order to perform one-sided attacks, it was crucial to reduce the opponent’s “options”.

A proficiency at a certain range, was nothing more than an easily decipherable indicator to help in doing so. By reducing his opponent’s “options”, he could pull the situation towards one that was advantageous for himself.

That, was the fighting style of the world’s strongest magician, Roswaal.

Medium: “Teryaaah!!”

A light passed through the incessant rain of shards and chunks of ice, and Medium cut down the Magical Bullet that had approached.

Medium had been ordered to not be phased no matter what happened, but he was as grateful as he could have been that she was moving in accordance with that order. The Magical Sharpshooter should have also been adequately astounded, but it was commendable that he had magnificently shifted back to attacking right away.

However, his rapid-fire capability and mobility had been reduced beyond compare.

And, above all else—

Roswaal: “If you’re the kind of person I’ve heard you were, you won't target me directly with your Magical Bullets. —After all, if I were to fall from this altitude, there would be no way of saving Medium-kun."

4

Making an extraordinary war situation into a reality, was an enemy akin to the devil.

Faced with a magician who used Medium as a shield in order to prevent his tactics, Balleroy recognized his opponent as such by means of a clear enmity.

In the Vollachian Empire, so-called magicians were exceedingly valuable.

That was because fundamentally and ethnically, a propensity to be unskilled in handling magic had been passed down, so ultimately the principles of the Imperial people did not align with magic.

At the roots of the Imperial people, there was a reverence towards the strong, and that could also be expressed as an adoration for the talents and skills of outstanding warriors. An ideal warrior of the Vollachian Empire would wield their own weapon and overcome their opponent in an exchange of blows, and battles that did not take such a form were shunned.

There were deep-rooted preconceptions and biases regarding other types of fighting styles, and though it had improved under Vincent's reign, it would still take some time for such things to completely disappear.

The fighting style of Balleroy, known as the Magical Sharpshooter, and the killing methods of the Vicious Old Man, Olbart, the shinobi head honcho, did not have much fame within other countries, contrary to the vigilance other nations had of them.

Though, since Balleroy and Olbart did not fight for the sake of fame, neither of them really cared.

Because he had possessed such rationale, Balleroy, unlike other Imperial people, did not particularly detest magicians. —He wished to overturn that evaluation from when he had been alive.

Balleroy: “I don’t like your way of doing things one bit, Mister Magician—!”

He admired their skill of using absolutely everything at their disposal to produce their own battlefield, but with their poisonous fangs pointed towards him, going as far as facing him with a member of his own family of all things, fury surged within him.

He truly wished to shoot through that person’s head and heart, but —

Balleroy: “Carillon—!”

Carillon: “—Kiryararahhh!”

Spurring on his beloved dragon with a pat on the back, the flying dragon picked up speed with a flap of its wings as it neighed.

As Balleroy and Carillon danced through the dark sky, soaring through the hailstorm of unbelievable scale, they focused on conquering the labyrinth of ice that had suddenly been created, attempting to break through.

In the past, there had been instances where people had tried to avoid Balleroy’s Magical Bullets by escaping to a forest, dense with trees, or by hiding away in a sturdy fortress.

When those had happened, Balleroy had cleared the trees with a rapid fire of Magical Bullets to secure a line of sight, and in the second case, he had identified where the opponent was hiding, and then shot a Magical Bullet through the wall to kill the enemy.

But, he had never once attempted to conquer a method as absurd as this until now.

And thus, naturally, he had never once overturned a strategy as absurd as this, either.

Balleroy: “So that means if I get past this, it’ll be my win, ain’t that right?”

While evading the fragments of the shattered iceberg, which would quite likely be able to end one's life with just a mere graze, Balleroy imagined the figures of Medium and the magician who had set this up.

Aside from those two, there were no others who had ascended to the Imperial Capital's sky. That was to say, the cards that would be played in the aerial battle against Balleroy, consisted entirely of those two.

It seemed like Serena had not sent out her Flying Dragon Squadron, her pride and joy, to face Balleroy.

Balleroy: "As I'd expect, the High Countess is fully aware."

Even in aerial combat that utilized flying dragons, there existed a clear hierarchy.

For example, wild flying dragons without a partner would never be able to contend with flying dragons that had a flying dragon rider. A single outstanding pair of flying dragon and rider could exterminate a flock of one hundred flying dragons.

And thus, if a flying dragon rider were to clash with another flying dragon rider, the superior party would always be victorious. With no relation to the advantage or disadvantage of numbers, the side with the superior flying dragon rider would win.

If there existed no flying dragon riders more capable than Balleroy, then no matter how many flying dragon squadrons were sent in, the only possible outcome would be for mountains of the corpses of valuable flying dragons and their riders alike to pile up.

That was how valuable a superior flying dragon rider was; they were outstanding personnel.

That was why Balleroy did not detest Serena. Her act of authorizing Miles to go on a secret mission to the Kingdom of Lugunica, had been necessary. —Nothing could have been done about it.

Balleroy: "Even so, I'm gonna—"

As he grit his teeth, the latter half of his mutter was something that even Balleroy himself had been unable to hear.

That was because underneath Balleroy and Carillon, shards of the shattered iceberg crashed into the Imperial Capital one after the other, and a thunderous sound reverberated as a tremendous amount of dust began to rise; the shards destroyed the cityscape, altering its very form.

The miserable amount of damage to the Imperial Capital that had been brought about by magic, the havoc which ought to have been called the Magic Disaster, continued.

It was a city that he had protected during his lifetime, and had grown accustomed to seeing. It was not as if he did not have reservations about it being destroyed, but Balleroy's attention was more so focused on his enemy rather than the city that was falling into ruin.

Balleroy: "…"

Amidst the shattered ice that was fluttering down like dust, there was an illusory sight caused by the light being diffused, and he became able to more clearly see the figure of Medium, who ought to have been further beyond.

However, there was still distance between them. Having brought down an iceberg from above the clouds, and producing damage that heavily demolished the cityscape of the Imperial Capital, the distance they had gained was a negligible amount.

Balleroy: "Hit, hit, hit."

In order to force back the distance they had gained, Balleroy shortened the amount of time it took for his fired Magical Bullets to reach their target.

And thus, Medium would need an accordingly instantaneous reaction speed. Just how many more shots would the exhausted Medium be able to obstruct?

Even if Balleroy were to reduce his mobility, restricting his line and angle of fire, he would still have the advantage.

That was to say, the next move was coming.

Balleroy: "—? The same bundles of flame from earlier… no."

There were signs of a change above the clouds, and knocking away an ice shard with his spear, clearing the line of fire with a bullet of light, Balleroy looked up, furrowing his brow.

Hurtling through the large hole in the thick clouds that had been created by the mountain of ice, were numerous flaming spheres and icebergs; though they were not as huge as the mountain of ice from earlier, they were still quite enormous. At the sight of those plummeting down, Balleroy thought that their purpose might have been to add to the obstacles in the sky—he then perceived his opponent's true intention.

They were falling down somewhere largely off the mark from the position in which Balleroy and Carillon were—they were drawing a trajectory headed for a direct hit to the Crystal Palace.

Balleroy: "What the hell d'ya think you're doing, deviant—!!!"

He was witnessing ice and flame in descent without him as their aim; however, Balleroy shouted as if it was an attack directed towards none other than himself.

They would not bring any direct damage to Balleroy. Instead, they would relentlessly crush Madelyn's body, which remained in the palace, and the rest of the people residing within its walls.

He could not afford to let that happen. —He could not afford to let Sphinx die.

Balleroy: "OHHHHHHH—!!!"

Spreading its wings and making a sharp turn, Carillon made a sudden brake in a position where no chunks of ice would hit. Raising his body as if being flicked off of that very back, Balleroy pointed his spearhead towards the sky above the Crystal Palace, and fired his Magical Bullets.

Since the rate of production of five shots per second would not be able to stop the attack, in this moment, he surpassed a limit that he had never surpassed in his lifetime, and a barrage of Balleroy's Magical Bullets covered the sky.

The rampaging bullets of light completely shot down the descending flaming spheres and chunks of ice, and he had successfully protected the Crystal Palace from the large-scale damage which would have caused it to come crumbling down.

But at this moment, it was a self-evident truth that Balleroy's opponent would aim at him while his back was turned—.

Balleroy: "—Hit."

Hence, while Balleroy was aiming his spearhead at the objects falling towards the Crystal Palace, he aimed the back of his spear at the enemy drawing near, and responded by firing Magical Bullets both forwards and backwards at the same time.

Balleroy: "…"

He had fired only one Magical Bullet to his rear, but that had been enough.

With his back turned, Balleroy had made it seem like he was presenting an opening, and a flame of magic had been directly approaching him—pierced head-on by the Magical Bullet, it too exploded mid-air.

The light bullet that had pierced the opponent's magic continued in its trajectory, heading right for Medium and the magician who had thought that they had taken advantage of an opening, only to be met by a barbarian sword.

Balleroy: "Medi, I'm a man who was once a Divine General."

When it came to the art of warfare, he would not fall behind his younger sister, regardless of her overflowing motivation.

In order to take her by surprise, the Magical Bullet which Balleroy had fired backwards was a little bit larger than the bullets of light he had fired up until now, and thus its power excelled.

Medium: “—Uwah!”

With a sound of water splashing, both barbarian swords were ripped from Medium’s hands.

Having immediately noticed something different instinctually, it was magnificent that she had intercepted it with two swords instead of one. Though he had intended to blow off everything beneath her left elbow with that shot, it was thanks to that reaction that she had kept both her arms.

However, the outcome would still be the same, now that she had lost her means of defense. With the next shot, he would blow off that arm of hers and put an end to this.

Balleroy: “Hit.”

His spearhead flickered in tandem with his determination, and he finished dealing with the ice and flame that were about to flatten the Crystal Palace.

Then, he immediately ascended with Carillon, and while reopening the distance that had previously been closed, he would create a Magical Bullet that would force Medium to withdraw—

Balleroy: “Wha…”

—That instant, as if to fully obstruct Balleroy’s field of view, the brilliance of a rainbow blanketed the sky.

5

—In order to defeat Balleroy Temeglyph, Julius’s advice had truly been useful.

It was advice from a person who had already defeated him once.

Not even Subaru could have provided information quite this useful. After all, Subaru was not a warrior, and he tended to give rather vague suggestions when it came to fighting styles.

In any case—

Julius: “In my fight against Balleroy-dono, I managed to defeat him. Of course, it was not a victory I could have attained without Ferris’s assistance… Why a personage of Balleroy-dono’s caliber had participated in such a rebellion, and had aimed for the venerable life of His Excellency Vincent, even in the future the reason for that will remain…”

Roswaal: “You saw his Book of the Dead, diiidn’t~ you? Truly a hapless coincidence. Julius-kun, if possible, I’d like you to go over what you saw in great detail…”

Julius: “—Margrave Mathers, the only information I shall be reporting is that of Balleroy-dono’s fighting style, and the manner in which I fought against him. I want you to understand that the things I had witnessed without his permission, the feelings that Balleroy-dono had harbored, are things I shall never disclose for the rest of my life.”

Identifying Julius’s attitude, whilst he spoke with a serious expression, as an action that served the interests of the enemy, Roswaal had some methods at his disposal of prying into the information that had been gained from the Book of the Dead. But, Roswaal did not choose to do so, and opted to listen to the only information Julius had decided to report.

Even he himself found that choice surprising.

By nature, if Roswaal had the means of obtaining information from someone, he would deem it acceptable to gain all of the knowledge he could and formulate a plan, and then use it to confront a battle.

And yet, why had he sympathized with Julius’s emotions, and respected his intentions?

He had no definite answer concerning the reason for his change of heart, but—that mattered not.

Even if he did not know everything about Balleroy Temeglyph, Julius had given a valuable answer. From Roswaal’s perspective, that alone had been sufficient.

Roswaal: “The fact that it was Julius-kun who killed you, is a fact indeed. —I wonder, do you not even remember the reason behind your own death, Balleroy Temeglyph-kun?”

Through the Authority of Gluttony, Julius’s Name had been eaten.

As a result, the people around Julius, save for the exemption of Subaru, had all forgotten about him. Roswaal was no exception, and it was likely that the deceased were no exception either.

Even Balleroy, who had been felled by the hand of none other than Julius, did not remember what it was that had caused his death.

In other words—

Roswaal: “—With the same method that caused you to die the first time, I will kill you.”

It was truly a hapless coincidence, and a miraculous happenstance.

This was what Julius had employed to kill Balleroy, and it was a chance of seizing victory that could only be grasped because Julius’s Name had been eaten.

It would be presumptuous of him to even try to imagine the anguish of Julius and Balleroy, who were directly involved, but as an outsider, Roswaal was truly grateful for that happenstance from the bottom of his heart.

—The expansion of the rainbow barrier blocked the path of Balleroy and his flying dragon as they tried to ascend.

A barrier brought about by an aurora, he had heard that such magic had been the decisive blow in Julius’s defeat of Balleroy.

It was an original magic that had been devised by Julius and his Spirits, and reproducing it required an abnormally large amount of mana consumption, even for Roswaal.

Roswaal was capable of using several types of magic at the same time, but utilizing all six types simultaneously was an act devoid of sanity.

While hearing the sound of his own gate screaming from within him, Roswaal still recreated Julius's victory condition in order to raise his own chances of winning.

The objective of this was not to be some sort of ridicule or harassment, rather it was a strategic choice.

Of course, if his goal had simply been to block Balleroy's escape path, Roswaal could have accomplished the same thing by making use of the flames and wind in which he was proficient. But, the magic he was accustomed to using would have been detected as dangerous with a single glance.

It was necessary to employ magic that Balleroy would be seeing for the very first time, robbing him of his discernment, even if for only a moment.

Therefore, surmising that this aurora of rainbow was also a part of what he had forgotten due to the Authority of Gluttony, Roswaal purposely brought this situation to its final phase with the resolve to shoulder the burden.

Medium: "—Hk."

As Medium grit her teeth, though both of her barbarian swords had been ripped out of her hands, she still maintained her fighting spirit and clenched her fists.

One or two shots of the Magical Bullets perhaps could have been blocked by sacrificing both of her hands, but he had no intention of engaging in a fight that demanded such a high price.

In the sense that the opponent had been robbed of his options, Medium had already done more than enough work.

On the way to the Imperial Capital, Medium had voiced gratitude towards Subaru, and then Subaru had also conveyed his own gratitude to Medium, but Roswaal felt the exact same way.

Subaru: “What are you talking about, Medium-san? If we’re giving thanks, then I’m the one who should be grateful to you. Thinking about what things would be like if I hadn’t met Medium-san and Flop-san back there, it makes me shudder.”

The way Subaru had put on a bashful performance had made Roswaal want to applaud him.

Certainly, without the assistance of the O’Connell siblings, this assault would not have been successful.

Roswaal: “But—”

Thwarted by the rainbow, they would begin to fall.

Since that was the conclusion that approached the pinnacle of flying dragon riders within the Empire, Roswaal narrowed his eyes—

Roswaal: “…”

—That instant, an impact pierced him diagonally from behind, and his consciousness was greatly rocked.

6

The moment the rainbow light stretched out before him, chills ran down Balleroy’s entire body.

Despite being an undead body, it was ironic that the fighting intuition known as survival instincts continued to work away.

Following the appeals of those dead survival instincts, Balleroy faced the barrier that had been created by the aurora, and fired the “hidden bullet” which had been quite literally kept hidden, which became the foundation for overcoming this obstacle.

—As Roswaal had guessed, Balleroy could not remember the cause of his own death.

Why had he ended up losing his life? Even though he could remember the commotion that had served as its impetus, as well as his incentive and reason for participating, the cause of his death was the only thing that remained a blur.

If possible, he thought that it would have been better if he had forgotten things other than the reason behind his death.

But, if he were to forget those things, he would definitely no longer remain himself.

In any case, Balleroy could not recall the moment of his death.

However, upon hearing accounts from the other undead, excluding the people who had died without understanding what was going on, he could not find anybody else who had forgotten the details that had led up to their death.

Because of that, Balleroy thought. He thought about why he had died, about why he could not think of an answer.

And, he had thought about how he must have died, considering as many options as possible.

The possibility that his affiliation with the rebellion had been exposed, and someone like Cecilus had lopped off his head, or his fellow Generals of the First-Class like Groovy and Moguro had purged him.

But, he had his reasons for carrying out that rebellion. —Thinking that it might have been related to the people who had come from the Kingdom of Lugunica, he had pondered what sort of battle it might have been.

—The method of being defeated by having his path obstructed mid-flight, was the final candidate that he had considered.

Balleroy had arrived at that idea after the battle of the coupled dragon carriages, where he had retrieved the body of Lamia Godwin, and had identified the presence of Flop and Medium.

Back then, when Balleroy had fired a Magical Bullet to restrain the enemy, he had witnessed somebody inside the coupled dragon carriage defend against it by putting up a barrier of rainbow. —It was after he had seen that rainbow.

He could not be sure. But, he had felt that it was a troublesome technique.

That was why, no matter what sort of corner he was forced into, he had kept it in mind to prepare one spare Magical Bullet, such that he could instantaneously fire it at any moment.

That had been useful in tearing through this rainbow barrier.

Carillon: “—Kiryararahhh!”

Carillon roared as it pierced through the rainbow, and while sustaining wounds over its entire body, they escaped the enclosure.

Maximizing the advantages of having become an undead flying dragon, his beloved dragon flew in a path towards survival as its painful wounds began to regenerate; grateful for that, Balleroy charged his spear with a Magical Bullet, and as he readied it diagonally,

Balleroy: “Hit.”

The bullet that had been fired flew straight in a direction that was off the mark from the enemy. However, in the line of fire of the bullet of light was some falling debris from the chunks of ice, and the light bullet slid diagonally across the surface of the ice.

With that momentum, the light bullet bounced around the surrounding debris, bouncing around, bouncing around—then, it pierced the back of the enemy who had unleashed the rainbow upon him.

Having been born, having died, he had succeeded in the ricocheting of light for the first time.

Having quite literally flown over the boundary of death, Balleroy had evolved his magical technique even further.

—Unfortunately for Roswaal, by attempting to select magic that was supposed to have been seen for the first time by Balleroy in order to delay his response, he had actually allowed for an instinctive reaction to the rainbow he was seeing for the second time.

???: “Ros-chin—!!”

Struck by a ricochet from an unexpected angle, the magician’s flight had been hindered, and a scream called out for him.

From within the arms of the magician, Medium had been unable to do anything about an attack from a position she could not defend, and that scream sounded from her grievous voice.

If he had aimed directly for the magician and shot them down, they would have fallen from quite a high elevation, and there was the danger that he would not have been able to save Medium.

That had resulted in Balleroy being restricted to only targeting Medium, but the descent of the iceberg and the attack on the Crystal Palace had actually backfired on his opponent.

Balleroy: “At this distance, I can catch ya before ya fall.”

The long-distance battle of several kilometers between the southwest and northernmost point of the Imperial Capital had lost that distance in the midst of battle; it was now a distance such that he would be able to catch Medium before his opponent crashed into the ground.

Balleroy patted Carillon’s neck, and slipping past the chunks of ice, it faced its wings in that direction in order to retrieve Medium.

While preparing himself to endure all the verbal abuse that Medium would throw at him—

Medium: “Ros-chin?”

Suddenly, the audible voice was one of innocence, completely dissimilar to the shriek from just before.

If something were to be said, then it had been a tone bereft of what was characteristic for Medium, but the strangeness of hearing that in the midst of this battle, and the subsequent development, stole Balleroy’s attention.

Balleroy: “Wha…”

An undead with black eyeballs and golden irises looming within; with those eyes opened wide, Balleroy was left speechless.

Within Balleroy’s vision, Medium parted from the arms of the magician who had been flying in the sky, and began to fall towards the ground below—no, she was not falling. She had been thrown.

Vigor having been applied to Medium’s body, she had been thrown towards the surface with utmost strength.

With a speed much faster than a free fall, she plummeted towards the ground. If he did not move to catch her right away, he would not make it in time.

Right after he had thought that, Balleroy understood what that devil was thinking.

Balleroy: “…”

The moment before he chose to fly to Medium, Balleroy’s gaze crossed with the magician’s.

At a distance where he could finally see his opponent’s face clearly, even without the scope, it was a man with an exceedingly aggravating face.

His back having been struck, while blood spilled from his mouth, the opponent was still smiling.

Shooting a Magical Bullet at that smile, he immediately soared towards Medium. He would not let things go in accordance with his opponent’s intentions—

Carillon: “—Kiryararahhh!”

At that moment, Carillon’s neigh pulled Balleroy’s attention towards Medium.

Having been thrown away, Medium was plummeting towards the ground. The speed at which she fell was high, but it was likely that Balleroy and Carillon would be able to reach her in time. —No, it would have been likely.

What awaited Medium at the end of her fall, were spikes of ice from the wreckage of the shattered ice chunks.

Balleroy: "…"

He hallucinated the vision of Medium's body being torn to shreds by the blades of ice.

From his opponent's perspective, Medium should have been an ally. His reasoning cried out that such an obvious fact would not serve as insurance before an opponent like this.

This opponent was a magician. A magician who would make full use of absolutely everything at his disposal as his own property—.

Balleroy: "…"

He had only a moment to think, and the result would appear immediately afterwards.

There was a single Magical Bullet stored in Balleroy's spearhead, and he only had one chance to make his decision. That was, whether he would shoot this Magical Bullet at the magician, or at the ice spikes.

—Balleroy hated the deaths of his own people more than anything else.

Balleroy: "—Ain't that right, Big Bro Miles?"

Carillon: "—Kiryararahhh!"

As he whispered in appeal, his beloved dragon neighed as if to express its approval.

That instant, the fired Magical Bullet flew straight, thoroughly destroying the ice spikes that were threatening to pierce the falling Medium.

And then—

Roswaal: “—The cause of your defeat, was that you wavered when it came to what was most important.”

Together with the unfeeling voice of the man, a Magical Bullet fired by his opponent pierced Balleroy’s chest, along with the wing of his beloved dragon, bringing this battle of sky to its conclusion.

Chapter 54:
Soumatou

1

—Before he could even notice it, Garfiel Tinzel found himself sitting in a dark place.

Garfiel: “Ah?”

With his sharp eyes widened, Garfiel glanced around.

There was no familiarity to the place. In the dimly lit area, Garfiel was sunk deep into a chair, resting his chin on his elbows with his knees.

What in the world could have brought him to be in such a place?

Garfiel: “Where the fuck am I…”

Wrinkling his nose in suspicion, Garfiel sniffed.

Garfiel’s excellent sense of smell, though not as acute as that of a Hyenaperson, was useful for assessing situations. Picking up information about his surroundings was more of an instinctive action—yet, his sense of smell was not working well.

It was not as if he could not sense any smell, but rather that it seemed elusive.

Speaking of elusiveness, it was not just the smell. The surrounding situation was also the same.

As previously mentioned, he found himself in a dimly lit area. The ceiling was high, and the chair Garfiel was seated upon was not the only one, as there were rows of chairs arranged on both sides. Moreover, there seemed to be multiple rows of chairs both before and behind Garfiel, with him occupying a seat in the middle of the space.

Just as he was contemplating this, Garfiel recalled something similar to this scene.

Garfiel: "This must be some kinda theater where they do plays or somethin'."

Once the idea of a theater was spoken, the image solidified in his mind, and it seemed clear-cut.

Indeed. Garfiel was in a theater, sitting in the middle of the auditorium. The dim lighting and high ceiling were all essential elements for theater performances.

Just as Garfiel came to this understanding of his situation, as if on cue, a loud, resonant bell chimed throughout the theater. —A signal for the beginning of the performance.

Garfiel: "…"

With widened eyes, Garfiel froze in place, leaving his inner thoughts behind, as a change occurred in front of the audience's seating—the curtain rose, unveiling the previously hidden stage.

And, on that stage, bathed in the audience's gaze, was—

Garfiel: "…A cat?"

Garfiel's muttered words, accompanied by a frown, succinctly captured the scene on the stage.

In truth, awaiting the start of the performance, now that the curtain had been raised, was a small cat. A tiny gray cat standing on two legs, with its arms outstretched.

Its small size, which was even tinier than the kitten-people like Mimi that Garfiel knew, was truly palm-sized.

One such small cat, then two, then three, began the start of their performance on the stage.

Each cat looked identical. And before Garfiel, swept along by the situation, the three cats began to move. —Each was adorned with different props.

One wore a golden wig, another a red wig, and the last one a white cotton tuft on its head.

Then, before Garfiel's blinking eyes, the three cats moved to their respective positions on the stage, where they began to perform spectacular movements.

The golden-haired cat and the cotton-tufted cat collided, while the red-haired cat stood still, watching.

Quite the literal scuffle had broken out.

Garfiel: "What the fuck's this…"

Stunned, Garfiel watched as the cats became entangled on the stage.

The props on the stage were quite elaborate, with a backdrop depicting a stone-hewn cityscape. The houses and kabuki paintings on the walls started to become broken, destroyed, and thrown around as the cats fought with each other.

It was quite the flashy, intricate horseplay, such that one would think it to be almost charming.

Garfiel: "—? That cat, now that I think 'bout it, ain't I seen it somewhere before?"

Suddenly, as he focused on the performing kittens, Garfiel felt a tug in his memory. Scratching at the lid of his nearly-closed recollection, he gradually opened it, and understanding began to emerge.

Those kittens, they looked just like the pictures that Subaru would draw at Emilia and Beatrice's insistence, depicting the Great Spirit who was contracted to Emilia.

Garfiel: "Nah, I said what the hell's up with that!"

Despite having an idea come to mind, Garfiel was indignant because he could not grasp what it meant. He inadvertently raised his voice, causing the kittens on stage to stop their movements in surprise.

Catching a glimpse of the three kittens peeking at him, Garfiel felt mortified.

He did not feel like there was a reason to apologize, nor did he want to insist that there was not one, but—

???: "—Truly a fool. Sit down, Garf."

Garfiel: "Oh…"

???: "Watching quietly is the etiquette of theater. Are you trying to disrupt the performance?"

Having been abruptly reprimanded, Garfiel turned to the side with his eyes peeled.

To his left, where there had been no one just moments before, sat a girl with pink hair—Ram. She pulled Garfiel back by his waistband and sat him down, and then to the kittens who were looking at her with glazed-over eyes, she arrogantly said "Continue".

Following Ram's instructions, the kittens resumed their onstage banter. However, Garfiel found Ram's presence more significant than the stage performance.

Garfiel: "Ram, what the hell are ya doin' here? 'N who the hell are those guys?"

Ram: "Garf."

Garfiel: "No, this ain't the time to be talkin'. Anyway, we gotta get outta here! I don't care where we are, I'll make sure to keep ya safe."

Ram: "Garf."

Garfiel: "Right, lemme know yer thoughts, Ram. Honestly, it's probably better to think 'bout things together with ya than for my amazin' self to think alone—"

Ram: "—Garf, haven't you realized?"

Driven by impatience, Garfiel's tone of voice became more and more agitated, choking up at Ram's words.

In front of the blinking Garfiel, Ram kept her usual cool demeanor, fixing her eyes on the stage.

Feeling frustrated by the one he loved not reciprocating the attention he was giving her, Garfiel also glanced up at the stage to see what had caught her attention, and he saw the unchanged playful antics of the kittens.

However, he soon realized that there was a hidden meaning beneath their continued playful interactions.

The golden-haired kitten, the red-haired kitten, and the cotton-tufted kitten faced each other and flailed about, wreaking havoc on the cityscape backdrop—until finally, the cotton-tufted kitten shoved the golden-haired kitten, causing it to tumble.

The fallen golden-haired kitten ended up trapped beneath a fallen prop.

What could this performance be about—

Ram: "Garf."

Once again, called by Ram's quiet voice, Garfiel turned around. And then, the light-crimson eyes that had been watching the stage up until now met his own, and their gazes collided head-on.

He looked at Ram's face, which normally made his heart pound when he saw it up close; however, at this moment, what was throbbing inside Garfiel was not love, but an instinctive warning bell.

Sensing Garfiel's realization, Ram let out a small sigh,

Ram: "You, are dying."

And so, she declared that the theater he was witnessing was just a fleeting dream.

2

—A kitten wearing a golden wig rolling onto the stage, which was his own appearance.

When he watched it with that understanding, this entire program appeared to be like nothing but a bad joke.

While confronting the enemy, the cotton-tufted kitten, he was the one protecting the red-haired kitten behind him. As he pondered upon it, little by little, his memory became clearer.

Garfiel: “That’s right, my amazin’ self’s right now in the middle of fightin’ with the Dragon that Captain asked me to… so that cotton-tufted one’s the Dragon?! ‘N the red-haired one’s the old man?!”

Ram: “That one has become rather cute.”

Garfiel: “As much as I wanna hear which one, this ain’t the time for that. I gotta get back soon…!”

Ram: “Wait.”

Garfiel: “Gooaah!”

Having understood the situation, Garfiel promptly attempted to jump into action, but he could only cry out in pain as the string of his necklace was pulled tight. Ram had forcibly stopped Garfiel and hastily turned him around to face her, and as Garfiel bore his fangs and was about to yell at her,

???: “Wait, wait, Garfiel. Stay right here like Nee-sama said. Let’s take a brief timeout.”

Saying so, Natsuki Subaru, who occupied the other seat next to Ram, stopped Garfiel.

The appearance of this Subaru, it was one that had not been seen in a while, with long arms and legs—long in comparison to the present state, but not actually all that long, that is what his appearance was.

Subaru: “Hey, right now, didn’t you just think of something really hurtful?”

Garfiel: “Don’t ya fret ‘bout it, Captain. Ain’t ya always sayin’ that ya got short legs ‘n a long torso?”

Subaru: “Saying it yourself versus having it said to you are entirely different kinds of damage! This must be the way of it! Am I right, Beako? Emilia-tan?”

Beatrice: “Subaru, right now, it’s Bubby’s moment to shine in the play, so stop interrupting, in fact.”

Emilia: “Sorry, Subaru. I’ll make sure to listen to what you have to say later…”

Subaru, who was finally back to his previous size, was altogether brushed aside by both Beatrice, who was sitting on his lap, and Emilia, who was seated next to him. The girls were way too absorbed in each and every move of the kittens on stage to give Subaru even the slightest attention.

Listening to the conversation between the disappointedly slump-shouldered Subaru and the others, Garfiel meanwhile recalled that the actual name of the kitten, whom he did not know personally, was Puck.

Furthermore, this kind of interaction of Subaru with the rest of the group felt similar to ones he had witnessed in the past.

???: “You are correct, this is a memory of the original theater that this space is based upon. You see, it looks just like the theater we were invited to when we all went to see the play about the Subjugation of the White Whale.”

???: “Garf-san was totally in love with that play. I had a lot of fun too, so I know how you feel.”

Garfiel: “Ottobro, Petra…”

This time, the voices came from behind him, and he turned around, where his gaze was met with Petra, who was waving her hands in the air, and Otto, who was seated next to her and was shrugging his shoulders.

Furthermore, besides Otto, he saw a woman with long, golden hair —

Garfiel: “Gaoh…”

Frederica: “That is quite the pathetic face you are making, Garf. Besides, Ram raises an unusually valid point this time. So sit, and calm down.”

Garfiel: “Oh, even if ya tell me to calm down…”

???: “Now now. Won’t you lend an ear to what all these people around you are saying? Good grief, one would expect some growth after not seeing you for so long, but you are still wet behind the ears, aren’t you, Gar-bo.”

Garfiel: “Geh! Nann… Granny?!”

Ryuzu: “…Why did you have to correct yourself to make it worse?”

Within the eyes of the astonished Garfiel, the figures of his grandmother, Ryuzu, together with his elder sister were reflected.

At that unexpected lineup, Garfiel was left flabbergasted, and Ram, who was right next to him, once again pulled him by the waistband, forcing him to sit down.

Ram: “So? Have you calmed down a little?”

Garfiel: “Just like “Dagraham‘s encirclement”, this ain’t a situation to calm down…! I just sat down cuz my knees felt a bit weak… What the hell’s goin’ on?”

Ram: “For the time being, it seems like you’re inclined to listen to what Ram has to say. Good.”

???: “As expected of you, Nee-sama.”

Garfiel: “Whoa?!”

Ram nodded with her usually cold expression, when suddenly an audience member seated in front of them turned around and interjected. Realizing that it was Rem, Ram's light blue-haired younger sister, Garfiel blinked.

However, Rem essentially ignored Garfiel and had turned back around to face forward again.

Garfiel: "Huh, what the…?"

Subaru: "That's how it is. Garfiel, you don't have much of a mental image of Rem yet, so she's only going to react nebulously. It's completely within the scope of how I impersonated her."

Garfiel: "At the rate people are poppin' up, ain't it gonna get hella crowded in here, dammit."

At Rem's vapidity, with Beatrice seated on his lap, Subaru responded while playing with her hair.

While this reasoning was somewhat convincing, if the person in question could not be recreated properly, then what was the point in keeping them in this theater in the first place; such was his impression.

Frederica: "You have it all wrong, Garf. It is true that you do not know much about Rem yet, but that does not mean you do not care about her. That is the reason why she is here."

???: "I agree. A person you are concerned about will continue to remain strongly in your heart. Familiarity with the person in question is not all that important, I think that's the crucial matter in this case."

Garfiel: "This ain't good for my heart."

Somehow, as he was beginning to understand the rules of the theater, the explanation that came from Frederica and Reinhard, who somehow came to be sitting in the rows behind, lacked a sense of reality.

Since none of this was real, it seemed like lacking that sense of reality was apt. In all likelihood, Frederica and Reinhard being in the same place, and having a conversation like this, had never happened before.

However—

Garfiel: “My impatience from earlier is startin’ to calm down. That bein’ said, should I just stay quiet like Ram said? I’m somehow startin’ to feel sleepy…”

Ram: “Ha! What is this idiocy I am hearing? If you fall asleep, you’ll die.”

Garfiel: “So this place really is dangerous after all!”

Beatrice, Emilia, & Petra: “Shhh-”

As soon as he raised his voice, Beatrice and Emilia put their fingers to their lips, and Petra admonished him. Being singled out made his lips quiver, and Garfiel clicked his fangs and fell silent.

He was told not to rush back, but then he was told not to be too calm, or else he would die; just what did they want Garfiel to do?

???: “It’s about not returning empty-haaanded~. Just do not try to overthink too much.”

Garfiel: “Urggh, even inside my amazin’ self’s head, you piss me off…”

Roswaal: “Oya oya, I am so haaated~. Although, blaming me would be absurd, so expressing my regret and apologizing would be an oddity.”

Seated one row behind with his long legs crossed, Roswaal fanned the flames. Looking towards him in frustration, as Garfiel was about to complain, he was suddenly at a loss for words.

He was aware that Reinhard, who had spoken out earlier, was seated next to Roswaal. However, the problem was the other person sitting next to him.

When the woman clad in black noticed Garfiel's gaze, she smiled sweetly with an "Ara",

???: "You're looking at me with quite the burning gaze. Although it's in a place like this, will you join me in slicing each other to our heart's content?"

Garfiel: "…Doin' that wouldn't be any fun. I'd also feel bad for Meili. So I ain't gonna do it."

???: "Oh, how disappointing. But, I don't feel that bad, knowing that you have a place for me inside of you."

???: "Since it is you Elsa, it is because of your nasty personality."

As a blood-colored smile appeared on Elsa's face, Meili took over the conversation from her, who was pincering Garfiel by sitting in the row in front of him, right next to Rem.

Somehow, he was beginning to understand the significance of the seating arrangements. If he was right, then naturally next to Elsa, a giant blue-skinned man with eight arms should have been present.

???: "…"

The giant man kept a rock-like expression on his face, and glancing at Garfiel, he remained silent.

Exposed to that silent pressure, Garfiel took a short breath, clenching his fist tighter and tighter. And then, that was when Garfiel's clenched fist was enveloped by the hand of a small shadow that had leaned over from the seat in front.

Mimi: "Garf, are you okaaay~? Can you do it? Mimi is super worried."

Garfiel: "Mimi…"

Ram: "That's right. Garf is a coward at heart."

The round-eyed Mimi took hold of his right hand, and his left hand was taken by Ram who was next to him.

Garfiel looked up, glanced around at their faces, and then let out a long, long sigh.

This was not a scene out of reality, Garfiel himself was about to die.

Despite that, the companions within his mind stopped him from going back immediately, and them taking turns talking to him like this, was like the “Soumatou” that he had once heard about from Subaru.

Subaru: “But you know, Garfiel. Ordinarily for a Soumatou, all of your memories from birth till the current moment flash before your eyes in a jiff, it’s not something where you get summoned to a theater.”

Garfiel: “…So then, what the hell’s this s’posed to be, Captain?”

Subaru: “For that, you’re gonna have to find the answer yourself.”

Rem: “As expected of Subaru-kun. I’m impressed.”

Garfiel: “—By myself.”

For a moment, despite the extra interjection in between, Garfiel went deep into rumination.

If this was not a Soumatou, and the answer was instead to be found by himself, then was it not just a momentary respite until the dying Garfiel could stand back up?

If he did not stand up right away, he would fail to fulfill the role he had been entrusted with—.

Beatrice: “Uu, I hope each of the Bubbys do their best, I suppose…!”

Emilia: “That’s right. No matter the outcome, let’s properly see it through to the end…!”

Indifferent to the anxious Garfiel, Beatrice and Emilia, who were watching the play, seemed to be getting more excited as the climax of the performance approached.

In suspense, and experiencing a whirlwind of emotions from what was occurring on the stage, the two held hands as the peculiar portrayal of Puck and Puck clashing with each other swayed their emotions tempestuously.

On stage, the golden-haired Puck had fallen over, and the red-haired Puck was restraining the cotton-tufted Puck as he tried to move in the direction of the golden-haired Puck, an undoubtedly perilous predicament—

Garfiel: "—The red-haired one…"

The red-haired Puck, while protecting the golden-haired Puck, was facing the cotton-tufted Puck.

The situation on the stage had changed while Garfiel had not been looking, and fearing that it was a reflection of reality, Garfiel's expression changed as he gnashed his fangs.

As expected, he needed to get back right away—

Ram: "—Truly a fool."

It was a familiar affront, but unlike the usual tone imbued with a bit of gentleness, the voice carried within it a more definite rebuke.

Garfiel's eyes widened at Ram's words, and she pointed to the stage with the hand opposite the one she had placed over Garfiel's. Looking at the stage that had been directed to, he found that the situation had continued to progress.

The collapsed, golden-haired Puck had arisen, and had pushed aside the red-haired Puck. It immediately began to head for the cotton-tufted Puck—with a single blow from the cotton-tufted Puck, the golden-haired Puck turned into light.

Subaru: "One out. However, in life, you don't get three outs. One out is how it ends."

Having turned the golden-haired Puck into light, the cotton-tufted Puck chased after the red-haired Puck, as he turned around in an attempt to run away, and also turned him into light. Thus, the cotton-tufted Puck alone remained on stage, and the play reached its curtain's close.

Amid sparse applause, the stage curtain descended, with the cotton-tufted Puck bowing deeply, and as the stage signaled the end of the performance—

Mimi: "Ehh~! That wasn't enjoyable at all! Mimi ain't satisfieeed~!"

And so, Mimi, who like Ram was also holding Garfiel's hand, stretched out her tail and started to throw a tantrum like a misbehaving child.

However, for a play that had already reached its conclusion, speaking out like that was pointless—but that had not been so.

In the next moment, the opening bell resounded within the theater, and the curtain that had been lowered began to rise once more.

And on the other side of the curtain, the golden-haired Puck and the red-haired Puck, who ought to have disappeared, along with the cotton-tufted Puck, who ought to have made them disappear, were facing off; protecting the collapsed golden-haired, the climactic scene where red-haired confronted cotton-tufted was being reenacted.

Garfiel: "The hell…"

Unsure of what in the world was unfolding, Garfiel's throat quivered.

And then, to Garfiel, whose thoughts had gone blank,

Ram: "Just recklessly standing back up didn't work, now did it? If so, then what will you do?"

So asked Ram, calmly with one eye closed.

To that question from Ram, Garfiel gulped, and he looked upon the stage once again.

Rem: “Nee-sama is wonderful.”

Truly, that was so; with the younger sister whom he was not yet too familiar with, Garfiel wholeheartedly agreed.

3

Onstage, the golden-haired Puck evaporated into light again and again.

It seemed that a great deal of improvisation was allowed in this play, and the content was influenced to a great extent by the audience’s opinions.

However—

Reinhard: “How about a serious kick to turn the entire Imperial Capital upside down?”

Elsa: “How about pretending just once to be gravely injured, and aiming at your opponent when they think you’re dead?”

Roswaal: “Even Dragons seem to have some sort of attachment. For example, hooow~ about using a friend of the Dragon who may be in the Imperial Capital as a shield?”

Garfiel: “If all ya can think of is impossible crap or cowardly plans, then shut up!”

Opinions that were not even adopted to the stage were shared one after another, and as Garfiel barked back furiously at the people behind him they all shut their mouths in unison.

Simply, since it was their words and actions as perceived by Garfiel, he could not help but feel unproductive because he felt as if he was angry with himself.

Otto: “At the very least, he needs to take advantage of the terrain. The difference between a large and small body can be fatal, but on the other hand, there must be a gap that can be used by being small.”

Petra: “Yeah, that’s right. Garf-san’s body is smaller than the Dragon’s, and he might lose in a contest of strength but… that’s why we should talk about what contest he can win in.”

Subaru: “In theory, yes, but in practice, how can we do it? Garfiel aside, if it were me, I wouldn’t be able to win a fight against a Dragon even if it was doing a handstand.”

Otto: “The thought of Natsuki-san exterminating a Dragon, I would not expect that from anyone but Garfiel.”

On the other hand, he felt that his comrades beside him who were speaking constructively were speaking more wisely than Garfiel, even though they were Garfiel’s perception of them.

Of course, the real people would have conversations like this, but—.

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, do you have any advice for Garfiel?”

Emilia: “Me? Well… I think that the part where he couldn’t catch Mezoreia’s tail before she hit him like that, that part wasn’t good. He may have been in a difficult position, but instead of trying to catch it couldn’t he have dodged it?”

Subaru: “You really responded better than I thought!”

Rem: “As expected of Emilia-san.”

While she watched the Pucks prance on stage, Emilia made an accurate point and Subaru and Rem both responded to her. He didn’t know if Rem’s response was correct, but perhaps her statement was a direct reflection of Garfiel’s feelings.

At any rate, he felt that things were gradually coming into view.

However, when one piled something up and piled it up and piled it up, and then brought it back to reality, how likely was it that it would actually be useful?

Ryuzu: “You’re worried aren’tcha, Gar-bo?”

Garfiel: “Honestly, my amazin’ self feels more shameful than worried. My amazin' self was the one who was entrusted with the duty of dealing with that Dragon."

Ryuzu looked at his face and Garfiel expressed his loathsome feelings.

He jumped in with gusto, nearly died in the heat of battle, and when that wasn't enough, Garfiel built a theater in his head that had a large group of his friends—well, some weren't his friends, but he was comforted by them all.

Ryuzu: "And, what is shameful about that?"

Garfiel: "…"

Upon being asked that, Garfiel furrowed his brow and raised his head. Lined up next to Ryuzu was Frederica, who was staring at Garfiel.

She squinted with the same emerald eyes as Garfiel.

Frederica: "What is shameful about this, Garf?"

She piled on the same question.

Garfiel: "It's, shameful ain't it. Everyone else is fightin' by themselves and yet only my amazin' self… hk."

Ryuzu: "If you can't fight by yourself then that's shameful. Is that what you're saying?"

Garfiel: "Yeah! Wait, no, that ain't right. I'm not sayin' it's shameful to work together to fight. This is, havin' my friends bustlin' together in my head."

Frederica: "—Seriously, that is impossible, Garf."

Having been driven ragged, all he could do was rely on the companions in his own mind.

Towards Garfiel who was vigorously trying to break away from that attitude, Frederica spoke clearly.

With her emerald-green eyes narrowed, Frederica sighed at the stiffening Garfiel and,

Frederica: “You really are quite dumb, Garf. Please take a look at your surroundings.”

Garfiel: “My surroundings…”

Being told this, Garifel looked around the inside of the theater.

His companions were lined up in the seats next to him, his enemies were in the seats behind, those who he was hesitant to call his allies were in front of him, and—before he knew it, there were no empty seats left in the theater, all of them were filled with faces that Garfiel was familiar with.

Garfiel: “…”

Ram, Subaru and some others were naturally there, and so were Roswaal, Reinhard, Mimi, Rem and the others, and there were even more people beyond that.

There were also the people of the Mathers domain, and there were also those that he had come to know over the course of his journey in the Empire.

There were the companions he was fond of and other people who he could not get close with, but every single one of them had come into contact with Garfiel’s life in some way, and each had secured themselves a seat.

Ryuzu: “My oh my, the theater’s jam-packed. Soon we won’t all be able to fit in here anymore.”

Seeing the same thing as Garfiel, Ryuzu let out a good humored chuckle.

As his grandmother had said, the theater was so full that some people had to stand. Everyone looked at the scene of the Pucks atop the stage, watching how the Puck that played the role of Garfiel was losing.

At that reality, his face began to heat up. What a pathetic, disgraceful manner of losing.

Everyone was surely fed up with him—

Ram: "—Truly a fool."

Mimi: "You know, Garf. All of this is inside Garf's head, right? But, Garf's head isn't very smart. Just like Mimi! So, that also goes for what everyone is saying, right?"

Being spoken to from both his left and right in quick succession, Garfiel blinked his eyes.

Then when he looked around again, everyone who had previously been looking at the stage had turned to face Garfiel himself. Looking at each of their faces one-by-one, he thought back on the type of people that they were.

Everyone had spoken as much as they pleased losing their complaints towards the Puck playing the role of Garfiel that kept losing, but—

Garfiel: "Nobody's tellin' my amazin' self anythin' that's convenient for me, or anythin' that I don't think they'd say."

Ram's words were direct, and Mimi's were vague, but they were both saying the same thing.

If this theater was in Garfiel's head, and for the sake of comforting his beaten and dying self, he had gathered his family, friends, acquaintances, and even enemies, then that would be beyond pathetic.

But, Garfiel was not smart.

Getting people to think and say things that they would not normally say, or having them line up convenient words to comfort his heart like he was playing with puppets, were the sort of complicated things he was unable to do.

Subaru: "As you've thought, you can't put what we've discussed here to good use in the outside world. This is just consolation, a temporary peace of mind. But, there's nothing wrong with resting, even if it's just your mind."

Beatrice: "Even though it was Subaru who requested him to stop the Dragon, that is quite the manner of speaking, in fact."

Subaru: "That's because I'm the me inside Garfiel's head…!"

Emilia: "Wait so that means, when it feels like you're about to say reaaally difficult things, it's just because that's how it seems to Garfiel? Is that so?"

Emilia, with a puzzled look on her face, asked this, making Garfiel let out an "Ah."

He looked overhead, taking a moment to think before lowering his gaze.

Garfiel: "Maybe since I'm fine with however much the Captain asks of me, the Captain in my amazin' self's head can say things like that."

Otto: "Even supposing that were the case, you should know that the people around you are giving you their honest advice. Really, I have no clue where you learnt to think like this…"

Frederica: "…Otto-sama would say that, now wouldn't he?"

Frederica gave a wry smile as Otto pointed at himself with a disappointed expression. Seeing this, Petra placed a hand over her mouth, letting out an "Aha," a laughter which began to spread throughout her surroundings.

Before Garfiel realized it, he had joined in the laughter, in spite of himself.

Garfiel: "Well, like, maybe I was bein' a bit stubborn."

Ryuzu: "Oh, Gar-bo?"

Garfiel: "Cuz Captain asked me to do it, 'n also cuz the Empire was at risk. Sure, my opponent's a Dragon, 'n like always we can't afford to lose, but what the hell."

Garfiel slowly moved his hands apart from how they had been interlocked from left and right and raised them up. Then he clasped them strongly together before his chest, letting out a thunk.

With that pose, the reverberating sound of his gnashing fangs, and his rising fighting spirit,

Garfiel: "This here, is a job that was entrusted to my amazin' self, but my amazin' self ain't gonna be fightin' alone."

???: "—Magnificent."

Inspired by Garfiel's rising spirits, a low, solemn commendation hung over the room.

It had come from a seat behind him, and Garfiel did not need to confirm that this single word had been spoken by a giant with four pairs of crossed arms. Now, there was just one thing that he wanted to ascertain.

Garfiel: "I told ya, Captain! I'll make that flyin', bellyachin' Dragon drop to the ground!"

Subaru: "—Yeah! Like you said! Go and get 'em!"

Garfiel: "Hyooo!"

With an energetic reply, Garfiel stood up with verve.

And, unlike the other times when he stood up where she had pulled him back, Ram did not move. Garfiel glanced at her, and as she looked at the stage while embracing her elbows,

Ram: "What?"

Garfiel: "Ha! It's nothin'. Seems like in my amazin' self's head, you ain't that unswayable of a woman."

Ram: "There's no need to go out of the way to say what's already obvious. That's what Garf is for."

Garfiel flashed a wry smile at Ram as she shrugged her dainty shoulders, not even turning her gaze over his way. In her place, Mimi nimbly jumped on top of her seat,

Mimi: "Then, Mimi speaks! Garf, it would be so cool if you won this!"

Laughing at his declaration, Mimi slapped Garfiel's back with all the strength she could muster.

Then, a beat later, just like Mimi had, Subaru, Beatrice, Emilia, Petra, Frederica, and Ryuzu all clapped Garfiel on the back.

As he was being pushed out, Garfiel was clapped on the back, and he faced towards the exit of the theater.

Garfiel: "Ottobro! Give me some advice."

Otto: "Let me see… When it comes to dangerous behavior like risking your life, I would not allow that for anyone other than for myself."

Garfiel: "I don't wanna just be told that by you, Ottobro!"

His joking older brother gave him a slap on the back, forcing Garfiel towards the exit of the theater.

As he was forced towards the doorway, he saw his younger siblings, who he had thought could not be found in any of the seats, and towards them and his mother who held them by their shoulders, he directed a thumbs up.

An encounter that had filled the entirety of the theater, it was a good Soumatou.

And so, in those final moments, he pointed his finger towards the Pucks onstage, and,

Garfiel: "—My amazin' self ain't a cat! I'm the Gorgeous Tiger!"

4

???: “…”

Dragons were beings that were often likened to natural disasters and cataclysms, but the way the Cloud Dragon, Mezoreia, was rampaging about left that judgment no room for objection whatsoever.

It was the incarnation of destruction that had completely changed the scenery of the Imperial Capital from what it had been just a few minutes prior, and its fierce rampage was a sight utterly inconceivable for this world; witnessing that, Heinkel’s legs could not stop shaking as his heart shattered.

There had also been someone who had altered Heinkel’s destiny in a mere instant.

However, they had suffered a crushing defeat in an exchange of blows against the Dragon, and had been blown away by a roar which split the very ground asunder. Debris had rained down upon them, and had buried them underneath.

That was why there was no point, even though he had told them.

Senselessly, mercilessly, the golden-haired boy had lost his life.

And Heinkel had been unable to do anything but silently watch—

???: “—I’M THE GORGEOUS TIGER!!”

The next moment, an explosion occurred from within the mountain of rubble, and an angry roar reverberated.

At the event that had been far too abrupt, Heinkel’s throat clogged up in shock, astonished by the person who had thrust their first upwards and had blown away the mountain of rubble—Garfiel.

Garfiel: “Ahh, shit… How long’s my amazin’ self been sleepin’ for…?”

Staggeringly shaking his head, Garfiel ripped off his tattered vest, and enquired so. At that question, Heinkel blinked his eyes in surprise,

Heinkel: "…Since you were buried under the rubble, it's been about five seconds."

Garfiel: "—Five seconds, huh? Almost got killed ten times over, that was a fuckin' close one."

Taking a long, deep breath, Garfiel cracked the joints in his neck.

Seeing that unthinkable figure right after he had thought that the attack had invariably killed Garfiel, Heinkel was at a loss for words. But, there was also someone even more shocked than Heinkel, and could not conceal their surprise.

Mezoreia: "Wha, t… hk."

Garfiel, who had been bustling about with no cease to his motion, delivering unthinkable blows as if there were no difference in size between them, should have finally been defeated.

He had certainly been killed. For that belief to have been shattered in merely five seconds, Heinkel sympathized. —What did it matter if he sympathized? Against that ultimate lifeform, against the Cloud Dragon?

Mezoreia: "You, why… why won't you friggin' die…?"

Garfiel: "Ahh? Don't be an idiot, I really would've died. That is, if Pops didn't go 'n make those five seconds for me."

Heinkel: "I, I didn't do any…"

Garfiel bared his teeth at the words of the astonished Dragon, but Heinkel could only shake his head.

It was true that right after Garfiel was blown away and buried in the rubble, Heinkel had kept on holding his sword and had exchanged glances with Mezoreia. But, that was nothing more than him gazing at it while understanding that if Garfiel had been defeated, he would become the next prey.

Mezoreia: “—Hk! DIEEEEEEEEEEEEEEE!!!!”

Ignoring Heinkel’s self-awareness, Mezoreia’s patience had reached its limit.

The Cloud Dragon furiously closed in on the bolt upright Garfiel, and raising up its thick, long tail, it brought it down like a flash of lightning.

The wind generated from the flap of its wings, which it had used to approach, was enough to make it feel as if the likes of Heinkel were about to be blown away. The extraordinary blow from the Dragon aimed directly for Garfiel—

Heinkel: “—ah?”

That instant, the Cloud Dragon’s body blurred mid-air, and its entirety was slammed into the protective wall of the Imperial Capital.

Mezoreia: “—Urahwahdah?!”

Turned upside down, Mezoreia’s back crashed into the wall, and it let out a disheveled exhale without understanding what had just happened; sharing that lack of understanding, Heinkel’s jaw was left agape.

It was not clear how it had been done. But, it was clear who had done what.

—Garfiel had parried the blow from Mezoreia’s tail, and had thrown the Dragon.

Garfiel: “Ahh, shit… now I’ve done it.”

Looking down at his hands, for some reason, Garfiel muttered so in discontent.

Making an expression as if he was digging up an unpleasant memory, he repeatedly opened and closed the hands that had thrown the Dragon, and then turned around.

Those emerald-green eyes directly clashed with the eyes of the upside down Cloud Dragon.

And then—

Garfiel: “Well, nevermind. Let’s fuckin’ do this, round two. —Sorry ‘bout this, but my amazin’ self’s the only one who’s got a mountain load of support!”

Indeed, using incomprehensible reasoning as fuel for his fighting spirit, Garfiel’s clash with the Cloud Dragon, after a momentary stoppage, began anew—the verse of a legend, headed for its coda.

Chapter 55:
Madelyn Eschart

1

—Madelyn Eschart was the youngest dragonkin in existence.

By nature, due to the mechanisms behind the dragonkin's genesis, they possessed origins distinct from every other race. In order to precisely explain their ecology, the relationship between dragonkin and Dragons must first be known.

Nowadays, the number of individual Dragons that could be identified on the surface had considerably decreased, but that was influenced to no small extent by the fact that in times of yore, the favorite food of the Stick Swinger, Reid Astrea, had been Dragon meat.

Reid killed Dragons as he pleased, and killed the Dragons that had challenged him for retribution because of that; by doing that for several years, the already small number of Dragons had decreased even more in the blink of an eye, and they had been brought to the verge of extinction.

And, in the background behind the downfall of the Dragons, the ecology of Dragons played a big part.

First of all, Dragons did not require copulation or mating in order to multiply. Even without a male and female pairing up, they were creatures capable of asexual reproduction. Their bodies were constructed with a large quantity of Mana, and thus were fundamentally different from other races, and if a comparison had to be made, the closest thing would probably be Spirits.

Only, unlike Spirits, which had levels such as Micro, Quasi, and Great, Dragons were Dragons by birth, and there was no doubt that their unparalleled might existed at the apex of all living things.

Therefore, Dragons possessed almost no sense of protecting other individuals of their race, or of preserving the species.

Since they were capable of parthenogenesis, they inevitably harbored little interest in other Dragons. The ones that challenged Reid in the name of retribution for their species did not do so for the sake of the killed Dragons, but because their pride deemed it unacceptable for the Dragon race to be disdained.

As a result, by the time the Dragons realized how bad their situation was, they were already standing on the verge of extinction—even the mighty Dragon that was the leader of the flock filled Reid's stomach, and in another land, their confrontation with the Witch of Sloth had proved to be fatal, so the time had come for them to make a decision.

That decision was, namely, whether to follow the pride of a Dragon or not.

The Dragons that followed their pride abandoned the land, and while not approving of the attacks led by individual specimens hostile against Reid or the Witch of Sloth, they had chosen to fly away over yonder.

The Dragons that did not follow their pride remained in the land, and without severing relations with those who arrogantly opposed Dragons that were superior to themselves, they had made the unusual choice to continue feuding.

From a human's intuition, it might seem like the explanations of the ones that had and had not followed their pride were reversed, but this was correct when considering the perception of the Dragons.

In the first place, Dragons were the ultimate existence that could not possibly be compared with other races. There was no reason for them to go through the trouble of clashing with other species to prove that point. For Dragons, doing battle was defined as vying for survival, so if one wished to compete for victory, they would do so through the act of surviving. Therefore, those who were capable of doing so would be known as superior specimens.

The line of thinking went that the Dragons who could not reach that thought, instead doing battle with humans to prove an unnecessary point, clinging to the land and risking their lives, were causing Dragons as a whole to be disdained, and thus were in the wrong.

Therefore, the majority of the Dragons departed from the land, and the Dragons that yet remained were eccentrics—to put it more directly, they were treated as deviants among the Dragons.

At the top of that list would be the Divine Dragon, Volcanica, who was the most proactively friendly towards humans of the ones that had stayed behind, but the topic of that well known Dragon deviates from the matter at hand, and thus will be omitted.

Thus, at last, we return to the subject of dragonkin.

Going against the intentions of the Dragon race, the Dragons that remained in the land all acted independently.

Some Dragons died challenging Reid or the Witch of Sloth, other Dragons lived as hermits in regions that they had grown familiar with, and another portion of Dragons had become humans. —The decision of this final portion of Dragons had served as the basis for the dragonkin.

It was ironic, but the existence of Reid Astrea had played a large part in the creation of dragonkin.

Whether the Dragons followed their pride or not, there was a level of audacity in the man who had driven them to that decision, but it was his strength that had left a stronger impression on the pride of the Dragons.

As mentioned previously, Dragons boasted that they were the apex of all living things, and they were well aware that they were the ultimate existence. Just as they knew how to move their limbs, how to look at things, and how to hear sounds without the need to learn, that was an intuitive understanding.

Therefore, being the ultimate existence was important to Dragons, and if they indeed were, then there would be no need to fuss over the original form of a Dragon. —If they were superior, then even the form of a human would be fine.

It was mentioned that the construction of the Dragons' bodies was close to that of Spirits, and that ecology would come into use here.

Originally, the reason Dragons took on the majestic form of large bodies that sprouted wings, with sharp fangs and claws, and tough scales, was none other than because it easily displayed their abilities as the ultimate existence. Dragons had retained the same form for so long because there had never appeared a form that could display the power of a Dragon more aptly.

But, with the trend of times and changes in the world, if there was a need to alter themselves into a more suitable form, the Dragons would not shun the notion of discarding their majestic appearances, and instead taking the same forms as humans.

That was the origin of the dragonkin, their relationship with Dragons. —That was to say, the dragonkin were the evolved form of Dragons, the next generation spawned through parthenogenesis.

While they were equipped with the same physical traits as humans, that was the reason why every dragonkin was capable of movements incomparable to those of humans, and why they possessed extraordinary power as living things.

However, in the long history of Dragons, this was the first time there had been such a sudden and drastic evolution in form, and the birth of dragonkin caused many problems.

Among those, the most serious flaw was that critical damage would be yielded in the soul of the Dragon that served as a parent to a dragonkin, followed by them becoming an empty shell stripped of their mind, the phenomenon of the dragonhusk.

A Dragon that had become a dragonhusk was practically in the state of a living corpse, and save for the instinctual act of self-defense, they were transformed into a puppet that obeyed the will of their descended dragonkin with whom they bore a deep connection.

Even so, the extraordinary power possessed by a Dragon remained, and to an average human, they would be more than enough of a threat, but it was definitely not a desired state.

The Dragons that remained in the land with their own bodies were few, and the Dragons that had evolved into dragonkin were even fewer. From various perspectives, it was considered a disgusting example of failure for the Dragons that had evolved into dragonkin.

But, while being aware of the failures of other Dragons, the dragonkin continued to exist with a small overall population.

And while understanding that their species would scorn it as the foolish struggles of deviants who had abandoned their pride as Dragons and remained in the land, unable to recognize the error in their decision.

—Dragonkin still continued to be born, and as one of them, Madelyn Eschart had come into this world.

2

An impact beyond comprehension beat Madelyn down, who was occupying the dragonhusk of the Cloud Dragon, Mezoreia.

In her original body, that of a young girl in human form, Madelyn knew what it felt like to be hurled.

That was certainly infuriating, but at least she could comprehend it. But, for this huge build of the Cloud Dragon to be tossed about by a being as small as the tip of its tail, was an event completely detached from reason.

How utterly nonsensical. It should have never come to pass. This sort of thing was entirely beyond the realm of imagination.

Madelyn: “—HUMAN!!”

With its back slammed against the wall, what was reflected in her upside-down vision, was a bloodied boy beckoning to her from atop the smashed stone pavement.

Golden hair and sharp fangs, she could tell he was a beast demi-human from his ferocious, ghastly aura, but there was no doubt that he was human. There was no reason for Madelyn's flame of indignation to disappear.

In the first place, it was no joke to suffer a direct hit from a Dragon's breath and live to tell the tale.

—Storing her own mind within the dragonhusk of Mezoreia, she controlled its movements as if it was her property.

This was Madelyn's privilege as a dragonkin, and with the number of years since she had come into this world as a dragonkin still few, it was a powerful technique she was able to employ because there remained a strong connection between her and Mezoreia, the specimen that was her parent.

The destructive impulses and power that were usually too much for that small body, she could now wield to her heart's content with this large body. She would proclaim in a loud voice that it was this mighty power that was the true Madelyn.

She had not wished to be born into such a small, frail, easily crushable, helpless body.

If that had not been so, if it had not been that kind of body, Balleroy would not have left Madelyn behind when he went to challenge his final battle.

If Madelyn had been a Dragon with a scary face and a big, powerful body—even though she was.

Boy: "—Shield of Sanctuary, Garfiel Tinzel."

Gnashing his sharp fangs, and firmly planting his feet on the smashed up street, the boy—Garfiel, gave his name.

That held the significance of a warrior giving their introduction as they threw down the gauntlet, but unbeknownst to that, the dragonkin sharpened the glint in the Cloud Dragon's eyes, and greatly swung its tail.

Using that vigor to tear its upside-down body from the wall, she placed all four of its limbs on the ground and glared at the boy.

She would not lose. Even if her opponent was a being who had endured a breath she thought had certainly killed him, who had jumped out from under the rubble after a mere few seconds, Madelyn would not lose.

It was this very dragonhusk of the Cloud Dragon that Madelyn had desired as a bridal gown for Balleroy's sake.

Madelyn: "Someone like you, isn't friggin' special…!"

Its long white whiskers shaking, a shout arose from the Cloud Dragon's throat. Despite being right before the Dragon's roar as it struck fear in the world, the half-dead, half-alive Garfiel did not waver.

His appearance almost looked as if he was being accompanied by a mountainous number of reliable allies.

Garfiel: "—Ahh, I know."

Madelyn: "…"

Garfiel: "'Cause in order to make sure my amazin' self didn't get any mistaken ideas, the woman I've fallen for went 'n stopped me from rushin' ahead by sayin' I was truly a fool!!"

Joining his fists before his chest, his silver gauntlets powerfully clanged out, and Garfiel roared.

In front of a creature that was supposed to be fragile, yet did not show a hint of weakness, Madelyn felt anger, in addition to something else. That something she had felt, she denied that which a Dragon must never harbor towards a human.

Madelyn: "—FRIGGIN' DISAPPEEEEAR!!"

That next moment, responding to Madelyn's outburst, the Cloud Dragon's roar shook the Imperial Capital once more.

Until just before, Garfiel had kept Madelyn positioned inside the city, and he put in hard work to ensure that the direction in which she unleashed the breaths would be towards the outside of the city. With that, he had fought while maintaining vigilance over the length and width of the attack range of the Dragon's breath, but here, those hard efforts would be reduced to naught.

Unleashed from the uttermost south of the city, the Crystal Palace that was directly at the city's northernmost point was captured within its range. The rays of destruction that had been charged up within the Dragon's body scorched the street, reducing buildings to dust, destroying everything in its line of fire, and it was about to penetrate the North—if Garfiel had not been there.

Garfiel: "Oh, OHHHHHHHHHHHHH—!!!"

He firmly planted both his feet on the ground as if to pierce it, and raising both arms that were clad in silver gauntlets in front of himself, Garfiel caught the Cloud Dragon's breath head on.

Even though putting up even a little bit of a fight against that would be considered a miracle, the boy was not blown away, he was not blasted away, and he managed to endure as he protected the Imperial Capital from destruction.

The mechanism that allowed for this extraordinary strife to be realized, lay in his two feet that were thrusted into the ground.

The eyes of the Cloud Dragon, retaining the form of a dragonhusk constructed with a large volume of Mana, perceived that Mana was flowing from the ground into Garfiel with abnormal vigor.

Garfiel's abnormal recovery ability and stamina until now had likely been from absorbing power from the ground like that, but its scale and vigor had immediately skyrocketed.

As proof of that, Garfiel was not simply holding his ground, but while basking in the Cloud Dragon's breath, he advanced one step forward, of all things.

One step, and then another, he steadily advanced, closing the distance on Madelyn.

Garfiel: “To make sure my amazin’ self doesn’t chicken out, I got a fuck ton of guys pattin’ me on my back tellin’ me to keep on goin’!!”

As Madelyn doubted her vision, a voice could be heard amidst the destruction where even sound had been scorched to naught.

Impossible. But, Garfiel had declared so. Declaring so, he continued to advance. Against this Cloud Dragon’s breath, amidst destruction that would likely cause the maps to be redrawn, he advanced.

One step, and then another, taking steps which should have never been possible—.

Madelyn: “—Rahhfwahh!!”

Witnessing his advance, Madelyn’s exhale was greatly disheveled.

The roar and the breath, to phrase it another way, were none other than the destructive war cry of the Dragon. Having her mind thrown into disarray, if the breath ran out, the destruction would cease.

Garfiel’s advance and resistance had been enough to conquer the Cloud Dragon’s breath.

Garfiel: “GaaaRAHHHHHH!!”

With the sound of a crash as he broke through, Garfiel swung both his arms up.

By doing that, the final stretch of the Cloud Dragon’s breath shot up into the sky. The Dragon was motionless with eyes wide-open, and as white steam emitted from all over its body, it saw as Garfiel’s body, burned a deep red to the extent that it would make one want to avert their eyes, rapidly healing.

Behind him, was the cityscape of the Imperial Capital that he had protected with his two slender arms, and the figure of the red-haired man who had fallen down on his backside within that cityscape.

Madelyn: "…"

Having been fully defended against, Madelyn was struck by an impact.

However, more so than the fact that the Dragon's breath had not worked, the true shock that hit Madelyn was in a more horrifying form.

Making a loud gulping sound, the red-haired human looked at the cityscape that had not been blown away by the breath, and said this.

Red-Haired Man: "You're not, sane… that breath was about to blast away the entire palace, and you just stopped it…!"

Madelyn: "—ah."

In regards to the reality before his eyes, those had been the words of the red-haired man as he trembled with fear. There had even been some fear towards Garfiel, who had resisted the Dragon's breath, and endured, but that was different for Madelyn.

For Madelyn, malevolent blades stabbed into her as she reflected on her own actions.

It was as the red-haired man had said. If Garfiel had not stopped her, her roar would have erased the Imperial Capital.

Even though the Crystal Palace within the line of fire would have contained Madelyn's body, as well as Balleroy and Carillon.

Madelyn: "Th-That's friggin' wrong… hk."

Slowly, weakly shaking her head, she denied her own actions with gestures unbecoming of a Dragon.

With blood rushing to her head, her thoughts stained white, she became frantic to do something about the enemy in front of her, and as a result, Madelyn had almost blown away anything and everything.

To think that she had been saved by a small, weak, fragile, helpless human.

Madelyn: “That’s wrong, that’s wrong, wrong wrong wrong wrong WRONG WRONG WRONG WRONG WRONG WROOOOOOONG…!!”

Garfiel: “Ahh? Oi, what’s with you…”

Madelyn: “This dragon! For the sake of Balleroy! Everything, everything everything, was for the friggin’ sake of Balleroy!!”

At her wit’s end, Madelyn piled on words of denial, to which Garfiel made a dubious face. As if painting over Garfiel’s, over the voice she did not want to hear the most, Madelyn shouted.

Raising a scream that even she herself did not fully comprehend, the Cloud Dragon thrashed its wings.

Garfiel: “—Hk!”

As a violent gale was spurred forth, Garfiel immediately crouched down as his hair intensely flapped; the Cloud Dragon, Mezoreia, ascended in one go, and flew up into the heavenly skies.

Thereupon existed thick, dark clouds that were covering the entirety of the Imperial Capital of Lupugana.

Madelyn: “Someone like you, isn’t friggin’ special…!”

Following the beck and call of the Cloud Dragon, Mezoreia, clouds had gathered from across the entire Empire—with the Mana that Mezoreia could not keep stored within itself sealed within them, they were a destructive impulse of white.

She had brought them together in a single swoop. —By no means, were they something Madelyn would be able to handle. Even so, she would be able to bring them down to the surface as a bundle of absurd power.

Madelyn: “This dragon, isn’t friggin’ special…!”

Once Madelyn brought the clouds down to the surface, she would blast away Garfiel and the red-haired human, and then she would kill anyone who knew about what she had done.

By doing that, Madelyn would—

Madelyn: “The only one who’s friggin’ special, is Balleroy…!!”

As the weeping voice of the Dragon rained down from the heavens above, the puny humans below her looked up at the sky.

While looking up, the boy, small, yet not weak or fragile, gnashed his fangs,

Garfiel: “—This massive, goddamn idiot.”

3

—Madelyn Eschart was born at the summit of Mount Palzoa, the mountain where the Cloud Sea City of Mezoreia was located.

That city, crowned with the name of the Cloud Dragon that had inhabited the Empire for a long time, was a land where many who aspired to utilize the Empire’s original technique of flying dragon riding would make their way.

Through the power of the Dragon that had settled there, large clouds wound around the tall mountain’s surface all year round without ever disappearing, and the city had been built at a high elevation upon it.

The mountain was the residence for wild, violent flying dragons, and the elevation of the Cloud Sea City was a place where humans could just barely survive—those aiming to go even higher, would either end up with a flying dragon’s fangs gnawing into them, or return with a flying dragon egg, and embark on the path of being a flying dragon rider.

The likes of the mountain’s summit, concealed by the thickest clouds, had never once been seen by anybody.

The untrodden summit of Mount Palzoa, that was Madelyn’s birthplace.

Wrapped in clouds of white, in a place where, despite the presence of the sky, one could not hope to behold its azure hue, Madelyn had been born as one of the rarest beings in this world, a dragonkin. The new generation of Dragons, the ultimate existence, and while she was acquiring an instinctual understanding, there was a tragedy that had awaited her.

That was—

???: "—I, am Mezoreia. In accordance with the voice of mine dear child, I shalt become the wind from the heavenly skies."

Her biological parent, the Cloud Dragon, Mezoreia, had become a dragonhusk upon birthing a dragonkin, and had welcomed Madelyn's birth in a state where communication had become difficult.

Hardly exchanging any words, yet only understanding that it was a Dragon who was close to her, the newborn Madelyn was not taught even a single thing, and she had earnestly spent her time in futility.

Why the Cloud Dragon, who ought to have lived for a long time, being fully aware of the severe and absurd nature of the world, had chosen to engage in this cruel generational shift, was something that even now Madelyn failed to understand.

The one thing that could be said was that, despite not being alone, Madelyn had spent her days amidst the clouds in eternal solitude.

And the one who had put an end to that solitude, was somebody who had accomplished something that nobody in the history of the Empire had ever done before, and had reached the summit of the mountain engulfed by the Cloud Sea; it was Balleroy Temeglyph.

Balleroy: "Really now, it's all fine and dandy that I went in wanting to challenge my own abilities, but… I never woulda expected that there'd be a lovely young lass and a frightening Dragon waiting for me at the top."

???: "—Kiryararahhh!"

Within what was a world of dense clouds rather than dense fog, finding Madelyn—the very young dragonkin who had yet to bear that name, Balleroy scratched his cheek in a troubled manner.

The flying dragon next to him, Carillon, was overwhelmed by the presence of the Cloud Dragon and the very young dragonkin, but still stood in a way to protect its companion, Balleroy.

Mezoreia: "—I, am Mezoreia. In accordance with the voice of mine dear child, I shalt become the wind from the heavenly skies."

The Cloud Dragon, unable to say anything but those words, and only providing clouds bundled with Mana as meals, had likely not rejected the sudden visitor only due to the fact that he harbored no enmity.

Before Balleroy and Carillon, the Cloud Dragon had instinctively rejected flying dragons that had carelessly strayed from the pack and got lost in the clouds, making them disappear before they could enter the vision of its young child.

Therefore, this was the first time the young child was encountering life other than herself or the Cloud Dragon.

Young Child: "…"

The young child kept silent. Or rather, she did not know any words to speak.

At the pairing of human and flying dragon that had appeared without warning, all she could do was shrink her body. The Cloud Dragon did not say anything at times like this, and kept its consciousness submerged in the depths of ambiguity.

Of course, depending on the person's next action, the Cloud Dragon could forcibly remove Balleroy and Carillon in the same way it had done so for all the flying dragons that had peered at the summit until now.

However, before the overwhelming presence of a Dragon and a dragonkin, Balleroy, without getting especially worked up, took off the coat he was wearing, and, Balleroy: “For now, put this on, lil’ miss. It ain’t good for a maiden to recklessly expose her skin like that.”

With that said, the young child—the girl whom Balleroy would later go on to name Madelyn, was given the first semblance of kindness and warmth she had ever experienced in her life.

Two alternate portrayals of this scene can be found herehere

4

—Madelyn’s peculiar meetings with Balleroy always took place within the Cloud Sea.

Balleroy: “Madelyn, I’ve come again. Have ya been a good girl?”

Madelyn: “Balleroy!”

Balleroy: “Uwatahh?!”

Tearing through the thick, white clouds, Balleroy had showed up, and towards him, the young child—Madelyn came running.

Catching the body of the girl jumping towards him, that impact and vigor caused him to tumble down backwards together with Carillon after having just landed, and despite his dizziness, Balleroy stroked Madelyn’s head.

Since their first meeting, Balleroy had made frequent appearances at the summit of Mount Palzoa.

It was a summit that many flying dragon riders had risked their lives to challenge, yet nobody had ever reached before. Back then, she had no idea how much hardship Balleroy had gone through to reach her, and how valuable an action it was.

Only, by frequently visiting the mountain, and bringing Madelyn a connection to the unknown outside world, Balleroy became an irreplaceable existence to her.

The name Madelyn, was also something Balleroy had given to her.

At a loss for what to call her, he asked for her name, and when the young child replied that she had no name, he earnestly wracked his brain, and decided on that name to give her.

Balleroy: “Back when I was a kid around your age, that was the name of a person who treated me real well. She was the one who gave me my name… I’m much obliged to her.”

Madelyn: “Balleroy, that human, was she friggin’ precious to you…?”

Balleroy: “We had parted ways before I could properly think that. And yet, to still remain within me after all these years, I guess that’d hafta be the case.”

He gave a broad grin, yet he seemed somewhat lonely, so Madelyn gently nuzzled her cheek against his chest.

The name of someone precious to him, he had bestowed it upon Madelyn in this manner. In other words, it was evidence that Madelyn was precious to Balleroy.

Being thought of like that by Balleroy, caused Madelyn to feel a deep, warm emotion.

Wishing for more of that, much, much more of that, she eagerly anticipated her time together with Balleroy.

Wanting to converse more with Balleroy, she diligently remembered the words of humans.

In this regard, Balleroy was also surprised by Madelyn’s high learning ability, but that was, in all likelihood, a trait of the dragonkin that had been inherited from the nature of Dragons.

For some reason, her dialect would not disappear no matter what, but that did not get in the way of her conversations with Balleroy.

Balleroy: “Hehe, looks like my judgment wasn’t mistaken. Suits ya well, Madelyn.”

Madelyn: “I-is that friggin’ so? Fufu…”

Placing his hand on his chin, Balleroy nodded in a satisfied manner, and as she did a twirl before him, Madelyn ascertained the feeling of the fluttering cloth—no, of the clothes he had presented to her.

The gentle color of the clothes seemed to be “sky-blue” from what Balleroy had said. It was the same color as Madelyn’s hair, and it was something that Balleroy had gone out of his way to prepare for her.

In all honesty, as a dragonkin, Madelyn felt annoyed by wearing clothes like this since they impeded her movement, but that feeling vanished when she looked at Balleroy.

Giving her a name, giving her words, and giving her clothes, he had granted her happiness.

Madelyn counted the things Balleroy had granted her, and remembered them all. It was in the nature of Dragons. Dragons would absolutely never forget the treasures they had hoarded.

The items and emotions Balleroy had brought her, were all treasures to Madelyn.

Balleroy: “Well then, I’ll come again before the moon is half-full, Madelyn.”

As the precious, fragile time they spent together heartrendingly came to a close, Balleroy mounted Carillon, and flew away from the Cloud Dragon’s nest.

With the promise of their next meeting in her heart, Madelyn endured the sad feelings and saw him off.

—Leaving Madelyn behind at the summit, just who could call Balleroy heartless as he flew away?

In the Dragon’s nest, enveloped in white clouds, it was not as if Balleroy had never attempted to take Madelyn out, who had yet to see even the sky that was of the same hue as her hair.

Only, he had been unable to do so. Even if the Cloud Dragon, who existed in a vague world, had overlooked Balleroy and Carillon entering its nest, it would not allow them to attempt to take Madelyn outside.

Mezoreia: “—I, am Mezoreia. In accordance with the voice of mine dear child, I shalt become the wind from the heavenly skies.”

Mezoreia had accepted Balleroy and Carillon as they bore no enmity; however, as soon as they tried to take Madelyn out, it would follow its instincts, baring its fangs.

In a Dragon’s nest, under the eye of the Dragon that was its lord, there was no chance for a human to win.

Therefore, Balleroy did not take Madelyn out. Madelyn, too, did not wish for Balleroy to die. That was why Madelyn had never once said that she wanted him to take her outside.

Instead, just once, she had made him an entreaty.

Madelyn: “Balleroy, won’t you friggin’ stay here… together with this dragon, forever?”

Balleroy: “…”

Seeing Balleroy’s cheeks stiffen in response as she made that entreaty, Madelyn regretted it.

The moment of silence that was created, served as a faithful representation of Balleroy’s answer in response to Madelyn’s entreaty. Balleroy would not stay here at the summit.

Outside of this world clouded in white, Balleroy still had many things that were precious to him.

Just like how Madelyn had nothing but this white world, Balleroy had nothing but the outside world. This was a world uninhabitable for Balleroy, for humans.

Balleroy: “—I’m real sorry, Madelyn.”

Apologizing to Madelyn as she comprehended that, Balleroy tried to stroke her head like he usually did. For the first time, Madelyn rejected Balleroy's palm, and sent him away.

As tears welled up in her eyes, she threw a tantrum and raised her voice, and chasing Balleroy and Carillon away from the summit as if blaming them, Madelyn sobbed.

Sobbing for three days and three nights, Madelyn regretted her own actions.

During that time, she succumbed to her emotions, wondering what she would do if Balleroy never showed up again, she lamented from the bottom of her heart. To think that the last time she would ever have seen Balleroy was with him bearing a saddened expression, Madelyn absolutely hated that. She lamented with all her being.

However, Madelyn was young, and her thoughts and imagination were naively shallow.

The greatest regret of Madelyn's life came after her three days and nights of sobbing.

—That day, when the Cloud Dragon Mezoreia had left her side, Madelyn had not been especially worried.

Even though it had left her side, the Cloud Dragon's wings would not fly far beyond this mountain engulfed in clouds. At most, the range it would go was such that its thunderous roar could still be fully heard.

Whether that was to hunt flying dragons that had carelessly entered the Cloud Dragon's nest, or if it was a reckless challenger who had set foot on the mountain path aiming for the summit, she had thought it was either one of those.

Whatever the case, she had no doubt that, with time, Mezoreia would return.

More importantly, it was her regret that would not disappear no matter how many days passed, as well the method to control her emotions as she continued to weep her eyes out, that had been much more of a problem.

That was why she did not care about the fact that the Cloud Dragon, Mezoreia, had returned bearing many wounds on its scales for the first time, nor did she care about what sort of challenger had inflicted those wounds.

Balleroy: "—I'm real sorry, Madelyn."

Madelyn came to discover that answer when she witnessed Balleroy, who had arrived at the summit again a few days after that worst-possible parting, bearing wounds that would make one wish to avert their eyes all over his body.

Balleroy's apology to the speechless Madelyn, that was neither an apology for not showing up for a while, nor was it an apology for being unable to meet Madelyn's request.

Balleroy: "…I had wanted to defeat the Cloud Dragon, and bring ya outta here, though."

Saying that with wounds that seemed to put him on the verge of death, while stroking the back of his equally battered beloved dragon, Balleroy gave a pathetic smile, and tears streamed down Madelyn's face.

She had regretted it. In all of Madelyn's dragon life, that was the greatest regret that could not be erased.

—Dragons would cling to their treasure. It was in the nature of Dragons.

Thus, for the Cloud Dragon, having been submerged in a vague world after becoming a dragonhusk, that was a part of its nature it would not forget even in such a state, and so, Madelyn was the treasure it could not bear to lose.

Balleroy had tried to steal that away, risking his life in the process.

Madelyn: "Friggin', idiot…"

Balleroy: "I had thought I'd be able to do it, but… really, even I myself was quite shocked."

Madelyn: “Wrong! Friggin’ wrong! It’s not Balleroy, it’s this dragon who’s the friggin’ idiot…!”

Denying Balleroy as he engaged in pathetic self-deprecation, Madelyn firmly bit down on her molars.

Until today, until this very moment, she had cursed herself for only ever receiving things from Balleroy, and now, without anybody telling her, she had finally figured out what she ought to do.

These thick, white clouds where Madelyn had existed from birth, were walls that Madelyn needed to tear down with her own claws.

Depending on Balleroy’s kindness, Madelyn had continued to let him breach through, and until he finally braved danger to the verge of death, she had not even made an attempt to realize that.

Just how shameless was she? Was that uncouth way of being really befitting of a dragonkin, an ultimate existence?

Madelyn: “I, the dragon, will friggin’ do it myself.”

Balleroy: “Madelyn?”

Madelyn: “This dragon, will friggin’ go outside on her own. Not being brought out, but on my own… This time, this dragon will friggin’ go to meet Balleroy by herself. If I do that…”

Firmly gripping the hem of the clothes she had been gifted by Balleroy, with the words she had learned from Balleroy, she took the emotions she had been granted by Balleroy, and would convey them to Balleroy, who had given her everything.

As an ultimate existence, as a dragonkin, she would convey those emotions to the special human who had captivated her.

Madelyn: “If I do that, will you make this dragon your bride?”

Balleroy: “…”

At Madelyn’s question, a moment of silence similar to the one from earlier was born.

Balleroy's silence this time, however, was different from that which tormented the foolish, ignorant Madelyn, who had ended up sobbing for three days and nights, and she knew that there was something concealed therein.

At that time, Madelyn could only see what she wanted to see.

Even though she called out to Balleroy, all she wanted was for him to see her.

That was why—

Balleroy: "—I guess that'd be so. If ya did that, I s'pose it'd be a wonderful thing for both Madelyn and myself."

With Balleroy showing kindness to the utmost of his ability, he had made Madelyn fully aware that she was not his number one, and thus, a promise was exchanged.

5

—There were likely some who would argue that these feelings of Madelyn's were not real love.

There may be some who would analyze it as something akin to a chick hatched from an egg, imprinting on the first thing they saw to use it as support.

That it was only that she wanted to believe that the first person she had come into contact with outside of the beings deeply close to her, the first being to show her kindness, the relationship that had given her so many firsts, was special.

There may be some who would laugh off Balleroy's reply, as he made a fleeting smile in response to Madelyn's courting, as the kindhearted lie of a father designed not to hurt the feelings of a daughter who said that she would marry him in the future.

There may be some who would sympathize with Balleroy, who had feelings for somebody else, as merely being very considerate of Madelyn, since they were both in a similar situation of being unable to speak of their hidden feelings.

But, each and every one of those, was nothing more than the measure of humans.

Dragonkin, or even Dragons, had different values and ways of thinking to that of humans. Supposing one were to deny that dragonkin and Dragons were different, then it would be Madelyn's values that were unique from the rest.

From her heart, truly from the deepest depths of her heart, Madelyn desired Balleroy Temeglyph.

If that was not romance or love, then Madelyn would spend the rest of eternity never knowing what that was. To the extent of thinking that, her soul was burning with an ardor willing to put her life on the line.

Vowing to Balleroy, who had almost died for her sake, Madelyn tore through the white clouds.

Challenging the Cloud Dragon that stood in her way as she tried to leave, as it used its Dragon power to try to entirely discourage her wishes, she thrust her fangs into it and, in the end, subdued it.

For the first time, she thrust herself out under the sky that shared the same color as her hair; for the first time, she accomplished something she had decided to do by herself; for the first time, she tried to head to the side of her beloved person of her own accord, and that was when she learned.

—Balleroy Temeglyph had fought against the Empire, and lost his life.

Madelyn: "—What am I supposed to friggin' do?"

Right now, Madelyn did not know that answer.

Confronted with something too large to swallow, Madelyn's feelings of love had lost their destination.

And with the destinationless love being too much for her to handle, she even lost sight of her meaning to live, so not knowing what to do, Madelyn even thought about becoming one of the Blight

Dragons that would be left in the history of the Empire; the one to find her then was Berstetz, who had been searching for somebody to fill the empty seat in the Nine Divine Generals.

The location was Balleroy's residence that remained in the Imperial Capital, which she had discovered by pursuing his scent.

Balleroy had gone down in the records as a rebel, and the reason why Berstetz, who had been entrusted with the disposal of his residence, had not been killed by Madelyn, who happened to be present there, was because within Berstetz's thread-like eyes was housed the same light of having lost something that was also in Madelyn's eyes.

Berstetz patiently listened as Madelyn divulged her story with difficulty; upon hearing that Madelyn's identity was that of a dragonkin, and that she had possessed a relationship with Balleroy, he made two suggestions.

The first, was to act impulsively with her unmanageable emotions, and follow the same path as Balleroy, who had been defeated as an enemy of the Empire.

The other, was to accept the endorsement of Berstetz, whom she had just met here, become a member of the Nine Divine Generals like Balleroy once was, and while tracing back his footsteps, wait for an opportunity for retribution.

She did not struggle long to make a decision. Why it had not taken her long, Madelyn herself was unsure.

Only, it might have been that she wanted to find what Balleroy had left behind, even if only by a little bit more.

Berstetz: "—Madelyn Eschart. It is an old family name of Vollachia that is no longer around, but it shall be passed down to you. Prestige is quite important, after all."

Madelyn: "Prestige?"

Berstetz: "The reason it is no longer around, is because they fought against the Empire and disappeared. This may just be the intuition of my old bones, but I sense that it is quite the match for your dearest wish.”

Following the advice Berstetz gave in a low voice, Madelyn Eschart was born.

Afterwards, she accepted Berstetz’s endorsement, and progressed the situation in accordance with his intentions; taking the position that had once been occupied by Balleroy, Madelyn set out on a journey to discover the him she did not know.

It was a journey on which she was unsure of the destination she ought to be aiming for.

Even when she stepped forth from that mountaintop, out from that narrow world enveloped by clouds, and into the world Balleroy had told her about, Madelyn’s heart remained stuck on that day, captured by the man who had come together with his flying dragon.

Even so, she carried out the duties required of a Divine General. In Balleroy’s stead.

Even so, she demonstrated the prestige required of the Empire’s Generals. In Balleroy’s stead.

Even so, she wielded the power required to defeat the Empire’s enemies. In Balleroy’s stead.

Berstetz had likely harbored good intentions when he advised Madelyn to take her current position.

Or perhaps Berstetz had a wish that still remained as he grew old, and in order to fulfill his wish, he calculated what pawns would be required, and used Madelyn.

Either way, Madelyn did not bear a grudge against Berstetz.

That was not limited to just Berstetz. —She simply did not have that kind of space in her heart.

Acquiring the position of Divine General, she spent her time as General tracing back Balleroy’s footsteps. For Madelyn, those were days of unfathomable terror.

Every time she fought hard, every time she thought of Balleroy, every time she tried to fill the hole of Balleroy, Madelyn herself felt like she was killing Balleroy.

Every time she compensated for Balleroy’s absence, she was stealing his place in the world, the traces he left behind.

In that case, should she hand it over to somebody else? Madelyn would likely feel that the person who received it was killing Balleroy, and she would surely kill that person with her own hands.

She could at least understand that Balleroy would not want that, so Madelyn continued to exhaust herself.

Since she would not let anybody else do it, she would continue to kill Balleroy herself. And, when she finally killed Balleroy, would her own heart also die?

If so, she felt like that would be the best way to do it.

That which Balleroy had given her, this heart, these emotions. When Balleroy had died, at the time when she was not together with him in his most important moment, they ought to have perished.

And yet—

Madelyn: “Why is a dragon’s fang… Why is Carillon’s fang friggin’ hanging from your neck?!”

At the height of the disturbance shaking the Empire, she encountered a man carrying the fang of the flying dragon who had died together with Balleroy.

From the man who knew the Balleroy unknown to her, Madelyn heard stories of a Balleroy from the time when he was not with her, when he was not a General, and a sense of love blossomed in her heart once again.

And then, as tremors beckoned further tremors, at the end of the successive tremors, it had happened.

—The Great Disaster had, without a doubt, resurrected what Madelyn had lost.

Complimenting her sky-blue hair, saying that it was his favorite color, he stroked her head.

He gave a gentle, soft smile that caused her chest to tighten upon seeing it, her unfilled promise with him—she had wanted to embrace him under a clear sky, in a place with no clouds in the way.

Madelyn had finally come into contact with Balleroy somewhere outside of that mountaintop.

Even so, thick clouds still hung over the sky, and the world was still covered in darkness.

Madelyn: "—What am I supposed to friggin' do?"

Madelyn had no idea what she should do anymore.

She felt so, so much love, but for anything outside of that, she knew nothing at all.

She did not want to know, either.

6

A vortex of dusky clouds gathered in the sky with the Cloud Dragon as its center.

While looking up at that from the ground, all the hair on Garfiel's body stood on end, and the blood flowing through his body boiled; an impulse from his instincts struck his brain.

Having endured the Dragon's breath, his body was in the process of rapidly healing from the heatwave that had scorched him.

But, the destructive black clouds acted to entirely veil the heavens, and within them was concealed such excess power that Garfiel's regeneration, and even the waning cityscape of the Imperial Capital that he had desperately protected, would all be reduced to naught.

Garfiel: “Them huge clouds, the whole fuckin’ lot of it’s made outta the Dragon’s Mana…!!!”

It was a concealed trick that had not been detected until Mezoreia stirred them about, causing them to change their nature.

The trump card of the Cloud Dragon that had been audaciously hidden, was currently baring its fangs against him like this; however, what was causing Garfiel’s heart to tremble was not the destruction that would be brought about by that cluster of mighty power, but rather the state of the Cloud Dragon controlling it.

The Cloud Dragon, Mezoreia—no, he generally understood that there was a different being inside of it.

For a Dragon that had lived for however many centuries, soaring through the skies of this world over its long life, its words and actions were far too lacking in dignity.

That was an intuition of a completely different type to that of strength, and it was something that Garfiel understood since he knew Ryuzu, who, contrary to her youthful appearance, was of a personality that had lived for a very long time.

At the same time, Garfiel really felt how truly incredible Subaru’s order was.

Garfiel: “Captain, ya really told my amazin’ self to go ahead ‘n fell the Dragon flyin’ in the sky…”

Being pushed on the back to go and fight head-on against a Dragon, a being that was the strongest lifeform in the world, the fact that he was seen as reliable enough to be entrusted with that duty was absolutely tremendous.

The power he was granted by that had provided enough energy for Garfiel to return to reality from the incomprehensible theater he had seen while on the verge of death.

But, in a true sense, there was another meaning in Garfiel being sent here.

He did not know whether Subaru had aimed for that or not.

Either way, it mattered not. This Cloud Dragon, Mezoreia, needed to be faced by Garfiel, that was the sort of enemy it was.

The reason was—

Garfiel: "—You're strainin' yerself 'n cryin' out, beggin' for someone to protect yer world."

As Mezoreia cried out, recklessly scrambling power together, it brought about a terribly unpleasant feeling of shame within Garfiel.

In the past, Garfiel had erupted on his surroundings with the same rage and anguish that Mezoreia currently harbored.

Back then, his friends had stopped him through sheer force, so now Garfiel had his current position and resolve, as well as a strong body with two legs to firmly stand upon.

Naturally, Garfiel and Mezoreia were of different positions, circumstances, and even races. That was why, Garfiel could not necessarily use the same solution on Mezoreia.

But, however, there was no basis that he could not use it.

In order to ascertain that, Garfiel had no choice but to make it lower its fangs and talk, much like what had been done for him.

For that purpose—

Garfiel: "—Hk."

Looking towards his hectic surroundings, Garfiel forcefully gnashed his fangs.

The protective wall was on the verge of collapse, and the previous breath of the Dragon had scorched the Imperial Capital, bringing it to a state of partial destruction.

Even if he wanted to reach Mezoreia, Garfiel could not reach all the way to the height of the clouds.

That was why, Garfiel gave up on the idea of doing things by himself.

Garfiel: “Pops!!”

Heinkel: “—. Ah?”

Garfiel looked back with an altered expression on his face, and in his vision, he saw Heinkel dumbfoundedly looking up at the sky, his backside having fallen down smack on the ground.

The blue eyes quivered, their focal point blurred, and as Garfiel saw himself reflected within them, he grabbed both of Heinkel’s shoulders.

Garfiel: “Lend me a hand! I need ya to do somethin’ to send me flyin’ all the way up there!”

Heinkel: “Fly… flying? Flying, you say? What the hell, what the hell are you saying?! There’s no way we could ever do something like that! Just how fucking high up do you think that is!”

As Garfiel yelled a request at him, Heinkel widened his eyes, and also yelled back a reply.

While trying to shake free from the hands grabbing his shoulders, Heinkel pointed overhead.

The thunderously stirring clouds shifted in hue, as if swallowing the color of the sky that lay beyond the black clouds, the color of the heavens was transformed into a purple, tinged with azure.

While Heinkel pointed at what could only be described as a natural disaster, with his face pale,

Heinkel: “It’s already over!”

Garfiel: “I ain’t gonna let it be over!”

Heinel: “—Hk.”

Garfiel: “I ain’t gonna let anything end here! Both my amazin’ self ‘n Pops, we can’t lose!”

Firmly grasping his shoulders so that he could not shake the hands off, Garfiel made a powerful appeal to Heinkel.

Gulping down a breath, Heinkel’s cheeks stiffened. As his trembling finger pointed to the sky, the man’s opposite hand still remained gripped to his sword, and Garfiel had decided to believe in him.

Garfiel: “There ain’t no sense of reality right now. I know that, Pops. —It’s just like it’s the end of the world.”

Narrowing his eyes as he muttered, with the ruin that had taken the form of a vortex of clouds high above him, Garfiel stared at the skies of the different battlefields in the distance, and nodded.

It truly seemed that every single location was a Tennozan that Subaru had spoken of.

Piercing the clouds in the north of the Imperial Capital, an iceberg plummeted downwards; in the northeast, there were flashes of a sword severing the very world itself, reaching the ramparts, and even the mountains beyond them. The eastern heavens and earth were composed of over one hundred shades of red; each and every battlefield was trying to bring about a different doom to the Empire.

But, Garfiel would not despair.

Garfiel: “Ain’t that right, Captain.”

Making a variety of faces, Subaru had chosen their method of battle against the impending doom.

And thus, in order to deal with doom at this location, Subaru had selected none other than Garfiel Tinzel as the strongest card to play.

Not Emilia, not Beatrice, not Roswaal, not Spica, not Halibel, not Olbart, not Tanza, not Medium, not Jamal. He had chosen Garfiel.

Garfiel: "…"Facing the Dragon, Sword Saint Reid laughs and draws blade"."

Heinkel: "…Don't lump me in with that crazy ancestor of mine."

Garfiel: "…"There's no running from Reinhard"."

Heinkel: "Don't bring up that name! I'm! I'm…!"

Garfiel: "…"

Heinkel: "I'm…"

At that place where heaven and earth were about to meet their doom, Heinkel covered his face with the hand that had been pointed to the heavens, and spilled that out in a feeble voice.

The words that lay beyond, Garfiel did not know. By some chance, perhaps Heinkel himself had yet to discover what lay beyond those words.

In that case—

Garfiel: "—Pops, together with my amazin' self, let's go 'n unlock the followin' words that ya can't seem to get out."

7

Would imagining it even be possible?

The vast sky extended endlessly in all directions, and the clouds that blanketed it completely were all reduced into a hail of bullets and a forest of blades; the sight of that pouring down would be as if it were the end of the world.

Even now, that was what was on the verge of occurring.

However, different from the impression given by the phrasing of "a hail of bullets and a forest of blades", the clouds of destruction bringing doom upon the world were not widely raining down across all the vast lands of the Empire, but rather, having been centralized in one swoop, they were about to all pierce one concentrated area.

—The vortex of black clouds twisted into a helix, forming an enormous cone that weaved into the heavenly skies.

That mighty shape was warped and ominous; however, in the one aspect that it was intended for destruction, there indeed lay beauty.

Spreading its white wings in the heavenly skies, the Cloud Dragon held its arms aloft, bringing about that structure of demise; contrary to its large build, the Dragon cried out like an infant as it unleashed that from its hands.

Cloud Dragon: "—Friggin' disappear."

That teary voice, whether it was directed to somebody on the surface, where destruction rained down, or if it was directed to the surface itself, which would likely be unable to withstand it and would be blown apart, or if it was not aimed at anybody or the surface at all, and was instead a punishment it was imposing upon itself, was unclear.

No matter the case, the result would be the same.

There were no means of defending against a trump card that had been prepared over a long period of time by a Dragon, the ultimate existence; nearly the entirety of the southern half of the Imperial Capital would be blown away, incurring many casualties, and carrying out the intentions of the Great Disaster.

The fall of the Imperial Capital, in regards to the disaster, would signify the total defeat of the Empire, and the unhalted hosts of undead would engulf the ruined land, heading for the remaining countries with their fervent vigor.

Thus, the world would be drawn into a chain of calamity that knew no bounds.

That, would be the unshakable conclusion for a world fallen into demise.

It was an ending that none save for some Witch, a manifestation of curiosity, would be pleased with, and the only ones able to negate it would be the undersized, yet courageous warriors that plunged towards their imminent demise—

Courageous Warrior: "…"

Feeling the presence of the vast lands within his soul before he took off, the courageous warrior gathered as much strength as he could, and coursed it all throughout his body.

His legs, having been firmly outstretched, rode atop a sword that remained in its sheath, and right after a moment of power equilibrium, it ferociously swung upward at full strength.

That had been an outstanding blow.

It was not wielded against the dreadfully mighty Dragon as an opponent, neither was it something that cut deep into the cone attempting to bring ruination to the world, nor did it utilize any of the skills that it had been used to train.

Eye contact had not even been made with the enemy; however, it had been an outstanding blow.

At the very least, that was the judgment of the courageous warrior, who had received that blow with the soles of his feet.

Whether that outstanding blow would go unrecorded, unremembered by anyone, was entirely up to him to prove, as he had been entrusted with the conclusion.

Cloud Dragon: "…"

Beyond the incoming demise, he locked eyes with the Dragon as he ascended to the heavens.

Seeing those eyes tremble in a terribly frightened manner, a smile emerged on his face.

That smile was out of place, troublingly so.

That was immediately painted over by the smile of a belligerent, powerful, savage, ferocious tiger.

Courageous Warrior: “Have a taste of these fists.”

Using all of his strength, without holding back, he pummeled his fist into it.

He pummeled it, and then—

Courageous Warrior: “Let my amazin’ self hear yer story. —Just like how Captain ‘n the others once listened to mine.”

As stout arms of silver shot up, they crashed into the dark, cone-shaped clouds of ruin.

That instant, the folded layers of the sky and the spiraling black clouds erupted in an explosion bereft of sound, engulfing the world.

Courageous Warrior: “…”

The result of the collision, was brought about to a world in which sound had vanished.

Just what sort of conclusion had been incurred, would likely take shape after a flicker of light.

Only, the sky that had been birthed beyond the collision, the sky from which the enshrouding black clouds had vanished, was blue.

In the past, a flying dragon rider had bestowed a name upon a lonely dragonkin; and, same as the color of the hair he had lovingly, cherishingly stroked many a time, sky-blue stretched out above, and that was all.

Vic.1120

Chapter 56:
Arakiya

1

—Without being told by anyone. Arakiya swallowed it down.

Arakiya: "…"

With great throbbing, the sound of flowing blood flooded in the form of pain.

That heartbeat pounded faster than it had during the midst of battle, with each thump of the heart becoming a shock akin to a nail being driven directly into the soul, which surged throughout her entire body. Yet, it eased Arakiya's mind.

Knowing that the heart still pumped blood, signified that she still retained her human form.

Even if it had been just a minor comfort akin to margin of error, it was necessary for Arakiya to keep herself from becoming stirred, to keep her soul from scattering.

—For the unique beings known as Spirit Eaters, none other than Arakiya existed in this world.

Born from the extreme delusions of individuals who could not be called researchers, but rather aberrants; the taboo existence that was the Spirit Eater—named Arakiya, had been kept alive as a sole being under a destiny shared with no one else in this world.

In a daringly diluted ego, Arakiya, who had clung only to the existence of the "pillar" that she deemed important to herself, had devoured spirits, acted as a formidable being, and fulfilled her role.

She had thought that was enough.

However, it was not as she had realized, upon losing said "pillar".

By the time she had realized it, it would have already been too late; she would have likely invited the original end of a Spirit Eater, the quick collapse of the ego, being consumed by the Spirits she had taken in, and her soul being painted over.

However, Arakiya did not meet that fate. For that, two factors could be considered.

One was that the individual Arakiya had deemed as her “pillar” was like a dazzling sun, shining so brightly that even when they were separated, they could not lose sight of them.

The other reason, and one that Arakiya would never want to admit—in the days after being separated from her “pillar“, the Thunder that reminded Arakiya of the fact that she was herself shook her soul incessantly, evoking feelings of inferiority and stimulating her individuality.

Bathed in the light of the dazzling sun, accompanied by the incessant Thunder, Arakiya had preserved her own soul.

???: “—And, that is the conclusion I have come to, but I would like to hear if you have any awareness of it.”

Arakiya: “…No.”

It was the year when Arakiya surpassed Olbart in rank and was promoted to Second.

Chisha’s opinion, based on his search relating to the remaining literature on the Spirit Eater, had etched a stern expression on Arakiya’s face; the first time ever in their long acquaintance.

That was understandable. Chisha was intelligent, and his explanations were clear, but his perspective had been difficult for Arakiya to accept.

Arakiya herself only understood her existence as a Spirit Eater on a sensory level, yet she had wanted to believe that her entirety was made solely of Prisca.

She did not want that hopeful wish to be diluted by the least desirable components of all.

To begin with—

Arakiya: "…Why did you bring that up?"

As she questioned, it was surprising in itself that Chisha had broached such a topic.

Arakiya's "pillar", Prisca—the fact that she had exceptionally escaped from the Imperial Selection Ceremony, having been allowed to leave the country alive, was a closely guarded secret even within the Vollachian Empire.

At the time, it was natural for Arakiya and Chisha, who were involved in her exile, to know, but it had been a topic they had not spoken of for years, and something not to be mentioned to anyone else.

So why, at this moment, had Chisha chosen to bring it up?

Chisha: "I want to know whether you are a fragile, ephemeral, and vanishing existence or not. Whether I ought to count you among the numbers for the impending great battle."

Arakiya: "…It makes no sense. I'm one of the Nine Divine Generals."

It was only natural that they would be sent to put down the rebellion or whatever that Chisha and Vincent were predicting.

However, at Arakiya's response, Chisha's eye twitched downwards, forming an unusual expression on his face. It was a smile seldom seen from Chisha, who had almost always wore an expression of either blankness or bewilderment.

With that smile, striking Arakiya in a moment of vulnerability, Chisha continued.

Chisha: "It seems like this battle will end up being a little bigger than the battle you are thinking of. I am well aware that you do not truly serve His Excellency from the depths of your heart, nor do you consider me an ally.”

Arakiya: “…”

Chisha: “Even though I know it to be true, it still stings a bit not to be denieeed.”

Arakiya: “…For the sake of the princess, I will not disappear.”

Without acknowledging Chisha’s reaction as he touched his forehead, Arakiya ran her hand over her eyepatch.

For the reason as to why she was herself, the soul known as Arakiya had a proper answer. The concerns Chisha had would not come to pass. So although It was not to reassure Chisha, she declared.

Arakiya: “Also, that has nothing to do with Cecilus.”

Chisha: “Hm. Those are merely my deductiooons. If you really want to have me recognize that such is not the case, I would like for you to defeat Cecilus at least once.”

Cecilus: “Huuuuuh? Weren’t you talking about me just now? What’s this what’s this, it’s rather unkind for Anya and Chisha to treat me like I’m an outsider so I’d like you to stop with that please? Could it be you’re on about that? About the slim chances of winning for Anya, who keeps extending her losing streak without learning her lesson?”

Arakiya: “Cecilus, die.”

In the end, a clash with Cecilus began right after, and Chisha, who had wanted to avoid being involved, fled, so the conversation did not progress further.

Afterwards, she had no recollection of ever continuing the conversation with Chisha.

Arakiya: “…”

Just a vague thought crossed her mind.

Just when would the impending great battle that Chisha was concerned about come? And when it did, would she be counted among his forces?

If the opportunity ever arose, she would like to ask about it.

Arakiya had been acquainted with Chisha for a long time now.

Due to their relationship, which stemmed from the Imperial Selection Ceremony where she had been separated from Prisca; Arakiya harbored unforgiveness towards Chisha, who had been deeply involved in the reasons behind her separation with Prisca.

However, Chisha had taught Arakiya how to read and write. She owed him a debt. For that favor, she was willing to participate in battles Chisha desired her to.

—Or perhaps, was this too going to end up being attributed to reasons other than Prisca?

She hated Cecilus. Vincent was complicated, but she leaned towards not forgiving him due to what happened to Prisca. Olbart was amusing with his jokes. Goz had a comical face. Groovy had a foul mouth but was actually very helpful, while Moguro would always listen to what she had to say without making unpleasant faces. Yorna was not her cup of tea, yet for some reason she was unable to hate her. Balleroy would occasionally take her for a ride on his flying dragon, and she felt like Madelyn and herself mutually tried to avoid seeing each other. To Todd, she was grateful.

—Would all of these also end up being attributed to reasons other than Prisca?

Arakiya: “…”

Feeling as though she was about to fall apart, like she was about to be torn to shreds, as if losing every last part of herself that she could remember, Arakiya gathered up the fragments of “Arakiya”.

If she did not do so, the existence known as herself would disappear—that was not the case.

Arakiya: "…ncess."

Without doing so, she would be unable to restrain what was ramping within, on the verge of bursting out of her.

It was tremendously colossal. Unbelievably heavy. Intolerably twisted. If left unchecked, it would destroy the Empire.

If she could not keep it under control, her "pillar"—Prisca, would not be protected.

That was why Arakiya, without being told by anyone, swallowed it down. Into her own incomparably thin and small body, she took the Stone, Muspel.

The Empire must not be destroyed by the monster who called herself a Witch, utilizing this Great Spirit.

For that purpose—

???: "I guess she probably ate something bad. —You really are a handful."

The noisy Thunder felt like a hallucination, piecing together a torn-apart soul.

While being tormented by the loss and pain akin to a thundercloud, Arakiya continued to scramble together, scramble together, scramble together the fragments of "Arakiya", resisting against the dispersion of her turbulent existence.

She continued to resist, and endured. —Clinging to her soul on the verge of destruction, she awaited the one and only hope.

2

The counting was growing tiresome, but it was their habit to do so.

Daring to go into the details of numbers could trivialize the reality one faced—not to say that it would be a clever thing to do. Without such a mentality, it really was just a habit.

The habit of counting continued. —This was the one hundred and ninety-first time.

???: “It’s getting tiresome being way too ordinary of a dude…”

Al muttered to himself as he felt the heat build up inside his helmet, sweat soaking the inside.

On the stage of the melted second bastion, the vain struggles of the out-of-place actor with a minor role continued. The atmosphere wobbled unsteadily due to the effects of the heat wave that engulfed the surrounding area, clearly transforming the space into something from a different dimension.

Humans would not be able to adapt to a world being remade into hell with every passing moment.

Trees and buildings were set ablaze, and grit and pieces of the street had begun to melt. His palm gripping the Blue Dragon Sword made a sizzling sound, and he was unsure if even his clothing would ignite at any moment.

The circumstances they found themselves in were such that by just standing there it would not at all be strange for them to be turned into a ball of flames the next moment. In fact, more than once or twice, that had been the case.

And yet, in spite of these incredibly harsh circumstances—

???: “Ta ta ta ta ta ta ta ta ta ta ta ta ta—!!”

The leading actor furiously ran over the bubbling, boiling magma, maneuvering at a speed that could have been mistaken for a lightning bolt.

With his disheveled, deep dark blue hair dancing, running with his bright pink kimono fluttering was Cecilus Segmunt, the flamboyant, self-proclaimed leading actor of the world.

His speed as he sprinted over the magma, his incredible leg strength that one would not expect from a slender child’s legs, his seemingly inexhaustible stamina, and his courage to cross paths with an enemy that could remake the world in the blink of an eye, and the power of fate, were all first-class.

Declaring the world to be his stage, and placing himself in the role of leading actor, Cecilus was conscious of his appearance to an unseen audience and fulfilled himself in a way that did not shy away from those grandiose claims.

Who else could possibly mount a fight against such a powerful, extraordinary opponent?

Cecilus: “—Toh!”

With a high-pitched shout characteristic of a child, Cecilus’s body flew at an angle.

A moment after he leapt, the ground where he had been just before swelled up and exploded from within. Taking advantage of the blast, Cecilus twisted in midair as he was propelled.

With that, a lightning kick that could blow away even a stone pillar as thick as a giant tree trunk flew toward the silver-haired dogperson—Arakiya, who floated in midair.

Arakiya: “—Ah, uh.”

With her exposed brown skin, Arakiya’s jewel-like red eyes shed tears of blood.

The soles of Cecilus’s charred zori flew straight at her torso as she let out a cry, looming, looming ever closer—at the moment of impact, a loud sound detonated in the sky.

Cecilus: “ ~ ~ Hk!!”

Immediately afterward, slamming down faster than when he had jumped up, Cecilus plunged to the ground and bounced violently on the street, squelching a cry of pain as he raised his head.

A moment later, blood gushed from his pale forehead, turning the small child’s face red.

Cecilus: “You’ve finally gotten to the point where you’re matching me perfectly, huh.”

Licking the blood that trickled down the well-shaped bridge of his nose, Cecilus commented on the fact that he had been successfully parried.

There was no hint of surprise in that. Because, this was not the first time she had parried him.

Already a dozen or so times, Cecilus’s lightning-swift attacks had been countered, and continued to be shot down. As a result, the situation was rapidly becoming severely unfavorable.

Al: “Lil’ Miss Arakiya is in quite a sorry state.”

Looking for an opening to intervene, Al saw Arakiya floating in the air, distorting the space around her.

Arakiya’s appearance, it was even more bizarre than it had been just a few moments earlier, with magic crystals growing out of the thin girl’s body as if piercing from within.

From a distance, the growths on Arakiya’s arms and back resembled the wings of an angel.

However, in reality, Arakiya had absorbed an exceedingly large entity, and it was attempting to devour through and spill out from the body of the girl in which it was trapped.

Al: “Fuck.”

As Arakiya’s choice gradually eroded her power and made her deviate from her human form, Al could do nothing but curse and vent his uncontrollable anger.

He knew what it was like wanting to compensate for a lack of power, falling short of achieving one’s own desires.

Al could imagine that Arakiya had the potential to reach much greater heights than himself, and that there were numerous possibilities within her reach.

Nevertheless, by taking in something that did not mesh with her own capacity, Arakiya's own brilliance would instead turn against herself, her surroundings, and the things she wanted to cherish.

And so, the simple answer that came in reciprocation was the current situation.

—Initially, Cecilus was the one who had possessed the upper hand in the fight against Arakiya.

In order to hold back Arakiya, who had turned into something dangerous that could blow away the second bastion and erase the entire Imperial Capital in its entirety, Cecilus fanned his stinging hostility against her, setting the stage by continuing to provoke her intuitive sense of danger.

To put it plainly, this was a battle of two transcendent beings who were not just one or two steps above as warriors, but rather ten.

Al had stayed behind, but he retained little capacity to intervene; still, out of close to two hundred attempts, he had been able to prevent Cecilus's limbs from being blown off on two occasions.

All the while, Arakiya was like a glass of water being endlessly overfilled, overflowing and spewing water at random, greatly endangering the lives of both Al and Cecilus.

But, even if this all were to repeat itself, which would of course happen by Al using the cheat of his territory, it would never be possible to capture Cecilus as he jumped around as a being outside of reason.

However, the situation had changed.

This was due to the aforementioned increasing deformity of Arakiya, which had immediately changed her fighting style.

Cecilus: "—Come to me!"

Raising a vigorous cry, full of belligerence, Cecilus's eyes gleamed as he wiped away some blood.

A moment later, the area around Cecilus distorted, and twisted pillars of stone burst forth from all directions like giant serpents and attacked the boy. Cecilus crouched down, jumped away, and twisted to avoid the stone pillars that were furiously trying to snap at him, and the speed at which he leaped out of the way surged up to his top speed.

But, while shedding tears of blood, Arakiya's onslaught did not let the lightning escape.

As he kicked from the earth, the ground following Cecilus's path swelled as he accelerated, creating a series of huge arms of stone and earth that grabbed at the boy as if to crush him.

Cecilus: "Unfortunately, touching the actors on the stage is strictly prohibited!"

Saying so wittily, Cecilus used the constructed arms that swung down like flyswatters as a foothold to break through, running up into the sky like they were a staircase; he reversed direction when he had secured altitude, and using the stone fists that were trying to strike him, he jumped toward Arakiya again.

But—

Cecilus: "I messed up—!"

He received a strike from a huge stone fist that would have turned a normal person into a plume of blood with the soles of his zori, killing the fatal impact by using his whole body as a spring, and Cecilus screamed as he flew away using only the momentum he had received.

As Cecilus surged toward Arakiya with the force of a ballistic missile, a white light was created in his path of attack, and Cecilus, with nowhere to escape in the sky, dove toward Arakiya himself—

Al: "Oooooh!"

With a howl, Al raised the Blue Dragon Sword, and he slammed the blade forth before Cecilus could jump into the light.

Instantly, after receiving a direct hit from the Blue Dragon Sword, the light flashed strongly for a moment, engulfing and obliterating the bodies of the approaching Al and Cecilus—

× × ×

Cecilus: “I messed up—!”

Receiving the giant fist of rock with the bottom of his zori, Cecilus, stealing only the momentum, shouted as he flew like a ballistic missile.

Before his shout could be uttered, Al pointed the tip of his Blue Dragon Sword into the empty air, and,

Al: “Donaa!!”

Compared to Arakiya, the difference in their magic was like the difference between the moon and snot, but the stone shards that he produced ran through the sky, crushing the jutting light of destruction that was about to be born.

For a moment, a strong flash burned Al’s eyes even through his helmet, but it was not powerful enough to end Al’s life, much less Cecilus’s speed.

Cecilus: “Al-san, let’s do this!!”

The burst of light was instantly recognizable as to whose work it was, and Cecilus, relieved that his life had been saved, instantly swallowed down his emotion and charged toward Arakiya.

He raised his right hand in the form of a karate chop, with a sharpness that surpassed even a semi-famous sword. It flashed through the air, striking Arakiya, who had grown wings of magical crystals, at an angle—

Al: “—Hk!”

At that moment, Al had a vision of, without exaggeration, a thunderclap and the sky being torn asunder.

In fact, it was not a vision, but rather the shockwave from Cecilus's karate chop that went out from behind him, tearing a clinching blow into a group of buildings that were on the verge of collapse, leading to the collapse of the entire area.

But, however, Arakiya had received that karate chop in question.

Arakiya: "…"

Glaring, her blood-red eyes moved to look at Cecilus, who was just a few feet away.

Despite receiving a powerful karate chop to the forehead, Arakiya maintained her body in mid-air without even showing the slightest tremor, and in return, she raised her magic crystal wings—

Arakiya: "…"

Immediately after those thin lips produced a faint sound, a blow fatally gouged Cecilus.

3

Moment by moment, as time flowed, elapsed, passed, "Arakiya" was disappearing.

Gradually feeling her existence, the whereabouts of her soul, being painted over, amidst the pain and anguish, Arakiya earnestly tried to recall the radiance of her Sun.

An obstreperous existence she had been. Despite having been created at the end of many sacrifices, she had been indifferent as to what would happen after she was created, and had been a dangerous object with nowhere to go.

While not knowing how to make effective or proper use of such a frightening being, that girl had calmly lined Arakiya up adjacent to the life she was leading, and had confidently told her to accompany herself.

Just why, why had she been able to try to oppose that perfected magnificence?

It should not have been possible for feelings of resistance or opposition to bud. That girl was the representation of everything Arakiya believed to be correct, and her very existence was the meaning in Arakiya's birth.

In order to not let her lose that radiance, in order to not lose what she thought was beautiful about that radiance, she chose to leave her side, thinking it to be necessary, and somehow managed to endure the thought of being separated.

The reason she had endured, endured, endured it all, was because she believed that the Sun would rise once more.

—So long as she could protect the new day's dawn, it would be fine if she herself could not bask in the rays of the rising Sun.

Recklessly crying out, whining that she could not place her hands upon it, while eyes of disappointment were directed towards her by none other than her Sun, that was when she had finally arrived at this conclusion.

She thought she had been forsaken by the Sun.

She thought the Sun would no longer shine upon herself.

However, facing off in the decisive battle for the Imperial Capital, directing the Yang Sword towards a sobbing Arakiya, the Sun—Prisca, had not cut Arakiya down with that treasured sword of crimson.

Afterwards, while surrounded by the servants of the Great Disaster that had appeared, she ought to have been able to flee. But, in exchange for Arakiya's safety, she had chosen to be captured.

Those innermost feelings, that dazzling gleam, had not changed in the slightest.

If Prisca had remained unchanged, then Arakiya also desired for her oath to remain invariant.

—Prisca Benedict.

The Vollachian Empire’s symbol of a Sun that had set, yet would rise again.

When thinking of her, Arakiya could remain as “Arakiya”.

Arakiya could delay the limit for her soul growing hotter, and bursting apart.

However, even if her love and loyalty to Prisca was eternal, that limit could not be extended forever.

She was detaining a being that would engulf her, and would fully overtake her presence.

While Arakiya continued to resist that disgrace to her mind, the being that was even now borrowing Arakiya’s body was amplifying its destruction in the real world, to which she did not have room to turn her attention.

The destruction would only become more refined, the ruination would only gain more momentum, and it was only a matter of time before a full collapse.

Stagnating for a long period of however many centuries, the Stone did not pay any mind, even if a part of its power was being utilized in conflicts between humans, nor if it was being used for the enrichment of human activities—when it had entered the fragile vessel known as Arakiya, it had learned to resist against disappearing.

The Great Spirit that had been taken in by Arakiya was displaying defensive instincts that it likely would not have employed were it in its original form, and ironically enough, it was strengthening its level of threat in order to protect the vessel of Arakiya.

Arakiya: “…”

Somebody, somebody was fighting in order to stop Arakiya; she could feel it.

It seemed like, because somebody was causing Arakiya’s power to be somewhat exhausted, the brakes were being pulled on “Arakiya” fading away.

But, it was insufficient. Merely weakening her, merely keeping her in check, was insufficient.

In order to interfere with the objective of the Great Disaster, Arakiya had devoured it.

The Great Spirit, which would resign itself to the will of others regardless of what was done to it, upon being taken in by Arakiya, had learned the fear known as losing oneself.

Only one push was needed. After one more push, the Great Spirit would understand.

In order to keep “Arakiya” from disappearing, the Sun was required.

And, in order for “Arakiya” to fulfill her oath, something else was required. —Thunder, was.

Somebody, somebody was fighting in order to stop Arakiya; she could feel it.

It was insufficient. That somebody, was insufficient. Just who in particular was needed, she knew.

That was why, while Arakiya was on the verge of bursting apart, she waited in hope.

—For Thunder, for reverberations of real Thunder, she waited in hope.

4

Arakiya: “—Kill me, Cecilus.”

The moment he heard that, of all the things that could happen, his thoughts came to a standstill.

Having slammed a karate chop into his opponent with all his might, he received a stare back as if it had been utterly ineffective, and immediately after, as the beautiful girl sobbed out tears of blood, she made such an entreaty in a feeble voice.

Cecilus: “…”

Then, faster than he could digest that muttering, Cecilus received a powerful blow to the chest.

The girl’s slender arms were essentially blades due to the sharpness of the magic crystals that densely grew on them, and alas, Cecilus’s slim chest was mercilessly cut open, staining his favorite kimono with blood as he began to fall.

Pain, was present. Awareness that he had blundered, was present. Signs of being in a huge pinch, were more than present.

However, more so than the wound that bore deep into him, more so than the blood that drew a trail through the air, he was unable to avert his gaze from the pitiful eyes and face of the girl from whom he was growing distant, unable to avert his gaze from the words that had been said—.

???: “■■!!” / “■■■■.” / “■●■●■●■.” / “■■■■●●■■.” / “●●●■■■.” / “—■■.” / “●●●●●!!” / “■■■●■●●■■●●.” / “●●…■.” / “●●■■●■■●●.” / “●■●■●■●■.” / “●●■●■●●●■■●—!”

Vic.1120

Cecilus: "—My sincerest apologies but I beg you all to be quiet!!"

In that moment, Cecilus made a firm appeal to the incessantly audible voices of the audience.

???: "…"

Normally, Cecilus would never have done anything like silence the voices of the audience.

He would use the incoming voices as a rousing basis to raise his own motivation, and at all times he would just calmly allow them to go in one ear and out the other as they spoke to him.

That, he had silenced. Quiet, even with the troublesome pain, he wished for quiet.

Cecilus: "…"

While plummeting, Cecilus continued to stare at the girl amidst the silence as the audience hushed their voices.

Suffering as she shed tears of blood, the girl's sorrowful appeals took the form of destroying the world, and in the midst of groaning out cries that bore no meaning, she was finally able to interject her own desire.

The fact that it had been none other than his own name, could have undoubtedly been called the destiny of the leading actor.

However—

Cecilus: "…"Kill me", you said, now that's something I can't let slide."

More so than the pain or shock, he found it difficult to accept the way in which the words had been put together, so Cecilus clenched his teeth.

That moment, he bent his knees and rolled as he fell head-first towards the ground, and as he attempted to secure a safe landing, he evaded, evaded, evaded the chain of stone pillars that targeted his destination, leaping as his heels grazed the surface of the ground.

And then, he lifted his head.

Cecilus: “I don’t think those words were meant for me.”

Of course, he did not think that there was anybody else present who was called Cecilus.

However, he fully understood that the person to whom the crying girl had called out, to whom she had entrusted her wish, was not himself. —That was overwhelmingly aggravating.

The most important bout, the gamble on which all would be staked, the decisive scene, the time to rise to the occasion, any phrasing would do fine.

With such a moment, such a scene, such a climax having been prepared, there was no way it would have been fine for the Cecilus Segmunt who had been called out there to have been somebody other than himself.

Therefore—

Al: “—Cecilus! You, that wound…”

Cecilus: “I’ve made up my mind, Al-san.”

Having suffered a serious wound, Cecilus’s figure was shedding blood, and seeing that, Al uttered out a voice as he fastened his Blue Dragon Sword to his neck for some reason. Responding to him, Cecilus tore off a strip from his ripped kimono, and using it as a string, he tied back his disarrayed, blue hair.

Then, giving a smile, he looked up at the weeping girl—at the heroine, and declared.

Cecilus: “Bear witness, Observers of the heavens above. —Witness the choices the world shall make.”

Chapter 57:
Cecilus Segmunt

1

—Cecilus Segmunt was a Stargazer.

This opening passage has already been used, and thus it is rejected.

—Cecilus Segmunt was the leading actor of this world.

This is a fact that continues to be proven through how he enthralled others with his actions rather than it simply being told, so it is rather unsophisticated.

—Cecilus Segmunt was entirely unique within this world.

This point is not limited to just Cecilus, and thus is headache-inducing.

—Cecilus Segmunt was Cecilus Segmunt.

This is the most suitable definition, and thus it shall be used as the opening this time around.

In that case—

2

—Cecilus Segmunt was Cecilus Segmunt.

Sworn to the Tenchi Shinmei, this fact served as the absolute, unshakable foundation of Cecilus.

No matter what had happened to his body, even if there used to be an adult version of himself, as the people around him were saying, who was a handsome young man with a blossoming appearance and with limbs longer than he had now, that was already the Before Cecilus, and in this current moment, there existed no Cecilus Segmunt other than his own individual self.

Therefore, he would prove it.

Cecilus: “Bear witness, Observers of the heavens above. —Witness the choices the world shall make.”

Having finished tightly tying up his hair with a strip from his clothes, he firmly slapped his cheeks with his empty hands.

Cecilus rarely used this method of motivating himself, but it was very important in playwriting for a change in feelings to be easy for anybody to see. By interposing this sort of depiction, the people watching would be made aware of the actor’s feelings on the stage, and of the fact that the play was progressing to the next scene.

Then, as Cecilus cocked his head with a “Come to think of it”,

Cecilus: “You guys are surprisingly reasonable, everyone. I wouldn’t mind in the slightest if you resumed with your usual chatter.”

???: “●●■▼●■●!” / “▼■■—” / “■■■■■!!” / “▲■■▲●●●■▲●●▲▼■●▲■■●●●.” / “●■●●■■■!” / “—▲▼▲.” / “●●▲▼▲●●.” / “■●▲●■■●●▲■●! ●■●! ▲▼■!” / “●●■■■▼●■—”

That instant, the voices of the audience that had been forced into silence exploded, and while Cecilus nodded internally at their usual operations, he got back into his flow.

Being glued to him at all times, their presence was something that continued to fulfill Cecilus’s need for approval, and silencing them like that was the first time he had done so. It was an unthinkable action even for himself, but it was also certainly quite surprising that they would actually keep silent like that.

He was quite pleased by that fact, and it served as a good sign of things to come.

After all—

Cecilus: “—I’m about to go triumph over an opponent who underestimated me.”

Right after he stated thus, a flash of light bore into Cecilus's face.

Al: "Ceci—"

Witnessing Cecilus's face being pierced right in the center of his broad smile, Al raised his voice.

As he rushed over, he was about to exert force onto his Blue Dragon Sword that was fastened to his neck for some reason when he saw that figure of Cecilus. But, he desisted.

The image of Cecilus, pierced by the light, blurred, and he realized that what had died was an afterimage.

And then—

Cecilus: "It'd be better for you to distance yourself a bit."

Right after that reached Al's eardrums, the afterimage of Cecilus flicked away, and a shock wave expanded.

The sound that was delivered lagged behind the flash of light, causing the space to rupture, and as it expanded as if to chase the expanding destruction, covering a distance of ten-odd meters, it blew open a round crater in the street which no longer retained its original form.

Al: "Woahhhhhh?!"

As Al was caught up in the aftershock yielded by the attack, his scream trailed off, but that was not captured in the corner of Cecilus's vision as he headed forward. Only, he did not completely ignore Al's presence, either.

Acquiring information of his surroundings such as Al's conduct and physical ability until now, along with how his previous position and scream were getting further away, as a natural result on stage derived from the nature of the opponent's attack, Cecilus envisioned the figure of the unseen Al in the theater of his mind.

In all likelihood, that was exactly what had happened. That was because his current state was the best for putting on a show.

—Although actors would not be able to see every position on the stage at all times, it was absolutely crucial for them to constantly be aware of the happenings at every last corner of the stage.

That sensation expanded—no, the scope of the imaginary field of vision within his brain expanded.

Cecilus established his own position as center-stage, and directed the stage effects as well as the performance of the actors cast into the roles to his own liking; that was to say, he was running at breakneck speed towards the actualization of the most shining developments throughout the entire world.

Cecilus: "…"

As Cecilus ran on the border between life and death, the figure of the heroine floating above only grew more grotesque.

Unperturbed even when suffering the full strength of Cecilus's karate chops, the heroine had many small magic crystals growing in her slender shoulders and arms, and her appearance had turned into one that gave the fantastical illusion of being clad with sparkling wings.

What was particularly eye-catching about that figure, which could even be called beautiful, were the belts of light gently caressing the sky that floated around the heroine—those were magic crystals of thin and flat construction.

Due to some sort of principle, one of the belts of magical nature was illuminated in turn by the flaming cityscape, swimming through the sky on a silky trajectory that could sway with the wind; that instant, it was fired towards Cecilus, cutting through the world.

The same attack that had blown Al away earlier, that approached Cecilus's face once more, his eyes gleaming, and approaching, approaching—

Cecilus: "—Lick. I see, now this is a peculiar flavor. I guess it should be called gemstone flavor?"

That instant, Cecilus stuck out the tip of his tongue, and he ascertained the taste of the belt of light that was about to bore into his face right before evading it. The sensation his tongue perceived was hard yet soft, and the flavor was, as stated, close to that of a gemstone.

It was just like the flavor one would get if they were to put a gemstone that resembled hard candy into their mouth, and the following disappointment—namely, those were the belts of jewels the heroine was clad in.

Cecilus: "Come to think of it, you started off by sending light and fire flying and then swapped to pillars of stone and limbs of earth along the way. Are these jewels the next progression of that… they are truly quite elegant so I like it! How splendid oh how splendid, the feeling of climax is rising!"

Retracting the tongue that had licked the belt, Cecilus roared with laughter at his surge of morale.

In this eleventh hour, in this decisive bout, he was filled with awe that his opponent was a heavenly maiden clad in a feathered robe of gemstones. And in addition, he had gone and formulated his own understanding from the results of their earlier combat.

The karate chops that Cecilus had unleashed at lightning speed, they had the might to split an iron castle in twain, let alone a wall of stone. But, though he could not say for sure, he had heard that among gemstones, there were some that were harder than even those materials.

That was to say, the heroine whom Cecilus was opposing was—

Cecilus: "—The heavenly maiden of diamond!!"

Right after he uttered those words, belts of diamond were fired from the feathered robe of the heavenly maiden.

With a flash, the belts of light closed in as they bisected the world—they numbered around twelve, eleven if the one he had licked and evaded was excluded, but they surrounded Cecilus from eleven different directions as they assailed in an effort to kill him.

It was a domain undoubtedly tesselating with Death itself, and it was the kind of intense battle where one would have to dodge raindrops amidst a storm—

Cecilus: “If that’s what’s needed! Whether it’s drops of rain or grains of sand, let’s dodge them!”

The eleven lines separating life and death ran amok, one more made its return, making it twelve lines, and evading those, evading, evadinginginginginginginginging—.

If one hit him, it would be fatal, if it was fatal, it would fall to ruin, if it fell to ruin, curtain’s close.

The tips of his toes were whittled down as he stepped, the blood spilling from the wound on his chest evaporated, and he twisted his small build through the gaps in the latticed belts that blocked his way, rejecting the lowering of the curtain. Well how about that, have you ever seen anything like it? If this had been an adult’s body, he would not have been able to slip through the gaps, so after various deductions, it was the current Cecilus’s win.

Having won, he decided he would keep on winning, so in order to secure victory, he flashed his teeth in a smile—

Cecilus: “This is where imagination will spread its wings!”

With no room to stop moving as the fierce onslaught rained down upon him, he ignored everything as blood spurted from his deep wound.

The acceleration of his thoughts in the midst of battle was spectacular, and up until now, the fight had received great praise, applause, and loud cheers. However, at this rate, it would progressively become worse, boring, and hated by everyone; in order to devise the best directorial plan, he would need to put the functions of his body through a gear change to prioritize shining on the stage.

—First of all, he cut his ability to discern colors. The world was dyed black and white.

The coloration of the world lost its vibrance, but a monochrome world had the advantage of displaying the true nature of things which could only be displayed in a monochrome world.

—Next, he cut his ability to identify sounds. The voices of the audience and his own heartbeat, the delayed sounds of the bands of light cutting through the wind and of the stage being demolished, were all entirely abandoned.

A soundless world was dull, but there was a flavor that could only come from this refined taste of enjoying discomfort. It was in this environment where that flavor could be found, that of delight assailing one's chest upon witnessing the masterful performance within the faces and gestures of the actors.

—In addition, he also cut his senses of taste, smell, and pain. He fully wielded his body for the purpose of battle, fully concentrated his mind on the thoughts that flashed by, and raised the curtain on the theater that was the imaginary field of vision within his mind.

Cecilus: "—Well then."

Thus, with that breath interposed, the world of black and white—in the space where he continued to evade the fierce attacks from the belts of diamond, Cecilus was quite literally looking down upon himself as he earnestly struggled while putting on airs.

Expressing the acceleration of thoughts in a fantastical manner, it was a sensation akin to a single instant being prolonged. That having been said, it was not all-powerful. The leading actor might excel at preserving the scene, but there was a limit to how much they could captivate the audience if the situation did not move. It was the progression of a story that swayed hearts.

That diamond heroine had made an entreaty whilst crying, and though Cecilus had taken great offense to that, he had distorted the intentions of that appeal for his own convenience, and he had no choice but to gain the driving force necessary to propel this situation that was steadily progressing in slow-mo.

Cecilus: "…"

Thinking by normal standards, the girl was someone who was affiliated with Cecilus. There was also the possibility that she was a hardcore fan who one-sidedly knew the overly famous Cecilus, but even supposing that were the case, it would pose no problems in his thoughts from here on out, so it ought not be questioned whether or not that was true.

What was important here, was that the Cecilus Segmunt she was familiar with was not his current self, but the annoying Before Cecilus who often came up in conversation.

Others would probably be astonished were they to hear about it, and Schwartz and Tanza had actually been astonished by it, but Cecilus had absolutely no interest whatsoever in that topic of the Before Cecilus.

No matter what he was told, it was a stranger's affairs; no matter what he did, it was an accidental resemblance; no matter what remained, it was someone else's achievements.

That was Cecilus's perception, and hence the Before and After within Cecilus were clearly differentiated. That was the same perception as the heroine, who seemed to be in a floundering state after having found something to eat.

The heroine did not view the Before Cecilus and the After Cecilus as the same being.

Cecilus: "That in itself is a welcome development and since it's not progressing into something telling me to become big I'm left with no choice but to progress things in the state they currently are!"

???: "I wonder about that. In spite of being grateful that I'm being considered a separate entity I feel a clear discontent at the fact that I'm not the one who is required."

As Cecilus pondered, another Cecilus suddenly appeared beside him.

Even though he had just declared that the Before and After Ceciluses were separate, it was quite confusing for Another Cecilus to appear here, but it was true that a conversational partner being here meant that he was on the right track.

Cecilus: “Well, let’s perceive this as the result of my heightened concentration making the acceleration of thoughts easier to understand through a visual metaphor. More importantly is the topic of the current heroine.”

Cecilus: “I think that rather than the topic of the heroine, the topic is more so that of her stance when it comes to me. Of course if you look at Boss and Tanza-san it’s not difficult to imagine that the relationship between a key figure within a story and their heroine can produce a chemistry that hadn’t existed up until then.”

Cecilus: “So you’re saying that such chemistry can also be produced between me and her?”

Cecilus: “I wonder. Why did you decide to make her the heroine in the first place again?”

Cecilus: “Was just going with the flow.”

Cecilus: “With the flow, huh~?”

Cecilus: “But but you know the thing that Boss called a live feeling isn’t something to look down on. Swift decisions and spinal reflexes are essentially inspiration that relies on instinct but isn’t it the case that I’ve gotten through many scenes because I’ve followed my instincts?”

Cecilus: “True, now that you mention it. So you’re saying that since your current state is the result of having followed your instincts the best thing to do is to keep following your instincts?”

Cecilus: “That’s the kind of feeling I get. However if that’s what’s gonna happen then, y’know. —My current instincts are wondering why it’s someone other than myself, Cecilus Segmunt, who’s being relied on.”

Cecilus: “I see. But that’s a matter of her not wanting the current me, isn’t it? The one being requested is the Before Cecilus but does that mean that the After Cecilus thinks he can’t do what the Before Cecilus would be able to do?”

Cecilus: “Ah, in that case, the solution is for the current me to surpass the previous me.”

Cecilus: “Nooo~ objections!”

The two Ceciluses nodded at each other, and having reached a mutual agreement, a dispute then occurred over which one of them would return to the Real Cecilus whom they were looking down upon.

An unproductive battle to decide which one of them was the true soul of Cecilus began, and then concluded—immediately after, time for the Real Cecilus began to move as normal, and he resumed dealing with the twelve lines of death birthed from diamond being fired from the heavenly maiden’s feathered robe.

Cecilus: “—I’ve been looking at things slowly so the speed of my sensations is fast fast fast!”

The twelve dancing light belts each acted independently with their own will, and drew irregular trajectories like living creatures differing from ordinary weapons. When he tried to knock one down with a karate chop, the part which made contact was gouged out entirely and became painful to look at. He perceived that they were even sharper than Rowan’s treasured Onibami, so this was quite the hard enemy.

Only, while he was being surrounded by the swarm of highly lethal, yet beautiful, gemstones, Cecilus thought to himself.

Cecilus: “That phrasing of “kill me”, it means that she thinks the Cecilus within her head would be able to do so.”

In other words, that was an expression of trust that if it were the Cecilus within her head, he would easily be able to break through this diamond besiegement and reach her, and then magnificently cause her heart to stop.

Naturally, since Cecilus intended to surpass the previous Cecilus, it was an essential condition that he go above and beyond that—

Cecilus: “If it’s something that the Before me has never done before, then how about this?”

For the hurdle he had imposed to surpass his own self, there was a spark in Cecilus’s thoughts.

If it were the Before Cecilus, he might have been able to entirely avoid the incoming attack, but if it were the Perfect Cecilus that resulted from the unity of the After Cecilus and the Another Cecilus, then he would create a climax that was more than merely evasion.

A belt of light was aimed for above his neck, a glimmer approached his torso, a cleaving motion aimed to shave off his feet rather than sweep him off of them; he stepped with his left and right legs in sequence to evade, then bent himself backwards, crouched down, stretched out his knees and jumped up in a complete evasion of all the shots, and as a result—

Cecilus: “This is the cat’s cradle of light!”

He kept on evading the twelve independent light belts at a hair’s breadth, and guiding them to become entangled mid-air, he magnificently knotted them into a web which became the “Tokyo Tower”.

During their journey from the Gladiator Island, Schwartz had displayed a pastime that involved playing with yarn, and since Tanza was unusually and openly impressed with that, it caused Schwartz to get seriously bashful; such was what Cecilus had recreated.

Of course, there was no meaning even if he did such a thing.

The diamond belts were made from colossal Mana, and there was no limit to their length; once a knot was formed, it could be untied by breaking down and reconstructing itself, so it would be just as if nothing had happened.

He had no such mistaken sense of triumph that he had contained the opponent’s attacks by this.

Only, he had acquired something. Conviction.

Cecilus: “I will surpass myself.”

He had not seen the actual individual. Neither could he actually draw a comparison with him.

However, the Before Cecilus that Cecilus pictured inside his head, had never created this “Tokyo Tower”. Because there was no “Tokyo Tower” inside of him.

So even if the Before Cecilus might have been able to successfully dodge, when it came to triumphantly creating a climax that would go beyond simply evading, the current Cecilus was in the lead by a step.

Cecilus: “…”

Right after that conviction, the formation of the “Tokyo Tower” of light beneath Cecilus came undone.

Returning to Mana, it reconstructed itself, as had been hypothesized—what had been slightly outside of the hypothesis, was that during the moment of construction, a colorless explosion would be yielded.

If it merely got erased then she would have kept losing as they played, and that occurrence seemed like a rebellious spirit opposed to that—

Cecilus: “You are quite the sore loser!”

In a world that had no color, in which even his own voice was ignored by his eardrums, Cecilus was impressed by the heroine as he gazed at her from afar.

After being impressed, a colorless beam of light gradually ascended from directly below him—suffering a direct hit would cancel out his evasion of the belts, and the degree of freedom he had in the air was overwhelmingly lower than what he had on the ground.

This was bad, bad bad bad bad; he got fired up.

—Expanding his imaginary field of vision once again, he carried out a gear change on the functions of his body.

Sense of color, maintain current status. Sense of hearing, maintain current status. Sense of pain and sense of touch, reactivate; hiding the pain that instantly boiled up behind a smile with teeth bared, he searched for the “key” amidst the sensation of a single second being divided up into one hundred parts.

With that, he could search for the “key” that would turn the script over to the next page.

Cecilus: “—There it is.”

Laying the nerves within his body bare, he engaged in the hyper-dimensional act of savagery that was exposing them to the wind, and as he ascended, Cecilus’s outstretched leg hit something.

It was neither a convenient wall nor building. What had been hit was, from the cityscape being destroyed as it was engulfed in the battle between Cecilus and the heroine, a fragment of the rubble that had been whirled up, a single grain of gravel.

That, he used as a foothold.

Cecilus: “Shwee.”

Using the exceedingly faint sensation that had struck the sole of his foot as a foothold, Cecilus’s body leapt through the air.

To avoid the rising achromatic destruction from catching up to him, Cecilus stepped again onto blown up splinters of wood and shattered fragments of window glass, and finally stepping onto a slightly larger cinder of ash, he escaped higher.

Why was he able to do it? He could do it simply because he could, he would make all those who saw him believe so.

Disregarding various logical and general notions, Cecilus’s action of fleeing to the sky was an outrage against common sense. Those who witnessed it might have called it a miracle, but for Cecilus, this was only the beginning, nothing more than a handful of the miracles that arrived to color the world at various moments each and every day.

And thus, if he continued to cause these miracles—

Cecilus: “Impatient reality will bare its fangs.”

Cecilus escaped the beam of light thanks to his unreasonable ascension, and before right or wrong could come as a result from that escape, the reconstructed light belts ate into the colorless beam of light from within, and began to chase Cecilus through the sky.

As the twelve belts entangled in a helix, its tip radially expanded while pointing towards Cecilus, and just as a carnivorous plant would captivate bugs with its beautiful petals, it bit at him. The flower petals closing like a bud, Cecilus would have no means to escape being swallowed by the diamond flower.

That too, surely, would only have been if it were the Cecilus who was not the current Cecilus.

Cecilus: “Bang.”

And, the sound of an atmospheric explosion a hundredfold of the sound he had voiced shook the battlefield.

Unfortunately, although Cecilus himself had shut out all sounds and thus could not hear it, he was sorry to the eardrums of the heroine and of Al who were also present in this location. But then again, the thing that made him want to complain the most, was probably the sky that Cecilus had kicked, and had caused to explode.

Cecilus, who could leave sound behind and run at lightning speed, was well aware that the atmosphere had walls. Kicking those walls was not an easy feat, but it would have been troubling to be disdained as a poor actor who had messed up the climax. Even if he was performing without a rehearsal, perfectly captivating the audience was essential for the leading actor.

As a result, together with the sound of the explosion, Cecilus’s body shot straight downwards. He took a sharp nosedive, and faster than the diamond flowerbud could finish closing, he escaped the petals and fell to the ground.

Cecilus directly pierced the ground, and undoubtedly yielded an impact akin to a lightning strike.

He had paid the price with his right leg, which was now in a horrid state from the knee down, but it was hard to determine whether a gallant figure seizing victory unscathed or the fierce figure sustaining injuries while felling the opponent would make for a better picture. It would be discourteous for the audience to go on and on about what should have been done after the fact, so he puffed out his chest with the sensation of receiving thunderous applause, and proceeded forward, forward—.

Cecilus: "—Ten steps."

By eye, he measured the distance to the heroine in the sky, and purposely stepped forward with his bloodied leg.

Aiming for Cecilus as he broke out into a run, the once closed flowerbud expanded anew, and as the diamond petals rained down on him as if they were being scattered from the spores, he left them in the dust with a single large step.

Cecilus: "—Nine steps."

The space to Cecilus's left and right distorted, and as they twisted, pillars of stone appeared.

Methods of attack other than the belts of diamond light resumed here, and clenching his teeth at the detestable arrangement, he unreasonably overworked his right leg that was placed on the ground in a reckless manner, and gaining speed, he sacrificed some stray hairs as he slipped through the gap in the pillars coming at him from left and right; the atmosphere ended up being the only thing that got pulverized.

Cecilus: "—Eight steps."

Smashing the ground, there were several quadrilateral blocks around the size of houses—masses of stone in the shapes of cubes emerged, and were fired towards him like a barrage of throwing spears.

Stretching out the knee of his left leg, he stepped on the tip of an approaching rock spear, and using that, which was so fatal that it could have also functioned as a gravestone immediately after a direct hit, as a foothold, he plunged into the barrage.

Cecilus: “—Seven steps, six steps, abridge the rest!”

Adapting to the unforeseen situation, he reset the count of steps, and slipping past the storm of stone pillars constructed to reject the After Cecilus, the distance that once seemed to be infinite now closed in on zero.

The heroine exerted her fury to allow none other than the Cecilus she accepted, the Cecilus who could reach her, to get close.

At that stubborn, obstinate heroine, Cecilus was fired up to prove that even his current self could reach her.

That was undoubtedly a world-leading destructive contest of obstinacy on a level of danger that would go down in the history of the Empire.

Taking control of that struggle of obstinacy, Cecilus would accomplish that.

It was not a matter of what he would do once he accomplished it. He simply wanted to accomplish it, and so he would.

Cecilus: “—Two steps!!”

With karate chops from both of his hands, he blew away the obstructing stone pillars, and inferring the distance until the heroine who had been concealed, from where he had jumped out, he spotted her around ten meters in the sky above him; while giving a standing ovation to his instincts within his brain, he seized the range.

Cecilus: “…”

Thereupon, through the process of breaking down and reconstructing themselves, the twelve belts of adamantine light blocked the way again.

Escaping the storm of stone pillars, Cecilus looked up, and receiving that gaze, the heroine directed her belts of light towards him once more. In that moment, while greatly capturing the range, the light belts spread out, and their tips faintly flickered; the ultrathin articles divided themselves further, from twelve to twenty-four, from twenty-four to forty-eight, from forty-eight to ninety-six, from ninety-six to one hundred and ninety-two, from one hundred and ninety-two to three hundred and eighty-four, from three hundred and eighty-four to—

Cecilus: “ ~ ~ Hk.”

As the light belts branched to an extent that became too absurd to enumerate, they beautifully glistened in the sky as they came falling down like a waterfall.

Left, right, and behind, the directions which would have been a path of escape were filled with the pillars of stone; the stage had been transformed into an inescapable barrier. The only path was straight ahead, and even just a graze from the drops of the falling light would have been a fatal, inevitable death, let alone getting struck head-on.

—Fatal, inescapable, fatal, inescapable, fatal, inescapable, fatal, inescapable, fatal, inescapable, fatal, inescapable, fatal, inescapable, fatal, inescapable, fatal, inescapable, fatal, inescapable, fatal, inescapable, fatal, inescapable.

Cecilus: “…”

The world devoid of color and sound was permeated with the probability of Death.

Before the destiny of an unavoidable Death, he recalled all the miracles he had accumulated.

It was a miracle that his right leg was still attached at the knee; it was a miracle that he could still move with an exceedingly deep wound in his chest that almost revealed his heart; it was a miracle that he still was overflowing with motivation at the figure of the heroine as she continued to cry.

And then—

Cecilus: "…"

—It was a miracle that within Cecilus's hand as it reached towards the heavens, a prop had arrived with the best possible timing.

3

—Twelve thousand two hundred and eighty-eight times.

That was the number of times Al had spent figuring out his role on this stage.

Al: "…"

Immediately after Cecilus, with his hair in a bun, had changed his mind with a reasoning that Al did not understand, the battle accelerated further into the realm that laughed at the thought of Al's intervention.

From the get-go, it was a battlefield where he knew there was little he could do.

Within his defined territory, even after nearly two hundred attempts, he only had two opportunities to intervene. Those two times had been undoubtedly meaningful, but in a battle that had kicked up a notch, there was not a single chance for Al to intervene.

To begin with, Arakiya herself was not even able to endure the aftermath of the attacks she was aiming at Cecilus.

Unlike the attacks from before Arakiya's transformation into her deformed state with the magical crystals, where she simply shot out the mana that welled up, her current attacks were clearly more sophisticated. The destructive power wielded by Arakiya—what could have been called "belts of light" had caused the entire area to become completely destroyed, and Al, who had been roped up by them, had been obliterated more than two thousand times.

What was the point of being in a battle in which one's mere presence would be fatal?

However, he had no choice but to give up on any form of intervention and withdraw from the battlefield. For, if he did not, Cecilus would be killed by a belt of light before he could reach Arakiya.

In order to change this unchangeable outcome, Al looked for an opening to intervene—repeatedly getting himself roped up there. After many hundreds, thousands of times, he realized this.

There were problems with Al's positioning, and there were times when he was obliterated by one of the belts as if he were merely a bug to be swatted away. Still, if he managed to see Cecilus make it over before Arakiya, he witnessed Cecilus's incomprehensible movements as he was subjected to an inevitable attack.

—Just before the belts of light that wrapped around Arakiya branched out into a hopeless number and poured down, Cecilus reached out toward the heavens.

???: "…"

At first, Al thought that Cecilus was about to unleash his full strength with his karate chop. However, Cecilus's right hand showed no sign of moving, even at the moment the light rained down.

It was not until hundreds of times later that he realized that he was not performing a karate chop, but was rather extending his five fingers.

It was not a karate chop or a fist, but an open palm facing the heavens. He had no idea what it meant. He did consider the surprise of him suddenly using magic, but in any case, Cecilus, with his magic a dud, would end up being swallowed by the shimmering light, and Al would likewise be roped up and obliterated.

???: "…"

After confirming this, attempts continued to be made in vain, with no room for intervention.

In the ultra-fast-paced battles, the results were as quick as the blink of an eye, and even before a situation was ascertained, the possibilities were examined, and the ideas were given shape, the amount of reversible defeats piling up at an accelerated rate.

Even if he was not impatient with that fact, he was frustrated by the fact that he could not reach the destination.

A tremendous sense of regret ate away at him, making him wonder if he had made a mistake by hesitating to withdraw when he should have, leading him into a dead-end route, only for him to be turned to cinders along with those feelings.

Despite Al's desperate attempts, Cecilus did not even look at him, and Arakiya did not give him a second thought. It was really frustrating.

It made him feel that this was their own private struggle and that they had only been repeatedly telling him so endlessly, thousands of times, and by violent and impulsive means.

—What if that was not the case?

???: "…"

It was a possibility that had unexpectedly slipped into his mind, and Al quickly shook his head to deny it.

Several times, he had sensed an idea beginning to sprout and had witnessed the signs of its development, but in each case, there were no further results, and each time, it disappeared, swallowed by the light of doom.

However, this time, uncharacteristically, that idea was brought past the end into the next restart.

What if that was not the case? —What if there was room for intervention?

???: "…"

Thoroughly, Al decided to cling to the sprouting possibilities.

Cecilus would avoid all of Arakiya's attacks and arrive in front of her. The shimmering belts of light that clothed her would spread out into countless branches and pour down, ending with light engulfing the world.

Over and over again, he kept trying to get a complete picture of what was going on up until this final act.

During this, he had noticed Cecilus was underestimating the belts of light, taking him aback.

During this, he had noticed Cecilus kicking off empty space and flying through it, taking him aback.

During this, he had noticed that he was actually kicking off pebbles and scraps of ash, not empty space, taking him even more aback.

And so, he proceeded in furthering his understanding, furthering it, furthering it, before then raising his head.

Cecilus was perhaps, or maybe, was, more or less—

—Reaching towards the heavens as part of constructing his spotlight.

???: "…"

Al thought to himself in shock, "What else could be expected of me?" as he was obliterated.

The hurdles of those demands were so high that thoughts like "There's no way" and "Maybe, it could…" began to dance through his mind. But then, the realization hit him. He had been dragged into it.

Right smack-dab in the middle of the stage, not just on top of it, vacillating between getting off of it or not—.

???: "…"

It became a long struggle from there. No one would understand. No one needed to.

He must survive up to that moment, flounder over to that moment, reach that moment and intervene in that moment.

It would require a lot of struggling to achieve this. But this was fine. —Not as many as there were stars.

Because of that—

Al: "—Go for it, star actor."

On the twelve thousand two hundred and eighty-eighth time—the hilt of the Blue Dragon Sword was thrown into Cecilus's hand, which he held up to the sky, gripping it ever so tightly.

4

—In the past, there was a building known as the "loot house".

In the slums of the Royal Capital of Lugunica, the symbol of the Kingdom's long-standing debt, was a place shrouded in darkness where stolen goods were openly traded.

Amidst battles over the crucial item that could determine the fate of the Kingdom, the loot house became the stage for confrontations, ultimately meeting its demise in the clash involving the current Sword Saint, Reinhard van Astrea, who intervened to defeat the Bowel Hunter, Elsa Granhiert, resulting in its collapse.

At that moment, the sword Reinhard wielded was a nameless, mass-produced blade.

It did not possess any extraordinary sharpness; it was merely a sword borrowed by Reinhard that happened to be in the loot house and used for the battle.

However, with that single swing in the hands of the Sword Saint Reinhard, it gained the opportunity to unleash a sword strike that even the most famous and treasured swords would never experience.

Of course, no ordinary sword could withstand that single slash, and it instantly crumbled in Reinhard's hands, ending its life as a tangible object there.

However, was the broken sword truly unfortunate?

It was impossible for one to fathom the feelings of a tool, but between a sword gathering dust in a corner of the loot house, rusting away for decades before being discarded, or fulfilling its purpose as a tool, which could be said to have better fulfilled its true purpose?

One could say that the sword fulfilled in a single swing what it might have taken a thousand or even ten thousand swings in the hands of an ordinary wielder to achieve.

The story has begun to veer off its main point, so we shall get it back on track.

Simply put, the reason for the collapse of the loot house was that an ordinary, blunt blade had found a wielder who could fulfill its true purpose as a sword, and thus had it been swung.

If that was the case, then.

If the Sword Saint could achieve that, there was no reason why an equally skilled wielder could not do the same.

Cecilus: “—You did a great job, Al-san.”

Confirming the sensation in the outstretched hand with conviction, Cecilus praised the man who had performed a miracle.

And thus did he acknowledge, and thus did he assert. Cecilus could not even begin to imagine the difficulties Al faced in handing over the Blue Dragon Sword to him right now.

Human imagination was infinite, but even the rash idea of reaching infinity was presumptuous.

It was like the peak of a mountain that was known to exist but could not be reached—a fantastical dream akin to the Heavenly Sword that Cecilus continued to pursue.

However, Al had made it in time.

Through means unimaginable even to Cecilus, Al had overcome the mountain and delivered the miracle Cecilus desired into his hands.

Bravo, bravo, nothing else but the sound of bravo, and thunderous ovation to the sounds of blooming incredible.

???: "…"

The rain of light became unavoidable Death and poured down upon Cecilus.

When one became an actor of Cecilus's caliber, one might understand that the audience often desired a beautiful, star-studded ending rather than a mundane demise, and under certain circumstances, one might even consider it fitting, but now was not a good time. This was not the curtain call he had envisioned.

Therefore—

Cecilus: "That ending needs a rewrite."

Cecilus swung the slightly oversized Blue Dragon Sword with the skill of a seasoned swordsman, as if he had swung it thousands, tens of thousands, or even hundreds of millions of times before.

Even though it would have been the first time he wielded the weapon, within Cecilus's ever so expansive imagination and theater of his mind, there existed a record of swinging this Blue Dragon Sword throughout the mornings, afternoons, and nights, puking up blood and sweating profusely. However, depicting such scenes would be NG for Cecilus, so he simply plucked the fruits of his efforts.

—In an instant, a flash of lightning that transcended the limits of the Blue Dragon Sword, slashed away the pouring rain of light into nihil.

It was not just the countless strands of light that were obliterated in that flash. The dense forest of stone pillars that cover Cecilus's left, right, and rear, attempting to seal off any escape routes, was blown to smithereens.

At this moment, Cecilus Segmunt’s sword strike had surpassed the Spirit Eater Arakiya—No, it had surpassed the Stone, Muspel, which was said to be the very land of the Vollachian Empire.

???: “…”

Then, beyond the rain of light, Cecilus and Arakiya’s gazes met—

Cecilus: “—Hk.”

Cecilus twisted his neck to evade the thirteenth strand of light released. It grazed his right cheek, with the lower half of his right ear being obliterated; blood evaporated from his frayed neck and shoulder, but he successfully avoided the attack.

He praised the fact she had yet managed to conceal an ace of hers behind the rain of light, and more so concealed it well,

Cecilus: “One step—”

Resuming the count of steps remaining to cover the distance, he kicked the ground with his left foot and ascended into the air.

From there, Cecilus’s lightning-fast sprint closed in on Arakiya in the sky—

???: “…”

In an instant, the strands of light he had evaded gave rise to a colorless explosion, and Cecilus’s head was struck with the force of the blast.

5

Cecilus: “—Oya?”

Suddenly, finding himself standing stock-still in an unfamiliar room thrust into twilight, Cecilus tilted his head.

He looked around his surroundings, but it was a place he had no recollection of ever seeing. Cecilus had a reputation of being forgetful, but surprisingly, he would never forget places and things once he had seen them.

No matter the situation or prop, there might eventually be an opportunity to put it to use. The things known as stage effects were also occasionally born from unforeseen ideas.

Cecilus: “So it’s a place that even I’m unaware of. Or rather to begin with the fact that I’m present in this kind of place is really putting my sense of discomfort to work.”

Even though he had no memory of this location, he was not so careless as to forget what he had been doing just before.

In the Imperial Capital filled with undead, begged by a sobbing heroine to kill her, Cecilus took offense to that and had resolved himself to surpass his past self, and ought to have pulverized Al’s Blue Dragon Sword.

Cecilus: “It sure seems like I’m escaping from reality because things ended there and I’m worrying over having destroyed Al-san’s Blue Dragon Sword. As expected, that’s… woah woah woah.”

If he broke someone else’s possession, even Cecilus would feel pain in his chest. But, all things had a lifespan and a destiny. If the chance came around, there were things that ought not to be fretted about when destroyed. Al’s Blue Dragon Sword fit into that category. After everything was settled, it would be fine if he relied on Schwartz to reimburse Al.

When such a conclusion was about to be made, a change in the room had been yielded. —As light from the setting sun shone through the window, the door within the unfamiliar room was opened.

And then—

???: “Well, it’s quite the nice thing isn’t it, to be summoned even when I have no memory of being called for. Whenever I’m called it’s always because I’m being scolded for something, but I’m not worried about that today!”

Cecilus: “—Hahaa, I see.”

While giving a cackling laugh, the one who entered the room with light steps was a blue-haired, slender young man—clad in a pink kimono, the person wearing zori was someone Cecilus had never seen before, but he could guess who it was.

With long limbs, and a refined appearance that still contained a soft impression, there were many common features to his own which he checked in the mirror everyday, so there was no longer even the slightest room for doubt.

Cecilus: “It’s the adult me. Which would mean these are the memories of the Before me?”

Ascertaining the existence of his past self—of “Cecilus”, Cecilus surmised the situation.

Since the topic of the Blue Lightning had spread to so many people, it was unreasonable to suspect that he had not existed, but actually seeing the big version of himself like this was quite moving.

Since he was aspiring to surpass himself, this “Cecilus” should have been someone like a rival to him, but—

Cecilus: “Hm hm, isn’t this great! The way I grew up was quite ideal indeed! The flowery beauty is fully intact while sex appeal has risen and the handsomeness has gone through the roof!”

Witnessing the figure of “Cecilus” before him, he was utterly enchanted by how big of a deal it was.

Since his frame of mind was likely the same as that of the current Cecilus, maintaining the spirit that he was the leading actor of this world, it was only natural that he had kept his mind and body in tip-top condition.

That such a way of thinking had been diligently put into practice, was in itself a very welcome sentiment.

Cecilus: “Let’s see. Although it may be nice to be presented with a grown version of myself like this I can’t get a read on the next development. Perhaps in order to actualize the idea of me surpassing myself I’ve been plunged into a sword battle against the former me? But, considering that it seems like this me can’t be seen by that me…”

Containing his excitement, Cecilus shifted doubt upon the current situation once again.

Even when a hand was waved right in front of his eyes, “Cecilus” did not notice the presence of Cecilus here. If he could not interfere with this scene, then just what was the meaning to be had here?

The answer to that would be clearly exhibited with the progression of the situation.

???: “—Whether it is scolding or not, I think depends on whether you have self-awareness in the given case, but is it not premature to be relieved simply because you haven’t a cluuue?”

Subsequently, the voice heard was from the person who had entered the room a bit after “Cecilus”.

That person closed the door with a hand behind their back, and glancing towards “Cecilus”, who had entered before him, he narrowed his long-slitted eyes.

What a terribly odd appearance that person had.

With long, white hair framing a white face, a form that was white throughout its entirety, even to its clothing and equipped tactical fan, the figure that was slimmer and taller than even “Cecilus” looked like a shady goblin that would show up in a picture book.

From that appearance, Cecilus received an impact that was truly to his liking.

“Cecilus”: “Unh. By saying that do you mean that I just didn’t realize and it actually is a scolding after all? In that case I really messed up by entering the room first. I’ll burst through the window and rush up the wall to escape, Chisha.”

Chisha: “That would stir up the soldiers of the palace so I would prefer if you refrained from such eccentricities. For the time being, it truly is not a scolding today. You do not have to be so on guard.”

“Cecilus”: “Please now, don’t frighten me like that. Jeez, Chisha really is bad with people. No matter how many years pass, that aspect sure doesn’t change.”

Chisha: “—. Indeed, though it is unusual, I am in agreemeeent.”

That white personage was called Chisha in an easygoing manner by “Cecilus”.

In that case, the man’s name was probably Chisha, and “Cecilus” was quite close with him. Currently, Cecilus had no acquaintance with Chisha, but he could tell from their interaction that they had known each other for a period of years. He also understood that it was no small amount of years from “Cecilus’s” remarks.

Cecilus: “Hm.”

The age of “Cecilus” seemed to be around twenty, with a margin for error of around one or two years. That meant there was a gap of around ten years with Cecilus’s current state, so he surmised that his relationship with Chisha was during that time.

Considering how Cecilus’s name of the Blue Lightning had spread, ten years felt like quite a reasonable timeline. —In other words, there was a high possibility that the scene of the past that Cecilus was watching was within one or two years of the present.

Grasping that, Cecilus progressed his thoughts further, and cocked his head at the same time.

It was natural to get caught up on this, but the reason why this past could be seen, and why he was seeing this past—regardless of the latter, he could generally comprehend the former.

Cecilus: “Supposing it’s true that I was shrunk then I think the memories from before I became small were just sealed away and didn’t actually disappear or anything.”

Since he had no memory of the time he was shrunk, he did not really understand the mechanism behind the shrinking, but it should not have been able to entirely erase ten of the years Cecilus had lived. Even so, the reason he could not remember the memories from those ten years, was none other than because his body and mind mutually influenced each other.

Just as how Cecilus's body would be able to implement whatever he believed possible, his mind would have no choice but to regress in tandem if his body had certifiably shrunk. —It was probably something like that.

Therefore, Cecilus thought that his memories themselves had merely been dormant, while actually having been inside of himself this whole time. Since he thought so, there was no issue with the fact in itself that they could be seen.

The issue was, as before, the reason why he was seeing them.

Cecilus: "…This seems like the memory of the time I got shrunk."

Indeed, the reason why Cecilus had muttered that with a bitter look on his face, was because he had hit upon an unpleasant possibility.

Cecilus had never experienced it for himself, but when people were on the verge of death, it seemed like they would seek a method to escape the approaching doom before them, and would trace back through the memories of their life. It was a function of searching for an idea to refuse Death amidst the life they had accumulated up until then.

Thus, the reason for Cecilus's bitter-faced answer, was undoubtedly the suspicion that this scene before his eyes might have been a spark from Cecilus's lifetime in order to save his life.

In other words, if this was as Cecilus suspected, and was the memory from the time he had been shrunk, then could it have been a scene where the opposite was also true?

Cecilus: "Isn't this something like seeing the place where I was shrunk, and then gaining a hint for the method of returning to my original form, and breaking the deadlock of the situation? Isn't that like really really lame?"

Despite declaring that he would surpass himself, having stepped towards the heroine with the resolve to die as she spilled tears, and Al having provided the greatest assist that went above and beyond his minor-role, he would fail to carry out his original intention.

As such an answer for his own failure lay before his eyes, Cecilus had unpleasant feelings in the depths of his heart.

Cecilus: "Don't like it, I don't like it, I don't like it one bit!"

Throwing himself down onto the floor of the room, he rambunctiously threw a tantrum and flailed his limbs around. But, Cecilus's reluctance did not put a stop to the conversation between "Cecilus" and Chisha.

Leaving Cecilus behind as he sprawled himself out on the floor, the two people continued with their discussion.

"Cecilus": "You're making a somewhat complex expression, Chisha."

Chisha: "—. My goodness, even though you usually do not pay much mind to the countenances of others, you are only ever sharp at times like these; that is the reason I find you to be troublesooome."

"Cecilus": "Hahaha, you sure are saying some funny things. I do regularly look at the faces of people in my surroundings. It's just that most of the time I just look at them and then ignore it without touching on the subject!"

Chisha: "Then, for what reason have you touched upon it today?"

"Cecilus": "Why wouldn't I be worried if my friend is tired? I think it's a rather normal thing."

Chisha: "It is ridiculous to hear a word such as "normal" coming from your mouth."

With a face on which not even a hint of a smile emerged, Chisha replied so, to which “Cecilus” pouted his lips.

At that state, Cecilus, unable to interfere with the memory, gave up on his whining and looked up while sitting cross-legged. A friend, the fact that he said that word and the fact that he had one, were the height of surprise.

Even if Schwartz and Tanza, Gustav and the Pleiades Battalion were his allies, they were not his friends or family. To think that he would have a friend.

However, leaving aside Cecilus’s deep emotions, Chisha suddenly gave a distant look, and while calling “Cecilus’s” name,

Chisha: “Supposing the views of myself and His Excellency ran in opposition to each other, just how do you think events would play ouuut?”

“Cecilus”: “If His Excellency and Chisha did? If you can talk it out then you should talk it out but if there’s no use in talking it out then wouldn’t the only option be to have a showdown?”

Chisha: “When the time for that showdown comes, how would you proceed?”

“Cecilus”: “Naturally I’d be His Excellency’s ally. That goes without saying, doesn’t it?”

Without reserve, without fervor, “Cecilus” plainly answered with a tone of voice unaltered. Then, hopping up and sitting his bum down on the desk in the inner part of the room, he suspended his legs and looked at Chisha.

Resting his chin in his hands, “Cecilus” closed one of his blue eyes, and,

“Cecilus”: “A roundabout and enigmatic hypothetical story… by some chance, is Chisha perhaps plotting something?”

Chisha: “I suppose that is sooo… It is absolutely necessary to prepare for a large, large battle.”

Cecilus: "—A large battle." / "Cecilus": "—A large battle."

Reacting to Chisha's statement, both the past and the present Cecilus overlapped in their remarks.

It was a matter that "Cecilus" seemed to not have a clue about, and Cecilus did not know Chisha well enough to declare that it was in reference to the current happenings. At those words, Chisha joined his hands together behind his back and, walking up to the window,

Chisha: "It is a battle we must win no matter the cost. However, in regards to that great battle, His Excellency and I are of differing opinions. Even from the establishment of victory conditions, my view does not align with His Excellency's. I have found no room for us to come to a common ground."

"Cecilus": "It's quite rare for Chisha to act independently from His Excellency. Or rather than rare, wouldn't this be the first time?"

Chisha: "I do not think that is sooo. Often, I will convey my own opinions to His Excellency…"

"Cecilus": "That's right. So this is the first time Chisha is giving up on trying to persuade His Excellency."

Chisha: "…"

Gazing at the scenery outside the window, Chisha kept silent, and behind him, "Cecilus" turned his head around. The fact that Chisha did not reply, likely meant that "Cecilus's" point had hit the mark.

They had known each other a long time, but that was entirely why Vincent always made unreasonable requests of Chisha. His fame as the wisest Emperor since the genesis of the Empire had been built atop Chisha's blood, sweat, and tears.

Cecilus: "…Hmm."

Upon thinking thus, Cecilus got the feeling that he really knew Chisha well. In regards to His Excellency, who came up quite frequently in conversation, too, a vague face came to mind. For some reason, it was a face with wrinkles on its brow. The face was a haze, but the wrinkles on the brow were distinctive, and seemed to be the essence of the face.

He was not in a mental state where he could really welcome that sensation, however, Cecilus had a surge of interest in the conversation between “Cecilus” and Chisha, and he wished to see its developments through.

Chisha was acting independently from His Excellency—from Vincent. And from there.

Chisha: “I have no intention of clashing opinions with His Excellency on this matter. It is an absolute condition that His Excellency harbors not even a smidgen of doubt. And for that purpose…”

“Cecilus”: “—I guess I’m in the way?”

Quietly, yet slightly cheerfully, “Cecilus” posed a question to Chisha’s back. Receiving it, Chisha turned around without uttering a word, and narrowed his eyes while his white body was dyed orange by the setting sun.

Yet again he did not deny. The lack of words, the silence, was proof of affirmation.

“Cecilus”: “If His Excellency and Chisha oppose each other with opinions divided then I’ll follow His Excellency no matter what. That is a major prerequisite for myself and my unyielding oath of the sword.”

Chisha: “Indeed, I accept that your answer is so. At the same time, if you stand on His Excellency’s side, then my prospects for victory are essentially nonexistent. Even were I to have Arakiya or General First-Class Olbart… no, even were I to have all of the Nine Divine Generals other than you on my side, it would likely be no match for you.”

“Cecilus”: “Ho-ho-ho-ho, now that is quite the captivating story. I’ve actually been thinking this since long ago. Even though the Nine Divine Generals are the Empire’s strongest army corps, isn’t nine too many people?”

Cecilus: “I think so too.”

Even if they were to cut four or five members, something like the Five Great Summits or the Four Heavenly Kings would not be too shabby.

Cecilus had such a perception, and “Cecilus” was in the process of gradually heightening his fighting spirit. Basking directly in the gazes of the two Ceciluses, Chisha’s expression did not crumble.

Whenever Chisha made a face like this, caution was required, as he would have some sort of unthinkable plan.

Chisha: “Unfortunately, it is not as though I have actually persuaded the Nine Divine Generals.”

“Cecilus”: “Oh is that so? Well but that’s how it is isn’t it? There’s no way Goz-san and Moguro would betray His Excellency. But in that case what are you gonna do?”

Chisha: “…”

“Cecilus”: “Chisha’s not gonna give up there. That’s the kind of face you’re making, you know?”

A nostalgic emotion simmered up within him, but it was pushed back for later by “Cecilus’s” reaction. As “Cecilus” leaned his bum against the desk, he kept watch over Chisha’s every move.

No matter how Chisha tried to move, he could take complete control. But, that was something Chisha was well aware of.

Well now, just what would he try to do? Just how would he get the better of this “Cecilus Segmunt”, and shrink him into the current form of a small child?

Chisha: “Cecilus, I shall remove you from the board. As His Excellency and I engage in a bout of reading the other’s every move, no stage shall be prepared for you to make your appearance. There is another role that shall be arranged for you.”

“Cecilus”: “Even if you say that to me I can’t just give an answer in good spirits like “Ah yes that is indeed so”. On the other hand, since you can’t remove me through force, are you going to use the power of words? As I’m sure Chisha is aware, I’m the General with the least ability to listen in the Empire.”

Saying that, he got off of the desk and landed on the ground, and spinning around like he was dancing, “Cecilus” faced Chisha head-on. Chisha’s figure was dazzling as he stood amidst the setting sun, and “Cecilus” tilted his body forward, looking up at him with upturned eyes.

It was a relationship spanning a long time, one in which they mutually had full knowledge of the other’s good and bad aspects, and looking into the expression of such a friend, “Cecilus” smiled.

Smiling, he provoked Chisha to bring out the likes of the plan that he had prepared up his sleeve.

“Cecilus”: “Let’s see, what kind of words, views, or reasoning will you use to convince me? This will be quite the tough challenge, even for the wise man who is second only to His Excellency, Chisha Gold.”

At that cheap provocation from “Cecilus”, Chisha closed his eyes, and let a beat pass.

Then, opening those eyes, and with “Cecilus” reflected in them,

Chisha: “Cecilus. —Please, I entrust His Excellency to you.”

—.

—.

—.

—Neither was it carelessness, nor was it persuasion; the fact that it was an entreaty, filled him with awe.

“Cecilus”: “—. This isn’t fair.”

Cecilus: “—PERFECT!!”

6

The impression of his red blood spraying out, strongly overlapped with that of the red sunset within his memories.

With the evening glow upon his back, Chisha Gold had defeated Cecilus inside his office. Neither had he been caught in a moment of vulnerability, nor had he earnestly been persuaded by the benefits; he had been entrusted.

That was the reason why “Cecilus Segmunt” had become Cecilus Segmunt.

Cecilus: “—Hk.”

As a scorching heat assailed his senses, Cecilus’s consciousness returned to reality.

The pain to his head and half of his body, was the result of being caught in the explosion of the light belt he ought to have averted; the time in which his consciousness had disappeared into the twilight of that day had been less than a half of a half of a half of a second.

But, that stagnation was more than enough for the heroine—for Arakiya, who was blocking the way.

Arakiya: “…”

The Blue Dragon Sword that had crumbled within his hand, the full might of its blow ought to have erased the belts of light, but having been reconstructed through Arakiya’s power, five, six of them were restored.

Even she would not have been able to instantly regain the power lost from that attack. The magic crystal wings that had been upon her back had fissured, and amidst the sparkling fragments as they scattered about, Arakiya was present.

In the depths of that slender body, was it the Stone, Muspel, whom she had devoured?

To turn her fangs against the very land of the Vollachian Empire, he was surprised by her indiscriminate nature. Something like that, not even Cecilus would think after having seen those tears.

Having heard her utterance, he could not ridicule her with his usual tone.

Cecilus: “But, since it was made with that kind of face, I’m going to have to decline your request.”

If she had wanted to inform Cecilus of her request no matter what, she should have at least given her best smile. If she had made such a choice with no regrets and no falsehoods, and had told him with a smile on her face, then Cecilus would also have received it in earnest.

Just like that helpless friend, who, with a smile, had ordered Cecilus to shrink.

Cecilus: “Ahh, so that’s what it was?”

Even now, Cecilus’s limbs were short, and his resuscitated memories were still only fragments of what had been lying dormant.

He did not know how to return his shrunken body to its original form. The memory had ended before he could recall what concrete method Chisha had employed, and with that, the objective of the remembrance had been fulfilled.

There was a phenomenon where people faced with death would search through their memories for a way to break the deadlock. What had just happened was an unmistakable instance of that. Only, the answer of how to break through the deadlock was different to what he had anticipated.

At the end of that recollection, Cecilus had thought that he would learn the method of how to return his body to that of an adult. But, it had not been so. That it had not been so, delighted him.

People faced with death would search through their memories for a way to break the deadlock.

He had seen that face of Chisha's, and heard his request. —For Cecilus Segmunt, that was more than enough of a basis to believe that he could defy death.

Cecilus: "In the first place, there's no way I'd lose."

He had confidence and pride in plenty, however, that was not to say that his strength was his sole basis for this.

By Cecilus's own philosophy, there was an answer as to why he would not lose against Arakiya here.

The reason was because in this place—

Cecilus: "—Boss isn't present. If I happened to die here he would break our promise without batting an eyelid, and come rushing over."

Spilling that out, Cecilus gave a bitter smile with his blood-stained good looks.

That was the kind of boy Natsuki Schwartz was. Having departed from the Gladiator Island, in the midst of the eastward expedition of the Pleiades Battalion, Cecilus and Schwartz had exchanged a promise under the moon.

That was, Schwartz would not use the power of his miraculous "true sight" to save Cecilus.

It was a promise formed with mutual respect for each other, but Cecilus knew. If push came to shove, Schwartz would break his promise without batting an eye. Cecilus himself would do so too. He was the same type as Schwartz.

That was why, he knew.

If he had seen Cecilus die with his "true sight", Schwartz would have come rushing here no matter what.

That had not happened. To put it in other words, that was faith from Schwartz.

And, that same thing was something that Cecilus directed towards Schwartz.

Cecilus: “…”

Towards Cecilus, who had gained an illogical conviction, six belts of light furiously flickered in approach.

While already airborne, yielding a subsequent movement would be difficult, and thus Cecilus would not be able to dodge. But, even if he did not dodge, there was something he could do. That, was the trump card he had brought back from the momentary daydream.

—In Cecilus’s hand, having lost the Blue Dragon Sword, the hilt of another blade was gripped.

Cecilus: “—Masayume.”

Its inscription called out, the pattern on the blade of the Enchanted Sword shook like a rippling wave. It was a blade belonging to Cecilus Segmunt which possessed incredible power, the Dream Sword Masayume.

Much to the lament of Rowan, who was unaware of its whereabouts, it was a supernatural sword permitted to cut things beyond the logic of this world, in a similar manner to the Fiend Sword Murasame.

It had been lost together with Cecilus’s memories, so no wonder everybody had racked their brains over its whereabouts.

The Yang Sword Vollachia used the sky as its sheath. Thus, the Dream Sword Masayume used dreams as its sheath. —Ergo, Cecilus had borrowed Masayume from the waist of “Cecilus” within the daydream.

As Masayume pulsated within his hand, it recognized the short Cecilus as its owner. Things would not have gone this easily with Murasame. He was thankful for this fortuitous encounter here.

With his gratitude received, the blade flashed—the six approaching belts of light were slain, and conquered.

Cecilus: “I’m aiming for—”

Arakiya—the center of her chest, at the large mass of power dwelling therein.

He would exorcize it. Never had he done so before. But, believing that he could, he would bring it to fruition. Such power existed within Cecilus. Masayume was reliable. Al was also present as an eye-witness. He would not fail, thus he fired himself up.

What remained—

Cecilus: “Dreams are meant to be seen when you’re awake, they’re meant to enchant you, Anya.”

As he spoke so, Cecilus looked into Arakiya’s eyes during his stretched-out super speed. With tears of blood flowing from her left eye bereft of light, the emotions on the beautiful girl’s face were harder to read than usual.

Within her deeply emotional right eye, which he had grown accustomed to seeing, a visible blue flame had emerged—.

Cecilus: “—The person whom you treasure dearly, is someone who treasures you dearly too.”

Tenderly spinning those words, a flash unleashed by Thunder put an end to her nightmare.

In a manner as if to prove that dreams were something that the leading actor, standing atop the stage, would enchant the audience with.

—That was the answer given by Cecilus Segmunt, in response to the heroine’s entreaty.

Vic.1120

Chapter 58: Proof of Existence

1

—Going behind a guard who was keeping watch, he struck the pressure points that ran along the central meridian of their body.

Guard: “…”

That instant, the posture of the opponent was broken, and they collapsed without raising their voice. The reason why he had propped up the body as it collapsed was not out of consideration, but rather because it would have caused problems if the sound of armor striking the ground had rung out.

???: “Good grief, it’s darn tirin’ for an old fella like me ta carry a large man with a single hand. —Even tho’ their insides are hollow, they got some firm weight ta ‘em which makes it annoyin’.”

Saying that, the white-haired, white-eyebrowed old man—Olbart carried the collapsed enemy with his lone left arm, lightly striking the defensive wall beside him with the tips of his toes. As he did so, he caused the surface of the wall to ripple as if it were water, and he forcefully stuffed the enemy’s body into it; it was swallowed, and the wall’s surface filled back in.

Fortunately, it seemed like the undead were able to go without breathing, so he could bury them in the walls to settle things without having to kill.

As their hearts did not beat, neither did blood flow. Were they to be killed, it would have been fine to just sweep the fragments away with a broom, so it was fortunate that dealing with the cleanup was easy.

Olbart: “But, everythin’ other than that aspect ain’t good in the slightest. When ya kill ‘em, there’re some that got the damn nerve ta get up right after they die, so recklessly killin’ ‘em’ll just make it more troublesome.”

Among the special traits of the opposing undead, the thing Olbart viewed as the most dangerous was the revival of defeated enemies.

When faced with enemies that would continue to be resurrected, no matter how many times they were defeated, even the Imperial Soldiers, overflowing with fighting spirit, would have their hearts broken—that was not Olbart’s reason, but rather, the issue was that the undead that were killed and resurrected would inherit the memories from before they were killed.

Through such means, the opponent could use replaceable lives in exchange for instantaneous sharing of all sorts of information.

Olbart, the head honcho of the shinobi, was more than aware of how important it was to have accurate and recent information within warfare. It was to the extent that the enemies Olbart had killed the most within his lifetime, were between scouts and messengers.

Originally, killing would have been done to prevent the transmission of information, so the fact that there was danger of information being transmitted even if they were killed was nothing short of absurd.

Olbart: “Well, shinobi techniques’ve also got somethin’ that makes ya self-destruct upon death, sendin’ information through the color of the eruptin’ smoke, so we’re in the same boat, the same boat I tell ya.”

Even though angering others was the principal domain of the shinobi, with this, they would surely go out of business.

Through the investigation that was carried out amidst the combat to push back the enemy forces during the evacuation from the Imperial Capital, it was discovered that the undead possessed a vital point known as a “corebug”, and that seemed to be the source of their resurrection. There were also some undead that could regenerate even if their heads were sent flying, but that was because their corebug had not been destroyed.

In the end, the source of the corebugs' power was the Great Spirit known as the Stone, so even if the undead were fully killed down to their corebugs, it would cause Muspel to lose strength, making it unable to support the vast lands of the Empire.

Therefore, Olbart was thoroughly putting in effort to enforce the policy of "not killing" the undead.

By precisely striking the weak spots of the human body that were known as pressure points, the body could be robbed of its freedom, becoming powerless like the undead that had been buried in the wall earlier. In that manner, the undead stuffed into the wall by Olbart numbered about fifty—even though the construction and interior of their bodies were as papier mâché, he was relieved that their pressure points still functioned as weak spots.

But then again, considering the enormous numbers of undead, this was naught more than a meager resistance.

Olbart: "For the Imperial people who specialize in the subject of killin' or bein' killed, ain't it awfully harsh ta tell 'em not ta die and not ta kill?"

That was an opinion that the allied troops from the Kingdom and the City-States, who were engaged in a cooperative relationship in order to save the Empire, would frown upon were they to hear it, but it was an opinion that relatively many of the Imperial peoples would likely agree with.

As a result, with the enemy spearheading the Great Disaster being the worst possible matchup for the Vollachian Empire, they were engaged in a defensive battle with the absolute condition of not killing. —No, it was not "as a result".

Olbart: "It's a bad habit of old folk ta always imagine the worst. An opponent who's got the nerve ta use all the blood that's soaked into the soil of the Empire 'til now… they're completely targetin' our weakness."

A battlefield where soldiers of yore were revived one after another, it was an environment that had come into being due to the fact that

Vollachia was a place where conflict never petered out.

Considering that even under the same conditions, it likely would not have amounted to such a disaster in any of the other countries, so in order to conquer Vollachia, the enemy had taken the most suitable measures.

That was why, this side also had to understand that this was a board that must not be misread.

Olbart: "…"

Narrowing his eyes concealed by his white eyebrows, Olbart held his breath in the Crystal Palace, which he was in the midst of independently infiltrating.

Invisibility that eliminated one's presence as much as possible, it was something that lived up to the name of the shinobi's head honcho—including the fact that he had been picking off the guards without being noticed, there was no way his presence would be caught.

If his presence were to be detected, thereby including him as a target of the Curse of Thorns, Olbart would be made powerless. He was weak to pain. The mere thought of thorns stabbing into his heart made him want to toss in his sleep.

In order to avoid that, Olbart had been taking the utmost care in his movements.

—Invading the Imperial Capital with a select few, they would quickly defeat the ringleader of the enemy.

This was the plan being employed in the final stage of the war against the Great Disaster, and while it was a given for Vincent, Olbart also deemed it as the best possible method without any objections.

The numbers of undead exceeded the count of Imperial Soldiers, and even if they engaged in a war of attrition, the lifeforce of the Stone would be depleted, and the lifespan of the Empire would diminish; that was how thoroughly they had been backed into a corner.

The fact that they had no choice but to hasten to a conclusion, was something that was utterly obvious to anybody's eyes.

Olbart: "'Course, the opponent's also gonna be anticipatin' that."

However, even if the opponent was aware, if no other option existed, then there would be no choice but to take that one. What remained was how many things they had in their hand, of which their tactics were already exposed, that could defy their opponent's expectations.

Therefore, the select few were divided even further, and several decoys to attract the enemy's attention had been prepared.

While those decoys were active, Olbart only had to fulfill the duties assigned to him.

—Olbart's role was to infiltrate the Crystal Palace, and bring back intelligence regarding the uncertain interior of the palace.

Of especially high importance were the whereabouts of the ringleader of the Great Disaster, the one known as Sphinx, and the liberation of the Steelman, Moguro Hagane, whose movements had likely been sealed within the palace. Additionally, if he had some leeway, there was the retrieval of Cecilus's beloved katanas, the Dream Sword and the Fiend Sword.

Olbart: "Tho', I prolly won't be able ta find Ceci's katanas. The Fiend Sword tends ta run away, and I ain't got any way of knowin' where the Dream Sword's been stored."

Cecilus was always eager to babble on about anything, but even though he would talk about how incredible his beloved katanas were, he was not so foolish as to blather on about their special qualities. He would probably give an answer if questioned, but to inquire about an opponent's hand, was tantamount to inviting suspicion that one had a reason to do so.

Olbart had not been so foolish as to carelessly provoke Cecilus.

Anyhow, due to the improbability, Olbart put off the retrieval of the katanas for later.

Ideally, he would grasp Sphinx's location, and secure her body. If he could do so, then through the power of that commendable boy who, though in a shrunken state, did not want to return to normal—Schwartz, and the girl he brought along, then the undead could be entirely wiped out, down to their souls.

Being able to implement that would be the most desirable conclusion in this battle against the Great Disaster.

However, that would not be an easy feat.

Olbart: "—Good grief, this one's another dead end."

Contrary to his desire for a swift conclusion, Olbart's feet often came to a halt.

Being able to perfectly grasp a scene simply by looking at a map, and absolutely never forgetting a location upon a single visit, were fundamental skills of the shinobi, and for Olbart, the Crystal Palace was a place of work that he visited frequently.

In spite of that, the reason why Olbart's search was not progressing favorably was because the interior of the Crystal Palace, which he ought to have been familiar with, had been completely reshaped from that which Olbart knew.

Olbart: "Even tho' this kinda perplexity is originally meant ta be our speciality."

Though Olbart did not think there was any value in it, the Crystal Palace was a building known for being the world's most beautiful castle. Due to the decisive battle for the Imperial Capital, a part of its wall had been destroyed, but even so, there was no large impact on its outward appearance when viewed from a distance.

However, the interior of the palace was an incredibly different story.

Various aspects such as the construction of passageways, the positioning of rooms, and the size of doors had been altered, and it had been transformed into an entirely different palace, such that even Vincent, who had once lived here in the Crystal Palace, would become lost.

The lack of change to its exterior was guaranteed to bewilder any who would charge in without a plan.

Even if he returned with just this information, there would have been more than enough meaning in Olbart's preceding infiltration. Or perhaps Schwartz, who was serving the role of strategist, had already hypothesized this situation.

If that were the case, his power of insight was promising, but at the same time, it was a future threat.

There were none who knew how the Kingdom and the City-States, which were currently in a cooperative relationship with the Empire, would deal with the latter after the Great Disaster of the undead was stopped.

For when that time would come about, Chisha would no longer be by Vincent's side.

Olbart: "—However, ya really went and pulled that off, Chesshy."

The flames of war, the winds of blood, and the atmosphere of Death that was persistently fragrant from both the living and the dead.

For those reasons, his heart had naught the time to mourn, but Olbart appraised Chisha for having stolen his technique through his "ability", and furthermore, for having replaced Vincent without Olbart having noticed.

Olbart enjoyed stealing the techniques of others, but he was not fond of being stolen from himself.

After all, growth was a privilege of the young. Even if they did not steal, there were unlimited possibilities of what they could produce by their own hands. Conversely, the old had no such room for growth. That was why Olbart was not fond of being stolen from.

What would happen if, instead of producing something new, young people stole, and then yearned for more?

Would it not be that this world would cease to produce new things, thereby causing Olbart to run out of things to steal?

Olbart: “That bastard Chesshy had some damn nerve ta act so cunningly. —Tho’ it ain’t like I don’t understand how he was feelin’.”

Within a limited frame of time, Chisha had desired the best possible outcome.

In other words, Chisha and Olbart had the same choice. Olbart was an old man who was nearing the end of his rope, and Chisha was a dead soldier who had established an opportunity to meet the end of his rope before long.

Hence, it was a matter of not having selected the means that would have increased the cards in one’s hand.

Having entered the bout with limited cards in his hand, Chisha had seized victory in this situation.

—This situation, in which Vincent had been kept alive, and Olbart had been enlisted as an ally.

Olbart: “…”

—Olbart Dunkelkenn had an ambition.

It was the final goal of his life, to leave his name in the history of the Empire, in a form with which none other could compare; to engrave, to prove that the being known as himself had indeed existed as an individual life.

Olbart had been received as a shinobi, had been raised as a shinobi, and had lived as a shinobi.

In a role where many would use and discard their lives, where it was natural to be unable to achieve a long life, Olbart had lived to a point where the age of one hundred was now close at hand. But, in his long life as an Imperial citizen, as a shinobi, Olbart had spent the greater part of his days fulfilling the objectives of others.

That could have been called the destiny of the shinobi way of life, but Olbart had lived exceptionally long among the shinobi. —In that case, then it would have also been fine for his end to be unbecoming of a shinobi.

If it was typical for a shinobi to silently disappear into the darkness of history without leaving their name behind, then would it not be fine for Olbart to purposely aim for the complete inversion of that?

Therefore, Olbart had vigilantly awaited such an opportunity.

In order to bloom at the end of his life, he had thought that the most effective measure would have been to take the head of the Wise Emperor, Vincent Vollachia, but—

Olbart: “If the opponent happens ta be ruin itself, then there ain’t no point in betrayal.”

The opponent was the Great Disaster—the hosts of undead, and because their objective was the total destruction of the Vollachian Empire, Olbart’s scheme was nothing more than a transient, brittle thing that would crumble away.

Olbart wanted to leave his name in the history of the Empire.

If that Empire were to be destroyed, then no matter what, Olbart’s wish would not be granted. Therefore, Olbart had to take off his hat to Chisha’s acting, which had not hastened him until the current situation.

Olbart: “Tho’ after these hijinks are done and settled, it’d be nice if there’s still room for myself ta do somethin’. My lifespan’s gonna imprudently run out before I know it.”

After the war, when the exhausted Empire would be in the midst of reconstruction, he would augustly murder the Emperor before the Kingdom or the City-States could make a move—it was not as though he did not have such thoughts, but he would not feel comfortable doing so, since he could not help but feel like he would be taking advantage of the Great Disaster.

Regrettably, unable to find an ideal opportunity, Olbart concealed his ambition, as it would have been overly optimistic so long as the Great Disaster remained undefeated, and he faced forward. —Ahead of Olbart's vision was the large door that would have connected to the place that was the audience chamber in the original palace.

Olbart: "…"

Within Olbart's mind, as he remained silent, there were two conflicting senses that arose.

The sensation that he ought not go beyond this door, and the sensation that he ought to go beyond this door—the former was rooted in his instincts, while the latter was based on his intuition developed over his long time as a shinobi.

Normally, Olbart's judgment would not have budged from the former option. However, Olbart's intuition was speaking to him. Beyond this door, was undoubtedly the meaning in Olbart's infiltration.

He did not know whether it was Sphinx, Moguro, the katanas, or something entirely different, but—

Olbart: "…Havin' stretched out my years, an old man without much time left can't die without gettin' the opportunity ta overthrow the state, good grief."

Spilling that out in a hoarse voice, Olbart decided on whether he would advance or retreat.

If this was the location of the audience chamber, it should have been possible for him to examine its state through the hole in the wall without having to go through the door; so going through the window of the corridor, Olbart traveled along the outer wall to arrive at his destination.

Without having opened the door, he peered into the room—

Olbart: "—Oioi, not even I'd go this far."

Within the completely altered hall, upon seeing the fruit of the Witch's labor, the head honcho of the shinobi, known as the Vicious Old Man, muttered so, unable to hide his discomfort.

2

—The soul of that thing, had already lost sight of its original way of being, having been ripped to shreds.

Called down to the surface via unorthodox means, pitiful souls were held prisoner, made to kneel in order to destroy the Empire that they ought to be subjects of; such was the situation that the undead were placed in.

More or less, a process had been applied to alter the mental structure of the undead to differ from what it was during their lifetime. If not for that, the resurrected dead would likely not all assist in the destruction of the Empire.

The degree to which that process had been applied varied from case to case, but there was a danger that, inverse to the large load being imposed upon the original form and nature in order to make them loyal to orders, they would become unable to perform at their original strength.

Therefore, it was customary for the caster to want to lighten the load in proportion to how strong any given individual was during their lifetime.

In reality, capable individuals such as the Emperor of the Briar and the Magical Sharpshooter would experience a considerable decline in strength due to the load on their minds, so the Witch had shifted gears to allow them some of their free will in order to maintain their strength.

If she had made these powerful individuals into subservient puppets, they would likely be exposed to the disgrace of being unable to display even half of their true strength.

In any case, excluding such exceptionally strong individuals, and Lamia Godwin, who displayed an attitude of taking initiative to cooperate with the Witch, the souls of the undead were cruelly being toyed with.

During their lifetime, no matter what they might have wished for, no matter how noble of a warrior they might have been, no matter what it was that they had cherished, they were all being used in a way that trampled over all of that.

Thus, they were forced to move as the vanguard of the disaster that was bringing destruction to the Empire.

There had been no exceptions among them.

Dispossessed of their free will, becoming beings used and discarded as tools for the sake of battle, their souls would be called down again even were they to repeatedly taste Death, and the earthen vessels would be revived with a new anchor.

Alas, that thing perfectly aligned with the conditions the Witch had established for undead fabrication.

With moderately high competency, being more than a little obsessed with battle, without any impediment to its strength when made into a subservient puppet, it had vehement regret and hatred scorched into it during its final moments—.

For that reason, it ferociously rampaged in a ceaseless discharge of fury.

Torn to shreds, in a form that stretched out its soul as it was in the process of losing its original form, having forgotten that its body was ever in a humanoid form, it had been transformed into a repulsive, grotesque form.

With large, long arms, an exceedingly increased number of legs, and a flimsy torso of skin and bone, even if its appearance had completely changed, it could not escape the situation of being used by the Witch.

Even when killed over and over, its soul would stretch larger, and it would be revived as another monster.

In order to put an end to that, there was no choice but to fulfill the Witch's desires. To grant the Witch's wish, there was no choice but to scorch the Empire to naught as a harbinger of the Great Disaster.

At present, having transformed into an unthinkable appearance, that was the wish of that thing. That was its only desire.

That was its only, that was its, that was, that, desire was, that was its only—.

???: "—The Giant Eye, Izmail."

—. —. ——.

Suddenly, mixed into the sounds of its eerie roar and the fierce battle, that had been audible.

Even though there ought to be many other sounds plunging into its ears, which were no longer in the form of ears, that voice alone had been heard in an awfully clear, strangely firm, and oddly proper manner.

Just what sort of meaning that held, that thing did not know.

It did not—

???: "Izmail!"

???: "E ea."

Suspicion yielded stagnation in its thoughts, and its many arms and legs that were meant to kill all ceased their movement. As if weaving through that opening, a hand reached out, and touching its thin torso, something was stolen away.

It felt as if something had slipped out.

It was not clear if that was something important, or if it was something large. But, the moment that had slipped out, the violent impulses that had filled its body had faded away in one fell swoop.

Hollow, it was hollow. Its insides, had become hollow.

The many reasons to rampage that had been forcibly stuffed into it from outside all flowed back out, and as its interior became hollow, the only thing that remained was what had been there since the outset.

That was, its reason for fighting. That could even be called aspiration or ambition.

Its reason for hastily joining the battle, was for the sake of fighting. The reason it had fought was in order to leave its name in history. The purpose of that was for itself to prove that "itself", the pride of its clan, had existed for certain.

The being known as itself, the Giant Eye, Izmail, the purpose of that —.

Izmail: "Ah, has it been granted…"

Within the golden iris that loomed in a single large black eyeball, the face of that man was clearly reflected.

Those handsome features of black hair and almond eyes, without even the slightest waver in the face of a blade that closed in on his life, imposingly stared at him, and called out to the deformed Izmail.

The apex of the Vollachian Empire, had recognized Izmail.

That was—

Izmail: "—It is the honor of a Sword Wolf, Your Excellency the Emperor."

3

With the arm adjoined to his battleaxe, Jamal held back a blow, while the freedom to move about the streets, leveraging the mobility of their multiplied limbs, was restricted by Subaru and Beatrice with the use of magic.

Meanwhile, the multiple attacks carrying lethal power that were being released, were forcibly knocked away by the leaping and bouncing Spica, narrowly preventing her companions from injury.

And then—

Abel: “—The Giant Eye, Izmail.”

With his sharp gaze fixed on the grotesquely transformed undead, Abel called out his name.

For a moment, Subaru had felt doubtful, but he had decided at the outset that if Abel called out the name of an undead in the Imperial Capital, he would believe it wholeheartedly. In fact, not even once thus far, had Abel made a mistake in naming the undead.

Be that as it may—

Subaru: “Izmail!”

Spica: “E ea.”

In front of their linked hands, Spica thrust forth, swinging around, slamming her palm into the region that seemed to be the chest of the grotesque being called Izmail.

Star Eating, which was neither a punch nor a strike, was invoked, and Subaru and the others held their breath.

Provided the conditions were met, even if his form had deviated from being human, he should meet the same end as the other undead.

As expected, in front of Subaru and the others who were watching with bated breath, Izmail slowly shook his huge body and stared at Abel with his giant, globular golden eye.

And then—

Izmail: “—Ah.”

Leaving final words behind in a soundless voice, all at once, his grotesque, hulking body crumbed to dust.

???: “Ahh, fuck! Unbelievable! What the hell was that monster just now!”

Abel: “A valiant warrior of the Cyclops Tribe, Izmail, the one called the Giant Eye. It is exactly as I called out at the end.”

???: “The Cyclops Tribe, it ain’t just that they’ve got a single eyeball huh, they gotta be such monsters as well eh… Oh, pardon me for the tone.”

With the fight against the undead having concluded, Jamal grumbled as he wiped the blood and sweat off of his chin.

The remark from the man, regretful of the coarse language he had used, forgetting the person he was addressing was Abel, was off the mark.

The person named Izmail, had not possessed such an appearance in the beginning.

Subaru: “Beako.”

Beatrice: “I know, in fact. That person is a victim of the Sacrament of the Immortal King, I suppose. Because of having been resurrected over and over again, he wasn’t in a proper state, in fact.”

Spica: “Uu, au…”

Beatrice gave a curt jerk of her chin, and Spica looked down at her own palms with a downcast expression. While liberally stroking Spica’s head, Subaru inhaled deeply.

He had also encountered Izmail while escaping with Rem and Flop during the decisive battle for the Imperial Capital, but the change in his appearance was so gruesome that it was difficult to look at.

Perhaps because of being blown up and dying in the dust explosion, or because of being resurrected again after that death, he had kept getting more and more deformed.

But, even that never-ending hell was sure to have ceased with Spica’s Star Eating.

Subaru: “Still, you were able to know who the person was despite them looking like that.”

Abel: “Upon being resurrected as an undead, the countenance is affected to some extent. That being the case, the characteristics inherent in each become essential in distinguishing them. That person was an easy-to-understand type.”

Subaru: “Easy-to-understand, huh…”

There were only vestiges of a human form that remained, and because Subaru had already seen them lose their humanoid form and transform into that grotesque appearance, he could match it with the enemy he had encountered in the midst of the evacuation, but that was not the case for Abel.

Despite that, to be able to make such accurate guesses, rather than having a monstrous memory, it would be more fitting to suspect some kind of foul play.

Abel: “It is only natural to be cognizant of the powerful beings in the realm. Whether they become enemies or allies, it is always preferable to have a multitude of bases for decision-making.”

However, the words that followed from Abel were not about simply discerning based on physical characteristics, but rather on his evaluation of other aspects of his opponent.

Subaru: “…”

Upon hearing that, Subaru recalled Izmail’s final moments just before turning to dust.

.

Although he had hardly uttered anything that resembled words, with their meaning undecipherable, it seemed to carry not resentment or bitterness, but rather a solemn emotion.

Perhaps it was reverence toward the Emperor, who had correctly identified his name.

Either way—

Subaru: "—Hk, things are getting intense here."

Subaru murmured, gazing up at the sky, where the incessant rumbling of thunder could be heard.

In Subaru's field of vision, amidst the cloud-covered sky, he could see mountains of ice breaking through, falling towards the Crystal Palace—they were what Emilia had created, which Roswaal had purposed for tactical use.

Seen in the distant sky, there were swirling clouds turned into ominous weapons, thunderous roars reverberating from another direction, and the cityscape was tearing apart, collapsing under a serene sword strike.

At each bastion, it was evident that Subaru's instructed conditions were being upheld, with each engaging in fierce battles.

Beatrice: "That blasted Roswaal is putting on quite a show, I suppose. He's really letting his enthusiasm show too much, in fact."

Subaru: "When I see that, it reminds me that he's a pretty dangerous guy. Olbart-san is sneaking into the castle; he won't crush him, will he?"

Beatrice: "If there's a need to crush it, then he will, I suppose. That's the kind of man he is, in fact."

With a sound akin to the sky splitting, the shattered mountains of ice scattered countless sparkles into the sky.

Roswaal, alongside Medium, confronted the flying dragon rider enemy—one of the most challenging adversaries to deal with, so there was no choice but to trust in Roswaal's victory.

Of course, the existence of the Curse of Thorns and the Cloud Dragon also posed insurmountable threats.

Subaru: "All that's left now is whether Emilia-tan and Tanza can pull through…"

In the midst of the situation in the Imperial Capital, which went beyond being described as fierce battles, Subaru worried about Emilia and Tanza, whose outcomes remained uncertain among the companions he had dispatched throughout the city.

Currently, he believed that he had allocated his forces optimally, but he hadn't clearly determined Emilia's placement, making it somewhat ambiguous. However, given the role she had been entrusted with, it should be the right decision to get her to work together with Tanza.

Subaru: "To be honest, when Izmail showed up, I thought we were in big trouble, but…"

The fact that they had managed to restrain the transformed Izmail on their own, without Emilia as part of their forces, was undoubtedly due to the concerted efforts of everyone.

In particular, Jamal's contribution was significant, and his performance improved visibly with each passing moment. Perhaps he was leveling up at an incredible pace under such dire circumstances.

That in itself was a welcome development. Jamal was extremely reliable, provided you ignored the mental reluctance he had toward his inclusion.

Vincent: "Jamal Aurélie, can you keep going?"

Jamal: "Yes! If Your Excellency commands it, I can take on a hundred or even two hundred more."

Vincent: "So it seems. You all, too, should strive for everything you have."

Subaru: "Dammit, acting all high and mighty just because you're doing a job that no one else can."

Swearing at Abel, who did not participate in the fight and was the only one who looked cool, Subaru then observed Beatrice and Spica.

It was a series of tightrope walks, but battling the undead was always an all-out war of the forces they had against them. As long as the expectation was to proceed with caution, it would not be wise to move forward with someone falling behind.

Beatrice: “Betty has no problem, I suppose.”

Spica: “Aau!”

In response to Subaru’s confirming glance, the two nodded back resolutely. At this rate, Subaru might have been the one physically with the most concerns.

However, since Subaru was still connected to the Pleiades Battalion, it was clear that Abel was the one to be most concerned about regarding physical safety.

In any case—

Subaru: “The state of the battles should be changing soon, and if Halibel-san is doing his part, we should have a way to get closer to the Crystal Palace. And from there—”

He would have liked to acquire information on the other battlefields and have material to consider for this loop as well as how future events unfold.

That was when he was about to call out to his companions.

???: “—I see. This is a strange phenomenon. Observation: Required.”

Suddenly, everyone turned around at the sound of a voice from outside their awareness.

Subaru’s eyes widened, and there was a third party who was not there before —a short, pale-skinned undead figure crouched down, checking the dust on the ground with their fingers.

A familiar undead with pink hair was playing with the dust of the destroyed “Star Eaten” Izmail—

Subaru: "—Hk, you."

???: "From what it would appear, you have not directly interfered with the core bug. The bug has lost its parasitic target and died… or lost its soul? The deprivation, hijacking, and reclamation… are very interesting."

The one who said this, licking the dust that adhered to her fingertips with her tongue as a confirmation, was a being that looked exactly like one of Subaru's companion's relatives but whose eyes bore no semblance of warmth —it was Sphinx.

The mastermind of the Great Disaster, the very goal of this final battle, emerged here.

Subaru: "…"

Subaru's consciousness momentarily went blank at the sight of her imposing arrival.

The presence of the Curse of Thorns and the Magical Sharpshooter made it difficult for Subaru and his companions, with their trump card, Spica, to confront Sphinx, who was supposed to be in the Crystal Palace. Therefore, Olbart, who was good at stealth, was sent in as a scout, and Subaru and his group hoped to continue hunting undead until the way was clear to reduce their enemy's strength and gain an advantage in the coming decisive battle.

But to think that assumption could be so easily undermined—

Subaru: "—No."

Subaru concealed his agitation by considering this a chance, and held Beatrice's hand tightly. Glancing at Beatrice, Subaru then joined hands with a surprised Spica.

In front of him was Sphinx, the mastermind behind the Great Disaster.

And, like the other undead, she had been revived with the power of the Sacrament of the Immortal King, so Spica's Star Eating should be effective against her. Being undead would give her the advantage of Escape by Death, but at the same time, she had one unavoidable weakness: Spica.

Take away that, the chance of resurrection, and the battle would be over.

It would be possible to end the fight without knowledge of the opponent's intentions or aims.

And so—

Subaru: "Sphin…"

Sphinx: "The requirement is a match between the Name and the Soul of the target. It is surprising that you even made use of the Authority of Gluttony. Countermeasures: Required."

Subaru: "—Hk."

Sphinx's quiet analysis crushed any preemptive action.

Subaru gasped at the fact that Sphinx had just mentioned the Authority of Gluttony and even recognized Spica's Star Eating at a glance.

Even though his intentions were seen through, he was forgetting the strength of the Authority, which, by simply hitting the target, would make her unable to escape.

Therefore, he had to pay the price for it.

???: "—You idiot!"

And like that, a foul-mouthed voice had cut between Subaru and Sphinx, pushing him away.

Sphinx held up one slender finger, pointing its tip toward Subaru and his companions. Before the ray of white heat emitted from that fingertip could penetrate Subaru and Spica's heads, a man jumped in.

Jamal's sword was gouged out in the shape of the heat ray that he could not block, and it pierced through the torso of the daredevilish man; the fresh scent of scorched blood hit upon Subaru's nostrils very, very strongly.

Chapter 59:
Sphinx

1

—Sphinx was a failed result of the Witch of Greed's research into immortality.

With the young girl who sacrificed herself to become the core for the creation of the miniature garden known as the Sanctuary—with Ryuzu Meyer's body as the foundation, she was a replicant constructed with a Mana body using the same structure as a Spirit.

The Witch had thought that if a pre-existing soul could be adhered to the empty life of the replicant, pseudo-immortality by means of soul-duplication could thus be achieved.

However, this prospect easily crumbled before the fact that the size and form of the soul and the vessel of life individually differed.

The soul of the Witch of Greed could not be contained within the replicant of Ryuzu Meyer.

The result born from this outright mishap, was the failure of the Witch of Greed, an existence that would mark the world with many misfortunes for years to come, Sphinx.

That being, bestowed the name of an impure monster, "Sphinx," was about to be disposed of due to its unsuitability for its original purpose, but by a twist of fate, it survived.

And, just like how many other artificial lives would do so, Sphinx also commenced work in order to fulfill the purpose of her creation.

The purpose for which the artificial Witch was created—in order to be perfected as the Witch of Greed, Sphinx would go on to pile up many calamities.

2

Jamal: “—You idiot!”

And then, with blood pouring from his mouth as he cursed, Jamal fell to the ground.

The white light that was fired was supposed to have pierced the heads of Subaru and the others. Because of that, Jamal received a blow at a position around that of a child’s head as he protected them, but even so, it was still undoubtedly a serious wound that had pierced one side of his torso.

Subaru: “Jamal—!”

Sphinx: “The presumed target has escaped harm? Although, it falls into the scope of what is able to be handled.”

Subaru responded after having been promptly pushed away and protected. Ignoring that response, Sphinx, who was responsible for that attack, was unconcerned with the fact that it had been unsuccessful.

Subaru gnashed his molars at the words of the leader of the undead who spoke in a calm and apathetic manner.

It would have been difficult for Jamal to continue fighting after having collapsed; not to mention that his life would be in danger if not treated immediately.

Beatrice: “Subaru! Stay focused on what’s in front of you, in fact!”

Subaru: “—Hk.”

That instant, Beatrice called out in a sharp voice as she pulled Subaru’s arm.

Shifting his gaze away from Jamal at that call, Subaru looked at Sphinx. Likewise, Beatrice, Spica, and Abel also trained their gaze on her.

The three were on high alert, their attention focused on their enemy, Sphinx.

Jamal’s treatment would have to be postponed until later.

That was right. Absolutely, that was right.

But even so—

Sphinx: “I had thought you to be the foreign entity that would derail my plans, but perhaps I was mistaken?”

Even if he averted his gaze, Subaru was unable to remove his attention from the fallen Jamal, and looking at him, Sphinx tilted her head and spoke. Subaru’s mind fell into increasing disarray as he looked into those undead golden eyes.

Beatrice: “—Hk, let’s work together, I suppose, Spica!”

Spica: “Aau!”

Beatrice and Spica moved in unison in Subaru’s stead.

At Beatrice’s call, Spica, her long blonde hair fluttering, flew towards Sphinx. As Spica leaped, Beatrice unleashed amethyst crystal arrows to the left, right, and rear of the stock-still Sphinx, blocking her escape route and providing cover.

As the coordination of the two blocked Sphinx on all sides, there was nothing she could do—such was not the case.

Sphinx: “El Jiwald.”

Contrary to the meagerness of the incantation, the effect of subsequent destruction was tremendous.

In response to the looming threat, Sphinx opened both of her empty hands, and, just as she had done when she had attacked Jamal earlier, she emitted white rays of heat, this time from the fingers of her left and right hands.

However, this time, it was not a momentary beam of heat like that of a ray gun, but a sword of light that continued to be projected.

Wielding ten blades of light upon her ten fingers, blades with a long range larger than around half a greatsword, Sphinx dominated the space around her with attacks that sliced in all directions.

Bathed in the white light, each one of Beatrice's deployed purple arrows were sliced apart, and Spica, who had jumped forward towards her, was also assailed by their fury.

Spica: "—Uu!"

Just before the white light could cut Spica's thin body in two, she disappeared from everyone's vision.

She had teleported. Having activated her short-range teleport, Spica escaped fromSphinx's line of fire, emerging on top of the ruins of a building that was just off the street.

And then, as if to follow Spica, Subaru and Beatrice, who were in the white lights's line of fire, were—

Vincent: "Fool, have you been befuddled by the sight of the enemy ringleader?"

With a bitter remark, holding down the heads of Subaru and Beatrice, forcing them to crouch down in place, was Abel.

Vincent: "We cannot expect Jamal Aurélie to get back up. Your contribution shall be essential."

Beatrice: "N-No need to tell us that when we already know, in fact! You'll be rewarded for your quick thinking just now with our performance, so you better watch, I suppose!"

Beatrice, who had been violently saved, puffed out her cheeks and brushed Abel off as she stood back up.

Snorting his nose at Beatrice's stouthearted rebuttal, Abel, who had also gotten back up, then looked down at Subaru, who was still lying on the ground, and,

Vincent: "What is the matter? Your partner is in high spirits, but you, however—"

Do not stand? Abel might have been trying to utter those provocative words.

But, he quickly broke off his speech, as if sensing something was wrong, and then frowned his shapely eyebrows.

Beatrice: “Subaru?”

Beatrice, beside him, blinked her eyes at the same strange occurrence as Abel.

Subaru: “…”

Subaru still remained lying face down at the feet of Beatrice and Abel. Spica, who had teleported to a distant position, also noticed, and bewilderment emerged in her eyes.

In the spur of the moment, the girls probably had no idea as to what had just happened.

Therefore, in the stead of Beatrice, Spica, and Abel, who could not comprehend the events unfolding before their eyes, it was ironically their enemy, Sphinx, who was the first to realize what had happened to Subaru.

Sphinx, with the pale face of an undead which had a considerable insufficiency to express emotions, but still with bewilderment and doubt in her eyes at having understood that,

Sphinx: “…For what reason, did you ingest poison? Explanation: Required.”

Vincent: “—Hk, You!”

Immediately after Sphinx’s question, Abel’s expression changed, and he hoisted Subaru up by the collar. It was a violent act, however, Subaru did not voice any complaints.

The reason was that Subaru had already broken the package of poison behind his molar, and he was at the height of suffering through the hellish agony that led to Death.

Beatrice: “NOOOO! SUBARU?! SUBARU?!”

Spica: “UAU—?!”

Upon seeing the figure of Subaru, convulsing as blood frothed at his mouth, Beatrice and Spica screamed.

Beatrice tried to cling to the trembling Subaru, but Abel pushed the girl away, inserted his finger in Subaru’s mouth, and as he pulled out the packaged drug, his expression grew furious.

Vincent: “You, what is the meaning of this?! Have you lost your mind?!”

Subaru: “Bububu, bubububu…”

Vincent: “All that boasting about fighting against fate, yet this is what you do?!”

Abel’s enraged voice, Beatrice’s tearful cry, Spica’s sorrowful voice as she desperately jumped back towards him, amidst the sense of loss of his whole body slowly melting, Subaru heard them all.

To the angered voice, to the crying voice, to the despairing voice, he could not answer with words.

Even so, there was sufficient meaning in this. It was a necessary measure. —This was the best course of action.

In order, to arrive, at a future, in which, nobody, would die, this was, the best, the best best best best best, possible, method.

Subaru: “Bubu, bu.”

Sphinx: “Explanation: Required.”

With that information unable to be transmitted to anyone, with the Witch’s question remaining unresolved, his breath ran out.

Natsuki Subaru’s life came to an end. —Again, just as it had already done so many times in this final battle.

3

—The first few years of Sphinx's journey, which ought to be called a quest, were a major difficulty.

The body of Ryuzu Meyer, which served as the basis of the replicant, lacked the aptitude for surviving in this harsh world; her life was often threatened by extremely bad weather, changes in temperature, and sometimes by Witchbeasts or malicious humans, and lacking the means to counteract that, there had been far too many deficiencies at the time this receptacle had been selected.

Since concepts such as growth and training were also meaningless for a Mana body, she could not even hope for things to improve.

Though it was possible to acquire knowledge and skills that were not dependent on the body, there would be many opportunities for her life to be threatened along the path to learning them, so those days were always accompanied by danger.

In addition, the base model of Ryuzu Meyer was a half-elf, and since Sphinx also inherited those physical features, she was often exposed to persecution and odd looks.

However, she was hesitant to make any large alterations to the external features of the original form.

Those were the first things that had been given to Sphinx, and she feared that if she altered the preconditions too much, she would become unable to fulfill her own purpose of creation.

Therefore, Sphinx did not consider the idea of disguising herself to be acceptable, and instead sought a different way to survive.

As long as she could remain alive, there were times when she had even degraded herself to being a spectacle and a slave. And since the appearance of Ryuzu Meyer was a refined one, there was also a time when she had been the servant of a lavish master.

Greedy to know things, greedy to learn things, Sphinx had made her abilities useful no matter where she was.

Once she understood just how good her memory was, utility value was born in a variety of situations. In the process of doing so, Sphinx realized that it was a way to protect herself.

In order to travel the world with a weak body, lacking the power to survive, it was best to create value for oneself, to offer it to those who sought it, and to gain their protection.

By doing so, Sphinx chose the means of continuing to live under the umbrella of others, until she was able to protect herself on her own.

Those days lasted for approximately one hundred and fifty years.

4

—What was the most common cause of death for Natsuki Subaru since he was summoned to this other world?

Were he to be asked this question, Subaru would be able to confidently answer, “Suicide by poison”.

At the Crimson Lapis Castle of the Demon City of Chaosflame, he had experienced a considerable amount of Deaths in the game of tag against Olbart, but so long as the cause of the death was not labeled “Olbart”, the ways he had died there were of various sorts.

Excluding exceptions like those eleven seconds of despair, the record for the most was undoubtedly held by poison.

It was a terribly disgraceful thing to mention, but it could even be said that the person who had killed Subaru the most in this other world was Old Man Null, who had concocted the poison.

In any case, the poison that he had used so frequently during his lone struggle to escape the Gladiator Island Ginunhive with zero casualties—in order to form the Pleiades Battalion, still remained prepared within Subaru’s mouth, even now.

Subaru: “—I’m gonna get everyone back home, safe and sound.”

That, was the absolute condition that Subaru had established as he took on this final battle for the Imperial Capital, and it was one on which he would not compromise.

Originally, he had carried that attitude and mindset even before he had been sent to the Empire and had had his body shrunk, but amidst his days in the Empire up until now, his resolve had been strengthened even further.

That was a large part of the reason for Subaru's rebellious spirit towards the Vollachian Empire, which was trying to impose the conclusion known as Death upon them by every means possible.

If the Empire forced Death upon them, he would reject it, no matter what it took.

For that purpose, he would do absolutely everything in his power.

No matter how many times, how many tens of times, how many hundreds of times it took, even if it meant he needed to go through the anguish of hell, no matter what.

Subaru: "—Gah, geuhh!!"

His vision flickering bright red, Subaru's throat screamed in agony as if all of his blood, flesh, and bone, every individual blood vessel, and every single cell in his body had been put through a blender.

But, the lethal pain that he had experienced right up to the moment of his death, as well as the cries and angry voices that caused Subaru even more suffering than that pain, vanished into the beyond. —This was Return by Death.

Return by Death had been activated via the suicide by poison, and Natsuki Subaru turned back the clock.

At that moment, Subaru was about to shift his state of awareness back to what ought to have been the scene right after he had washed his face at the final Imperial Soldier encampment before he had entered the Imperial Capital—

Jamal: "—You idiot!"

Subaru: "…"

He felt the sensation of being shoved in the chest, and he heard the sound of cursing; Subaru was clearly being shown that the restart point for Return by Death had been updated.

Sphinx: "The presumed target has escaped harm? Although, it falls into the scope of what is able to be handled."

Spilling blood as he cursed, Jamal collapsed, with the blade of the sword in his hand having a round hole gouged into it. In the midst of this scene, the cold, indifferent voice of the perpetrator, Sphinx, analyzed the situation.

Both this scene and those words were things that he had seen and heard only a few dozen seconds ago.

Beatrice: "Subaru! Stay focused on what's in front of you, in fact!"

Subaru: "—Hk."

Beatrice called out sharply to Subaru, whose thoughts were in disarray due to his understanding and grasp on the current reality.

Her voice shattered the contents of his head, and the shock from pain of the previous poisoning and the update of the restart point slipped away with an exhale. He adapted to the new situation before him.

The time to be dumbfounded, he had naught.

There was far too much that could be lost in that period.

—The checkpoint of Return by Death had been updated.

What this meant, was that within this decisive final battle for the Imperial Capital, which had now already begun, the members of the "Rescue from Destruction Squad" assigned to each bastion could no longer be rearranged.

As it was, he believed that the best possible personnel had been deployed to the best possible battlefields.

But, it was frustrating that he could not fully confirm the conditions that would cause the minimum damage. In particular, the fact that he had yet to verify the result of having paired Emilia and Tanza together, was a major psychological blow.

Of course, the safety of the other members was an inexhaustible source of his anxiety and worry, but—

Sphinx: “I had thought you to be the foreign entity that would derail my plans, but perhaps I was mistaken?”

As Sphinx tilted her head and posed a question, Subaru looked at the undead in front of him.

The building blocks he had assembled within his head until here, crumbled noisily.

The building blocks of thought that he had built up through trial and error was something that he had aimed to make far more perfect when viewed from a variety of angles. They crumbled away without leaving a trace. —No, they were demolished.

Beside the building blocks that he had mentally built up, the Natsuki Subaru within his mind appeared, and violently tearing it down, he thoroughly destroyed it all until not a single part remained.

Until it became impossible to tell what the original form of those blocks were, until there would be nothing one could do about it even if it concerned them, he demolished, demolished, demolished, demoled, relentlessly demolished.

Then, he would completely forget about those building blocks, to which nothing more could possibly be done.

Only after doing so, could Natsuki Subaru finally set about a new sequence of trial and error.

Subaru: “—Not in the slightest.”

After a beat that felt to be long, as Subaru held both Beatrice and Spica’s hands, just like Abel as he narrowed his sable eyes, he stared down Sphinx as he gave his answer.

He had yet to discover a way to break through this deadlock. Nor did he know if his comrades were safe. Jamal was still continuing to bleed out.

His determination to successfully deal with all of that, had not altered in the slightest.

He would defeat the Witch, Sphinx, and put an end to this Great Disaster.

For that reason—

Subaru: “I, am the one who’s gonna derail your plans, the natural enemy of disaster.”

5

—Sphinx was now known as a Witch, but for the first few hundred years after her creation, she was not equipped with power that was appropriate for such a designation.

This, too, was a revelation that came about with the creation of Sphinx, but there was a correlation between “soul” and “receptacle”, and if dissonance existed between the two, it would serve as a significant flaw that stood in the way.

By nature, receptacles were optimized to match their souls.

In short, the techniques and abilities of the Witch of Greed could only be adequately wielded by the body of the Witch of Greed. As a being with the incomplete soul of the Witch of Greed filling the receptacle of Ryuzu Meyer, Sphinx had been hindered from fulfilling the purpose of her creation ever since the very moment of her genesis.

As a result, it had taken one hundred and fifty years for Sphinx to attain power befitting her designation as a Witch.

For Sphinx, who harbored the flaw of discrepancy between receptacle and soul, things like how to walk, how to breathe, and even how to beat her heart had required her to exert effort akin to relearning it anew.

To become a magician, it would take her nearly one hundred times longer than what it would take for someone of average ability.

Furthermore, in this era, for Sphinx to fulfill the purpose of her creation, there were far too many factors that stood as obstacles to her activities.

Being treated as a half-elf due to her physical features, she was used as a scapegoat for the grievances and resentments towards the epitome of Witches, the Witch of Envy.

Suspecting the existence of Sphinx, the product of the Witch of Greed's research, the person who claimed to be her disciple pursued her tenaciously.

While there were others as well, these were the two primary reasons that prevented her from staying in one place, forcing numerous setbacks in Sphinx's quest to fulfill the purpose of her creation.

At the end of those days, when she first succeeded in casting magic on her own, seeing the small flame which flickered at her fingertips, Sphinx recalled feeling immense disappointment.

—Was this the extent of magic that the one who was supposed to succeed the Witch of Greed could use?

6

Jamal: "—You idiot!"

And, with blood spilling from his lips as he spat out curses, once again Jamal collapsed.

He had been pushed away by Jamal, and the moment he stepped back with Beatrice and Spica, who were holding his hands, Subaru confirmed the re-activation of Return by Death.

Sphinx: "The presumed target has escaped harm? Although, it falls into the scope of what is able to be handled."

As she missed her target, Sphinx did not worry too much over the result differing from her expectation.

The objective of the Witch was to eliminate Subaru and his companions who were present here. In that sense, taking down Jamal, who was counted among their fighting strength, was deemed sufficient as the first strike.

But—

Beatrice: “Subaru! Stay focused on what’s in front of you…”

Subaru: “Beatrice! Heal Jamal!”

Beatrice: “—Hk, understood, in fact!”

Anticipating Beatrice as she raised her voice, Subaru instructed her to heal Jamal. Hearing that, Beatrice’s eyes widened, and she immediately rushed to Jamal’s side.

Receiving Beatrice’s swift response, Subaru exchanged a glance with Spica, who was holding his opposite hand,

Subaru: “Spica, I’m counting on you!”

Spica: “Aa~, uu!”

Vigorously, Spica leaped towards Sphinx like a bouncing rubber ball.

In order to intercept Spica, Sphinx would extend ten beams of white light from her fingertips. —Therefore, before that could happen, Subaru picked up the sword that Jamal had dropped, and hurled it at her.

Sphinx: “El Jiwald.”

Jamal’s sword, spinning vertically, was cut down by the rays of heat that Sphinx wielded.

The sword was sliced into six equal parts in mid-air by the swords of light, but it successfully bought enough time for Spica to teleport. Without this support, Spica’s teleportation would not have made it in time.

Spica: “—Uu!”

As Spica gave a short howl, her figure teleported on the debris at the side of the street.

And, the rays of heat that were originally aimed at Spica, and Subaru, who was present behind her, had been dodged as an arm violently reached out from behind him, violently pushing him down.

Having lunged forward, Abel’s hand grabbed him by the back of his head, and forcefully pushed him down.

Vincent: “Fool, have you been befuddled by the sight of the enemy ringleader?”

Subaru: “You’re an Emperor who has no other ideas but to instigate stuff no matter what the pattern is…!”

Placing his hands on the ground to avoid being crushed, Subaru quickly stood back up and complained about Abel’s loathsome words.

Without saying anything in response to Subaru’s rebuttal, as Abel maintained vigilance on Sphinx,

Vincent: “We cannot expect Jamal Aurélie to get back up. We ought to ignore him.”

Subaru: “I don’t agree in the slightest. He’s got a little sister waiting for him to return home.”

Vincent: “His bereaved family shall be granted sufficient compensation.”

Subaru: “When one’s family member dies, nothing can be done to fill the hole left in their heart.”

With her hands over the wounded Jamal, Beatrice began to cast healing magic on his wounds.

Though it was frustrating, it was as Abel said. Even with the maximum effect of Beatrice's skilled healing magic, the chances of Jamal returning to this fight were close to zero.

But, if they could save Jamal from the brink of death here, it would erase one of Subaru's worries.

That held immense psychological significance in advancing the battle against Sphinx.

Therefore—

Subaru: "Sphinx! I'm the one who's gonna kill you!"

Sphinx: "…"

Sphinx, who had been glancing around to survey the situation, looked at Subaru upon his straightforward declaration.

If her attention were to shift away from Beatrice and the others towards Subaru, then it would be a success.

Subaru: "As an undead, you may think that you've overcome Death, but that'd be a huge misunderstanding and a downright lie. Nobody can live forever. There are no exceptions."

Sphinx: "…That is certainly persuasive. After all, it is a fact that you are painting over my Sacrament of the Immortal King, and are meddling with the souls of the dead. I suppose that I would be no exception. Only…"

Subaru: "Only?"

Sphinx: "—No, there is no particular need to say it. Verification: Required."

In response to Subaru's daring provocation, Sphinx shook her head slowly. However, Subaru's cheeks stiffened at Sphinx's response.

The reason for that was not because there had been anything troublesome about Sphinx's response.

It was because, while giving such a response, Sphinx slightly relaxed her lips, and smiled.

Subaru: "…Though, it's not like Ryuzu-san was ever very expressive either."

The fact that she had been resurrected as an undead likely contributed to it, but Sphinx's smile gave an impression of being even more emotionally unexpressive than Ryuzu was—Subaru felt a cold sense of dread at that.

This feeling of dread, it seemed to stem from something more profound and fundamental than mere disgust at the being of a lovely appearance that had been turned into an undead.

And, it became even more clear with Sphinx's next words.

Sphinx: "For one matter, there was Confirmation: Required. —You over there, is it correct to believe that you are Emperor Vincent Vollachia?"

Next, it was Abel, at his side, to whom Sphinx turned the brunt of her words.

Subaru raised an eyebrow as the conversation's focus unexpectedly shifted towards Abel. Given his position, it was natural for Abel to become the center of attention, but Subaru had not expected Sphinx to take notice of him here.

As someone lacking combat prowess, there was no reason to be wary of Abel, given the circumstances.

Sphinx: "Would that be alright? Response: Required."

Vincent: "To a lowly terrorist like you, I have no intention of falsifying my name or my position. —Without a shred of doubt, I am Vincent Vollachia, the Emperor of this Empire."

Sphinx: "Your answer is appreciated. Now, there was another matter for which, Confirmation: Required."

Despite Abel fixing his intimidating gaze upon her, Sphinx fearlessly continued to speak.

Perhaps because he was aware of the Great Disaster destroying the Empire, Subaru was at a loss as to how they would deal with Sphinx thereafter, who was confronting the Vollachian Emperor, Abel.

If they could prolong the conversation even slightly, it would provide Beatrice more time to heal Jamal's injuries.

Recognizing the need to take advantage of this opportunity, Subaru refrained from interrupting their conversation.

Thereupon—

Vincent: "I shan't promise any answer. Nevertheless, you may speak."

Sphinx: "—Priscilla Barielle, or perhaps Prisca Benedict."

Subaru: "…Huh?"

Subaru was taken aback by the unexpected and sudden mention of Priscilla's name.

Having participated in the decisive battle for the Imperial Capital, amidst the retreat that had begun due to the emergence of the Great Disaster, Priscilla's whereabouts had become unknown. As both her and Yorna had gone missing, their safety had been confirmed by ascertaining the continuation of the Soul Marriage Technique, which Priscilla could also use for some reason.

The Soul Marriage Technique that Yorna had cast upon Tanza and the residents of Chaosflame, and that Priscilla had cast upon Schult, were proof that they were still alive.

Of course, this was about Yorna, one of the Nine Divine Generals, and that Priscilla.

Given the circumstances of how Al had remained in the Imperial Capital for the purpose of rescuing her, he naturally assumed that she had survived tenaciously, but from the mouth of Sphinx, he did not expect her name to be brought up, especially in the form of a question to Abel.

Certainly, Priscilla had been involved in the fray since the Fortress City of Guaral, indicating that she had some connection to the Vollachian Empire and Abel. Due to the profound atmosphere, one might guess that there was trouble involving the husbands of Priscilla's past.

That was—

Subaru: "…"

At the mention of the relationship between Abel and Priscilla, which Subaru had not ascertained, he briefly glanced over at Abel, who had been mentioned, and Subaru noticed him narrowing his black eyes.

Subaru knew that this subtle reaction was actually proof of Abel's considerable agitation.

Though it was uncertain whether she had noticed this, Sphinx faced the silent Emperor—

Sphinx: "Is it correct to believe that you are her brother? Conviction: Required."

Thus, she continued with a bombshell that betrayed all of Subaru's expectations.

7

—Even though she had become capable of using magic by herself, there was no sudden change in Sphinx's way of life.

By successfully invoking magic once, she was able to stabilize the method of utilizing the gate of Ryuzu Meyer's Mana-based body, and succeeded in reproducing the majority of magic grasped by the Witch of Greed's soul.

However, that did not change the dangerous position that Sphinx was placed in, and as always, she kept out of sight, continuing her days of not staying in a single place in order to avoid threats.

Only, compared to before, it had become easier to stay out of sight, and to escape threats.

Thanks to that, after one hundred and fifty years had passed since her birth, Sphinx could finally get started on her investigation to replicate the Witch of Greed, the purpose of her creation.

—The first hundred years, she devoted her time to learning about the Witch of Greed.

Despite her foundation being that of the same soul as the Witch of Greed, there were far too many things that Sphinx had lost from the Witch of Greed's soul, so the end goal she was supposed to be aiming for had become blurred.

So, in order to learn about the Witch of Greed who had already been dead for a long time, she set out on a journey to follow the legends and books in various places, but there was an organization known as the Witch Cult that was attempting to erase the "Witches" from history—that did not seem to be the original objective of its founding, but their activities served as hindrances, so results were very slow to come by.

As a result, changing the course of action, which had seen no progress over a hundred years, Sphinx searched for a different method.

—For the next hundred years, she aimed to fill in the gaps of the Witch of Greed within herself.

Due to the fact that she had gone around the world for a hundred years, and had made essentially no progress, Sphinx thought that perhaps the greatest clue to learning about the Witch of Greed was herself, who possessed the same soul.

Unsuccessful in replicating the Witch of Greed, Sphinx had been born an insufficient failure.

If she were to fill in the missing parts of her soul, restoring it to its original form, would that not then be fulfilling the purpose of her creation, to replicate the Witch of Greed?

—However, after spending a hundred years on this venture as well, it became apparent that it was infeasible, so she was at a standstill.

There was a development in her search for resources in order to learn about the Witch of Greed, which she had not abandoned, even if she had altered her course of action, and this development caused Sphinx to lose sight of the mountain top she ought to be aiming for.

It seemed like the Witch of Greed was the possessor of an awfully complex human nature.

According to the resource she had discovered, the Witch of Greed exchanged words with many people, and granted them the knowledge or wisdom they desired, which, for better or for worse, often interfered with history.

On the other hand, there was also the figure of the Witch of Greed within Sphinx's vague memories, and this version avoided contact with people as much as possible, and seldom involved herself with the lives of others.

Those conflicting images of the Witch of Greed, birthed a hesitation in Sphinx's investigation.

By this point, over three hundred years had already passed since the birth of Sphinx, and with a desire to progress her investigation in order to fulfill the purpose of her creation, Sphinx approached a decision once again.

And then, Sphinx decided. —She would make a major alteration in the methods she had been using up until now.

8

—Abel and Priscilla were brother and sister.

It was an impactful fact brought about by Sphinx; however, it tied the seeds already within Subaru together in a way that made sense, and resolved many of the doubts he had harbored.

The fact that Priscilla had intervened in the Empire's civil war, and the fact that she knew several people from the Empire starting with Serena. Sometimes, she would have conversations that insinuated that she had a significant history concerning the Empire, and she would occasionally act in a way that seemed like she had an unusual relationship with Abel.

And, just like Abel, she had the same bizarrely arrogant and self-important personality.

He fathomed Abel's self-importance as being due to the fact that he was Emperor.

So then, just why did Priscilla act so self-important? The solution to that answer was because she was also part of the Imperial Family.

—Nay. It was that she used to be part of the Imperial Family.

Subaru: "To decide on who becomes Emperor, wasn't there that crazy rule about all the siblings needing to fight to the death?"

Vincent: "I have no intention of debating the ethics of the structure of the Imperial Selection Ceremony with you."

Subaru: "With or without a debate, the moment you started acting as Emperor and allowed Priscilla to live, I generally figured out how you two siblings thought about that rule."

The more he heard about the blood relation between Abel and Priscilla, the more he could not help but accept it, but the more he learned about that current situation, the more he understood how impossible it was for the Empire.

Originally, the rule was that everyone in the Vollachian Empire who possessed the right to succeed the Imperial Throne would fight to the death, and until only one final person remained, the Emperor would not be decided. —Abel was in violation of this rule.

In other words, Abel and Priscilla had conspired, and their current positions were ones that went against the Imperial Selection Ceremony.

Vincent: "We did not conspire. I made a decision, and I carried it out. With the death of Prisca, only Priscilla remained. That is the entirety of the matter.”

Subaru: “That’s all… ah?! So doesn’t that mean Priscilla was in a position that absolutely should have never returned to the Empire?!”

Vincent: “Are you able to imagine the extent of worry I experienced at the Fortress City? To begin with, if we are on the subject, that has been the case ever since I heard about her becoming a candidate for the Kingdom’s Royal Selection.”

Subaru: “As unusual as this is, I actually sympathize with you on that…”

As an outsider, Subaru could not imagine this, but in order to have his sister Priscilla escape, Abel ought to have crossed an equally dangerous bridge. Surely even now, if this information were to be leaked outside, it would be a bombshell that would even threaten Abel’s position as Emperor.

For that sister, whom he had gone through so much trouble to let flee, to be nominated as a candidate for the next King of the neighboring country in the short time he had taken his eyes off her, and then to come back and fight in the Empire’s civil war predicament as a foreign player, Abel must have been fighting against a hellish stomach ache behind the oni mask that almost seemed like a practical joke.

Anyhow—

Subaru: “Regardless of you two being siblings, the news that Sphinx has an interest in Priscilla is not bad at all. If Priscilla is being kept alive in the Crystal Palace, then that’s also corroborated by the Soul Marriage Technique.”

Vincent: “—. Though, I judge that the relationship between Priscilla and this damned Witch cannot be declared an amiable one.”

Subaru: “You may not be aware of this, but you two siblings are pretty hard to get along with, so you better fix that. That’s even the case with your allies, so isn’t it a bit too excessive for your enemies?”

Vincent: “Such disrespect; even if I happen to overlook it, that shall not be the case with Priscilla.”

As soon as the information about them being brother and sister was revealed, Abel did not hesitate to skip over the topic of their blood ties.

In reality, it was true that he was more scared of angering Priscilla, who would unrelentingly cut down people whom she judged to be disagreeable, than he was of angering Abel, who did not possess the strength to strike down insolent individuals.

Subaru: “Speaking of cutting down, that sword that Priscilla is always swinging around—”

Vincent: “—The Yang Sword Vollachia.”

He had never gotten a good look at it up close, but he understood that the thing Priscilla often suddenly unsheathed from the air was a treasured sword that concealed tremendous power.

When Subaru brought up that topic, Abel gave the best possible answer.

Subaru: “…If I’m not mistaken, is that Yang Sword something that gets passed down generation to generation in the Empire?”

Vincent: “Indeed.”

Subaru: “Then, isn’t it bad for her to wield it in the first place before her identity is hidden or not?!”

Vincent: “—. Indeed.”

As Abel responded in a stiff voice, Subaru began to get a headache over Priscilla’s audacious behavior.

That was likely so. —As a former member of the Vollachian Imperial Family, the fact that she was alive was a bombshell that could pose quite a threat to the reign of the Emperor, and yet she boldly stood at center stage as a Royal Selection Candidate of the Kingdom, and on top of that, lacked caution as she often wielded the treasured sword of Imperial origin.

It was no wonder that whenever somebody who knew Priscilla before appeared, they would make moves that suggested they knew of her past. It was because the person in question had not kept anything hidden at all.

Subaru: “Is she like Emilia-tan, who thought she could get by with calling herself Emily…”

That too, was because Emilia was a charming, natural airhead, a beautiful girl without peer, but in Priscilla’s case, since she ought to have been fully aware of her own position, it was just her poor personality.

In any case—

Subaru: “In truth, aren’t you the one who’s supposed to have the Yang Sword?”

Vincent: “…”

At Subaru’s question, Abel maintained his silence.

If that were incorrect, Abel would have responded so with eloquent reasoning. The fact that he did not do so, meant that Subaru ought to think such was the case.

That was why—

9

Jamal: “—You idiot!”

Now that he thought about it, just who was that cursing actually directed towards?

Was it towards Subaru and the two girls, whom he had suddenly jumped in to protect, or was it perhaps Sphinx, who had mercilessly aimed for the children? —Or was it towards Jamal himself, who had reduced his own options for the following events?

Of course, it would have been one of the former options, as there was no way it was the final possibility.

Certainly, from Subaru's perspective, using Return by Death to try and break the deadlock, Jamal's act of protecting Subaru and the two girls was an interference that held no meaning.

If Jamal had not protected him, Sphinx's surprise attack would have evaporated Subaru's head, and Return by Death would have activated, which would have allowed him to commence his response from an earlier state.

Where that would have been the same as now, after contact had been made with Sphinx, or if it would have been from an earlier point, he did not know.

Only, in that case, Jamal would not have been injured, which would have expanded the possibilities for strategy in a situation in which a battle against Sphinx was unavoidable.

As a result, when Jamal collapsed due to the magic, Jamal was subtracted from the fighting strength of Subaru's group, and Beatrice was restrained to using healing magic in order to save him from the verge of death.

Looking at just the events that had occurred, Jamal's conduct had actually been a burden on Subaru's group.

However—

Subaru: "…"

Taking pride in the fact that he was a Sword Wolf, motivated to cut open a future for his sister with his sword, Jamal had sacrificed himself to protect Subaru and the two girls; Subaru would not let that action be meaningless.

After all, lives, instincts, and hearts were not those kinds of things.

Sphinx: "The presumed target has escaped harm? Although—"

Subaru: “You made me eat your shoe! But, now we’re even!”

Sphinx: “…”

Missing her target due to the collapsed Jamal, Sphinx was about to start saying something. Painting over the words of the Witch, Subaru spoke to Jamal in a loud voice.

Subaru did not know whether that loud voice of his had reached Jamal or not.

But, at the camp site immediately after he had been sent off to the Vollachian Empire, Subaru had received some terribly cruel treatment from Jamal. Just now, he forgave that. —Jamal, too, was unmistakably one of his comrades.

Subaru: “Beatrice! Heal Jamal!”

Beatrice: “—Hk, understood, in fact!”

At Subaru’s subsequent direction, Beatrice quickly hastened to Jamal. Feeling the sensation of her slender fingers drifting away, Subaru pulled Spica, who was holding the opposite hand towards himself,

Subaru: “Spica, I’m counting on you!”

Spica: “Aa~, uu!”

With an expression brimming with motivation, Spica kicked off the ground, and with the vigor of a bouncing rubber ball, she leapt towards Sphinx.

Spica jumped right towards her, causing her long, blonde hair to flutter, and Sphinx ignored the fact that her speech had been canceled, and raised both of her hands.

She created ten swords of light—thereupon, Subaru threw one of Jamal’s swords.

Sphinx: “El Jiwald.”

Spica: "—Uu!"

The white light melted Jamal's rotating sword, and also aimed for Spica, who was present beyond it. But, before they could reach her, Spica's form teleported to the side of the street. At the same time, Subaru's head was forced to duck down by Abel's hand from behind, so they had succeeded in evading Sphinx's counterattack.

Vincent: "You did well to shift gears immediately. But, there shall be no meaning if you cannot keep it up."

Subaru: "I know! I'll say this now, but don't abandon Jamal!"

Vincent: "—. His bereaved family shall be granted sufficient compensation."

Subaru: "In that case, I'll save the people who you won't save!"

Talking back to the overly-rational Abel, Subaru held his ground with his body that had been made to fall. With that posture, he glared at Sphinx, whose attack he had evaded,

Subaru: "Sphinx! I'm the one who's gonna kill you!"

Sphinx: "…"

Subaru: "I'm gonna kill the undead you. Resurrection magic isn't all powerful. You think I'm lying?"

Sphinx: "…That is certainly persuasive. After all, it is a fact that you are painting over my Sacrament of the Immortal King, and are meddling with the souls of the dead. I suppose that I would be no exception. Only…"

In order to draw attention to himself, Subaru tried to provoke her, to which Sphinx shook her head from side to side. Having recognized that Subaru's claim was somewhat persuasive,

Sphinx: "—No, there is no particular need to say it. Verification: Required."

Despite maintaining vigilance over her natural enemy, Subaru—or, to be precise, Spica's Star Eating, she gave a smile that seemed to be the exact opposite of that mental image.

The Witch's smile, only the origin of it was unknown to him. Ultimately, there was no need to know, either.

Vincent: "Do not lose your nerve."

Speaking to Subaru in a low voice, for a moment, Abel stood next to him and furrowed his brow. The intention of those sable eyes requested an explanation, but Subaru would leave that up to the flow of events.

With the aftertaste of her smile remaining, Sphinx looked towards Abel,

Sphinx: "For one matter, there was Confirmation: Required. You over there—"

Subaru: "—This guy is Vincent Vollachia, the Emperor of this nation. That, and, you aren't mistaken that he's Priscilla's older brother."

Sphinx: "…"

Before Sphinx could finish asking her question, Subaru interrupted with the answer.

The moment that was done to her, Sphinx moved her eyebrows with a level of clear surprise for the first time. Abel, who had just given him a warning, was surprised to a similar extent, but that was a necessary expense.

Spica: "Uu~, Au!"

Jumping at Sphinx, Spica took action that counterbalanced that sundry expense.

With an agility that resembled the hunting style of a cat, Spica closed in on the Witch, but rather than the claws of a cat swinging its paws, she had the might of swing from a lion, or a tiger, or perhaps even a bear.

It was the kind of blow that, if received directly, would make a mess of even an undead warrior in a single hit; without sparing any quarter, Spica had pummeled that into Sphinx's slender body—

Sphinx: "I am surprised. It seems that you have specialities that lie outside the realm of meddling with souls."

Spica: "Aa~u?!"

Sphinx's quiet analysis overlapped with Spica's high-pitched voice of astonishment.

Spica's astonishment was natural. The blow containing all of her might had indeed been delivered to Sphinx. However, with the single arm Sphinx had raised, she had skillfully parried it.

With her blue eyes wide-open, Spica stared into the golden eyes of the Witch,

Sphinx: "Were you taken aback? My defeat in the Demi-Human War was partly because of my inexperience in martial arts. Taking that into account, I began learning from square one. But then again—"

Spica: "Uu?!"

Sphinx: "There is a limit to the enhancement of abilities that can be yielded through the Flow Method for this replicant body."

While speaking, Sphinx used the momentum from her parry, and threw Spica down by her head.

That elegant movement and technique were not something that had been acquired through half-hearted training. As the Witch had confessed herself, she had used her former defeat as a resource to learn from.

It would make anyone think that it was unnecessary to mention the person who had beat the Witch in a fist fight in the past.

Subaru: "Spicaaa!"

Spica: "—Uu~, au!"

As Subaru raised his voice, Spica firmly clenched her teeth.

That moment before her head hit the ground, Spica twisted her body around, and used her body like a cat once more. Gently landing on her knees, Spica nimbly distanced herself from Sphinx.

Spica: “Au?!”

However, Spica’s movements were stopped as she tried to fall back.

Sphinx had caught the sleeve of Spica’s right arm, preventing the latter’s withdrawal. —Immediately after, the girl and the Witch exchanged glances, and an extremely close-quarters bout of combat commenced.

Spica: “Uu! Au! A~au! Aau!”

Each grappling with one arm, Spica and Sphinx engaged in high-level combat with minimal movement.

As Spica desperately swung around blows, Sphinx utilized smooth technique as if to say “the soft controls the hard”, and sometimes, she would interweave magic fired from her fingertips into her counteroffensive.

Subaru: “Beako!”

Beatrice: “Just a little longer, I suppose!”

Witnessing the tempestuous battle, Subaru called out to Beatrice, and she responded. With her hands glowing, Beatrice was pouring all her efforts into using healing magic on the collapsed Jamal.

So then, should he keep waiting for Beatrice, who was yet unable to return, and go without providing cover?

Subaru: “Like I could ever do such a thing!”

Eliminating the option of doing nothing, Subaru suddenly drew the Guiltywhip from the back of his waist.

Then, as Subaru made that decision, Abel violently held back his shoulder.

Vincent: “Wait, Natsuki Subaru. If you move carelessly—”

Subaru: “You goddamn idiot! Is this the time to be saying that?!”

Talking back to Abel’s sharp complaint in a loud voice, Subaru shook free and began sprinting.

He heard Abel clicking his tongue behind him, but without stopping, Subaru raised his whip overhead to provide cover to Spica, who was being toyed with by Sphinx’s tactics of interweaving magic and martial arts.

Subaru: “Sh—!”

The tip of the whip flew with a speed that could not be derided as the strength of a child.

To be more accurate, it was not as good as when his body was at its original size, but he had put his concentration to good use in this extreme situation. Even if his shrunken body had forgotten the days of training he spent to master the whip, his willpower produced a miracle.

The whip tore through the air, and like a snake’s fangs, it was absorbed into Sphinx’s back—

Subaru: “—Wha…”

Sphinx: “Feelings of protectiveness and impatience amount to poison that causes lapses in judgment. Since I have a comprehension of what emotions are, albeit only slightly, I know of their dreadfulness.”

As Sphinx indifferently responded, she caught the Guiltywhip with her right hand. But, Sphinx had purposely reached out her right hand to do so. Sphinx’s left hand was grasping Spica’s right sleeve, and her right hand was fastened to Subaru’s whip, so now both of her hands had been sealed.

However—

Spica: “Aa, uu…hk”

Spilling out pathetic cries of pain, Spica fell to her knees, as her left thigh had been pierced by white light. —Unable to use either of her hands, that had been done by a blow fired from Sphinx’s undead golden right eye.

Sphinx: “Fingers and tools can be used to assist with the invocation of magic. It is a mistaken conception that those who are not versed in magic are prone to having.”

Subaru: “Spica—uoahh?!”

Spica groaned at the pain, and Subaru screamed in her stead, but Sphinx pulled on the whip with a forceful movement, resolutely felling him to the ground before the Witch.

Clenching his teeth, Subaru endured the pain. The face of Spica on her knees right next to him, and the face of Sphinx looking down at him from above, he clearly saw both of them.

Meeting eyes with the golden irises in which no heat could be felt—

Sphinx: “—For what reason, are you smiling?”

Subaru: “Because everything until now has gone exactly as I had planned.”

Seeing Subaru’s expression as he lay face-up on the ground, Sphinx voiced a question.

Answering it, Subaru let go of the whip that he had purposely been holding onto, and with the emptied hand, he directed a finger gun towards Sphinx.

And then—

Subaru: “—Minya!”

The tip of Subaru’s finger glowed, and immediately after, a crystal arrow of amethyst hue was fired.

Surprise, close-range, negligence, a performance that deserved an Academy Award—as various factors intertwined, Sphinx had no measures by which she could evade Subaru's preparations.

Sphinx: "—Reflection: Required, indeed."

Sphinx tilted her head right away, and muttered in a slightly cracked voice.

Subaru's purple arrow made an impact on Sphinx's right eye, and bore through it. The area around the impact began to crystallize, encroaching on Sphinx's pale skin.

Originally, Yin Magic was supposed to display particular efficiency against the undead, but this was instantaneous.

Subaru: "Did you think I was just an intelligent brat? It's a misconception that everyone tends to have."

—Subaru was the Spiritual Arts User who had contracted with the cute and talented Beatrice.

Even if his body were shrunken, his connection with Beatrice would not be severed. Beatrice and Subaru were connected by their gates, and Beatrice would draw from Subaru's Mana to utilize magic.

The reverse was also true. Subaru could also borrow Beatrice's power to use magic. That was precisely how, in the first battle after he had contracted with Beatrice, they used magic to mow down the hordes of the Great Rabbit.

But then again, that first battle had used up all the Mana that Beatrice had amassed over four hundred years, and now the most Subaru could do was fire off a trump card limited to a single shot within Beatrice's range of sight.

But, the important things were the fact that he had a trump card, and the fact that he did not make a mistake when he used it.

Subaru: "Spica, one final push!"

Spica: "Uu!"

Sphinx was taken aback by the impact of the magic, so Subaru would rush her down there.

Her leg battered, concealing her expression that was stiffened by the pain with an unfaltering fighting spirit, Spica jumped up and grabbed Subaru's hand, and he firmly stood up on the spot.

His wounds were painful. But, no matter how many times he tried, they would not get any more minor than this.

Therefore, this was the best development to move forward with everybody remaining alive—Subaru acted in place of Spica's left leg, and together they headed towards Sphinx.

By having Spica's Star Eating reach its target, they would defeat Sphinx—

Sphinx: "You were at least able to see through Valga's stratagem. Admiration: Required."

As the scope of the crystallization extended out from the right eye, Sphinx praised Subaru.

Then, the hardening face of the Witch took the shape of a smile, and she placed the index finger of her left hand right under her jaw. That finger was forming a finger gun, as if to spite Subaru.

Subaru: "—Hk."

That instant, Subaru intuited that her action was a preparation for Escape by Death.

It was a plan to commit suicide by blowing off her own head, and resetting the situation. —If she committed suicide here, and escaped with intelligence on Subaru's group, Sphinx would never appear before them again.

The chance to have Star Eating reach its target, would not come about again.

Before he could move to put a stop to that, a faint light glowed in the tip of Sphinx's finger—

???: “—YOU IDIOOOT!!”

A slashing attack accompanied a cursing voice akin to coughing up blood, and Sphinx’s left arm was cut off at the elbow.

Sphinx: “…”

Seeing her arm spin as it flew away, Sphinx widened her eyes.

Throwing the sword, which had a hole in its blade, severing that arm, and preventing the Escape by Death planned by Sphinx, his eyes bloodshot, was Jamal.

Having sustained a serious injury, Jamal attacked, and it was Beatrice who supported his body. While applying healing magic to his wound, Beatrice followed up on Jamal’s sword throw.

For a moment, Sphinx, who was gazing in wonder, and Beatrice, who had previously responded that the healing would take more time, crossed gazes,

Beatrice: “That was a downright lie, in fact.”

Sticking out her tongue, Beatrice revealed that the miraculous come-back of Jamal was not actually a miracle.

Be that as it may, even if she had lost one arm, Sphinx could do the same thing with her remaining right hand. —No, she could have done so if not for the moment with Beatrice.

Vincent: “That sent shivers down my spine.”

Contrary to the contents of the words, the spun voice was as indifferent as always.

But, there might have very well been some real danger. —After all, too much force had been applied to Jamal’s sword to say it had been merely passed over.

Sphinx: “Admiration: Required.”

Vincent: “I require no such thing.”

As Sphinx widened her remaining left eye at the events that had transpired, Abel coldly responded. Then, the black-haired Emperor, swinging the sword he had received, severed Sphinx’s right arm from its shoulder.

Sphinx: “Ahh…”

Her left hand was lost, her right arm was severed, the balance of her body crumbled as she attempted to escape, and Sphinx’s back forcefully crashed into the street of the Imperial Capital without even bracing herself.

Passing the Witch on the ground as she looked up, Subaru deeply exhaled as he looked down on her.

In order to corner her like this, it had taken a multitude of tactics, and to a lesser extent, some trial and error. Finally, having arrived at this point, which had taken all of that, Subaru now stood before Sphinx.

Subaru: “It’s our win.”

Sphinx: “…Indeed. I shall admit it. It is, my loss.”

A serious injury for Jamal, some injuries for Spica and Subaru, and no injuries for Beatrice and Abel; that was the result obtained in this domain, and fully understanding that, Subaru made his declaration, to which Sphinx nodded.

Even without her two arms, it was quite possible for her to shoot something from her eye, like she had done to attack Spica. The right half of her face was already crystallized, but it was of maximum priority to not allow her to do anything else.

Subaru: “Sphinx.”

The fact that this was not an act of him calling out to her, was something that even Sphinx herself understood.

This was merely an indication to have Spica get to work, the path he had prepared for her Authority, Star Eating. Leaning on Subaru’s shoulder, Spica reached her hand out towards Sphinx.

By meddling with the soul of the undead Witch, they would finally put an end to this Great Disaster—

???: "—Jiwald."

The next moment, right before Spica's fingers could make contact, the crystallizing face of Sphinx evaporated—the fired white light blew off the Witch's cranium, crushing Subaru's plan.

Everyone: "…"

Sphinx had been thoroughly killed from the side, and Subaru's group had their breaths taken away. The Sphinx before their eyes crumbled, and promptly turned to dust.

And, the one who had done that was—

???: "From how it appears, I have concluded that this was an exceedingly perilous scene. Respondence: Required."

???: "The effects of the Sacrament of the Immortal King are useful, but when that usefulness is experienced, it is irritating that information cannot be immediately shared on the spot. Improvement: Required."

???: "Before that, I suppose we ought to give priority to eliminating them. Counteroffensive: Required."

At the bustling voices heard in quick succession, Subaru clearly felt Spica's body stiffen through his shoulder. Likely, Spica also felt him do the same.

It was only natural that they experienced that level of shock.

???: "—Combat: Required."

???: "—Combat: Required."

???: "—Combat: Required."

After all, having disposed of the cornered Sphinx, several uninjured Witches, several uninjured Sphinxes, had gathered together.

—For Sphinx, intervention in the Demi-Human War was something exceedingly convenient.

The feelings of antipathy between humans and demi-humans that had been on the rise within the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica, flared up into a large inferno with merely a small kindling, and the longstanding transient peace was destroyed.

The environment that persecuted demi-humans regardless of their participation in the civil war entirely eliminated the unnaturalness of Sphinx making contact with the Demi-Human Alliance. If she introduced herself as a half-elf, she did not need any greater justification to join the alliance.

There, meeting the two principal leaders of the Demi-Human Alliance, Valga Cromwell and Libre Fermi, was quite the fortuitous happening for Sphinx.

In particular, Valga of the Giant tribe, who, contrary to his fierce appearance, possessed an outstanding intellect, had realized the usefulness of the magic and knowledge in Sphinx's possession, and had daringly included her into their tactics, securing victories for the Demi-Human Alliance on many battlefields.

Sphinx, too, unveiled much of the Witch of Greed's knowledge that had never been revealed until then, and assisted in Valga's plans, or perhaps it was her who had gained assistance.

—The Sacrament of the Immortal King, too, was a forbidden art that had only been successfully reproduced thanks to the Demi-Human Alliance.

Even if she had knowledge of the technique itself, it was the research of the details needed to implement it, and the strategic plans in which the technique was actually used, that had allowed Valga to skillfully lead in the Demi-Human War.

Sphinx had no interest in the victory of the Demi-Human Alliance, and she had just been making use of that environment, but back then, the presence of Valga and the others had helped her out immensely. But then again, Libre, the snakeman who held the same position of leader alongside Valga, had misgivings about dealing with Sphinx, and they had not constructed a good relationship with each other.

In any case, Sphinx had obtained many of the things she had desired with the Demi-Human War.

Amongst them, that which she had wished to observe the most was “love”—in order to fulfill the purpose of her creation, it seemed to be the thing that the incomplete Sphinx was lacking the most. The sense of attachment that was generally defined as “love”, she had gained many opportunities to witness it up close, and that was a great result for her.

Within Valga, within Libre, within many of the demi-humans and humans alike, that was present.

The actuality of its existence, and the confidence that it was indeed missing from within herself, were the greatest things Sphinx had gained.

Only, with the situation that had not moved for over three hundred and fifty years finally having moved, it ought to be said that Sphinx had gotten a bit greedy. —With the threat she had forgotten about, she reunited.

Knowing that Sphinx had been constructed with the purpose of replicating the Witch of Greed’s soul, harboring an unbearable vindictiveness of desiring her existence to be erased, it was the Witch of Greed’s disciple.

—Ultimately, Sphinx ended up being defeated by that disciple of the Witch of Greed.

11

The situation he had feared, arrived precisely at the moment he had feared it.

The sensation of cold fingers being thrust into his mouth, and the sensation of the drug package, which he had grown accustomed to being in there, being yanked out, caused Subaru to recall that.

???: "I suppose this is poison for the purpose of suicide? It is an inexplicable preparation."

???: "Is it truly so inexplicable? When one heads for the battlefield, they have generally resolved themself for death. Additionally, if one is captured by their enemy, it is effective in eliminating the room for having information extracted."

???: "What about a battlefield on which that general expression would be improper? They should also be aware that if they were to lose their life here, it would not necessarily mean their mouth would be sealed for certain."

With the same voice, with the same manner of speech, with the same tone, analyses piled up, and ultimately, several pairs of eyes looked at Subaru.

The Witches who all bore the same face, simultaneously peered into Subaru's black eyes—

Witch: "Answer: Required."

Witch: "Answer: Required."

Witch: "Answer: Required."

Then, having stolen Subaru's method of suicide, and binding his arms behind his back, they enquired so.

—The several newly-appeared Sphinxes had completely overpowered Subaru's group, which had a great deal of struggle to corner just a single Sphinx, in less than a minute.

Spica: "Ua, uu…"

Pinned to the ground, Spica desperately squirmed in an attempt to assist the captive Subaru.

But, even if given treatment, the wound on her leg was deep, and she could not shake free from the Sphinx who was pinning her down. It was not just Spica. Beatrice and Jamal were also lying collapsed on the street in a battered state.

In particular, since Jamal had continued to shower the Sphinxes with abusive language, he had ended up being scrupulously tormented until he had completely lost consciousness.

And then—

Vincent: “From one indecision to the next, do you not tire of it all?”

Sphinx: “Even when you are cornered to this degree, I admire that your spirit still refuses to yield. I can sense the blood relation with your sister… with Priscilla Barielle.”

Vincent: “Hmph, did you think I would waver at the mention of Priscilla? In addition to mimicking Lamia, the one known as the Witch engages in some terribly impudent actions.”

Abel trained a hostile gaze on Sphinx, and spat those words out together with the blood in his mouth.

Right now, the ones facing off against the Sphinxes were him, standing on his own two feet, and Subaru, whose arms were bound behind his back. And with Subaru forced to kneel, Abel became the sole man standing.

Present here were three Sphinxes.

One of them was restraining Subaru, one of them was pinning Spica down, and the last one was free to move as she pleased.

Facing them, Abel had sustained no small amount of wounds amidst the short resistance. His clothes were sullied and torn, and wiping the blood off his cheek with his sleeve, by his feet was the sword he had discarded as it had lost its blade.

But, even with this much damage done to him, Abel had not sustained a fatal wound.

In this eleventh hour, that was thanks to Abel’s remarkable swordsmanship blooming—such a thing was not the case, for it was by the Sphinxes' intentions, that Abel had been kept alive.

Sphinx: "Lamia Godwin, it is true that I have learned from her. She possessed a certain observative ability to see the true nature of things. She was much closer to the truth of "souls" than I am."

Sphinx: "Thanks to her, parallel reproduction of the Sacrament of the Immortal King has succeeded. It slightly deviates from the desired result, but, it is true that it has advanced us one level higher."

Sphinx: "Without that, it would have been infeasible to appear before you in this manner."

The Sphinxes strung words together; the trick of producing several of the same undead at the same time, was an abuse of the Sacrament of the Immortal King, used by Abel's sister when she had attacked the coupled dragon carriages—used by Lamia Godwin.

To be honest, if Spica's Star Eating was flawless, then the multiplication of undead was nothing more than an act of increasing the number of targets that could be hit. Because she understood that, Sphinx had separated Subaru and Spica, and had restrained them.

And then, the reason that the Sphinxes had kept Abel alive by himself was—

Sphinx: "—As a member of the Vollachian Imperial Family, your Yang Sword was a threat. Vigilance: Required."

Vincent: "…"

At the words of the empty-handed Sphinx, Abel slightly narrowed his sable eyes.

That which Sphinx maintained vigilance over, the Yang Sword Vollachia—a great treasure of the Empire that concealed tremendous power. Subaru, too, had once personally witnessed the remarkable power of the Yang Sword.

However, at that time, the owner of the Yang Sword was not Abel, but—

Sphinx: "—Priscilla Barielle. Or perhaps Prisca Benedict."

Subaru: "Guh, Abel…!"

Sphinx: "He ought to be the Vollachian Emperor, Vincent Vollachia. The way you call him Abel, I thought it was improper to call him by a nickname or alias? Correction: Required."

Pointing out such a trivial imperfection in his speech, she firmly pushed Subaru down into the ground by his face. Ignoring Subaru as he groaned with his face rubbing against the ground, Sphinx tilted her head at Abel,

Sphinx: "It seems that you truly do not possess the Yang Sword."

Indeed, facing Abel—facing Vincent Vollachia, she plainly declared that he did not have ownership of the Yang Sword, the proof that one was the Emperor.

Subaru: "—Hk."

At Sphinx's assertion, Abel maintained his silence, but Subaru's throat clogged up.

Just how humiliating that would have been for the Vollachian Emperor, Subaru did not know.

But, he knew that just like the fact that he had let the sister whom he ought to have killed in the Imperial Selection Ceremony live, asking any more about the Emperor's nature would not be tolerated.

And then, the act of ascertaining that, was unmistakably the reason why Sphinx had kept Abel alive.

Sphinx: "Would you accompany me, Emperor Vincent Vollachia? If it is alright with you, I would like to take you to meet your younger sister, Priscilla Barielle. Analysis: Required."

Vincent: “To meet Priscilla, you say? What are you plotting?”

Sphinx: “I refuse to answer. Deliberation: Required.”

To Abel, who did not possess a decisive blow in order to resist, Sphinx made a peculiar offer. The true intent behind that offer had not been spoken. But, if Abel agreed, he would be able to survive a little longer.

Nevertheless, the apex of the Empire had naught the charm to carelessly follow such a proposal.

Vincent: “Do not jest with me, Witch. If there was need to converse with Priscilla, I would do so on my own, even without the likes of your permission. Just who do you think I—who do you think I am?”

Sphinx: “…”

Boldly answering so, Abel crossed his arms, rejecting the Witch’s proposal.

Sullied, shedding blood, with even his life in the palm of his opponent; however, the figure of Abel maintaining his unwavering attitude, was undoubtedly that of the very Sword Wolf held in great esteem by the Vollachian Empire.

Sphinx: “—Reflection: Required.”

There was no change in her countenance or verbal expression, but Sphinx’s voice housed a clear disappointment.

As the reason for that had not been revealed, it remained unknown. But, Sphinx found it unfortunate that she could not take Abel to where Priscilla was.

And, Sphinx, reflecting on the fact that had caused her such disappointment, as if rejecting it,

Sphinx: “What about in exchange for the lives of these individuals? Re-analysis: Required.”

The question was asked while pointing fingers at Subaru and Spica, who were pinned down.

In order to bestow the question with more persuasive power, Sphinx increased the pressure of her bind on Subaru.

Spica: “Auu! Uu~, Uau!”

Subaru: “Spica…!!”

Likely, the same amount of pressure was being applied to Spica. Kicking and struggling, Spica had a better shot of escaping the restraint than Subaru did, so she attempted to fight back against the Sphinx behind her.

And before the resistance could take hold—

Subaru: “Gah, gi, gyaaaaaaaah…!”

Sphinx: “—Reflection: Required.”

The dull, creaking sound that reverberated, was the destructive noise of a bone being painfully broken. That was the result of not Spica’s, but Subaru’s right elbow having been bent in the opposite direction.

Sharp pain stabbed his brain, and the pain from all of his other bruises and scratches was momentarily blown away. Blood frothed up as he bit his lip, and the unbearable tears streamed down drop by drop.

While making that example out of him, neither the Sphinx who had broken his arm, nor the Sphinx who was about to break Spica’s arm, nor the Sphinx who had directed them to do so, had shown even the slightest fluctuation in emotions.

Only, in order to grant her own desire, her gaze was that of a spectator, wondering if the example that had been made would produce results.

However—

Vincent: “—Tedious.”

Abel's reply, even though Subaru's arm had been broken, conceded no emotions whatsoever.

Receiving that, Sphinx finally let out a short exhale, and,

Sphinx: "If possible, I would have liked to bring you back alive, but…"

Vincent: "Do not jest. If you had wished to fulfill that no matter what, it would have been better to fashion me into an undead and bring me along."

Sphinx: "To say that would be difficult, is a conclusion of all the materials of analysis until now."

At Sphinx's answer, Abel closed one eye as if going into rumination. But, before those thoughts yielded any progress, the Sphinxes began to take action.

The Sphinxes pinning Subaru and Spica down each raised a single finger. —Holding Subaru and Spica up, the Sphinxes placed those fingers against the backs of each of their heads.

Subaru: "A-Abel…"

Gasping and sweating at the pain of his broken arm, Subaru called out to Abel. In the same situation as Spica, who was struggling next to him, it was obvious what Sphinx's aim was.

But, it was for naught. After all, examples being made would not serve any use.

Vincent: "There is no meaning in taking hostages. Or perhaps, does the Witch fail to understand such simple things?"

Sphinx: "Is that so?"

Vincent: "What?"

Sphinx: "Emotions or feelings of protection are difficult things to deal with. Even you, the apex of the Empire, are no exception. —Exertion: Required."

Indeed, the sole free Sphinx spoke to Abel, and then slowly lifted her hand.

Then, raising a single finger of that raised hand, as she aimed it at Abel's chest,

Sphinx: "Please do not move. If you value their lives…"

Vincent: "—Menial."

Abel's short words, which seemed as if he was gnashing his teeth, yielded a crooked smile on Sphinx's mouth.

That moment, Sphinx's fingertip glowed with light. —It was not just the one aiming for Abel, but the fingers thrust against the backs of Subaru's and Spica's heads were also glowing.

—He had been waiting for the Witch to make that vicious choice.

Subaru: "Leap, Spica!!"

Sphinx: "Eh?"

Right before the fatal light was fired, Subaru forgot about his pain and yelled out. Receiving that, one of the bewildered Sphinxes disappeared from there. —She had been forcibly taken along by Spica's teleport.

And with Spica's leap as a signal, there was also movement on Subaru's side. That was not movement from Subaru himself, but—

???: "No matter how you look at it, you are pushing it way too far, I suppose!"

Speaking in an angered voice was Beatrice, who had been silently awaiting Subaru's signal in her collapsed state.

Having patiently endured, she now poured the feelings of wanting to rush forth, which she had withstood from the moment when Subaru had his arm broken, into the amethyst crystals, and shot them into Sphinx, who had perpetrated that deed.

Sphinx: “…”

The situation had hectically moved to turn the tables.

The attack of the Sphinxes, who had been restraining Subaru and Spica, had ended in failure.

The one who had been a hindrance on Subaru’s side was Beatrice, but the one who had been a hindrance on Spica’s side was none other than Sphinx herself.

—When Spica had teleported, she had intercepted the line of fire of the Sphinx who had fired her magic at Abel, and had made the heat ray of light shoot down the Sphinx who was restraining her.

Sphinx: “This is—”

Subject to an undesired friendly fire, the one remaining Sphinx widened her eyes.

One was shot down and terminated by her own magic, and another was crystallized into an amethyst statue by a magic arrow.

Still, this was about all that could be done with a surprise attack.

Sphinx: “I do not think that the final person will also stand back up.”

Subaru, with his arm broken, Spica, who had been restrained, and Beatrice, who had been thought to have been unconscious, had attempted a counterattack. But unfortunately, Jamal, who had been thoroughly beaten down, did not stand up.

Ascertaining that, the final remaining Sphinx quickly readied both of her hands, produced ten swords of light from each set of five fingers, and this time, she attempted to mince up Subaru and his friends for sure.

Because of that, she did not even realize that she had taken her eyes off of the one person whom she absolutely should not have taken her eyes off of.

Vincent: “—Come forth, Yang Sword Vollachia.”

A quiet, yet dignified voice, one reliable to an aggravating extent, sounded upon Subaru’s eardrums.

No matter the tumult, no matter how many people were present, no matter how harsh a battle was unfolding on the battlefield, that man’s voice would always unquestionably reach its desired target.

That was the kingly caliber of the one who stood atop all others, shouldering the destiny of guiding their way.

As if to prove that, dazzling the eyes of all those present, providing a red illumination was—

Sphinx: “—I thought you were not supposed to have that in your possession.”

Vincent: “Fool. —Never once have I said that I had relinquished the Yang Sword or any act of the like.”

Only, the treasured blade of crimson which he had not drawn once, no matter what hardship had stood in his path, merely for the purpose of drawing closer the opportunity for victory in this moment, he now drew out from the sheath of the sky.

And then—

Subaru: “This battle of trickery, is our win.”

Vincent: “The stratagems of my two strategists. —You have underestimated them.”

vic.1120

Bearing the pain, Subaru took pride in their victory, and Abel took pride in the victory of the capabilities of the strategist who was not present here, the one who had devised the plan that had made even the Witch firmly believe that Abel had lost his trump card.

—The next moment, with Yang Sword in hand, Abel kicked off the ground, and leapt.

That was the dash of one who possessed definite strength, incomparable to the Abel up until this point. As the owner chosen by the Yang Sword itself, he was propelled to a dimension befitting that status.

To be precise, as if the world was being illuminated by sunlight, Abel forcefully raised the treasured sword overhead—

Vincent: "—The Yang Sword cuts what I decide to cut, burns what I decide to burn."

Sphinx: "…"

The flash of crimson ran diagonally, and without any resistance, it burned away Sphinx's ten white lights that had immediately tried to intercept Abel.

It was illogical for light to burst into flames, but the supernatural power that could make one believe it was natural was contained within the Yang Sword's radiance, and therefore the following conclusion was inevitable.

Sphinx: "—ah."

And, leaking out a hoarse breath, Sphinx, having taken a great leap backwards, looked down at herself.

The Witch had fallen back with agile movements; however, one tuft of her pink hair had been cut by the flash of the Yang Sword—that instant, Sphinx's whole body ignited.

And, that was not just the Sphinx who had been cut; the fire also spread to the Sphinx whom she herself had shot and reduced to dust, as well as the Sphinx who had been turning into an amethyst crystal.

—The Yang Sword Vollachia had decided to burn the Witch, Sphinx, to naught.

The result of that, was the burning figures of the Sphinxes.

Sphinx: "…"

Enveloped in a blaze, it probably would have been best to keep vigilance over Sphinx as she struggled in vain before she was reduced to ashes, but—

Vincent: "'Tis unnecessary. Being scorched by the flame of the Yang Sword, is precisely that sort of thing."

Subaru: "…I see. I'm beginning to doubt your nerve for keeping that hidden until the eleventh hour."

With the Yang Sword lowered in one hand, Abel indicated that Subaru's caution was a needless fear. Subaru talked back with some bad-mouthing, but he did not respond.

Only, being scorched in a rising blaze, he trained his gaze upon Sphinx, present amidst a flame that would reach even her soul.

Staring at her, Abel—nay, Vincent Vollachia, spoke.

Vincent: "The proposal for this occasion. —It was a great service, Chisha Gold."

Chapter 60:
Witch

1

The Crystal Palace of the Imperial Capital of Lupugana, in the place that was formerly its audience chamber, the shinobi who had snuck in, Olbart Dunkelkenn, waved his right arm that was missing from the elbow down, and frowned his white eyebrows.

Olbart: “Finally stopped movin’, eh? Jeez, that makes a geezer like me feel way too depressed.”

In front of Olbart as he slowly shrugged his shoulders and heaved a sigh, was the grotesque figure that caused the shinobi old man to become fed up—its form had been altered in a repulsive manner, to the extent that it would be ridiculous to even call it an undead; what remained of that grotesque thing’s face was sprawled out across the floor.

Olbart considered his treatment of that bizarrely abhorrent thing to be an assistance.

The undead were resurrected with their memories intact. In addition, in order to resurrect the undead, the Mana of the Stone, Muspel, who dominated the vast lands of the Empire, was being expended. —Therefore, he had been ordered to keep the killing of the undead to a minimum.

Olbart: “Even so, it was better ta kill it. It’s way too awful if it makes me think that way.”

Valuing human life or having mercy towards the weak, that leeway that only people with such room in their hearts possessed, was something that Olbart, who did not have much time left, had already discarded a long time ago.

For Olbart, the audience chamber—no, this experimentation ground of “souls”, had gone too far.

Olbart: “Reminds me of the bunch who made Araki, this way of doin’ things. Even tho’ it wasn’t for fun or for revenge, I couldn’t bear ta dispose of it ‘cause they nerve ta do this kinda thing. They were dealt with, tho’.”

In Olbart’s mind as he spilled those words, an unmatched, unorthodox group who he had dealt with in the past emerged.

In order to produce the perfected Spirit Eater known as Arakiya, those criminals had sacrificed an enormous amount of people, and had said that their actions were out of a sense of duty, that it was for the sake of the Empire’s future.

This horrid scene inside the audience chamber—something had tampered with the souls of the undead resurrected in earthen vessels, something that had been mixed into their souls, something that had transfigured them. It was not for the sake of winning this war, but a barbaric act performed for an objective that completely disregarded the imminent victory or defeat. Within the details that had produced those grotesque forms, he could feel a curiosity that desired results, utterly detached from emotion, similar to that of the unorthodox criminals.

And the objective of that curiosity was understood by Olbart with a single touch.

Olbart: “—Ya got some nerve ta try and tamper with souls.”

Olbart often used a shinobi technique that would interfere with the souls of others—with their Ods, and cause them to shrink. Chisha had also stolen and made use of it; however, that technique only touched upon the outer layer.

But, this inquisitive mind desired results that went beyond just that.

What exactly those results were, Olbart, who did not know the curious individual in question, had no way of knowing, but—

Olbart: “I get a reeeal~ bad feelin’ ‘bout this, Yer Excellency. —I guess there really is no room for my betrayal after all.”

—During the Demi-Human War, the Demi-Human Alliance was defeated, and the individual Sphinx was defeated.

In regards to that defeat, Sphinx did not have many words to say.

She had lived for over three hundred and fifty years, but most of those days and months were spent hiding away, continuing to exhaust her everything just to survive; Sphinx was no match for the opponent, who had resolved and trained themselves to kill her.

If she were to speak of the events that had happened, that would be the entirety of the story.

To be honest, within Sphinx's mind, as she was defeated by the disciple of the Witch of Greed, faced with certain death, there were still no particular emotions.

In the first place, she had no attachment to her own life. The many years she spent exhausting herself to prioritize her own survival were just because she thought that was rational in order to fulfill the purpose of her creation.

And then, when it seemed like she was going to disappear without having fulfilled the purpose of her creation, what she had possessed until the end was the instinct to flee, as it was difficult to abandon that purpose.

That was why she fled to the basement of the Royal Castle Lugunica, which had become the grounds for a decisive battle; the fact that she displayed the willpower to break away from the Witch of Greed's disciple there, was also a result of following her instincts.

Only, that escape sequence, in which she had no particular attachment to her life, altered Sphinx's fate.

???: "—I have use for you. You shall serve me well, in order to grant my wish."

In that man's corrupted eyes, the intense flame of ambition could be seen flickering.

—The flame of the Yang Sword Vollachia, would burn anything it had decided to destroy to ashes.

The plan of Vincent Vollachia and Natsuki Subaru, was to make Sphinx firmly believe that, for whatever reason, the Emperor had relinquished the treasured sword of crimson.

As a result, at the end of a grand wager of lives, Sphinx was scorched by the flame, having lost in the bout of deceit.

The blade of the Yang Sword that had reached the Witch, Sphinx, delivered a scintillating flame to the bearer of the Great Disaster who had been resurrected as an undead; the several Sphinxes that were facing off against Vincent's group, the Sphinx waiting in the Crystal Palace, the Sphinxes observing each battlefield of the Imperial Capital, and the countless Sphinxes that ought to have been launching attacks all throughout the Empire, all burst into flame simultaneously.

Sphinx: "—Countermeasures: Required."

While being scorched by the bright red flames, the Sphinx who had been cut, muttered so. But, even if she made use of the undead's advantage of meagerly feeling pain, she would not be able to hold out for long with herself being burnt to a crisp.

In that case, would she abandon the several bodies that had already been scorched, and proceed with the plan as a new Sphinx, having learned from this Death? —No, that would be impossible.

The flame of the Yang Sword was burning Sphinx's very soul.

Even if she tried to create a new undead version of herself, as long as the foundation that was her soul remained burning, it would be impossible to prevent the earthen body from burning as it was created.

Sphinx: "…"

She had no countermeasures. Together with the sensation of a deadlock, the body of this Sphinx crumbled.

Even if she died by burning, and headed to the next iteration while having learned from this Death, the reconstructed Sphinx would merely come to the same conclusion that she had no countermeasures as she met her end.

Her end, this would be her end. Having spent a long time going around the world, the Witch of Greed's failure, Sphinx's quest of investigation, would have its curtains close here.

She had exhausted every measure, she had sufficiently laid out traps, but it had not been enough.

That was a similar defeat to what she had experienced in the past, during the events of the Demi-Human War. At that time, too, Sphinx had exhausted every measure, yet it had still not been enough, and she was left with no choice but to perish in defeat.

The reason that had not come to pass, had not been because of Sphinx's own actions, but because of the interference of an outfielder.

Thus, this time, she could not hope for the same thing to happen.

After all, the owner of that ambition, who had saved Sphinx back then, was already gone.

Leip Barielle was dead. That was why, there was no longer—

Sphinx: "—Analysis: Required."

Suddenly, engulfed in the fiery blaze as she was, Sphinx who was supposed to be heading for her demise, took action.

While the flame of the Yang Sword kept her entire body alight, Sphinx placed a finger below her own jaw; blowing away the entirety of the corebug present within her cranium, she induced her own Death.

And then, the Sphinxes present on the battlefield, in the Imperial Capital, and throughout the entire Empire, all carried out that same act in succession.

Sphinx: “—Analysis: Required.”

Sphinx: “—Analysis: Required.”

It was not that she had given up on herself. Nor was it that she had been dominated by suicidal thoughts.

Only, through dying, all of Sphinx’s memories could converge on her soul. If all the countless Sphinxes died simultaneously, and all the countless memories converged, the collective base of knowledge known as herself would accumulate.

Of course, it was only a matter of time before the soul where all those memories were gathering would be scorched, thoroughly burned to naught.

However, in the time before it was burned to naught, Sphinx naturally continued to construct her own burning selves, and by doing so, she was able to accrete countless analyses and debates about the situation and countermeasures.

In the past, she had possessed no strong emotions whatsoever regarding Death. But now, things were different.

Sphinx: “—Resistance: Required.”

Sphinx: “—Resistance: Required.”

Sphinx: “—Resistance: Required.”

Resisting, resisting, as she resisted, Sphinx scraped together every conceivable possibility, and analyzed them.

The conclusions of each bastion, the soul experiments at the Crystal Palace, the history of the Vollachian Imperial Family, the Spirit Eaters, the foreign entity from the Kingdom, Stargazers, commandments, the Great Disaster, every last possibility, the fragments of existence itself; she analyzed all of it.

And then—

—Bound to the prison, Priscilla's crimson eyes fully witnessed the entire chain of events befalling Sphinx before her eyes.

The Witch's body had suddenly burst into red flames, and with a single glance, Priscilla understood that it was the scintillating flame brought about by the Yang Sword which was passed down in the Vollachian Empire.

She also understood that the one who had delivered that scintillating flame to the Witch, was none other than Vincent Vollachia.

Priscilla: "So you have finally revealed the card you had kept overturned? You are truly cunning to the bitter end, elder brother."

As a member of the Vollachian Imperial Family herself, the fact that Vincent had not drawn the Yang Sword, and instead preserved it as a trump card, was obvious to Priscilla. Of course, given the troublesome quality that came with wielding the Yang Sword, it was no wonder that Vincent did not thoughtlessly rely on it.

Anyhow, having been defeated in the bout of deceit, the Witch was destroyed by the flame—at least, she should have been.

Priscilla: "You, what did you do?"

Sphinx: "—Analysis: Required."

The Yang Sword's flame would burn what it wished to burn, and the Yang Sword's blade would cut what it wished to cut.

That was a truth that could not be bent. Despite that, the Witch who ought to have been engulfed by bright red flames in front of Priscilla, slowly broke free from that scintillating flame.

The flames had ceased their scorching of the Witch.

The Yang Sword's flame would burn what it wished to burn, and the Yang Sword's blade would cut what it wished to cut.

Ergo, the fate of the Witch, scorched and cut by Vincent's Yang Sword, was not something that could be altered.

However—

Priscilla: “Who are you?”

If the one who was burned, the one who was cut, became something else entirely, it would be a different story.

In all likelihood, Vincent had killed the Witch, had killed Sphinx with the Yang Sword.

But, the form of the Witch who had escaped the flame, was not the Witch that Priscilla knew.

The cracked pale skin, the black eyeballs endowed with irises of golden hue, and the youthful appearance of a little girl, with all of those cast away, that being stood before Priscilla.

Long white hair that reached down to her back, and black eyes that housed a clear intellectual and inquisitive spirit. —White and black, if one tried to draw that being, then those two colors would be fully capable of representing it.

Priscilla: “Who are you?”

???: “—The Witch of Greed.”

At Priscilla’s repeated question, there was a quiet response, yet one brimming with conviction.

Having fulfilled the purpose of its creation after a long time, the being whose very soul had altered in nature—the current incarnation of the Witch of Greed, having escaped the fate of being scorched by flame, spoke.

Witch: “The purpose of creation has been fulfilled. —Now, I will proceed to fulfill my purpose in life.”

So she declared.

V!c.II2o

Bonus Short Stories

The Land of Wolves:
Death unto the Weak, No Mercy XII

1

—The boy stood upon a battlefield riddled with corpses.

Deep clouds enshrouded the sky, casting a dim and gloomy mood over the plain despite it being midday. The moisture in the air signaled an imminent risk of rain, too, and within the clouds, bolts of lightning were budding, ready to be cast down to the surface.

However, even though the clouds were still waiting to pour down their rain, a passing drizzle had already befallen the plain. —Rain, composed of vast amounts of crimson bloodshed.

???: "…"

Gazing out towards the vast plain, collapsed there were those clad in mismatched armor that lacked any sense of unity.

If anything, the non-uniformity of this diverse gathering of ages and races could be called its sense of unity. Each was equipped with unique weapons and armor, and as a whole, the group's quality could not be said to be very high. Though they might not have been regular soldiers, so-to-speak, neither were they a group of bandits.

They were—

???: "—Chisha-dono, it seems that none of the dissidents have survived."

Giving that report, was an aide-de-camp who had provided support during this operation. Upon receiving information from the soldiers who had returned from reconnaissance of the battlefield below, the commanding officer, Chisha Gold, narrowed his eyes.

Chisha was of tall, slender build, and his side profile still appeared youthful. In reality, he was still a greenhorn who had only just turned eighteen. Though, factoring age into appraisals was something that Chisha's liege openly detested.

Anyhow—

Chisha: "To begin with, the idea was to make an example of the dissidents by our hand, so the fact that they have been felled cannot be labeled as a setback in itself, however…"

Aide-De-Camp: "…The prey caught in the net is a problem, correct?"

Chisha: "Judging from the details thus far, I had anticipated the perpetrators to be few in number, but… for it to have been carried out by a lone person was rather exceedingly unforeseen."

Chisha caressed his slender jaw as he spoke, to which the senior aide nodded with a bitter face.

Chisha, the aide-de-camp, and the rest of the soldiers deployed to the plain were the regular soldiers of the Abellux Domain, belonging to Chisha's liege, Vincent Abellux. The soldiers all wore matching equipment, and bearing expressions that displayed their drive, they were dispatched on this mission—that was, the subjugation of dissidents.

At sixteen, as a member of the Imperial Family, Vincent possessed preeminent intelligence, and not only was he politically adept, but he also demonstrated outstanding wisdom as a feudal lord. Five years had elapsed since he had become a feudal lord, and since then, public order within the domain had dramatically improved, and it was appraised as a miraculous state of peace in an Empire where conflict was ceaseless.

Of course, behind such stability, was the apt removal of factors that aimed to disturb it. This occasion, in which Chisha had been dispatched with around one-thousand soldiers under his command, was just another link in that chain of reception.

However, anticipating the dispatch of Chisha and the soldiers, the dissidents hastily took up arms and had tried to make preparations to intercept them. At the very least, they had displayed those movements.

Before that could bear any fruit, they were annihilated by the hand of somebody—

???: "—Report! We have encircled the perpetrator in question!"

Aide-De-Camp: "Did you get him?!"

Amidst his speculations, good news was delivered from an out-of-breath messenger. As the aide-de-camp raised his voice to ascertain the situation, the messenger pointed to the east side of the plain.

Chisha: "Lend me the monocular."

As Chisha issued that order, the soldier beside him presented the monocular—a tool inlaid with a curved piece of glass, for the purpose of seeing far into the distance. Receiving the tool, Chisha pointed the monocular to the east.

As the messenger had reported, the soldiers deployed upon the plain were in a formation to oust something, and present in the center was a target being pursued.

Focusing on the person in question with the monocular—

Aide-De-Camp: "Say not such foolish things! Reports ought to be accurate!"

Behind Chisha as he peered through the monocular, an angered bellow from the aide-de-camp reverberated through the encampment. His roar was directed at the messenger soldier, but as that person adjusted his posture,

Messenger: "Forgive me! However, matters are exactly as reported!"

Aide-De-Camp: "In that case, are you telling me to believe this ludicrous affair? —That the opponent, is a child?!"

As the aide-de-camp flared up in anger once again at the messenger, Chisha, the superior officer, would have given a calm and composed comment, but given this was a former member of the Imperial Army, he was exceptionally strict with disciplining his underlings.

Usually, that was reliable, but just for this instance, the messenger had erred not.

Chisha: “Ludgar-dono, he is giving a valid report. Certainly, the opponent is a child. However—”

As Chisha gazed over the battlefield with the monocular, his words seemed to have caused the aide-de-camp to gulp. However, at the current moment, Chisha did not have the freedom to turn his attention towards the aide de camp.

That was because—

Chisha: “Naturally, this cannot be labeled as any mere child, hmmm.”

After all, towards Chisha as he looked at him through the monocular, the boy was waving his hand with a smile.

2

—The boy stood upon a battlefield riddled with corpses.

Beneath a cloudy sky, a boy around eleven or twelve years old stood with his blue hair, appearing darker than its original shade, tied at the back of his head, and clad in a vividly bright pink kimono.

Unbecoming of a battlefield; such words did not exist in the Empire.

Even if strength and weakness existed among warriors, it was the Empire’s “law of iron and blood” that none were labeled as unfit to be a warrior based on age, sex, or race. Regardless of whether he liked or disliked those customs of the Empire, an evaluation criteria founded in the Imperial way was also present within Chisha.

And, without even needing to compare him with that criteria, the boy was exceptional.

Chisha: “—Four times.”

Surrounded by a thousand soldiers, Chisha took a step into the encirclement.

Of course, the aide-de-camp and the other soldiers had tried to prevent Chisha from stepping out to the front. But, having met eyes with the boy through the heaven’s eye, Chisha was clearly being called for. Even if something were to happen to him, his experienced aide-de-camp would likely pass the correct judgment in an instant.

—Against this small monster before them, they absolutely must not take up arms.

Chisha: “Four times, have you gone around subjugating those who brandish rebellious intent towards His Excellency Vincent Abellux. I wonder, have you no objections to our perception, hmmm?”

Boy: “Ohh, incredible! You’ve even properly counted the first instance, haven’t you now? For that one I’d yet to reach the idea of doing it in a consistent way so it was a bit of a vague method. But I’m glad that you still noticed it! Besides!”

Chisha: “Besides?”

Boy: “You are exceedingly superb! Coming out on your own in this situation. It’s truly splendid!”

Crossing his arms, the boy nodded in good humor, and affirmed both Chisha’s words and intent for dialogue.

For a moment, Chisha was taken aback by the energy-filled response, but he quickly regained his composure.

—As a matter of fact, this was not the first time that Chisha and the other soldiers had been deployed to subjugate dissidents, only for them to have already been annihilated before they could clash. It was the fourth instance of such an occurrence.

Having uncovered the presence of dissidents within the Abellux Domain, the troops dispatched to subjugate them were beaten to the punch. That had happened on three occasions in the past two months, and this time marked the fourth instance—

Boy: “You guys laid a trap. The people acting as an opposing force were something like former criminals this time. By deliberately giving criminals captured in the domain weapons and equipment and sending them out, you created a group of fugitives. Then, you sent soldiers to subjugate the dissidents that you yourselves created. —It was in order to lure me out!”

Chisha: “…I certainly did not think you had read that far into the situation.”

Boy: “It wasn’t anything more than just reading the synopsis. Are you the one who wrote this? Or was it perhaps the “Miracle of Abellux”, His Excellency Vincent Abellux?”

Chisha: “…”

On top of being a youth, his outspoken smiling figure produced an inconceivably precise analysis. At the same time, Chisha understood that this boy had taken action with his sights set on Vincent.

That fact that this boy was of extraordinary caliber, had already been proven.

As the boy said, the annihilated dissidents on this occasion had been prepared by the Abellux Domain, but even so, they were two hundred people willing to rampage to survive. He had exterminated them all on his own.

A boy who had killed two hundred riotous people, could not be declared unable to kill one thousand regular soldiers.

However—

Chisha: “Knowing that, may I ask what you intend to do?”

Boy: “Ho-Ho I see. I think it’s somewhat bad manners to respond to a question with another question but I do really want to talk about my own feelings and objective so I shall answer! Decidedly, if His Excellency Vincent Abellux is everything he's cracked up to be, I wish to make him my new master!"

Chisha: "—New master."

Raising a single finger, the boy briskly responded, and Chisha repeated his closing words. Then, in response, the boy gave a bright "Why indeed!".

Receiving that answer, Chisha drew out his favored steel fan from his clothing, and placing it to his mouth,

Chisha: "You mean to say that your attacks upon the dissidents until today, were all to promote yourself to His Excellency Vincent?"

Boy: "Yes! Even I don't think that directly marching into the manor and negotiating to please be hired is the right way to go about it. I had to capture his interest first and foremost!"

Chisha: "…"

The boy, who ought to have just given a somewhat decent analysis, suddenly became unhinged, leaving Chisha at a loss for words.

On the other hand, if the boy's objective had been to draw Vincent's attention, and make a strong impression of the existence known as himself, he had undoubtedly succeeded.

Chisha: "Notoriety in favor of anonymity, I see that is the way you are thinking."

Boy: "Yes preciscely… eh?! Notoriety?! Why might that be?! I think I've done a whole bunch of stuff to contribute to maintaining public order in the Abellux Domain!"

Chisha: "There are two things that prove the contrary, hmmm. Firstly, it is our mission to maintain the public order of the Abellux Domain, thus your actions are a usurpation of our work."

Boy: "Ugh! But-But isn't it better for public order if the dissidents disappear as quickly as possible? Rather, isn't it a problem that you were so late to come?! There, I win the argument!”

Chisha: “While the second is an issue of public order, it is certainly desirable that the dissidents have disappeared. However, from the ruler’s point of view, in the sense of beings who do not obey their feudal lord, just how much difference is there between a group of rebels, and you, selfish as you are?”

Rather, in the sense of an uncontrollable power, this lone boy could be labeled a larger threat to disrupting public order than the group of dissidents, who could be subjugated without issue.

Hence, the conversation returned to following the direction that Chisha had initially stated.

Chisha: “Notoriety in favor of anonymity, at the very least, you would be greatly mistaken if you thought you were spreading great renown for yourself, hmmm.”

Boy: “Gugu, gugugu, gugugugu…”

Chisha: “Hmph.”

Thrusting forth the steel fan in his hand, Chisha realized that he had said far too much, judging from the reddened face of the other party.

It was a bad habit of Chisha’s to talk his opponents into a corner—or rather, it was a bad habit of his to clearly explain everything that he was thinking if prompted.

In reality, when he had first met Vincent, too, he had spoken quite impolitely during their conversation within the dragon carriage. It was to the extent that Chisha himself thought he would have his head lopped off due to his irreverence.

Ultimately, that did not come to pass, but he could not expect to meet the same conditions with this boy.

As a result of this anger, Chisha would be torn limb from limb.

Chisha: “Surprisingly, I have many things left undone, so I think it rather suffocating, but—”

Boy: “Then, then, then! Please do your best to convince me!”

Chisha: “…Me?”

Chisha was about to lightly relinquish his own life, however, the boy presented a shocking offer. Perhaps the offer was more so audacious than shocking, but the boys eyes sparkled, as if to say he thought it was a fantastic idea,

Boy: “Regarding the two rebuttals you gave earlier, both of them would be completely resolved if you just enlisted me as an ally! Because it would have been the commander of your shock corps defeating the dissidents before you guys! And if I make him into my new master, then there’d be no chance for me to disobey the feudal lord! There, I win the argument!”

Chisha: “You will have to actually argue with me if you wish to win an argument.”

Shrugging his shoulders at the boy’s spirited words, as Chisha felt the devil’s luck in this situation where he had surprisingly not lost his head, he nonetheless endeavored to understand the boy’s thinking.

It was not simply a matter of making excuses or evading responsibility. To begin with, it was an issue of incentive.

Chisha: “For what reason do you wish to make His Excellency your new master? I shall say this now, but with your abilities, you could choose whoever you please to be your master.”

Boy: “Of course that’s right. After all I’m the leading actor of this world… because the world is centered around me, right?”

Chisha: “—. Well then, so, and…?”

Ignoring the rash remarks, Chisha prompted the boy to continue, to which he spread his arms out, and gestured to the sky.

Boy: “It’s precisely as you say. In other words I chose to come here!

All the while firmly believing that if I serve Vincent Abellux, the man who brought about the “Miracle of Abellux”, I’ll get considerably closer to achieving my desire!”

Chisha: “And your desire would be?”

Boy: “—To reach the Heavenly Sword.”

In that reply alone, no playfulness or leisure were mixed; those words were pure.

Within the declaration from the boy, who had erased his smile for just a moment, was held the power to make one believe in its truth.

Before Chisha as he caught his breath, the boy immediately cracked a thoughtless smile,

Boy: “That’s the long-cherished desire that I, as the leading actor of this world, must accomplish at all costs. It’s not good enough to just swing a katana around by myself deep in the mountains trying to accomplish that. My dad kinda wasted his whole life doing that so I’ll be going down a different path.”

Chisha: “A path different to that of your fathers, is it? You believe you will find that if you are together with His Excellency? For what reason do you place such expectations in His Excellency? Have you perhaps had the chance to exchange words with him once before?”

Boy: “Nope not at all. I’ve never even seen His Excellency Vincent from a distance. But it just felt right, y’know? Like a “shaboom” when I first learned of his name and deeds. I’m choosing to believe in that bolt of lightning that was born within me.”

In the boy’s grandly recited words, there were, well, no tricks designed to make Chisha believe him.

He ought to have prepared better sounding words, ought to have thrown in elements that would make Chisha sympathize, ought to have incorporated reasons that would make Chisha want to support him.

And yet, there was not a single fragment of that. Without any clever tricks, he was an existence truly becoming of a natural disaster.

A natural disaster that seemed to entirely be saying “just watch and learn”—to be precise, a natural disaster akin to a lightning bolt.

Boy: “Ahhh but! I’ve taken a liking to you with just a single glance. This is another thing that just feels right to me but don’t you think that we’re going to get on absolutely swimmingly?”

Chisha: “Ha.”

Boy: “—?”

Clapping his hands before his chest, the boy spoke earnestly, causing Chisha to involuntarily chuckle.

Just when he had thought the boy should at least employ some tricks to win his favor, what appeared were foolish prospects such as having taken a liking to Chisha, and the outlook that they would get on splendidly.

And, Chisha did not dislike those who spoke of such foolish prospects.

Chisha: “By the way, what about myself suited your fancy?”

Boy: “Of course! First and foremost no matter what anybody says, your appearance! A sexy guy with a lanky tall figure all the while growing out long rare black hair! There’s no better selection for a unique character to easily prove that the stage is heading to meet a new development!”

Smiling in satisfaction, the boy gave high praise to Chisha’s appearance. In all honesty, he had not expected his looks to be brought up here, so Chisha had continued to be taken by surprise.

Certainly, this boy would also take Vincent by surprise.

Chisha: “—Chisha Gold. That is my name.”

Spinning the steel fan in his hand, Chisha returned it to his waistband, and presented forth his hand. Looking down at that hand, the boy’s eyes suddenly sparkled, and,

Boy: “Cecilus Segmunt, the leading actor, starring on the stage known as this world. Pleased to make your acquaintance!”

Vigorously grabbing Chisha’s hand, the boy—Cecilus smiled from ear to ear. Having killed two hundred men without getting stained with a single drop of their blood, the boy smiled; and facing him, Chisha could also not help but grin.

In actuality, it was unclear if Cecilus’s words were delusions, or if he would have the power to bring them to fruition. However, this was not the first time that Chisha yielded to something he did not understand.

—Unexpectedly, Chisha had a hunch that, as Cecilus had said, this would end up becoming a long fellowship, and one that was not so bad.

END

Anastasia’s Search for Her Companions: Third Chronicle

1

???: “—Halibel, allow me to take over the lookout duty. You should rest a bit.”

In the dead of night, opposite across the crackling bonfire, Julius called out to the tall wolfman standing amidst the gloomy space.

With black kinagashi overtop his black fur, his attire easily blended in with cover of darkness. That said, a presence taller than two meters would typically not be easily missed. But, as if to make one forget that normalcy, his presence was so thin that it would cause one to doubt if he was really there, evidencing his high level of skill as a shinobi.

If not for the golden kiseru in his mouth reflecting the flame of the bonfire, it would be impossible to tell whether he was there or not, even within an audible range.

But then again, the person in question possessed no intention of hiding himself from Julius. In reality, he responded to Julius’s voice with a “Hmm~?”,

Wolfman: “Tho’ I don’t particularly mind whether we alternate or not? Ya see, I’m perfectly fine goin’ without sleepin’ for ‘bout a week.”

Being given a superhuman reply in such a calm manner, caused Julius to smile.

Wolfman: “Why ya smilin’? Ah, did ya maybe think I was jokin’?”

Julius: “No, while there are many aspects to your statements that cause me to doubt my ears, I do not believe they are jokes. If you say that you can go a week without sleeping, then it must be true. However…”

Wolfman: “However?”

Julius: “We still have a long way ahead. For the time being, we shall be traveling together in an equal relationship. And, frankly speaking, I feel guilty foisting the duty of guarding the camp onto you alone in the midst of such a relationship.”

Wolfman: “Hmfufufu, guess that’s somethin’ ya gotta be frank ‘bout.”

Giving a low chuckle to Julius’s words, the wolfman—Halibel narrowed his already-thread-like eyes even further, and puffed the smoke from his kiseru out into the night sky.

Currently, Julius and company were heading south through the Kararagi City-States, and were en route to cross over the border with the Vollachian Empire. The Empire had not only locked down traffic on the border with the City-States, but also with that of the Kingdom of Lugunica, so while all interference from outside nations had been closed off, they were planning to ignore that.

Behind that course of action, lay circumstances on a national level, and circumstances on a personal level to Julius and Anastasia.

And, since their plans aligned, Julius and Anastasia were being accompanied by Halibel—known as the Admirer, he was the strongest shinobi of the Kararagi City-States.

Julius: “…”

In all honesty, Julius initially harbored intense precaution and nervousness in regards to Halibel.

The name “Admirer” was known well throughout the world, and alongside the Sword Saint, Reinhard, he was one of the four people in this world considered to be of the strongest caliber. The objective for which Julius and Anastasia had passed through the City-States, was also not something that would have been looked at favorably by the mayors who organized Kararagi.

Worst case scenario, they had entered the country with the resolve to face even Halibel.

Halibel: “But, ya got up ‘n surprised when ya met me fer real ‘n saw that I was actually a good-natured uncle, ain’t that right?”

Julius: “It is true that I was quite surprised. However, it was not your temperament that had surprised me. Reinhard, with whom you are considered to be of equal rank, is a friend of mine whom I can respect. I am also acquainted with Vollachia’s Blue Lightning, Cecilus Segmunt-dono, but he, too… is not somebody who cannot be conversed with.”

Halibel: “Ya seem ta be pretty darn well connected, eh? Well, if ya know Cecilus, then I guess ya wouldn’t be too surprised that I’m like this. Yeah?”

Stifling a laugh, Halibel sought agreement for his impression towards the strongest of the Empire, but by closing his eyes and maintaining silence, Julius decided to protect the honor of his acquaintance.

In any case, what had surprised Julius about Halibel was not his personality, but rather,

Halibel: “—It’s ‘bout my relationship with lil’ Ana, ain’t it?”

Julius: “Yes, indeed. Originally, Anastasia-sama was the representative for a large company in Kararagi. Based on that position, it would not have been strange for her to be acquainted with those in important positions within Kararagi, but that is an association that has gone on for a decade now; I suspect it is a relationship unrelated to those positions.”

Halibel: “That so? Lil’ Ana ain’t changed a bit, she’s just as much of a rascal now as she was back then, ya know?”

Julius: “I do not doubt that she was also brilliant in those days.”

As Halibel bobbed the kiseru in his mouth up and down, Julius touched the scar under his left eye and nodded.

The sound of the bonfire crackling between the two of them grew stronger, and as if taking that as a signal, Halibel threw the ashes from his kiseru onto the fire.

Halibel: “Ain’t that the truth. While there ain’t no need ta change shifts fer lookout duty, I’d give a big ol’ warm welcome ta anybody ta talk to. ‘N since it seems like ya also got interest, how ‘bout I tell ya a bit of an old story?”

Julius: “…Will you really tell me, I wonder?”

Halibel: “Golly, quite the unexpected reaction ya got there. Ain’t that the direction that this here conversation was headin’?”

Julius: “Excuse me. I did not mean to pester you. However, if you would allow me to hear it, I do have interest. Though, of course, if it is not something Anastasia-sama would want me to hear, I will plug my ears.”

Halibel: “Quite faithful of ya. But ya know, I ain’t been forbidden from speakin’ on any of this, so…”

Julius felt somewhat reluctant towards that logic; but, on the other hand, it was difficult to imagine that Anastasia would not have been aware that such an exchange might have taken place. If it was truly something which she did not wish for him to hear, she would have either forbade Halibel from speaking about it in advance, or she would have given Julius a warning about it.

In other words—

Julius: “If she is going to scold us, then let us be rebuked together. By all means, I would love to hear it.”

Halibel: “Fantastic, how gosh darn fantastic, I’ve got a fondness for children who’re frank like ya. Alrighty then… ya know Ricardo, don’t’cha? He’s the one who’s together with lil’ Ana ‘n acts like her guardian or father.”

Julius: “A matter of course. He is a reliable ally of our Camp, and a friend whom I respect.”

Halibel: “Ya seem ta got lots of people that ya respect, eh? Ta lay everythin’ out in the open, the first time I met lil’ Ana was linked ta Ricardo… the time when I went ta carry out Ricardo’s assassination.”

Julius: "—Assassination…"

As an unthinkable, unsettling word was raised, Julius furrowed his brow. Halibel gave a well-meaning smile to Julius's reaction; however, he continued without declaring it a joke.

Halibel: "On that day, too, the atmosphere was as dry as it is today, 'n it was a night upon which ya could see the stars well."

2

—There was fear that the Hound, Ricardo Welkin, had disobeyed his oath.

That was the reason for the mission that had been told to Halibel by the Chief of the hidden village.

In the north-western region of the Kararagi City-States, there was a precipitous cliff through which a large chasm tore between the vast land, and at the bottom of that ravine was the hidden village of Halibel's origin—in all likelihood, it was this world's only settlement of wolfpeople.

As a result of what their ancestors had done in the Vollachian Empire, the wolfpeople had lost their place in the world. They were hunted to extinction in the Empire, and in other nations, they were hunted for the purpose of being sent off to the Empire; and, because of that, wolfpeople could no longer live normally, and had to live in hiding within this sole settlement.

A village that amounted to not even one hundred people, that was the birthplace of Halibel, and of Ricardo.

Halibel and Ricardo were from the same hometown, and on top of that, they were childhood friends of the same age. The easygoing Halibel and the lively Ricardo were of contrasting personalities, but they had gotten along well since they were infants.

However, unlike Halibel, who merely wished to live out his days peacefully, life in a narrow ravine was unsuited to Ricardo. Thus, on his fifteenth birthday, Ricardo left the village.

Village Chief: “So that the whereabouts of this village, and your own lineage, remain unknown, you must renounce your identity as a wolfman.”

That was the oath Ricardo had made to the village chief. It was a reinforced version of the law they originally had for occasions such as leaving the village to go shopping, but its effectiveness was absolute.

After all—

Village Chief: “If you ever disobey this oath, Halibel will come to slay you.”

Even in those days, Halibel had possessed peerless strength within the wolfpeople settlement, and there was an arrangement such that he would personally take down those who disobeyed their oaths.

Anyhow, Ricardo expressed no sorrow whatsoever at the fact that he would never be able to return to his hometown, and boldly departed from the hidden village. Back then, he did not invite Halibel to go together with him, either, but that was probably because he understood Halibel’s nature, and thus it evoked no particularly lonely emotions within him.

Cheerfully differing in their paths, Halibel and Ricardo went on to lead distinct lives as wolfmen—after fifteen or so years had elapsed, he was passed down this mission.

Halibel: “Ricardo, now ya’ve really gone ‘n done it.”

The first impression he harbored, was that of shock towards the name of his childhood friend he was hearing for the first time in a long while.

By this point in time, Halibel too had departed from the hidden village, but given that he was the sole person permitted to pronounce himself a wolfman by merit of his strength, he had the chance to return home from time to time. Of course, he always took care of his surroundings to ensure the hidden village would not be found, but that was the mission he had been ordered to complete upon returning home this time.

In all honesty, Halibel also had the choice to not carry out that mission.

Trying to coerce Halibel through threats, was likely something that nobody would be able to do to him. Nobody would think to do something so reckless, and be the cause of bringing the wolfpeople closer to extinction.

But, on the other hand, if Ricardo had disobeyed his oath, then Halibel thought that the appropriate recompense would be necessary.

Halibel: “It’s somethin’ ya decided on yer own. It just don’t make no sense for ya ta not properly protect that.”

If he was going to twist logic and try to have it his own way, then he would have no choice but to pay the appropriate reparations. For this case, the reparations would be the long hand of death that Ricardo himself ought to have accepted when he left the village.

Thus, in order to meet Ricardo for the first time in fifteen years, Halibel headed to his location.

And then—,

???: “Thread-eye’d unc, d’ya know my Ricardo?”

With intelligent eyes, and a lovely expression filled with charm, a girl called out to Halibel while her body overflowed with an immense desire to monopolize.

At an eatery in the Second City of Kararagi, Banan, the girl who appeared before Halibel as he gnawed on a grilled skewer was greeted by an unusual sense of surprise from him.

Over these past few days, Halibel had been monitoring Ricardo’s movements, and he knew that the girl before him—Anastasia, her name, worked at the Chuden Trading Company. She was quite close with Ricardo, and he had often witnessed the two of them together.

Nonetheless, it was unexpected for her to call out to him here—

Halibel: “Righty yep, sure do know each other. Even so, how could ya tell I was here?”

Given that Anastasia had directly challenged him to a confrontation like this, he did not want to trick or deceive her. And, in truth, Halibel was interested in the reason why she had made contact.

Halibel was a shinobi, too. He knew how to not be seen through tailing or monitoring, and he had taken care so that Ricardo, who possessed an excellent sense of smell, would not be able to detect his scent.

Just how had Anastasia managed to overcome Halibel’s vigilance? As Halibel voiced those doubts, Anastasia plopped herself down in the seat opposite him, and,

Anastasia: “Ya see, havin’ my own things gettin’ stolen by other people is what I hate the darn most. That’s why I’m extra vigilant ‘bout people who try to get close to Ricardo ‘n Mimi ‘n the others.”

Halibel: “That so? But, y’all… ya don’t look like a child with such amazin’ eyes ‘n ears.”

Anastasia: “…”

For a moment, Halibel’s gaze turned to the fox scarf wrapped around Anastasia’s neck.

It seemed like something far beyond the position of a youthful girl working as a subordinate for a trading company to be carrying around, but Anastasia’s exceedingly confident demeanor made it seem less so. —But then again, what had alerted Halibel to the scarf’s presence was not an imbalance between it and Anastasia, but the fact that it was alive.

In all likelihood, it was a Spirit. However, the reason for Anastasia’s confident attitude did not appear to be purely out of reliance on that Spirit.

Anastasia: “Ain’t that only natural? My feeble self ain’t capable of doin’ the same things as people like ya, thread-eye’d unc. ‘Cause of that, I simply rely on the people of the town.”

Halibel: “The people of the town?”

Anastasia: “People who approach my Ricardo ‘n the rest, dubious behaviors, strange invitations… in order to make sure there ain’t none of that, I’m on good terms with everyone in the town.”

And thus, Anastasia’s reply affirmed Halibel’s conjecture, and on top of that, greatly surpassed what he could have imagined.

Halibel: “Hahhaa, I see. Ain’t that truly somethin’, you’re quite the incredible kid, now ain’t’cha?”

Even Halibel could not conceal his surprise at Anastasia’s response.

Certainly, Halibel had strived to not be found by Ricardo, but he had not gone as far as to avoid the eyes and ears of unrelated parties, such as the townspeople or dining hall employees. Indulging in alcohol and meals like this, he had been slowly investigating the people around Ricardo.

Halibel: “I ain’t never thought that the whole town would be spyin’ on those who’re tryin’ ta spy on Ricardo ‘n the people ‘round him.”

Anastasia: “Thank ya for yer praise. So then, why’re ya keepin’ an eye on Ricardo?”

Halibel: “Did’ya think I’d tell ya just ‘cause ya asked?”

Anastasia: “It’s fine even if ya don’t talk. Instead, just listen to what I gotta say. —Is it somethin’ that can’t be resolved with money?”

Halibel: “Bubu.”

Choking up, he made a mess inside the sake bottle titled into his mouth. Wiping off the sake that had spilled onto the corner of his mouth with his finger, Halibel stared at Anastasia.

She had an adorable face, but her expression was serious. To be precise, it was the gaze of a merchant of Kararagi.

Halibel: "…"

Keeping his silence for a while, Halibel received Anastasia's power of insight through the golden irises that lay within his thread-like eyes.

She might not have known Halibel's identity, but she showed tremendous courage to act that way while understanding that he was no half-hearted opponent. —He could tell that Ricardo had been looking after her.

As ordered by the village, he had located Ricardo in Banan, and had been spying on his movements for a few days—he could fathom a guess that the fact that he was working as a guard for the Chuden Trading Company, was not because the company had gotten a collar on him, but for the purpose of watching over this here Anastasia.

A capable mercenary by the name of the "Hound" had gained fame through various incidents that had occurred throughout the cities of Kararagi. The attitude of spreading his name was considered by the village to be a reason to fear that Ricardo had disobeyed his vow, but Halibel thought the true motive for that lay elsewhere.

—The reason that Ricardo was putting strength into the name of the "Hound" was in order to serve as the watchdog of this girl, who looked forward to the future, and to ensure she was an existence that nobody could lay their hands upon.

Having come to this understanding, Halibel drew his kiseru from his pocket, and,

Halibel: "How 'bout ya tell me all about it as I puff on this?"

Anastasia: "If you're willin' to study for it, then sure."

As Anastasia responded with nary a pause, Halibel gave a huge smile, and lit the tobacco packed into his kiseru.

3

Halibel: "'N so, it was quite a darn masterpiece after she wrapped up tellin' it ta me, but then since me 'n lil' Ana shook hands, Ricardo caught onto my scent 'n he marched all the way back ta the village."

Julius: "—. I wonder if it was truly alright to tell me about the village."

Halibel: "Well, aside from its location, its existence in itself is kinda an open secret. Ever since I made a name for myself, there ain't nobody still tryna search for it."

As Halibel spoke in an indifferent tone, Julius accepted it with a "So it is that sort of thing".

According to his story, Ricardo's act of spreading his name as a mercenary was in order to protect his employer, Anastasia, and a similar thing could be said about Halibel.

By making a name for himself, Halibel warded off trouble from befalling his village or other wolfpeople. —Without a doubt, Halibel and Ricardo were childhood friends.

Julius: "Nevertheless, I am surprised regarding the young Anastasia-sama's capacity of intelligence."

Halibel: "Tho' from my point of view, it was a matter of how incredible I found her attachment ta those who she'd gotten in her pockets. That's why, ya really oughta prepare yerself, Julius."

Julius: "I am prepared. Ever since the day I called Anastasia-sama to the Kingdom, and looked to her as my lord, that I have been."

Halibel spoke with a teasing tone; however, Julius responded honestly.

There was neither lie nor falsehood present. From the outset, that which they ought to strive for was the apex of the Kingdom. No matter the trial and tribulation they faced along the way, he had no intention of halting his steps.

Julius: "But then again, far more than I can imagine, the road will be steep, filled with undulations."

Halibel: “Hahaha, ain’t that just the truth. Through Lugunica ‘n Kararagi ‘n Vollachia, it must be tough ta tag along with lil’ Ana’s desires. Really now, Ricardo was quite the find… nah, he couldn’t have asked ta be found by anyone better.”

As Halibel calmly spoke those words, Julius quietly nodded in agreement.

Then, after Julius gazed up at the night sky, while he resupplied firewood to the bonfire,

Julius: “The night is still young. How about it? I am also interested in that story about Ricardo going back to the village. Would you not tell it to me?”

Halibel: “Oh, why not? In that case, I want ya ta tell me stories ‘bout lil’ Ana in the Kingdom, too.”

Julius: “Most certainly. My acquaintance with Anastasia-sama might be short compared to yours, but I have many a tale to tell.”

As Halibel plopped himself down into a sitting position, Julius rectified the bottom of his kimono, and with the bonfire between them, he began speaking of his reminiscences of a lone girl.

The flame of the bonfire that burned throughout the night, was constantly replenished in turns until the early hours of the morning.

END

The Dragon Kingdom: Meili's Witchbeast Observation Record VI

1

The journey to the Pleiades Watchtower to prove the efficacy of Meili Portroute's power to the top brass of the kingdom was successful. Consequently, the five members of the Felt Camp became the second group of people to reach the tower, preceded by Anastasia and Emilia.

Although the group had to engage in a skirmish against the Divine Dragon Volcanica right as they were about to reach the tower, they figured out a way around its attacks, making it seem as though everything was going well.

"But it seems like that really isn't the case at all," Felt muttered, confirming all the pages in one of the books she picked up off the floor were blank, frowning and scratching her head.

The scattered books weren't limited to just the ones around her. Hundreds of them had been pulled from the shelves and strewn across the floor of the room. Since this wasn't the doing of the book-hating Felt, or anyone from her camp, only one logical conclusion could be drawn from this.

"I wonder if someone came here after Emilia and I left the toweer," pondered Meili.

"Whoever that is must have pretty bad manners," commented Felt as she called her knight's name. "Reinhard."

"Yes, my lady?"

"If I remember correctly, the Witch of Envy's shrine is around here, right?" she asked in a slightly lowered voice.

Reinhard's blue eyes shuddered at her question. "I'll go check it out right away. Ezzo, please look after Lady Felt."

“Of course, leave it to me,” Ezzo replied. “You should be careful as well. According to literature, the witch’s shrine is shrouded in miasma… A toxic environment that can easily destroy a man’s psyche.”

“I’ll be fine. I have the Divine Protection of Anti-Malignance.”

With that, Reinhard swiftly left the Great Library of Pleiades, seen off by Felt’s nod. Meili looked puzzled as she also watched him run out with great urgency.

“Miss Meili, the Young Master is suspecting the involvement of the Witch Cult,” explained Flam.

“The Young Master always considers the worst-case scenario,” added Grassis.

“The Witch Cult… I see, that makes sense,” Meili said, seemingly convinced. She finally understood what Felt and the others were talking about in their short communication. “There’s a really good chance the person who snuck in here is someone from the Witch Cult who wants to release the Witch of Envy that’s sealed in the shriine.”

The Pleiades Watchtower was originally built to surveille the shrine that seals the Witch of Envy in the far eastern land. Sand Time and the Sage were also part of an effort to prevent anyone from reaching it. As a result, these mechanisms successfully kept the members of the Witch Cult away. However, nothing was stopping them anymore.

The only thing that bothers me is how quickly they were able to take action, Felt thought. But then again, this is the chance of a lifetime for the Witch Cult. “Besides, they’re a bunch of loonies who’ll do anything. I wouldn’t be surprised one bit if they had a member who watched the desert all day long just to check if the sandstorm ever dies down, albeit that thought creeps me out.”

“I completely agree,” Ezzo said. “So, what should be our next move, Miss Felt?”

“Are you askin’ me whether we should investigate the matter or retreat?” Felt asked with her arms crossed.

“Yes.” Ezzo nodded. With an intruder likely in the tower, either one of the two options Felt suggested seemed like the natural courses of action they could take.

Felt glanced at Meili as she considered her options. She wasn’t looking for advice from her, but her eyes wandered towards the young girl as she considered her position in the bigger picture. As mentioned earlier, Meili had already proven her worth as soon as the party reached the tower. In other words, she no longer had any reason to stick around now that she had achieved her objective. But, she also can’t cross the desert alone. So, I guess she has no choice but to follow our lead.

While Felt concluded her thoughts, Meili felt something on her head.

“Ms. Mini Crimson Scorpion?” she said, calling on the mini crimson scorpion that had crawled out of her blue hair, clicking its pincers at something as if to intimidate an imminent threat.

Wondering what it was being so aggressive for, Meili turned her attention towards where the scorpion was looking. There, she saw a white bird perched quietly atop a bookshelf. She widened her eyes, gulping in surprise.

“Flam! Grassis!” Felt quickly yelled, also noticing the bird.

The girls reacted swiftly to their mistress’s voice. As one of them made a foothold with her hands, the other kicked off of it, darting towards the bookshelf. The whole movement was coordinated so smoothly, despite having no time to discuss it, that it was as if they were one entity.

As the girl reached the bookshelf, she stretched out her arms to catch the bird. Right before she could, however, it spread its wings and flew away. The library was big, but was obviously less spacious than outside, so there weren’t many places it could go. Despite this, it glided gracefully around the room after avoiding the girl.

"It'll be a bit painful," Ezzo said to the bird as it flew into a ball of water headfirst, causing it to drown in midair.

It looked as though the inside of a bucket full of water was floating in the middle of the room. This was the doing of Ezzo, who had produced the water with magic after extending his hands.

He then began moving his hands, reshaping the water until only the bird's head emerged. A cage made of water was completed.

"You took the good part, Master Ezzo," said Flam.

"Credit stealing mage," commented Grassis.

"Stop whining. He wouldn't've been able to capture it if you two hadn't gotten it away from the bookshelf," Felt interjected. "Good job, teach."

"No, the true praise should be given to Miss Meili for noticing it in the first place," Ezzo responded modestly. "I should've been more alert. I'm sorry."

Meili wasn't listening to Ezzo. Her attention was focused on the bird. She was obviously surprised to find a bird in the library, but that wasn't all, and Felt picked up on it.

"What's wrong, Meili?" asked Felt. "Do you recognize it?"

"I saw them flying around the tower all the time," Meili said after a pause. "I also saw a few of them on the balconyy. I remember Subaru being really creeped out by theem."

"All the time, huh?" Felt muttered.

They looked like ordinary birds. In fact, Meili distinctly remembered her not being as creeped out as Subaru. However, she also had a feeling he must have had a good reason to be so.

The captured bird made no movement or a single noise, as if it knew any resistance would be futile.

"They are…" Meili muttered without finishing her thought.

The bird's dark eyes fixed on Meili, making her nervous. Its eyes were like a deep void, ready to draw all who stared into them into their depths. They reminded her of the feeling she had when she looked down the spiral staircase.

"Ah," Meili whimpered, as a beam of light penetrated the head of the bird that was staring at her, causing it to explode right before her eyes. She needed some time to register what she had just witnessed.

The beam had been fired by the mini crimson scorpion that was still on top of Meili's head. It had shot the bird with a beam that came out of the tip of its tail, just like how Shaula would.

"Wha- Miss Meili! Why would you kill it?!" Ezzo cried, bemoaning her sudden tyrannical action.

"I-It wasn't mee," protested Meili. "Ms. Mini Crimson Scorpion did it without my permiss—ah!" However, the mini crimson scorpion started pulling her hair as she tried to explain herself. She didn't know what to make of its sudden insubordination.

Or could it be… "Is there something you wanna tell mee?" Meili asked, sensing that there was more to its actions than met the eye.

Before she could figure out what that was, however, she suddenly heard Felt click her tongue.

"Meili!" Felt shouted. "You said you saw more of these birds, right?! Where?!"

"Huh?"

"Where are the other birds?!" Felt repeated, closing in on Meili and shaking her by the shoulders. "I have a bad feeling about this!"

Meili looked dumbfounded. She pointed at the hallway that connected to the staircase with Felt's desperate face inches away from hers. "B-Beyond the wall that connects to the outside downstaairs, ah!"

Felt suddenly picked her up. "Give me directions!" she demanded, as she started running. She rushed down the stairs at an unbelievable speed and arrived on the fourth floor. Ezzo and her two retainers followed after her, but they were no match for her speed.

“That waay,” Meili said.

Felt ran like the wind in the direction Meili gave.

They came to a wall that appeared to be a dead end, but upon closer look, they could see that there was a hallway hidden beyond the outer wall. Meili pointed at the wall. Felt followed her direction and found herself jumping outside, onto a balcony under a bright blue sky. There, they found a flock of the very same white birds.

The two were speechless. There were about a hundred of them, all completely silent. This sight alone gave Meili an eerie feeling, but what made it worse was how they all simultaneously turned their heads at the two of them as they stormed onto the balcony. Meili felt a chill run down her spine.

“Don’t let them get away!” Felt yelled sharply.

In the next moment, Felt dropped Meili to the floor. She then pulled out her two daggers, held them in a reverse grip, and lunged at the birds. She began swinging them, aiming at the birds’ wings to stop them from flying away. However, she was utterly outnumbered, and the birds didn’t stay still for long. They spread their wings, and all simultaneously flew away from the balcony. She couldn’t stop all of them from flying away with only her two daggers.

“El huma!” Ezzo chanted as he arrived at the scene, carried by Flam and Grassis. He quickly understood what Felt was intending to do and offered assistance with his magic.

His magic froze the birds in midair, locking them each in pebbles of ice. However, he couldn’t catch them all, only managing to get around half.

“Shit! I didn’t wanna resort to this!” Felt yelled, gritting her teeth, sensing that they wouldn’t be able to capture all the birds.

She sheathed her daggers and took out a black object. In the next instant, the Divine Dragon appeared in the sky above the balcony, causing a whirlwind around him.

“I, am Volcanica. In accordance with the ancient covenant, the will of thee who hath reached the top shall be questioned.”

In awe of the sudden appearance of the Divine Dragon, Meili and the rest were at a loss for words.

Felt pointed at the sky. “Volcanica! Don’t let a single one of them escape!”

Volcanica said nothing.

“Please!” Felt pleaded.

Volcanica finally lifted his head, taking in the sight of the tiny creatures flying all around. “Thou, who hath reached the top of the tower. Step forth onto the first floor, almighty petitioner.”

After making a one-way statement as usual, the dragon launched a breath attack all around his vicinity. Its devastating power was more than enough to incinerate all the poor birds.

“Unbelievablee,” Meili muttered, slowly opening her eyes, which she had shut due to the brightness of the breath attack. She looked up to see all the birds and even the clouds gone, and only the clear sky created by the Divine Dragon spreading above her.

2

“There was nothing wrong with the seal in the shrine,” reported Reinhard, who had returned from surveying the Witch of Envy’s shrine shortly after the flock of birds were exterminated. “However, considering the abnormal number of birds you had to deal with, I believe the tower and shrine are in need of new management, my lady.”

No one disagreed with Reinhard. They all understood very well that the tower and the shrine could greatly affect the world if not managed properly.

“Why don’t you try asking the Divine Dragon, Lady Felt?” suggested Flam.

“Lady Felt, the Divine Dragon tamer,” posited Grassis.

“I plan on askin’ him to not let weirdos like members of the Witch Cult get near,” Felt responded. “But there’ll always be things that’ll slip by, like those birds. It’s practically impossible to prevent those sorts of intrusions.”

“Why not just make him keep an eye on those as well, and not just the Witch Cult?” asked Flam.

“Make him stop everything,” said Grassis.

“That’s easier said than done,” Felt retorted, shrugging her shoulders as she frowned. “Y’know how forgetful that Dragon is, don’t ya?”

Meanwhile, Volcanica was back at the entrance. Contrary to the responsive behavior he showed during the earlier emergency, he was back to his usual non-responsive self.

Meili was curious if Felt also had the quality to communicate with the Divine Dragon like Emilia did, but she kept quiet as she thought this wasn’t the right time to pursue this question.

“As you suspected, Miss Felt, these aren’t your ordinary birds,” said Ezzo, who was inspecting the birds that were left on the balcony.

He held the body of a bird that had one of its wings cut up by Felt, then placed his hand on its other wing. Suddenly, the bird’s body started breaking down into glowing pieces, and soon vanished.

“Was that…” Meili uttered. “Are you telling me all of these birds are made up of mana?”

“Precisely,” said Ezzo. “Their bodies are made up similarly to that of an artificial spirit… High level magic, to say the least. Not something you can see in modern times.”

“Even you can’t do it, teach?” Felt asked.

Ezzo paused for a moment. “It’s a magic that’s not passed down anymore. If given enough time, though, I can analyze it and figure out how it works.”

“Unfortunately, we don’t have that luxury,” Reinhard said, then turned his attention to Felt. “Lady Felt.”

Felt nodded at her knight’s call. “There was someone watching us, but I’m pretty sure we prevented them from retrieving the birds. But we should keep someone by Meili’s side for a while, just to be safe.”

“M-Mee?” Meili said.

“Whoever was responsible for the birds is keen to learn about the tower,” Reinhard explained. “They must also be interested in how to safely traverse the desert.”

Meili placed her hand on her chest as she listened to Reinhard. Then the mini crimson scorpion began clicking its pincers vigorously on top of her head.

Seeing the scorpion’s behavior, Felt let out a little groan. “We’re not tryna scare you. As for our first objective… We got to learn that we can cross the desert with you by our side, and that the Dragon won’t attack us if we have the talon. There were just as many good results from this trip as there were bad.”

“That’s a poor waay to make me feel better,” Meili said, showing a little smile. I’m such a shallow person. I came on this trip without expecting too much, and here I am scared and anxious that my mission is going to fail. It must mean that I’m so shallow that as soon as I even see a glimpse of a bright prospect, it makes me want to cling to it.

“Miss Felt, Sir Reinhard,” began Ezzo, “about our next course of action…”

“I know,” Felt interjected. “You wanna say that we shouldn’t leave the tower unsupervised, right? I wonder what we should do next, too.”

“There’s the option to leave me here for the time being,” suggested Reinhard.

Meili watched from the sidelines as Felt and the others discussed their next move. The sight of this reminded her of the Emilia Camp, and that made her long for her friends who were not there at the moment.

“I really am shallow,” Meili mumbled to herself, feeling the weight of the mini crimson scorpion on her head, and snapping out of her melancholic mood. She reminded herself that there were people by her side no matter how she was feeling.

3

While Meili reflected on herself, and Felt discussed their plan, an incident was taking place far away from the Augria Sand Dunes, the home of the Pleiades Watchtower.

Noticing that the poor lives of the birds had been snuffed out, a slender figure shuddered. “Something must have happened to them,” the figure said, lowering her eyes that were framed with long lashes.

The figure prayed for the souls of the lost lives.

The fact that none of them came back must mean something must have happened that prevented them from returning. And it is extremely uncommon for such a thing to happen there. However, as to whether I should be happy about that or not… I do not know.

“But why would anyone do something so cruel?”

The birds, with their pure white wings and innocent eyes, epitomized purity. The idea that they were so mercilessly destroyed incredibly hurt the figure and caused her great anguish.

“But even so…” a smooth, clear voice resonated from the figure’s thin lips, vibrating the air around her and proving her existence in the world. “I wish I could understand them. Every single one of them.”

She prayed, adored, pitied, loved, and hopelessly longed for everything and everyone, including what had been lost and those who lost them.

END

Volume 38

Chapters 61-Prologue

Chapter 61:
Palladio Manesque

1

—Palladio Manesque, one of the princes who had competed with the Seventy-Seventh Emperor of the Vollachian Empire, Vincent Vollachia, in the Imperial Selection Ceremony.

In the seventy-seventh Imperial Selection Ceremony, which was one of even fiercer competition compared to past selections, he had allied himself with the deemed forerunner Lamia Godwin, and had nearly cornered Vincent Abellux, who at the time had not yet assumed the throne, as well as Prisca Benedict.

Ultimately, Palladio's abilities were considered to be a threat, and having been impeded by the colluding Vincent and Prisca, he was forced to withdraw from the Imperial Selection Ceremony; however, Palladio himself was not at fault for his own defeat.

It was the fact that Lamia, with whom he had formed an alliance, had been taken down prematurely, that resulted in a fatal alteration in the course of the Imperial Selection Ceremony unbeknownst to Palladio and led to his defeat.

Palladio: "Truly, was she not just a hopeless younger sister solely proficient at lip service."

Having already lost her existence, in a way that proved that she was all bark and no bite, was Lamia.

When Lamia had attacked the dragon carriages as they fled from the Imperial Capital, Palladio had also lent his eyes upon her request. And yet, Lamia had lost pitifully and met her demise. Both in life and in death, she was nothing more than a foolish sister who left behind no accomplishments worthy of her grandiose words.

Sneering at Lamia's disgraceful behavior, Palladio, with gold pupils that bore witness to his undead nature—including the third eye on his forehead, he narrowed his three eyes and fixed his gaze upon the battlefield.

On the battlefield before him, an immense number of undead marched forward in ranks, armed with immortality and a deep-rooted obsession to capture the city that was their target, relentlessly continuing their resolute and repulsive attacks.

Commanding the undead that blanketed these vast lands, and capturing the city in question—the Fortified City of Garkla, and thus destroying once and for all the Vollachian Empire that had been misguided to this day, that was Palladio's duty.

That, was the duty bestowed upon Palladio as one chosen by the heavens.

—Palladio was a descendant of the Evil Eye tribe, a race blessed by the world.

In ancient times, the Evil Eye Tribe was said to have guided the mediocre human race with their special powers, and the Divine Protection, which was a gift usually granted to a select few, was bestowed upon every descendant of their entire race, one favored by the heavens.

However, the Evil Eye Tribe was feared by the people for their superior powers, and was also an unfortunate race that had been driven out from the center stage of history—Palladio had a mission to save his fellow tribesmen who had fallen into a world of suffering.

He must prove it. That the Evil Eye Tribe was the most preeminent race in the world.

For that very reason—

Palladio: "This Empire built by cowards such as you two, I shall destroy and rebuild it."

Running his fingers through his undulating green hair, within the mind of Palladio, whose undead visage had distorted, were the aggravating images of both Vincent and Prisca.

Having violated the unwritten rule of the Imperial Selection Ceremony that only a single individual was permitted to live, towards the ignoble nature of the two who had colluded to survive together, as a member of that same Vollachian Imperial Family, he held nothing but contempt. At this rate, it would not be surprising that, even during the Imperial Selection Ceremony, there had been dastardly attempts made to trample upon the long history of the Vollachian Empire and its weight. —No, rather, it would have been only natural to assume that some kind of conspiracy was at play.

Palladio: “If not for that, for what reason would I have fallen behind the likes of you and your ilk.”

Being a descendant of the Evil Eye Tribe, chosen by the heavens, utilizing that extraordinary talent, Palladio had swept aside all of his enemies and established his position as a prince of Vollachia.

He, who upheld the Empire’s law of iron and blood above all else, could never have been inferior to weaklings who only engaged in collusion and schemes.

Therefore—

Palladio: “—Vincent and Prisca, I shall sentence the both of you.”

And thus, once the Vollachian Empire was flattened into its ideal form, it would be governed by Palladio, who possessed the lineage and qualities befitting its ruler.

As for the manner of his rule, it would be modeled after the one Palladio had long regarded as the greatest Emperor of all time, the one who ruled the Vollachian Empire with pain and fear, the Emperor of the Briar—Eugard Vollachia, would be the example he would follow.

Making the authority of the Emperor known far and wide, the regency of Eugard, who was said to have bound the hearts of his own people with thorns, was precisely Palladio’s ideal.

In later works of fiction, there were accounts of foolish rumors concerning the Emperor of the Briar living for the love of a mere village girl; upon Palladio’s ascension to the throne, all of those would be incinerated and buried.

The basis for Palladio’s confidence, of course, was the ability bestowed upon Palladio as a member of the Evil Eye Tribe that formed the core of his unique nature, an extraordinary power.

Palladio: “…”

Closing both of his eyes, he focused his attention to the third eye that rested upon his forehead, his Evil Eye.

Instantly, Palladio’s field of vision was no longer simply a narrow view of the battlefield before him, but a vast, heavenly gaze that grasped the expansive space of the surrounding area in its entirety.

It was truly the viewpoint of the sun—Palladio’s third eye integrated his own field of vision with that of the sun, providing the perspective of a ruler looking down upon the world at large.

Making use of this, Palladio fulfilled his role as commander of the undead army with dignity.

For ordinary individuals, one might boast that they could win by brute force with the inexhaustible forces of the undead, but employing such poor tactics to force one’s way through would not be a battle befitting an emperor.

Bringing the opponent to their knees by means of both force and ingenuity, such was the true embodiment of the law of iron and blood of Vollachia.

Palladio: “You have prepared suitable experts and have made ample provisions. And it is apparent that you happen to be blessed with subordinates… but in the end, it seems like that is your limit, Vincent.”

The coordinated attack between the soldiers stationed on the walls and the powerful troops that charged forth was impressive, and the undead, despite their superior numbers, were unable to breach even the first layer of Fortified City’s defenses. However, the fact that they were using some of the highest quality cards in their hand so early was naught but a sign of insecurity concerning their fighting strength.

After all, Palladio's Evil Eye could see through to the city's interior—most of the occupants were refugees who had fled from the Imperial Capital and various towns and villages, and without having the power to fight, they were simply a hindrance.

From their standpoint, defending the thickest and largest walls was the only thread onto which they could cling.

Palladio: "I shall teach those ignorant fools who do not realize that this is naught but a fragile and fleeting illusion. —You people, the world which you see through your two eyes is so narrow that I cannot help but pity you."

Scoffing at such a foolish resistance, Palladio held up his hand and projected his voice to a distant location.

This, also, was an innate power of Palladio as a member of the Evil Eye Tribe—telepathic communication, which allowed him to project his voice to any person whose hair, nails, or body parts he had taken, regardless of the distance that separated them.

With that, Palladio made the decisive move that would end the Fortified City.

That being—

Palladio: "—The undead flying dragons are to be deployed at once. To those fools who focus all of their efforts upon the city walls, we shall teach the methods by which a true Emperor wages war."

2

???: "—The enemy's flying dragon squadron has crossed the great mountain behind the grand fortress and entered the sky above! Right now, the enemy soldiers are being dropped in and the undead have invaded the city!"

The messenger who came racing into the command room reported the change of situation between pants and breaths.

The walled fortress had been suffering from simple yet powerful brute force attacks, but now the opponent had decided to attack from the air, the largest weak point in Garkla.

Gouged out of a mighty mountainside, the city's greatest fortress could be boasted to have a robustness that would not easily be defeated even if the ramparts surrounding the city were breached. However, the sky was the one place where it was defenseless.

Serena: "Just when the situation has become worrying, you make your move. This tactic, as I assumed, is probably directed by His Excellency Palladio Manesque."

Otto: "The Prince of Vollachia, who competed with His Excellency the Emperor in the Imperial Selection Ceremony?"

Otto muttered to Serena, who frowned at the report and traced the white sword wound on her face with her finger.

Among the opponents who had joined the undead side, he was named as a target to be wary of in advance. He was a rare person with a unique ability that came from the Evil Eye Tribe, and his nature was both sadistic and ruthless.

It would not be easy to handle an opponent who concentrated all of their strength into one's defenseless blind spot, but it was a common war strategy.

Especially in siege warfare, a small hole could often bring about destruction.

On such a large scale, it would have been fatal to have such a hole created.

Therefore—

Otto: "It is in accordance with the theory."

Serena: "—? Theoree?"

Otto: "Nevermind, no need to worry about it. More importantly…"

Serena tilted her head at the unfamiliar sound, waved her hand lightly, and then Otto gave a nod of approval to Berstetz in the center of the room to send instructions to the messenger.

In response, Berstetz's thread-like eyes slightly opened,

Berstetz: "Give them the order. —It is time for the Special Forces."

Yes, he was able to use words that were not familiar to him in an appropriate manner.

3

—That ought to have been an arrow fired as the decisive blow in the battle for the Fortified City of Garkla.

The utility of flying dragon riders was common knowledge that went without saying for the people of the Empire, but when applying the condition of them being undead, it was something that could only be accomplished provided that both rider and flying dragon were resurrected.

Fulfilling that prerequisite, the undead flying dragon riders contributing to the undead forces were few in number. Therefore, they had been handled carefully, naught else but upon the scene where their involvement would be critical to the utmost.

Palladio: "—The undead flying dragons are to be deployed at once. To those fools who focus all of their efforts upon the city walls, we shall teach the methods by which a true Emperor wages war."

From the officer commanding the hosts of undead, an order was sent out telepathically.

Obeying the strange voice that seemed to echo directly within their heads, the few undead flying dragon riders took their undead flying dragons along with him, and seized the skies of the Fortified City upon the flaps of their beloved dragons' wings.

Towering over the rear of the Fortified City, surmounting the height of the great mountain which served as the national border with the neighboring countries, was a life-threatening act, no matter how skilled of flying dragon riders they were. Disregarding that greatest obstacle of risking their lives, the undead flying dragon riders accomplished the objective of their operation.

Undead Flying Dragon Riders: “…”

Below the golden glow of their undead eyes, the great fortress, protected by a robust wall built of stone, could be seen.

Deployed there was a dragonship carried by nearly one hundred undead flying dragons, and the unruly group of undead boarded upon it.

The ones in charge of transport were undead, and thus the ones being sent in were also undead—it was a blasphemous tactic, one that cared naught for survival.

???: “Go.”

Receiving that brief command, the neighing undead flying dragons dropped the dragonship upon that place.

It was an act of barbarity that accounted not for their speed or position of landing, one that would be more appropriately titled as being cast off; in order to deliver a fatal blow to the Vollachian Empire, it spun and spun as it approached the city’s center.

And then—

???: “IN OUR CAPACITIES, WE ARE THE—!!”

???: “STRONGEST! STRONGEST! STRONGEST—!!”

The group that had jumped out like a tempest from the mountainside stormed the flank of the plummeting dragonship, and from the inside out, pulverized what was to be the fatal blow upon the Imperial Soldiers to smithereens.

4

—Appointed as the “Special Forces”, the time that they spent waiting was tantalizing, despite the heavy responsibility.

However, even though it was tantalizing, there was no fear that their efforts would amount only to a swing and a miss.

That was because Natsuki Schwartz was a man who had already won over the trust of Gustav Morello.

Unconditionally assisting in the things that he had decided, believing in the events that he was convinced would occur without any basis, Gustav had resolved himself to fight, to the best of his ability, against any enemy whom he had declared they would oppose.

Therefore, ever since the battle surrounding the Fortified City had commenced, as they felt the fierce fighting of the members of the Pleiades Battalion aside from themselves unfolding, they patiently awaited their time.

But then again, the act of waiting, and being unbothered by waiting, were entirely different matters.

Gustav: “OHHHH—!”

With a powerful bellow, Gustav swung about his four arms, and rampaged as he pleased atop the plummeting dragonship.

The undead on board the dragonship had thrust their weapons into the vessel, securing their bodies in place so as to not be thrown off. Because of that, their response to the surprise attack of Gustav’s squad had been delayed.

Comprising the “Special Forces” together with Gustav, were not Schwartz’s personal guards of Hiain, Weitz, and Idra, but rather the veteran gladiators who had spent a long time on the Gladiator Island—that was to say, they were individuals with whom Gustav was well acquainted.

As Governor of Ginunhive, it was Gustav’s duty to administer the Gladiator Island without a hitch, and he had a better grasp of the gladiators’ abilities than they themselves did.

Though, he had never imagined that this kind of service would fall under his duties as Governor.

Gladiator: “To think they’d send rabbits in order to kill wolves.”

Gladiator: “We’re the wind, ‘n ain’t nobody can fuckin’ surround the wind!”

Gladiator: “Kuhahahaha! It’s a brawl, a brawl’s surely brewin’ I tell ya! Stakin’ my life really gets me fuckin’ goin’~!!”

Hot-headed, yet capable individuals such as the lone-wolf Jawsrough, Phenmelle, and Milzac wielded their weapons together with Gustav upon the dragonship, and subjugated the undead one after another.

The mysterious phenomenon of the raised fighting spirit surrounding the Pleiades Battalion allowed the gladiators versed in battle to be deployed against powerful fighters with many years of military experience, and to sufficiently display their strength even in the poor situation of a plummeting dragonship. —Nay, it was rather the situation upon which their lives were staked, which had allowed them to display abilities that exceeded even their true strength.

Gustav: “That is precisely why selecting a suicide squad… no, why selecting the “Special Forces” is effective.”

On this battlefield, the duty of Gustav’s squad had an equal, if not greater, danger to their lives than those holding back the swarms of undead on the front lines.

They were entrusted with such an important task; however, it was imperative that Gustav’s squad did not die.

To have not even a single one of them die, such was the strict order imposed on them by the Boss of the Pleiades Battalion.

Gustav: “As the official, I do not deem it acceptable to serve two masters. Therefore, I do not look up to you as my master, but… the earnest request of a friend, is something I wish to undertake to the best of my capacity.”

Saying that, Gustav grabbed the heads of the undead who had pulled out their weapons and were moving to counterattack, and smashed the four bodies together above his head, shattering them.

Scattering their earthen remains as their crumbling resounded, he immediately seized the next enemies.

Gustav despised the violent and savage temperament of the Multi-Arm Tribe so very much.

As much as he could, he regulated his own heart, and, not wanting to surrender himself to belligerence or anger, he had intended on living a life with firm restrictions upon himself.

In this Vollachian Empire, while serving as Governor of the Gladiator Island, he had maintained his principles.

Gustav: “Oh, OHHHHHHHHHHH—!!!”

Those principles of his, in this moment, Gustav completely forgot about them all.

In this moment, he rampaged with the same temperament of the Multi-Arm Tribe he thought to be vexing.

For that reason—

Gustav: “IN OUR CAPACITIES, WE ARE—!!”

Special Forces: “INVINCIBLE! INVINCIBLE! INVINCIBLE—!!”

Gustav and the rest of the “Special Forces” carried out their vital directive.

After all, it was precisely that uproar of ardor that served as greater proof than anything else that Schwartz and his battalion were fighting hard for the sake of the Empire’s triumph.

5

By drawing attention to the quantity or outstanding strength of his forces, he could then play his trump card in key areas that had become thin on the ground.

If successfully implemented, Palladio Manesque's plan would have shattered the city's defensive measures and certainly would have been the decisive factor in the outcome of the siege.

However, that was only if things had been successfully fitted together.

Serena: "When deploying the undead, the first thing to think about is tactics that will take advantage of their characteristics. It is inevitable that they will try to cross Mount Gildray in a way that makes them willing to die."

Otto: "With that in mind, when a wall that cannot be pushed through by sheer force is presented, it is natural to want to play your cards when the sky is empty."

Serena: "However, I was not expecting it to turn out this way."

The "Special Forces" had been deployed to intercept the undead assault force that had targeted the city from the sky, and the command post nodded in agreement as the attack was prevented, which would have been a winning strategy from their opponents' point of view.

As stated previously, it was an appropriate strategy for the undead to use. However, in terms of taking advantage of the unfortunate situation, it was a strategy that was too straightforward and orthodox.

Direct attacks were standard methods and were effective when they worked, but they could easily be countered.

Serena: "According to what I've heard, his death during the Imperial Selection Ceremony was also due to his excessive focus on the right way of attack. For better or worse, the time of the undead has stood still."

Serena, who had sent out her own flying dragon squadron to destroy the undead flying dragon riders that had appeared in the sky, described their opponent as having failed to read her plan.

It was true that Palladio Manesque was considered to be the opposing commander, and his name was mentioned as a target to be on the lookout for—but that was if he were to assist others by taking advantage of his Evil Eye Tribe characteristics.

In fact, Lamia Godwin’s raid on the coupled dragon carriages had nearly destroyed the Empire because of Palladio’s assistance.

However, it was a silver lining amidst misfortune that the opposing party remained unaware of how to utilize their abilities to the fullest extent.

Serena: “It seems as if His Excellency Palladio is saying that you can never lose a bet if you can see your opponent’s hand.”

Otto: “Normally, if you could see your opponent’s hand, you would have a significant advantage.”

Serena: “Really? I could make a bet with you on the same terms. The only thing is, if you play with me, your family will be in danger.”

Otto: “So this is why they call it the Vollachian way!”

Serena: “Being greedy for victory is a virtue. —You’re the same as I am, aren’t you?”

Otto’s face was truly bitter at the look in Serena’s eyes, as if to suggest he had bad character.

At any rate, it could be said that in terms of quality of the command post, they had surpassed their opponent. Having destroyed their winning strategy, the enemy would have no choice but to take the next step.

And that was—

Serena: “He’s playing his best trump card. —The continuous deployment of forces is the flower of a losing battle.”

6

???: “—KRUUUUUUUAGH!!”

Raising a thunderous roar that shattered the sky, a three-headed Dragon clad in black scales soared.

Flapping its wings as it flew over the hosts of undead, not even flinching as its whole body was showered in a hail of countless arrows, the jet-black Blight Dragon of forgone mind once again appeared in the skies of the Empire.

Once slain by the hand of the Admirer, the imposing Three-Headed Valgren was a threat incomparable to any of the other undead, and was undoubtedly the trump card of the undead army.

Given the failure of the surprise attack from over Mount Gildray, the commanding officer was correct in their judgment that they would be overpowered if they did not immediately strive to recover.

—However, as before, that did not emerge in the realm of a frontal attack.

???: “Haaah—!”

Along with a courageous voice, bulging thorns reached out to the sky from the city walls furiously approaching the Blight Dragon of outstretched wings—it was the onslaught of Kafma Irulux.

Kafma’s suppressive power, capable of single-handedly upholding the warfront filled with undead as far as the eye could see, entangled Valgren’s entire body, its eyes not in its normal state, binding its wings before they could be torn apart.

Of course, it was only a matter of time before the thorns would be torn to shreds by the Dragon’s physical strength.

Kafma: “But, my duty is this one second!”

Veins bulging all over his body in a mottled pattern, blood spilled from Kafma’s nose as he spoke sharply to Valgren in the skies above with a fierce expression.

Twisting its three heads as if it was angered by the proclamation of that diminutive presence, the Blight Dragon roared.

A Dragon’s roar made all life shrink in fear—however, there were no cowards on this battlefield who would cower before the Blight Dragon’s war cries.

???: “—Al Clauseria.”

Ensnared by thorns, Valgren had ceased its movements mid-air. Aiming for one of the Blight Dragon’s writhing heads, an aurora of rainbow ran diagonally across the sky.

It vibrantly seized Valgren’s right head, blowing it away from the base.

It was a graceful, magnificent, and dazzling stroke of magic unleashed by the Finest.

???: “Take aim!”

Next, the eyes of one of the remaining heads of the Blight Dragon was pierced by an arrow of divine speed.

It was a small target when compared to the large build of the Blight Dragon, but the chieftain of the People of Shudraq had magnificently shot through it, and then sharply called out to the two by her side.

Among the two who were called upon, one aligned the aim by eye measurement, and the other used her entire body to draw a huge bow that would have taken ten regular people to pull.

???: “Let… it have it!!”

???: “Take it down~!!”

The two of them combined their efforts to wield the powerful bow, and with a loud sound akin to a star being pierced, they landed a direct hit on the blinded head of the Blight Dragon, blasting everything above the jaw completely away, and reducing the Three-Headed turned Two-Headed even further into the One-Headed.

Valgren: “—KRUUUUUUUAGH!!”

On top of that, having lost both its left and right heads, Valgren looked up to the sky as it generated tremendous heat within its large black body.

The breath of destruction, so synonymous with Dragons themselves, was turned towards the Fortified City below. —At that moment, the eyes of the crazed Blight Dragon were met by the eyes of someone watching it from inside the great fortress that it was supposed to capture.

As that someone stood by that window, they directed their hand towards the Blight Dragon as it tore off the thorns within the skies—

???: “—El Fula.”

If an objective could be accomplished with minimal toil, neither flashy magic nor outlandish monstrous strength were necessary.

With precision that could serve as an example for all such things, the Blight Dragon’s final remaining head was cut off by a blade of wind possessing an unrelenting sharpness.

Valgren: “…”

Each of its three heads lopped off, the Blight Dragon falleth.

That was the pathetic defeat of the Three-Headed Valgren, intended to be the trump card played by the undead forces.

7

Palladio: “Impossible, impossible impossible impossible impossible impossible impossible impossible impossible…!”

His body trembling all over, while scratching at his hair, Palladio could not accept the defeat of Valgren which he had just witnessed occur through his Evil Eye.

Things that should have been impossible, continued to occur one after another.

Because of that, Palladio fell from what was an overwhelmingly advantageous position, and with his pride wounded as the one who ought to have been leisurely waging the warfare of a true Emperor, he tasted humiliation.

Palladio: “How?! How have they seen through all of mine plans!”

The surprise tactic of having the undead flying dragon riders carry a dragonship and cross over the mountain, was perfect.

He was not certain if that had been anticipated, or if it had been preserved fighting assets that immediately reacted to it, but the surprise tactic had been thwarted. Only, that was something neither unpleasant nor fatal. —Rather, it ought not have been.

Palladio: “What even is the Blight Dragon, THE THREE-HEADED…!”

The Three-Headed Valgren had immediately been sent out as a harbinger of despair—in the past, it had exerted tyranny in the accursed neighboring nation, the Kingdom of Lugunica, the resurrected fearsome Blight Dragon.

If that Dragon of forgone mind displayed its true worth, dominance through means of might and fear would have been accomplished.

To think that the mighty Valgren would be subjugated in such a manner, with its three heads lopped off.

Palladio: “Why are the lot of you all so asinine?! Why be you unable to fulfill the duties expected of mine limbs?!”

The fallen Blight Dragon, the failed ambush corps, the swarms of undead still having trouble conquering the first wall, each of them had failed to provide utility to Palladio, a cluster of fools who only continued to drag down on his legs.

When he took a moment to think about it, Vincent, Prisca, and Lamia all had competent servants in their service.

In other words, the difference between Palladio, Vincent, and the rest, came down to whether they were blessed with servants or not.

They had nothing to do with the strength of the person in question, and were naught more than external decorations.

Flaunting that, they were a shameless bunch unworthy of being a part of the Imperial Family attempting to outrival Palladio.

Palladio: “The Emperor of the Briar’s solitary nature is the unmistakable true desire of Vollachian Emperor. I shall never stoop to the methods of you cowardly lot…!”

Even in the past Imperial Selection Ceremony, Vincent avoided the stratagem that Palladio had formulated, and he had outsmarted Palladio, snatching victory through such means.

The same thing was happening again. —Palladio could not overlook such an outrageous act.

Palladio: “Anybody, offer up a suggestion! As of now, I shall enact anything!”

While burning with humiliation, Palladio loudly called out to the undead encampment.

In truth, Palladio had wished to persist as a solitary Emperor who asked not for the likes of others’ opinions. But, the opponent had taken advantage of Palladio’s haughtiness, wielding a spear of malice.

In that case, Palladio had no choice but to display the might of the Emperor through severity.

Palladio: “Is anyone there?! Raise your voice! Or else…”

???: “—Well then, with your permission.”

Turning his head, Palladio looked over the personnel of poor complexion, and a single person raised their voice.

At a glance, that was a slender figure slowly walking through the crowd of undead—witnessing the aura that was peculiarly different among the other undead, Palladio narrowed his three eyes.

Their appearance clearly set them apart from mediocrity. The only thing remaining was whether their abilities would match that impression or not.

Palladio: “What are you capable of doing?”

???: “Hm, that is right. …First of all, how about I show you.”

Saying thus, the white-haired woman standing before Palladio smiled, and held her hand up towards the sky.

And then—

8

???: “—Ana!!”

When the three heads of the Three-Headed Blight Dragon, whose appearance was anticipated, were severed in the sky above the city, and its colossal black frame was reduced to dust as it crashed down from above, Anastasia felt a sense of relief in her heart.

Although it had been anticipated, the fact that the opponent was a heavy hitter remained unchanged.

Even with appropriate preparations, there lingered the ever-present possibility of the enemy surpassing or outflanking them. Having avoided such a scenario, she felt the relief of a powerful foe having been thwarted.

However, the solace Anastasia felt was torn to pieces by the voice of Echidna at her neck.

Anastasia: “…”

Having known each other for a decade, the spirit Echidna usually remained motionless masquerading as Anastasia’s scarf; bouncing up on her shoulder, she stared with black eyes up at the sky above the great fortress.

Tracing the gaze of Echidna, Anastasia’s pale turquoise eyes widened.

Anastasia: “Is that, a star…?”

Her murmured words rang uncertain, a manifestation of her lack of confidence.

At the very least, one could say that it was a sight Anastasia had never seen in her lifetime; a scenery she could have never even imagined.

Higher than the flock of undead flying dragons that crossed over Mount Gildray, higher than the Three-Headed Blight Dragon which had ascended even further beyond that, light was cascading down upon the city from above—a star was falling.

Next to Anastasia as she marveled at the extraordinary sight, as Otto and Berstetz were left speechless, Serena, witnessing the same scene, contorted the sword scar on her face into a smile,

Serena: “The atmosphere has changed. —Win or lose, the conclusion draws near.”

9

Palladio: “Haha, hahahaha! Excellent, yes, this is it! The sight I had coveted!”

Witnessing the sight unfolding in the sky of the battlefield, Palladio broke into ecstatic dance.

The defenses of the Fortified City, known for their solidity, would amount to naught once the cascading light reached the ground. The resistance of those puny imbeciles would equate to rubbish before the star’s radiance.

Palladio: “You have done well to appear before me! I shall enlist you among mine vassals! By what name shall I address you?!”

Joy shimmering in his three golden eyes, Palladio posed the question to the white-haired woman who had given rise to that sight. Once again catching a frontward glimpse of the woman, who had turned to face him following his query, Palladio caught his breath.

Beautiful white hair and refined features capable of sending shivers down one’s spine, but above all else, her face and eyes were bereft of the physical traits that could identify her as an undead. —It was an appearance that could cause one to mistake her as a living being.

But then, why would she contribute to his side?

When Palladio questioned this, the woman deeply bent her hips, and bowed.

And then, she returned an answer to his question. —An introduction as to just who exactly she was.

???: “What name would be correct to use, is a bit of a complicated affair. So for the time being… I suppose you can just call me the Witch of Greed.”

So she declared.

Chapter 62:
The Power of Love

1

—The entirety of her body burst into flames, reducing the Witch to ash.

The awe-inspiring power of the Yang Sword that at last had finally been unsheathed from its veil, which had stolen her soul and whose fierce flames had reduced it to naught but cinders, exceeded even Subaru's expectations for his plan.

Subaru: "This must be, the true power of the Yang Sword…"

Not only was this Witch cut down, but the crimson flames of the blaze spread to the two other bodies of the Witch. Seeing the resultant effect, Subaru could only gasp.

Up until now, there had been several situations in which Subaru had witnessed the Yang Sword being wielded, but the owner of the Yang Sword had always been Priscilla. However, in terms of Abel exceeding Priscilla as a wielder of the Yang Sword, there would be no such simple answer.

The opponents whom Priscilla had unleashed her Yang Sword upon had always been formidable. This time, the Witch—Sphinx had been a similarly formidable enemy, and in order to defeat her, Abel had made an incredible gamble.

In every battlefield, in every possible arrangement of the board, and in every crisis up until now, he had never once utilized the Yang Sword, thus for Sphinx—or rather, for everyone, it had been eliminated as a possibility.

In order to bring such a thing to fruition, one could not imagine the nerve required.

Vincent: "You, what is with that incomprehensible expression?"

Subaru: “I’m just surprised. We’ve been through so much together up until now, and I’m still easily discovering things about your personality to complain about…!”

Vincent: “And here I was wondering what you were going to say… Could it be that you are referring to this card that I had kept unturned? If that is so, are you not also the sort to hatch up plans of this ilk?”

Subaru: “It’s not a matter of character on my part, it’s okay because it’s the result of wit and bravery and cheating. Thinking back to the beginning with the Lifeblood Ritual, and that time we fought Zikr-san and the others at Guaral, then when Arakiya made her entrance, then our dispute with Yorna-san at Chaosflame and the game of tag with Olbart-san and the entire time we were on the coupled dragon carriages! You kept it hidden!”

Vincent: “Yes, and?”

Subaru: “Yes, and?! Ahhh!”

With the treasured sword of crimson in hand, Abel’s shameless affirmation amazed Subaru, but then, in an instant, the pain in his right arm that was broken by Sphinx as a warning came rushing back.

As he held his broken arm with tears in his eyes, Beatrice rushed beside him with a “Subaru” and held her hand over it, using her healing magic.

And so, as Beatrice attended to Subaru tenderly,

Beatrice: “No matter how many times you say it, it seems it will never have an effect on that man, in fact. Perhaps, his ability to feel guilt has probably died, I suppose. He’s of the same breed as Roswaal, in fact.”

Subaru: “Guhhhh…!”

Beatrice: “There, that should make it feel a little better, I suppose.”

Heaping as much verbal abuse as she could upon Abel, Beatrice finished Subaru's medical treatment.

The pain still lingered, but the broken bone felt like it had been healed. It could not be moved around too much, and it would take some time to be completely healed, but there existed other priorities.

Vincent: "Shall you be able to save Jamal Aurélie?"

Beatrice: "So long as he's still breathing, I'll do what I can, in fact. This is Betty's duty as Subaru's partner, I suppose."

Leaving with these words, Beatrice trotted over to Jamal.

After defeating the first Sphinx, three more Sphinxes had appeared, and it was Jamal who had provoked them and in turn received the most injury. The way he had done so, by continuing to hurl abuse that was painful to listen to, had been rather crude; albeit, that too was an act of showing his loyalty to the Emperor.

Spica: "Uau."

Subaru: "Ohh, Spica, you did a great job. What about your body? It doesn't hurt anywhere?"

Spica: "Au!"

With a vigorous nod, Spica tried to stop his worrying as she smiled. Using his hand to wipe away the dirt from her cheek, he gave her head a pat as a reward for her hard work.

Truly, without any doubt, this was a victory that had been gained by everyone here doing their utmost to fulfill their duty.

That said, he could not help but acknowledge that Abel's trump card had contributed more than anything else—

Subaru: "Still, I'm gonna be holding a grudge against you for the rest of my life."

Vincent: "If I have made you say that much, then the one who suggested this must also be satisfied."

No matter how reproachful the glare, Abel would ignore it nonchalantly.

While his cold nature was infuriating, when it came to the matter of hiding the Yang Sword and having the confidence to stick with it, Subaru could do nothing but speak his praise.

—The fact that Abel was capable of using the Yang Sword, but hid that fact, was something that Subaru had only become aware of within the loop where the fight with Sphinx had already started.

To put it plainly, it was a level of secrecy of a dead weight.

Originally, the only trump card which could have been hoped to stop the Great Disaster of the Vollachian Empire was for Subaru to combine his power with Spica's Star Eating.

But, if Abel's Yang Sword could reach the foundation of the souls of the undead then the story was different.

The Yang Sword and Star Eating, the two leading actors in this siege on the undead territory, could be utilized as trump cards in order to defeat the Great Disaster.

Subaru: "You, having realized this earlier, decided to join us in this group, right?"

Spica: "Uu—?"

Subaru: "You see, Spica, this sly Emperor is able to use the Yang Sword, and even knew that it might be one of the key items in defeating the zombies. Spica is the same right? So, we had to proactively whittle down the zombies by using Star Eating. What happened then?"

Spica: "Aa—aau?"

Subaru: "That's right. The enemy's main forces came after us. And the method we used against that main force was Spica's Star Eating. After all, I didn't know what the odds were that there was another method. So, it would be just fine if Spica could deal with them. But in the event that you couldn't…"

Spica: “Auaa!”

After Subaru concluded his explanation, Spica’s eyes widened and she pointed at Abel’s Yang Sword. Subaru replied “That’s right!” to Spica’s sudden comprehension and patted her head.

Alongside Spica, he looked at Abel as if he was human garbage.

Subaru: “Look, Spica. Those are the eyes of someone with a completely twisted personality. Your personality has to be pitch-black in order to be the Emperor of Vollachia… I knew it, wouldn’t it be better to destroy Vollachia after all?”

Vincent: “Changing sides as soon as the enemy leader has been reduced to ash? You have chosen a terrible time to betray me.”

Beatrice: “You, don’t beg us to help save the Empire just to immediately become the head of a rebellion, I suppose…”

Though they were here out of necessity, the Empire was bad for Spica’s emotional education. Abel was a prime example of this, so outside of a situation such as this he was the first person that should not be around her.

Spica should be surrounded by more wholesome and refreshing companions she could imitate, such as Emilia and Rem, or Beatrice and Tanza.

Subaru: “In that case, we need to keep her away from Otto and Roswaal as well. As for Nee-sama… I like her, but dealing with more than two people would be tough. Garfiel could also be a good influence, but…”

Beatrice: “Subaru! The healing over here is almost finished, in fact!”

Subaru: “Oh. Got it!”

Following Beatrice’s voice, Subaru and the others went towards where Jamal had fallen.

But, Jamal did not raise his voice at the arrival of Subaru and the others, as he was still splayed out on the ground.

Beatrice: “For now, his life isn’t in any danger, I suppose. But, any further treatment will require time, and will also take up Betty’s remaining strength, in fact.”

Subaru: “Beako’s remaining strength… Like, your remaining mana?”

Beatrice: “Indeed, I suppose… There’s an irregularity which makes it like a lavish banquet, but it would be reckless to rely on it, in fact.”

Subaru: “Irregularity…”

Hearing Beatrice’s answer, Subaru stared down at his hands.

What she had called an irregularity, the remaining mana within Subaru’s body—As Subaru’s contracted Spirit, the mana that was in Subaru became Beatrice’s remaining MP, so in his current condition, the amount of mana being lent to her could indeed be considered an irregularity.

Subaru had some ideas as to why this might be the case.

One possibility was that the connection between everyone in the Pleiades Battalion and Subaru had brought about a positive effect; another possibility was that infantilization had led to some strange occurrence in Subaru’s Gate.

But, in the latter case it was not likely that Beatrice would be able to understand it, so he felt that the former option was more likely.

Subaru: “To become stronger because of my connections with everyone, I’m the kind of guy who gets passionate from stuff like that.”

Beatrice: “Subaru…”

Subaru: “Don’t worry, Beako. No matter what, I agree that using as much magic as we please probably isn’t a good thing, so we should try to conserve it as much as possible. But, if we’re backed into a corner…”

While respecting Beatrice's judgment, Subaru stared fixedly at the fallen Jamal.

Naturally, they could not abandon him as he was instrumental to their victory. However, if Jamal did not regain consciousness, someone would inevitably have to carry him.

Vincent: "For the record, I will not be carrying him."

Subaru: "You beat me to it… you've been on a roll ever since you got that sword, huh. Even though you were a close match with me in that cat fight earlier, you were swooshing and bouncing around… wouldn't it be trivial for you to carry Jamal?"

Vincent: "Even if I could do it, I shan't. Now that Jamal Aurélie has fallen, I ought to be the most agile one present. We are in a position which requires vigilance, so I cannot be carrying baggage."

Subaru: "Don't call him baggage! Fine, I get it! I'll…"

Spica: "Uuau."

Angry at the unruly Emperor who had given a sound argument, Subaru attempted to carry Jamal. However, Spica slipped right past him and took the initiative to pick up Jamal's body.

The image of a petite girl easily lifting an adult man was painful to watch, even though Spica was not putting much strain on herself.

Subaru: "Well, that's what it would look like if anyone but you were doing it. What do you think?"

Vincent: "It is a great service. Continue to endeavor as you are."

Subaru: "You're right, Beako, this guy has no sense of guilt!"

Beatrice: "I already said that, I suppose… Spica, don't push yourself too hard, in fact."

Beatrice sighed at Abel's audacity, and Spica exclaimed "Uu!" with a smile in response to her consideration. In fact, it was a relief that Spica did not seem to find Jamal to be heavy.

In any case, although the reality of having defeated the formidable Sphinx was gradually starting to sink in, they could not be completely happy about it.

That was because—

Vincent: "—It seems like there's already significance to me having kept my hands free."

As Abel said this, he jerked his chin towards a succession of silhouettes approaching the street where Subaru and the others were, as if they had heard the battle with the Sphinxes earlier—figures of the undead could be spotted.

Subaru grit his teeth at what this meant and the frustrating truth of Abel's words.

Thus, the fact of the matter was the undead had appeared here where they were.

Beatrice: "…Even after defeating Sphinx, The Sacrament of the Immortal King hasn't been severed, I suppose."

Subaru: "Damn, the most direct logic that the magic would disappear if the caster were to be defeated seems to be wrong. Beako, this is…"

Beatrice: "Even though she was corrupted, she was created with the goal of becoming the Witch of Greed, I suppose. Perhaps, she arranged the ritual so that the Sacrament of the Immortal King would function even in her absence, in fact. If we don't destroy the system itself, the Stone's limitations are still the limits of this country, I suppose."

Subaru: "I guess that's probably the case…"

After absorbing what Beatrice had said, Subaru's gaze turned to the northernmost part of the Imperial Capital—he looked to the Crystal Palace.

That was where Sphinx and her side were based up, so it was the most appropriate location for a symbolic object to be placed. Of course, it was possible that Sphinx, who did not appreciate such romance and drama, had placed its contrivance elsewhere.

Vincent: "—No, there can be no mistaking that it is at the Crystal Palace. Whatever the Witch's intentions, if she needed a connection to the Stone, she would require contact with the core of the Crystal Palace… with Moguro Hagane."

Subaru: "Isn't Moguro one of the Nine Divine Generals…?"

Vincent: "Yes. They have currently been put to rest in the Crystal Palace. Or, to be precise, the Crystal Palace itself has been put to rest."

Subaru: "You absolutely! Better explain this to me! Later on!"

Saying this to Abel, who seemed to have many more secrets besides the Yang Sword, Subaru welcomed the decision that they definitely needed to go to the Crystal Palace.

Subaru: "…"

To be honest, even though he knew that the core of the Great Disaster was in the Crystal Palace, he still wanted to confirm the safety of his comrades whom he had sent to the other battlefields. In particular, he wanted to check on the safety of Emilia and Tanza.

Their placement was the only part that Subaru was not able to confirm.

What was causing Subaru's anxiety and frustration was—

???: "—Golly, y'all're lookin' like a mess. Even the Emperor-san's forehead's covered in sweat and mud; he's a surprisingly hard worker, ain't he now?"

Suddenly, a black shadow descended and forcefully turned the situation upside down with a casual tone.

The figure landed between Subaru and the incoming undead, walked over to them in a casual tone, and squatted down in front of Subaru and Beatrice.

Then he laughed with a golden kiseru in his mouth and extended his folded hands.

???: “For all y’all hard workers… Here, gotcha some souvenirs.”

With that said, his folded hands were opened, and a number of strange crystals the size of coins were in his large palms.

Subaru did not know what they were, but Beatrice, holding his hand, noticed.

Beatrice: “Those, are Corebugs…!”

???: “Yepyep. The one from those guys.”

Nodding calmly, the figure brought his palms together again and rubbed them together with a scrubbing motion.

In the next instant, the undead across the street let out a cry of anguish and turned to dust. —The cores that had been reproducing the undead were thwarted, and they could no longer sustain their bodies.

It was a tall, carefree black wolfman who did it in a flash—

Subaru: “Halibel-san!”

Halibel: “Ooh, ooh, that’s such a warm welcome. I like energetic kids who can speak loudly.”

Halibel, who had been working separately, nodded at Subaru’s surprised voice.

He was asked to eliminate the most important opponent in the decisive battle for the Imperial Capital—an enemy that had to be eliminated in order for everyone to give their best performance.

The fact that he was here like this meant.

Halibel: “Don’t’cha worry, my work is done ‘n taken care of. Got no intentions of lettin’ lil’ Ana’s face be crushed after all.”

Subaru: "—! That's a huge help! Thank you! Can I count on you to keep it up with something else?"

Halibel: "Hmm, ya sure ain't a shy boy. Well well s'pose it'd be dandy, go on 'n say it."

Subaru: "I want you to go with me to the palace! I just want to leave you to cover the other girls on the way. I'll be working Abel to the point of death over on our side after all!"

Vincent: "Disgraceful…"

Abel grumbled something about Subaru's suggestion, which he consciously ignored.

At any rate, it was fortuitous that Halibel had accomplished his task. He was very anxious about Emilia and the others, but if Halibel were willing to go, it would make them even stronger and help Emilia bloom.

Subaru: "Olbart-san should be in the palace. That's why I want you to go to Emilia and Tanza…"

Vincent: "Hold on, Natsuki Subaru, is that a strategic decision? If that is not the case—"

Subaru: "If that'll make you agree, then yeah it is! It's all part of my performance after all!"

Subaru retorted to Abel's interjections and glared at him.

It was encouraging to have Beatrice holding Subaru's hand tightly as if she were on his side. Halibel interrupted the exchange of stern glances with a "Hold on, hold on".

He put his bladed hand in between Subaru and Abel, as if to cut the thread of the staring contest, and,

Halibel: "Ain't no need ta be so belligerent. 'N as for the fight around the palace, I think I ain't gonna be needed for it, okay?"

Subaru: "Huh?"

Subaru’s eyes widened at Halibel’s comment as he stroked the hair under his chin.

The Admirer turned his narrow, thread-like eyes in the direction of the gaze that sought the basis for his statement,

Halibel: “The power of love is mighty, I guess this is simply a case of that.”

And then, he laughed with a face that mixed equal parts amazement and admiration.

2

—An unthinkable scene was in the midst of unfolding.

The woman, who had become unable to define whether she was Yorna Mishigure, or if she was Iris, all she could do was watch as she held back the tears on the verge of distorting her vision.

Woman: “—Tanza.”

The name spun by those trembling lips, it belonged to the deergirl who housed a flame within a single eye, and with the hem of the kimono they once had chosen together fluttering, confronted the fierce advance of the undead swordsmen.

Far more agile and powerful than the Tanza she knew, it was a fight brimming with confidence.

Tanza, was once a girl without confidence in herself.

She was incredibly intelligent and capable for her young age, and yet, the child had evaluated herself as being completely lacking, an evaluation that was far too low of herself. Back when she was the same age as Tanza in the truest sense, she had not been nearly as capable as her.

A foolish child she was, getting carried away thinking it was her duty to fulfill the work entrusted to her so that she would not be a burden to her parents and the people of her village, and yet failing to notice the thoughtfulness of those around her.

Compared to her past self, Tanza was far more admirable. And now, after believing that death had bereaved her of Tanza, they had been reunited in this situation where her own foundation had become uncertain.

Between Prisca, the Empire, the Demon City, Tanza—and Eugard, her mind was in its greatest state of turmoil throughout all of her lifetimes, numbering greater than ten.

The only comparable instances that could come to mind were when she had first learned that she had been reincarnated due to a curse, when she had discovered that Prisca had survived, when she had been reunited with Eugard, and when Tanza, who had survived, had completely refused to listen to her.

Woman: “Of late, there have been far too many…”

She wanted to lament the relentless series of shocks of this current life, however the present moment was far too hectic.

As these various mental burdens continued, in order to protect her as she could no longer recover the will to fight, brazenly utilizing the effects of the Soul Marriage Technique in addition to something else entirely, Tanza’s back looked to be quite large.

How much, just how much had she gone through after they had been separated at the Demon City?

Ever since Tanza had arrived at Chaosflame with her sister Zoey, she had intended on being the one to watch over Tanza’s growth the most closely. But, had she remained by her side, would Tanza’s current self ever have come to be?

Someone apart from herself, they had gotten close to Tanza, pushed her, and made her stronger.

She could feel it within Tanza’s intense gaze, in her gait, and in the fist that she had slammed into the swordsman’s face.

???: “Tanza-chan!”

Tanza: “Yes, Emilia-sama, let us not give them any leeway.”

As her voice resounded in a manner resembling a silver bell, the silver-haired girl—Emilia, cooperated with Tanza.

Her long hair fluttered as she swung her weapon constructed with ice to repel the undead swordsmen, working in perfect sync with Tanza to support each other in both offense and defense.

This was in spite of the fact that there should not have been much time for Tanza and Emilia to build such a relationship.

Under the unexpected strength of Tanza and Emilia working together, the blue-haired swordsmen—the Undead Swordmasters, were smashed one after another, scattering fragments throughout their surroundings.

However—

Swordmaster: “Ahh, ahhh, ahhhh, sad to say, but seems there’s a limit for ya living folk. Ya sure wield yer power with great vigor, but how long d’ya think that power’s gonna last?”

Emilia: “Geez! Don’t brag when you’re cheating!”

His characteristic undead golden eyes shining, the Undead Swordmaster smiled provocatively, and Emilia fell for that provocation.

She raised both hands and slammed them hard onto the ground, and in the next moment, while avoiding Emilia and Tanza, ice spread throughout the street in a manner akin to branches, entrapping the hands, legs, and torsos of the swordsmen.

—That ice had an appearance just like that of a vine of thorns.

Woman: “—Ugh.”

Tanza: “Yorna-sama!”

For a moment, she crouched down, clutching her chest as she felt an ache within.

Having caught a glimpse of that foolish action of hers in the corner of her eye, Tanza cried out her name in a scream. Even if momentarily, the fact Tanza's awareness had left the battlefield meant that,

Swordmaster: "Ya gotta be greedy for victory, simple as that."

Tanza: "—Hk!"

A fierce front kick was unleashed, sending Tanza's petite frame flying backwards.

Tanza's sprung-up body flew, and at the end of its trajectory as it bounced, the figure of her own crouching self was present. She immediately raised her face and was about to call out Tanza's name, but what would that even achieve?

It would have merely been another meaningless pull on Tanza's attention.

Woman: "—Tanza!"

Tanza: "Yes, Yorna-sama."

Responding to the cry that ultimately could not be held back, the bouncing Tanza readied her posture mid-air. Just prior to colliding, Tanza had managed to stop herself; that small yet large back of hers was just before her eyes.

Thereupon, the Undead Swordmaster's merciless sword strike drew near, threatening to cleave the two of them in twain—

Tanza: "—Emilia-sama!"

Emilia: "Yes!"

Without even a moment's hesitation, Emilia responded to the call, and Tanza swung her leg upwards.

That upraised foot—freshly clad in a geta made of ice, caught the strike from the Undead Swordmaster's katana head on.

It was a pair of thick-soled geta, just like the ones usually worn by

The Flamboyant, Yorna Mishigure.

Tanza: “YA, AHHHHHH—!!”

Tanza, having stopped the katana with the sole of the geta adorning her raised foot, had leapt upwards using the same raised foot as a starting point, and spun vertically in mid-air—slamming down the icy geta of the opposite foot onto the head of the immobilized Undead Swordmaster, she drove him into the ground.

Then, with the head of the undead felled to the ground as a center, a crater of nearly five meters was caved into the street, and as the powerful blow turned her opponent to dust, Tanza waved the hem of her kimono.

Woman: “…”

At Tanza’s gallant appearance, all she could do was stare speechlessly. Having noticed her gaze, Tanza turned around and, slightly lowering the corners of her eyes, she smiled.

Those lips had been about to call out to her with “Yorna”.

Emilia: “—Hk, no!”

That instant, Emilia, who was further away, thrust out both her hands, and with the screams of the freezing atmosphere, she sensed the presence of the two Undead Swordmasters being pierced by ice and turning into ice statues behind her.

But, she could speak no words of gratitude to Emilia.

More importantly, Emilia needed to stop the barbaric act of another Undead Swordmaster who had appeared behind Tanza after she had turned around—no, she would not make it in time. Thus, there was no choice but to protect Tanza herself.

Woman: “I am…!”

Numerous were the things she had overlooked, numerous were the things she lost, numerous were the people she had let down, and numerous were the lives she stood upon to be here now.

Although until now she had been unable to repay even a single one of those among the numerous, for Tanza alone she could do so.

Woman: “…”

Taking Tanza into a tight embrace with her outstretched hand, she resolutely leaned forward with her upper body to protect her from the blade.

She had moved skillfully. For just this moment, she was glad that she had not been her trembling and immobile self.

Now, at least with this body of hers, taller and with limbs longer than the ones she had possessed before, she could protect this little darling, this dear child of the Empire which that person had so carefully protected—.

???: “—To astonish mineself thus, verily thou alone art able.”

That gentle voice, as sweet as if it had been whispered close to her ear, so calm that it was inconceivable for a battlefield raging with the gale of swords, resounded, melting her heart that had resolved itself for death but a moment ago in a manner that was difficult to believe.

Woman: “…”

Before the blow from the Undead Swordmaster’s katana could connect, it was halted by the treasured sword of crimson that had been thrust in its path.

And then, witnessing the presence that had brought that about, she could not help but gasp.

Their reunion had been unexpected, and unintended.

She did not know whether to rejoice or to grieve, and ever since that moment, she felt like her heart had been torn apart.

Ultimately, that question had remained unanswered, and the present moment had arrived.

Only now, at this very moment, could she say for sure.

???: “Even when tensed, thy face is lovely, O Star of Mine.”

Woman: “Your Excellency… hk.”

Before the man who had stated so, while caressing her cheek with the hand opposite to the one that had blocked the enemy’s attack—before Eugard Vollachia, with skin of flesh and blood identical to what it had been during his lifetime, and with a clear will housed within his eyes, the feat of containing the overwhelming flood of love and emotion was something that neither Yorna, nor Iris, were capable of.

Vic.1120

Chapter 63:
Upon These Lips, I Savor This Miracle

1

The moment he basked in the upward slice of the blade, for the first time in his life—nay, for the first time in all his time before and after death, Eugard Vollachia resolved himself to taste defeat.

It was the first time that somebody had crossed swords with him, contended with him as an equal, and to top it all off, secured a hard-fought victory against him.

Although he admired that superb level of skill, the fact that he had been defeated in a decisive moment he ought not to have lost caused his chest, no longer containing a beating heart, to throb.

That which he could have never possibly hoped to wish for was granted, but happening across Iris once again in this manner, he had yet to exchange many words with her. They had yet to touch each other. He had yet to fully convey his love.

Even so, Eugard had been granted a reunion with Iris.

In order for Eugard and Iris to be granted their desires, there were likely those who had been unable to exchange words, share touches, and convey their love to their beloved ones, even if they desired so.

That same thing had happened to the alignment of the stars between Eugard and Iris.

—Indeed, exactly as he had expected.

???: “I’m still a complete amateur when it comes ta wieldin’ this katana, ‘n even just a single swing drains so much energy outta me that I get a nasty sorta feelin’ from it.”

With thorns serving as proof of a curse dwelling in his chest, having delivered a blow with the Fiend Sword enshrouded in sinister energy, the jet-black wolfman—Halibel spoke so.

That countenance of his reminded Eugard of a wolfman with whom he was once acquainted despite them not resembling each other in the slightest, aside from being of the same race.

Within his recollections, Eugard felt like he, too, would sometimes gaze upon him with such eyes.

Halibel: "Tho', it's a blade ya can't hate, since it does its job ta the fullest with the energy it goes 'n takes."

Ignoring Eugard's deep emotions in that moment, Halibel continued.

It was apparent that he had just given his impressions regarding the katana in his hand—the Fiend Sword Murasame. But, the way he had put it made it sound a bit different from the fact that the power concealed in the Fiend Sword simply proved useful in his victory.

It was as if the Fiend Sword had granted Halibel something greater than just victory—

Eugard: "—The deluded conviction of the undead, hm?"

Ascertaining his body, which had basked in the slashing attack, Eugard put the sensation that he initially could not verbalize into words.

Within Eugard, having been resurrected into the body of an undead, there was a certain kind of unreasonable obsession—an impulsive sense of hostility and violence appealing to his instincts, one directed towards the living of the Empire.

In all likelihood, this was not limited to only Eugard. On top of that, Eugard had been keeping that intense impulse in check with his stronger feelings towards Iris.

Even so, unable to go against the ringleader who had incited the resurrection, Eugard had no choice but to at least abide by their intentions, and had thus ended up crossing blades with the hyenaman and Halibel here.

That irresistible, overwhelming force of compulsion, had vanished.

As if it had been severed by the Fiend Sword clad in a dark, sinister aura, it had vanished.

2

Eugard: “Therefore, there is naught within mineself save thoughts of Mine Star.”

Placing a hand to her face, Eugard tenderly spoke to the woman who was both Iris and Yorna—and to this, Iris/Yorna lost the ability to speak, utterly entranced.

His skin was neither pale nor cold, and his pupils were not those sham golden irises that were laid upon a sea of void, instead having taken on their characteristic blue hue.

His facial muscles, which did not move irrespective of his status as an undead, yielded a serious expression which she recalled well.

—Unmistakably, this was the man that Iris/Yorna knew as Eugard Vollachia.

???: “It’s terrible to barge in here without any sorta permission.”

The reunion between these two was interrupted by a powerful, hoarse voice.

Contrary to the contents of his words, raising his voice in a warm welcome to the sudden intruder, the undead swordsman—nay, the Undead Swordmaster licked his lips with a glint in his eyes as he faced Eugard.

Towards the Undead Swordmaster’s gaze, Eugard’s expression not wavering,

Eugard: “Thou hast a most remarkable ability; alas, thou hast also erred in thy timing. Mineself wishes for naught but to spend mine limited time with Mine Star.”

Undead Swordmaster: “C’mon, there’s no need to say something so chilly—”

Eugard imparted to him his wish with indifference, to which the Undead Swordmaster promptly turned a deaf ear—no, he tried to respond with a deaf ear, but he could not finish his reply.

???: “Stay away from us!”

For with that sharp scream, the small body held in Iris/Yorna’s arms had spun, and the ice geta-clad feet that flew furiously through the air, had delivered a strong kick to the body of the Undead Swordmaster.

Undead Swordmaster: “Woah!”

The undead used his sheath to counter the girl’s kick, avoiding a direct hit as he took a step back.

The impact was not entirely erased, but the Undead Swordmaster retorted with more joy than anger as his face split into a malicious smile—

???: “Teiya!”

That malicious smile was crushed by the powerful blow of an ice hammer.

This swooping blow from behind crushed him from head to toe, causing the individual known as the Undead Swordmaster to crumble into pieces. However, this did not mean there would be any rest.

If they could have killed him this easily, the Undead Swordmaster would have already been felled fifty times. But, as always, the undead could revive as many times as they pleased.

However, before they could deal with the Undead Swordmaster—

Eugard: “—Mmm, a strike imbued with emotions which one would expect to be unfound in a child. For the shining potential that thou possessest, mineself shall pardon thine rudeness.”

???: “Stay away from Yorna-sama.”

Yorna: “T-Tanza! His Excellency… what are you doing to His Excellency!”

Within the field of view of the screaming Iris/Yorna, the hilt of Eugard’s Yang Sword collided with Tanza’s geta composed of ice, creating a harsh shrieking noise.

In order to protect Iris/Yorna, Tanza had kicked the Undead Swordmaster while in the air, but this undead had not been her only target; rather, she also aimed for the unknown Emperor who had suddenly intervened.

As it was all so sudden, it was natural that Tanza could not distinguish Eugard as friend or foe.

Yorna: “Still, you cannot do something like that so suddenly…! Your Excellency, please excuse my Tanza. That girl holds no ill will…”

Eugard: “Wear not such a sorrow-stricken visage. Mineself loves any face which thou might wearest, though thoughts rise of scorning mine very heart which wishes to love thee even as thou entreatest mineself so earnestly.”

Yorna: “H-he was this sorta person…”

Though Iris/Yorna wholeheartedly apologized on behalf of Tanza, Eugard’s reply did not touch upon the core of the matter. This sort of thing had once been a daily occurrence with Eugard.

Yes, back during those times with Eugard, this had been a daily occurrence.

Tanza: “…Yorna-sama.”

Squeezing, arms tightening around her in a hug, Tanza called out to Iris/Yorna.

To shake these arms away and once again jump towards Eugard, Tanza had not lost her composure and discernment that far. Whilst she did not understand their relationship, she understood that there was no animosity between Yorna/Iris and Eugard.

And besides that—

???: “Hey! Maybe it’s a little too early for us to be taking our time to talk!”

Rushing over was Emilia, who had been fighting the Undead Swordmaster with Tanza.

She mercilessly struck the undead from behind with her ice hammer, and while staring hard at Eugard who stood close to Tanza and Iris/Yorna with her amethyst eyes,

Emilia: “Are you on our side?”

Eugard: “Verily, ‘tis so.”

Emilia: “Thank goodness! You look reaaally strong! Let me count on you!”

Eugard: “Understood. Leave everything to mineself.”

Having received an immediate response from Eugard, Emilia patted her chest in relief.

Iris/Yorna’s eyes twinkled at the way she had been able to discern friend from foe in an instant, but considering her circumstances as a half-elf, it would be presumptuous of her to speak about common sensibilities.

Anyhow—

Yorna: “Your Excellency, that form…”

Eugard: “Alas, these are but embers that are yet to burn out.”

Yorna: “…”

Even as he spoke that, Eugard did not take his eyes off of Iris/Yorna, nor did his expression contort into one of sadness or loneliness.

Iris/Yorna also hoped that it would have been spoken thus, merciless it may be.

And then, while looking directly at Iris/Yorna, Eugard continued.

Eugard: “However, for these few moments until it doth burn out, all of mineself is thine.”

Yorna: “—Yes, Your Excellency.”

He did so, only to ensure that there would be no reason for Iris/Yorna to feel sad or lonely.

This gentle King of Thorns, who was feared by all, had always kept his heart pulsing with tranquility, so that his thorns would hurt none but himself.

Yorna: “Not at all, not at all… it brings me such happiness.”

Although their time was limited, she could touch Eugard, and speak to him.

Ever since those days had come to an end, it was something she—it was something Iris had been unable to accomplish. And because of that failure, innumerable sacrifices had been made.

For the sake of atoning for those mistakes and regrets, Iris had joined the Empire as Yorna—

Swordmaster: “—That treasured sword in yer hand, it’s the Yang Sword Vollachia, ain’t it.”

Suddenly, a hoarse voice that seemed to be restraining its zeal was heard, at which Iris/Yorna and the others looked up.

At some distance from where the four had gathered, the figure of a singular undead slowly arose from the ground. In the same fashion, akin to insects emerging from underneath a large boulder, dominated by a repugnant obsession the Undead Swordmasters began to appear one after the other.

They were all alike, without individuality, and with perfectly synchronized movements and shining golden pupils, they smiled malevolently.

Swordmaster: “A legendary sword famous throughout the world, a magical tool forged by an unreasonable man, on par with that Dream Sword and Fiend Sword the spoiled brat’s got… though I’ve seen it, I’ve rarely been blessed with the opportunity to exchange blows with it.”

Yorna: “…After going this far, has your warrior’s spirit been stirred even further?”

Swordmaster: “It’s embarrassing… but ya got it right.”

Those words had been glib, for he did not seem embarrassed in the slightest. That much was painfully obvious from the pairs of eyes that were glowing ever more radiant, and from the chilling heat of their malevolent smiles.

Even when compared to the other undead, the Undead Swordmaster’s fiendish aura and delusional state were clearly abnormal, which true strength put aside overwhelmed Iris/Yorna as she clenched her fists in shame.

Those tightly clenched fists were gently embraced by the hands of Tanza from within her arms.

Eugard: “Child, to grasp the hand of Mine Star thus, and to remain in her embrace, I shall permit it.”

Tanza: “…I shall continue to do so, even if I do not receive your permission.”

At Tanza’s indignant tone, Eugard’s sharp countenance remained undisturbed. However, Iris/Yorna could perceive that Eugard had accepted her reply positively.

As Eugard continued to walk towards the seemingly endless stream of Undead Swordmasters that appeared to be increasing in number, ten or twenty at a time, Emilia, with a tense expression on her face, attempted to join him.

However, Eugard stopped Emilia with his gaze.

Eugard: “Thy will to aid is honorable. Nevertheless, entrust this unto mineself.”

Emilia: “But, you alone…”

Eugard: “—Eugard Vollachia, that is mine name.”

Emilia: “Vollachia… that’s.”

Emilia, surprised upon hearing Eugard’s family name, looked towards Iris/Yorna. Responding to her look with a nod, Iris/Yorna’s eyes followed Eugard’s back as he went forth.

Eugard and the Undead Swordmaster, separated by a distance of about ten meters, faced each other.

Swordmaster: “Eugard Vollachia… perhaps, are ya the Emperor of the Briar?”

Eugard: “Never have I addressed mineself as such, but there are those who have yclept mineself so. Verily, a fitting phrase that doth succinctly depict mine tenure upon the Imperial Throne. It shall prove facile for inscribing in the annals of the future.”

Swordmaster: “Haha, hahaha! Ain’t that a surprise! The strongest among all the Emperors of the Sacred Vollachian Empire! And to think I’d be able to meet such a person… as expected, I most definitely have it!”

With a lilt to his voice, the pressure of the Undead Swordmaster’s aura of malicious swordsmanship increased all the more.

Even though he knew that his opponent was Eugard Vollachia, the Emperor of the Briar, the Undead Swordmaster was not horrified but instead inspired by unusual logic.

The golden eyes of the Undead Swordmasters gleamed at Eugard and his Yang Sword.

Swordmaster: “If I can win against His Excellency the Emperor, could I have the Yang Sword?”

Eugard: “If the sword deems it appropriate, so be it. But I shalt not surrender so easily.”

Swordmaster: “Ho.”

Eugard: “Many of mine subjects hath staked their lives to make the dream of wielding this sword in mine hand true.”

Only Iris/Yorna, who shared the joint rulership of Eugard’s many subjects, could understand the passion of the gentle King of Thorns who was feared above all others.

—In front of Iris/Yorna who watched on, Eugard and the Undead Swordmasters moved simultaneously.

Swordmaster: “—Hah.”

With a short exhalation and lightning steps, their distance from each other was extinguished.

Twenty identical people were divided into four groups, and a flash of sword steel approached Eugard like a whirlwind.

The barbaric act of an ordinary person assembling together first-class swordsmanship in order to reach a superb class—Emilia and Tanza gasped at the sword attacks that could be called a sword storm that surpassed the sword style.

However, Iris/Yorna did not have a shred of doubt.

Twenty swords were coming at him—however, that exchange would end with one precise strike.

The raging storm of swords from the Undead Swordmasters aimed at Eugard from all directions.

But, before those blades could reach the King of Thorns, the brilliantly shining Yang sword flashed—it burned away all twenty blades that were approaching, and the crimson tip of the sword cleaved the neck of an Undead Swordmaster.

Swordmaster: “This power—hk.”

His neck was gouged out, but even then, only the foremost one bore the fatal wound.

The Undead Swordmaster grimaced as his remaining nineteen selves, or rather, the flood of his other selves that reached him one by one, even though his blade had been severed.

But, if one mistakenly thought their strength was that they could try again after dying then—

Yorna: “It has ended.”

—The next moment, the Undead Swordmaster, whose whole body was cut, burst into flames; this spread to the other nineteen Undead Swordmasters, and they were all at once swallowed by flames.

Swordmaster: “—Wh-aa.”

In the hands of Eugard Vollachia, the Yang Sword ignited its true flame. The soul of the Undead Swordmaster who was hit by the slash was the spark from which the flame rose.

Coincidentally, Vincent Vollachia’s Yang Sword set the soul of the Witch, Sphinx, the bearer of the Great Disaster, ablaze. It was the same conclusion.

Swordmaster: “Kah!”

Swordmaster: “Guh, guh!”

Swordmaster: “—Oooh!”

Burned by the tremendous flames, the Undead Swordmasters were burned to ashes one after another. Every time a burning individual perished, a new one was revived and replenished, but it too was engulfed by the flames.

More and more, over and over without exception, he left more than a dozen of himself as charcoal, and the Undead Swordmaster looked down at his hands, which continued to be burned by the unquenchable flames.

And then—

Swordmaster: “Ah, ahhh, goddammit. Is this really, where I meet my end…?!!”

An indistinct voice spilled from his throat burned by the flames, and the Undead Swordmaster grimaced.

For a moment, this made one imagine this as a last-ditch effort made by one who could not admit defeat, but that worry was denied by the end of the Undead Swordmaster who burned up and turned to charcoal.

With his battered, crumpled hands reaching towards the heavens, the Undead Swordmaster disappeared.

In the end—

Tanza: “—He, didn’t vanish?”

While witnessing the same thing, Tanza voiced her concern.

As Iris/Yorna took her hand in hers, she gave Tanza an answer to her fears by wrapping her small hand in her own free hand, assuring Tanza that it would be okay.

Emilia: “…Those people, were they all burned?”

Eugard: “It is somewhat difficult to find the right word for it, but yes. The Yang Sword’s flame burns up whatever its owner desires. Souls are no exceptions.”

Emilia: “I see… Thanks, that’s reaaally helpful.”

Even after expressing her gratitude, Emilia looked gloomily at the many remainders of the Undead Swordmasters that had burned up.

Even though the opponent was undead, even though he was an opponent who used the characteristics of the undead in a sinister way, the fact that his life was lost shook Emilia’s amethyst eyes.

Iris/Yorna once had the same feeling as Emilia. —To think it was one of the things she had to let go of after living so many lives.

However, there were some things she could not let go of.

Eugard: "—O Star of Mine."

Called so once more, Iris/Yorna faced Eugard directly.

Resurrected as an undead, Eugard had been liberated from that abominable yoke. Both his refined features, beautiful and elegant, and his voice, which resounded in her chest far too much when compared to its actual volume, were a continuation of those days.

However, there were also things that could not be explained by that alone.

Yorna: "Your Excellency, the thorns are…"

That which bound others, thrusting spikes into their hearts; the Curse of Thorns.

Isolating Eugard, and having served as the impetus of the special time that he and Iris shared together, it was something that still ensnared his soul even in death, a binding curse from which no refuge could be sought.

At the current moment, it could not be felt. That went not only for Iris/Yorna, but for Tanza and Emilia as well.

That was to say, Eugard had been released from the Curse of Thorns.

Yorna: "The curse, has it been dispelled?"

Eugard: "—That is not so. The Curse of Thorns yet remaineth intact. The curse hath been transferred to another; no longer doth it persist within mineself."

Yorna: "Transferred…? Such a thing, such a thing is possible?"

Eugard: "—That being made it possible. It be not something that could have ever been accomplished in the era of mine lifetime. Since then, the stream of time hath flowed, and many a wisdom hath come forth. A magnificent world, it is."

Eugard Vollachia had been released from the Curse of Thorns.

Within Eugard's answer as he quietly drew his chin, there was loaded a deep sense of admiration for the one who had accomplished that.

Yorna: "Your Excellency, the curse is…"

On the other hand, Iris/Yorna was left speechless by Eugard's reply.

Although she understood that it was Eugard's nature to want to accurately represent that the Curse of Thorns ultimately had not disappeared, it was still a fulfillment of Iris and Yorna's dearest wish.

For even if that was after his death, Eugard's soul had parted ways with the Curse of Thorns.

Tanza: "Yorna-sama, this person is…"

Yorna: "Tanza, this gentleman is His Excellency the Emperor Eugard Vollachia… a difficult individual, one who I, who I am in love with."

At Iris/Yorna's introduction, Tanza slightly widened her eyes. Then, she raised her face and exchanged glances with Eugard, and after a brief hesitation,

Tanza: "My name is Tanza. I serve as Yorna-sama's chamberlain."

Eugard: "Is that so, Tanza. In the time of mine absence, Mine Star hath been in thy care. It is a great service."

After Tanza timidly spoke so, Eugard nodded.

A distance at which they could see each other's faces, a distance at which they could hear each other's voices, a distance at which they could make physical contact should they reach out their hands; at that distance, Eugard and Tanza, had an exchange of words.

Even though, in the past, there had been nobody other than Iris who had been able to do that with Eugard without grimacing in pain.

Emilia: “I am Emilia, just Emilia. Eugard, will you continue to help us?”

As if riding off the deep emotion of Iris/Yorna, Emillia began to speak to Eugard without any hesitation.

At her words, Eugard reclined his chin with a “But of course”, and,

Eugard: “The individual who hath released mineself from the thorns of prolonged torment… there is a duty Groovy Gumlet hath entrusted to mineself. I must act verily in his stead.”

Yorna: “Groovy… that personage, released Your Excellency from the curse…”

Eugard: “O Star of Mine.”

Yorna: “Y-Yes.”

Caught up on the name of Eugard’s benefactor coming to light, she let out a voice akin to that of a village girl at the sudden call.

That instant, the fact that the air given off by Eugard had become gentle seemed to be proof that he thought Iris/Yorna’s reaction to be lovely, but she would not touch upon that.

Only, as Eugard captured Iris and Yorna in the gaze of his blue eyes,

Eugard: “For thee, I wish to devote mine entirety. There existeth no lie in those words. Henceforth□□”

Yorna: “It goes without saying, but we shall be together. □□I refuse for us to be separated for even a moment longer.”

Until the very moment in which I am bereaved of you, I wish to hold this miracle upon my lips.

This was Yorna’s answer bereft of falsehood, straight from the bottom of Iris’s heart.

3

—The scorching scent of his soul assailed his nostrils.

There was no sensation of pain. With his whole body engulfed in flames, the heat of being hideously burned was also akin to a gentle breeze.

However, unable to break away from that gentle breeze, it reduced his newly created body to ash and cinders, attempting to put an end to his existence.

Even if doused in water, the flames shan’t fade. Even were he to try to spread the fire elsewhere, the flames shan’t spread. Even were the point of flames’ genesis lopped off, the rest of his body would immediately be ignited by the inescapable flames of terminus—indeed, this was his terminus.

He had a feeling. He knew. This blaze shan’t fade. Until he met his end, it shan’t fade.

Swordmaster: “Ahh, ahhh, AHHHH, what the hell…”

Going so far as to descend to the body of an undead by his own blade, he had attempted to master the way of the sword.

The flame of the Yang Sword, which he had encountered upon his journey to reach the final destination of that path, burned the soul of Rowan Segmunt, the man who had a burning desire for the Heavenly Sword, attempting to scorch his entirety to naught.

Refusing to remain in that place, Rowan fled the battlefield, and broke into a mad dash.

His leg crumbled as he stepped forth, so if the next step would result in losing his entire lower half, he lopped off his own head as to not needlessly waste time, and thus the next step of his remains would be taken by his next self.

Repeating this process, Rowan ran. —He distanced himself from the Emperor of the Briar, in order to reach the place he was obliged to reach before he was burnt to a crisp.

Rowan: “What the hell… Just as expected, I have it.”

As embers emanated from all over his body, a vividly gruesome smile emerged on Rowan’s face.

Reduced to an undead, Rowan had become acutely aware of the state of his own soul, and had placed the tips of his toes upon the steps to reach the Heavenly Sword. In order to reliably take the next steps higher, this was his next trial, indeed.

Rowan’s soul would be scorched to oblivion in the not-so-distant future. But, the flame of a candle would always burn brightest right before it went out.

—For Rowan Segmunt, reaching the Heavenly Sword was his life’s dearest wish.

He had even proved that he would give up his life with no hesitation for that purpose.

In truth, by experiencing death, and gaining awareness of the shape of his soul, Rowan had steadily gotten closer to achieving his wish.

Thus, as long as Rowan reached the Heavenly Sword, it mattered not if it was only for a single second.

For a mere second before his soul was burnt to a crisp, even if it was for naught more than an instant, all that mattered was that he reached it.

And what was needed to achieve that—

???: “—Oya oya oya, I had thought somebody was furiously dashing here, but to think it would be a flaming entrance! My my now if I do say so myself, isn’t this quite the flashy production?”

An audible voice; the place he had wanted to reach before being burnt to nihil.

Beholding the owner of that voice beyond his burning field of vision, Rowan thanked his karma.

He had arrived at the place he had wanted to reach. All that remained, was to reach it.

Indeed, before Rowan as he gave a burning grin, the boy, holding a brown-skinned girl in his arms, smiled.

As irony would naturally have it, the boy gave a smile that resembled Rowan's own, and spoke.

Boy: "Just now, you made me think this for the first time, dad. —I don't dislike it, rather, I quite like it."

So he declared.

Chapter 64: Parent and Child of the Empire

1

—The person known as Rowan Segmunt, was a man completely unfit to be a father.

Though Cecilus Segmunt thought that so-called common sensibilities were unnecessary for the leading actor, it was apparent that Rowan was a father far removed from the conventional family image.

An ideal father was not someone who would slay his own child because it “didn’t seem” like they would grow up in the way he desired.

A single-minded eccentricity divorced from all notions of paternal love, that was the entirety of the reason why Rowan had killed all of Cecilus’s older brothers while they were still infants.

A swordsman in whom a genuine madness resided, such that he had no qualms with trampling upon anything as long as it was for the sake of reaching the Heavenly Sword—Rowan Segmunt was nothing more, and nothing less, than precisely that.

In all likelihood, Rowan would be deemed the foremost failure of a father even if one searched far and wide all throughout the world. Born into this world as the son of a father utterly lacking in such respect or familial love, Cecilus truly thought himself fortuitous from the bottom of his heart.

—The desire towards the Heavenly Sword harbored by Rowan, was something that Cecilus also harbored himself.

That was an endeavor that aimed to tread into the far distance, to a region above the clouds unseen by the eye; by no means could it be achieved by somebody who diverted their gaze or took detours.

If he had been raised in a family that was respectable and distinguished throughout history, or in a household of honorable poverty that hesitated to steal for the sake of a meal, Cecilus would not have had any conclusive evidence that his wish to reach the Heavenly Sword was not contaminated with needless impurities.

Therefore, it was Rowan Segmunt.

Cutting down all blood relations that served as obstructive fetters, removing all hindrances without hesitation in his pursuit to master the way of the sword with undaunted resolve, he prepared trial after trial with his son's life as a secondary concern.

That pure madness staked on the sword, free from any impurity, was unstintingly poured into Cecilus by Rowan.

Hence, Cecilus thought.

—As expected, he, born into this world as the son of Rowan, most definitely had it.

2

Drawn from a scabbard of dreams, the Dream Sword flashed as it ran through the sky of reality—.

Cutting the explosion of light, which seemed to invite the destruction of the world, head-on, its tip was delivered to the beautiful girl who housed a blue flame in a single one of her eyes as she shed tears of blood.

Basking in the supernatural stroke of the blade, the girl's—Arakiya's slender body had its very life severed in twain; such a thing did not come to pass.

The reason being, even the outcome from the slash of the Enchanted Sword, forged with reason not of this world, was something that did not adhere to common sense.

—The Stone, Muspel.

As one enrolled among the Four Great, it was the Great Spirit that sustained the vast lands of the Vollachian Empire.

Even if he intuitively understood that what he had exorcized with the Dream Sword Masayume was both Arakiya and not Arakiya, an extreme presence which had been painting over her very existence, Cecilus had no way of discerning its true identity.

But then again, Cecilus's resolve or actions would not have changed regardless if he had known.

Even if he understood that the vast lands of the Empire would crumble together with the Great Spirit if Muspel were to be destroyed, it was inevitable that Cecilus would draw the Dream Sword.

To prioritize the presence of the heroine over the vast lands of the Empire, was a natural decision for the leading actor.

To begin with, when it came to the script, it was impossible that anything Cecilus carried out with conviction would result in a bad ending.

Therefore—

Arakiya: "…"

Unable to endure the power she had taken into herself, Arakiya had been on the verge of bursting apart.

Before Cecilus, having exorcized the gargantuan power that threatened her life with the Dream Sword, the innumerable bands of light encircling Arakiya—those diamond bands were reduced to dazzling particles, melting into the crimson-tinted Imperial Capital.

As Arakiya slowly fell in the midst of those dancing particles of light, Cecilus sheathed the Dream Sword into the scabbard, which had suddenly appeared on his waist like a dream itself, and reached out his hands.

His body was covered in wounds. Having sustained lacerations all over his figure, his blood-drenched kimono was torn and frayed; the design was far too beaten-up to be called attire for a bout.

However, contrary to that miserable appearance, the light in Cecilus's eyes as he caught Arakiya had not clouded over in the slightest.

Cecilus: "…"

Languidly, the unconscious girl had both her eyes closed, and displayed a sleeping face that seemed as if she was dead.

Since he knew that she was not actually dead from how she felt in his hands, he did not panic. Only, he quietly shrugged his shoulders as if to say "Good grief".

Cecilus: "You really know how to cause a stir, Anya."

Among his faint memories that had been resuscitated in the midst of battle, the majority were of his evening conversation with the friend who had shrunk Before Cecilus into the form of After Cecilus. However, when excluding that majority, the one who had left the largest footprint on his memories was this girl.

Cecilus had a reputation, both among himself and others, that he was unable to look after others. Since he had made it so difficult to follow himself until here, there was no greater handful than her.

Perhaps, it would have been no exaggeration to say that she was the biggest handful in the whole Empire.

???: "…I guess it's fine to assume you've wrapped things up?"

Behind Cecilus as he held Arakiya, a voice with a slight sense of tension called out to him.

Approaching with footsteps that emphasized his caution, and in a state of being equally as battered as Cecilus from the aftermath of the battle, was Al.

Not only had he survived without being reduced to spent charcoal at the edge of the decisive battle of the bastion, but his act of playing supporting role by throwing his weapon at the end for Cecilus's spotlight, was also something that clearly served as his own spotlight.

Cecilus: “That was quite the masterfully controlled performance, Al-san. I think understanding my intentions back there and throwing your weapon truly merits quite the high amount of points.”

Al: “What kind of points, like favorability with you? In that case, I really don’t give a shit.”

Drooping his shoulders in a fed-up manner, Al looked towards Arakiya and said “More importantly…”. His gaze through his iron helmet was filled with trepidation, giving off a nervous and fearful atmosphere, but.

Al: “Lil’ Miss Arakiya is…”

Cecilus: “Not dead. After all, in order to secure a conclusion where she wouldn’t die, I went through the trouble of tearing through my limits a second and then a third time. It would have been outrageous to stop her by killing her! It’s the way of Cecilus Segmunt to meet expectations, and betray tasteless predictions.”

Al: “…If you’re fine with not killing her, then I’m not gonna press you for that conclusion.”

Cecilus puffed out his chest as he responded so, to which Al heaved a sigh as he fiddled with the metal fixtures of his helmet.

Of course, Cecilus understood Al’s concerns. It was a matter of if the risk of letting Arakiya live was worth the trade-off for the sense of security that would have come with killing her.

However—

Cecilus: “If it’s going to be that kind of complex and unexciting discussion, feel free to have it with some wise person with a frowny face in a place where I’m not around. My answer is just as you see it, Al-san.”

Al: “…I already knew from the start that any persuasion or arguing with you would be a three-hit combo of unreasonable, impossible, and thoughtless. You’re gonna need to take responsibility for the lil’ miss.”

Cecilus: “Apparently that was my intention from the beginning. Seems like since the very first time I defeated Anya, my intention was to shoulder that responsibility.”

With a light feeling as if he was speaking of somebody else’s matters when they were in fact his own, Cecilus saw the face of Arakiya from when she was younger overlaid upon her sleeping face currently in his arms.

Just like with the friend he had parted with amidst the evening sun, this was an illusion visible to him only because their acquaintance had been for so long. Perhaps he ought to put a bit more of his back into it, and tackle the memories which he had been far too concerned about pulling out.

Cecilus: “But it seems like before I can delve into that episode, there’s a separate duty that I need to carry out.”

Al: “Ah?”

As Cecilus suddenly muttered, Al raised his voice in surprise. But, Cecilus did not respond with words, and instead left his answer to the act of directing his gaze in another direction.

In the aftermath of his battle with Arakiya, the buildings and streets had all melted, leaving the Imperial Capital in a hellish state, dyed red—within that scene, the malevolent madness of an appropriate figure had arisen.

Malevolent Figure: “…”

With an inextinguishable flame flaring about his entire body, a blue-haired man stood.

His skin was scorched black, hiding one of its characteristics, but the blazing radiance of his golden eyes would have made it apparent to everyone that this man was an undead nevertheless.

And to Cecilus, a fact greater than what would have been communicated to everyone else was made apparent.

Cecilus: “—Oya oya oya, I had thought somebody was furiously dashing here, but to think it would be a flaming entrance! My my now if I do say so myself, isn't this quite the flashy production?"

He had not been running around haphazardly, rather, he had been running with a clear objective in mind.

The fact that his hurried strides had ceased at this place, was because that objective resided here—nay, that objective resided within none other than Cecilus Segmunt.

—With sights set upon the Heavenly Sword, the swordsman who neglected all else, Rowan Segmunt.

Having finally cast away even his own life, his father had arrived here in a completely altered form, to which Cecilus nodded many times in acknowledgement, and smiled.

Rowan was grinning in the midst of being engulfed in a blaze. Cecilus, too, smiled in his blood-drenched form.

The parent and the child, for whom naught was possible save for living and dying by the sword, grinning and smiling—

Cecilus: "Just now, you made me think this for the first time, dad. —I don't dislike it, rather, I quite like it."

Saying that, and ironically forgetting about the After Cecilus, he celebrated that the chance to fulfill the promise exchanged by the Before Cecilus had finally come about.

3

—Rowan Segmunt longed for the Heavenly Sword.

Why? For what reason? For what purpose?

He was tired of hearing such tedious questions. That whole kit and caboodle was nonsense that had nothing to do with Rowan.

Its impetus went beyond his earliest memories, its genesis was consigned to the riverbed of oblivion.

Since the very first occasion he had laid fingers upon steel in the form of a sword, there no longer remained any other path for Rowan Segmunt but to master the art of swinging it.

Even after being endowed with a commandment as a Stargazer, and gaining a son to serve as a vessel to reach the Heavenly Sword, Rowan continued to do nothing but commit himself to diligent study so that he himself could reach the Heavenly Sword.

Even using the fact that his greatest enemy in reaching the Heavenly Sword had been brought forth into this world by his own hands, he committed himself to diligent study, with diligent study, of diligent study, for diligent study, he diligently studied—

Rowan: “Ahhh… the time for my grand moment, has arrived at last.”

Soul aflame, life fading to ash, his very destiny was on the cusp of its terminus.

All were engulfed in the blaze, and as Rowan’s self was blurring into the realm after death, he entered into a domain untread by both living or undead—the interval between life and death, the point that ought to be called the beyond.

That was tantamount to uncovering the very nature, the true essence, of life and the soul.

A few more seconds, real as they might be, the final significance of Rowan Segmunt’s existence would overflow.

Rowan: “…”

Each time his undead body crumbled, he readied his beloved katana, continuously resurrected alongside himself, and faced forward.

The small figure visible beyond the flickering flames, witnessing it take the exact same stance as himself—

Rowan: “—Now, let us have ourselves…”

Cecilus: “AN HONORABLE DUEL—!!”

—Challenging the Heavenly Sword, the ephemeral flash of Rowan Segmunt blazed bright.

4

Cecilus: “I’m leaving Anya in your care.”

On the remains of the street that could no longer be called a road, answering the request of Rowan, who had appeared there in a blazing form, Cecilus forcibly foisted Arakiya upon Al.

Cecilus could hear Al’s bewildered voice go “Oioi?!” at the suddenness of it all, but he discarded that into the abyssal depths of his consciousness, and focused all of his nerves on a lone man.

Once again, color, sound, and smell vanished from Cecilus’s world, and it became governed solely by the palpitations of steel.

Rowan: “—Now, let us have ourselves…”

Holding his hand over the katana at his waist, it was apparent that Rowan’s lips had moved to spin such words as he readied himself.

Even if he could not hear it in the form of sound, the sentiments between the parent and child who loved extravagant pretenses had allowed him to hear it within his soul.

Hence, Cecilus likewise responded with grandeur.

Cecilus: “AN HONORABLE DUEL—!!”

In an instant, the distance separating the two disappeared.

That was nothing out of the ordinary for a battle involving Cecilus, Blue Lightning as he was, but this moment was not created by just Cecilus alone, and it was evidence that Rowan had stepped past the confines of human capability.

Cecilus: “I’m surprised.”

This was honest admiration.

A few hours prior, when he had parted with the yet-living Rowan, as far as Cecilus's eyes could see, his father had not reached this domain. However, now that they had been reunited, with him having become an undead, Rowan's skill with the sword had rapidly developed, and his talents were finally beginning a posthumous bloom.

That was neither something like his speed nor the proficiency of his skills, but it was a transformation brought about by a change in his consciousness.

The effect that mentality could have on performance was nothing to make light of, but having said that, breaking out of one's mental shell would not dramatically improve their physical abilities. Hence, the transformation within Rowan was not one of extreme physical nature.

—Rowan had become capable of taking himself "one step" further.

That which was not a physical step, was difficult to describe on a level above that of pure feeling. Just as there was a great distance between amateurs and experts, there existed yet another gap between first and second-class experts.

Thus, between first-class and super first-class, and between them and the transcendent beings that were even further above, there existed more gaps.

Invisible to the eye, inexplicable with words, Cecilus had deliberately expressed that here with the phrase "one step", and had recognized that Rowan had tread over that boundary.

To think that through the experience of death, he had overcome that difference of a single step which he had never been able to cross over in his life.

People would likely speak of how foolish, how incredibly ironic such a thing was. But, none other than Cecilus alone would—

Cecilus: "I don't dislike it, rather, I quite like it."

An unyielding flame upon his body, as his life itself was being scorched, Rowan, plunged into the realm of death as he was, unleashed a stroke of his sword; as the blade flashed across a world bereft of color and light, Cecilus watched in adoration.

Within the glint of the blade there dwelled assiduous training, diligent study in which no corners had been cut; witnessing this, his eyes flickered.

As a father, Rowan would likely be evaluated as the worst of the worst, and though Cecilus would not deny that, he dearly loved Rowan's mentality of constantly pouring his entire soul into the role he played.

Rowan: "…"

Igniting the little life he had left as fuel, Rowan unleashed his greatest stroke of the sword in all of his time during both his life and after his death.

That brandish, honed to a razor's edge, was pregnant with an aura of swordsmanship that caused even Cecilus to envision death. — That nightmarish ending, born out of a single-minded concentration, was something that the Dream Sword Masayume would not allow.

The Fiend Sword Murasame was an Enchanted Sword that could sever the concept of anything's "Point".

In contrast, using dreams as its scabbard, the true value of the Dream Sword Masayume was—

Cecilus: "—Dreams are devoured, and dreams are granted."

In exchange for the motivation one possessed for a wish they desired to be granted, the Enchanted Sword would harbor the power to grant that wish.

Hence, the Dream Sword had been granted the name of "A Dream Come True" which made dreams become reality; even if it might have become a useless, dull blade depending on the wielder, it had continued to be extolled as an Enchanted Sword capable of severing the very world in twain.

The blade spent many months and years being transferred from person to person, since as compensation for their wish being fulfilled, they would forget even the reason why they had yearned for it in the first place; as its owner had changed many times, now, the Dream Sword had settled into Cecilus's hand.

For both Cecilus and the Dream Sword, this was a miraculous happenstance.

That was because—

Cecilus: "There's no way that my dreams and motivation are ever going to run out!"

That was the reason why Cecilus Segmunt was the master of the Dream Sword.

An extraordinary yearning towards the dreams one harbored would allow the potential of the Dream Sword Masayume to be displayed to the maximum degree.

—That instant, the unleashed brandish blurred the boundary between dream and reality as it sliced.

Cecilus: "…"

Compared to the decisive battle of the bastion between Cecilus and Arakiya a moment prior, this bout was far too quiet.

The impact bestowed upon the Imperial Capital, the Empire, and the world was insignificant; something like a one-on-one against an undead that would have disappeared either way, could not be anything but a trivial matter.

However, for the parent and child duo that was Rowan Segmunt and Cecilus Segmunt, there was significance.

Rowan: "…Ahhh, good grief, what an unfilial son I've got."

Passing by each other the moment their blades had crossed, the parent and child had their backs turned to each other.

His undead father, whose face he would never be able to see again, unpleasantly spat that out in a long exhale, and then,

Rowan: "If this is how it ends, I shoulda cut ya down right away back when ya were soaking in yer first bath."

Cecilus: "Hahahahaha! Yes, yes, that's right! That's the only time you would've been able to win, dad!"

At the sore loser who acted truly dishonorably, Cecilus roared in a great burst of laughter.

Hearing Cecilus's unreserved laughter, Rowan looked up at the sky. Having lost its form, his katana was reduced to dust, and as his existence began to fray from his burning fingertips, he narrowed his golden eyes.

And then—

Rowan: "Next time, next. —I ain't the kinda person who'd give up on account of dying."

Until the very end of the end, without leaving behind even a single word befitting a father, his body, his soul, was reduced to ash.

Constantly aiming for the Heavenly Sword, and not relinquishing that desire even in death, those were the final moments of the malevolent swordsman known as Rowan Segmunt.

5

Ahhh, how unpleasant, how unpleasant, Rowan thought as he faded away.

Throughout his lifetime, he had continued to walk without halting his step, and ultimately, he had been unable to reach the Heavenly Sword.

The final blaze of his scorched, burning soul had not illuminated the unseen path towards the pinnacle of the sword. How very, how so very tantalizing.

At this rate, Cecilus would probably end up being the one to reach the Heavenly Sword.

To think it would be his son instead of himself, what truly malicious discretion of the Sword God. Chagrin and despair, dejection and lament, if he were to start speaking, he would never be able to clear away the inexhaustible negative thoughts.

Be that as it may—

Rowan: “Well, guess it’s better than some other person reaching it.”

In that final duel, if Rowan had surpassed Cecilus, would he have reached the Heavenly Sword?

He had not surpassed him. In the end, it was meaningless to think about hypotheticals that had not come to pass. Rowan would not think about meaningless things. Especially when he was on the verge of fading away.

He ought not do what should not be done, so when trying to think of other things, he came to a realization.

Ever since he had been aware of his surroundings, he had aimed for the Heavenly Sword; in every waking moment, in every sleeping moment, he dreamed of nothing but reaching the Heavenly Sword; that was how the existence known as himself had persisted until this day.

Once Rowan concluded that he would not reach the Heavenly Sword, there no longer remained anything for him to think about.

Rowan: “Hm.”

For the first time since he began longing for the Heavenly Sword, he relinquished it.

That sensation made Rowan feel a sense of loss rather than a sense of freedom, as well as a certain kind of discomfort. Amidst the sensation of his soul feeling ill at ease, Rowan thought this for the very first time in his life.

—Was the blaze of my soul that I had spent my whole life to reach, at least able to become a flame for a candle that will illuminate my son’s path? So he thought.

6

Leaving behind naught but ash and dust, the figure of Rowan Segmunt faded away.

Within his soul, Cecilus Segmunt understood that this undoubtedly signified the death of his father.

Having already met his end as a mortal, Rowan had still continued to aim for the Heavenly Sword after being reduced to an undead, and as his life was on the cusp of burning out, Cecilus had certainly severed it in twain.

Cecilus: “Al-san, sorry for so suddenly entrusting you with Anya. It must not be easy to carry someone with only one arm so I’ll take her back now.”

Returning Masayume to its sheath after it had completed its duty, Cecilus turned around and called out to Al.

However, Al gave no response to that call. On one knee and supporting Arakiya's body with one arm, as he shook his head side-to-side in a feeble manner,

Al: "How… are you so calm?"

Cecilus: "And by that you mean?"

Al: "You know what I mean! Just now, that was your own father, wasn't it! He was still alive when you last saw each other, and yet he died and became a pawn of the enemy, that's…!"

Cecilus: "Wait wait stop right there, Al-san. You're a little mistaken so please allow me to correct you. My dad certainly became a dead person, but he hadn't been made into a pawn. The reason why my dad attacked me wasn't because he'd lost his sanity."

Al: "Wha…"

Cecilus: "Ah, by the way, I said sanity with the widely-accepted meaning of the word so perhaps my dad was already quite divorced from that regular type of sanity. On that front, make no mistake, but…"

Waving his hand, Cecilus added that bit regarding Rowan's mentality.

Either way, Cecilus wanted to clear up Al's misunderstanding that this was an act of returning the favor for Rowan having attacked Cecilus, which happened because his mind had been destroyed after being turned into an undead.

Cecilus: "Stuff like a child killing their parent was also a major development in the play "Magrizza's Guillotine". —But then again, things between me and my dad turning out like this was something that was appointed by fate quite a long time ago."

Al: "Appointed, by fate…?"

Cecilus: "So, it's simply a matter of that time finally having come around."

This was a conclusion that both Cecilus and Rowan knew would eventually come.

Thus, when Rowan had returned as a dead person, despite having parted when he was still alive, Cecilus was not very surprised. For Rowan, everything outside of reaching the Heavenly Sword was trifle, so it was understandable that if necessary, he would sacrifice his own life as if it was the natural thing to do.

Nobody was capable of understanding Rowan. —Nobody, except Cecilus.

His father, who was exceedingly the best at being a bad example, was not an incomprehensible monster. That was sufficient proof that the Segmunts had a healthy parent-child relationship, even if it was atypical.

Cecilus: "Most people would probably disapprove of the relationship between me and my dad, but—"

Unlike Rowan, Cecilus did not view all things in the world as trifle. So long as one could properly distinguish between the cheers and the other interference, the world was filled with blessings as far as the eye could see.

The light of the sun, the cool breeze, the trickle of raindrops, the fragrance of grass, and Rowan Segmunt—all were blessings that had been granted to Cecilus.

Cecilus: "My dad called me an unfilial son, but I don't think there's any son as filial as I am. After all, just by being my father, he has achieved the exceedingly meritorious achievement of having brought me into this world."

Of course, that would not serve as consolation to Rowan, who had failed to realize the wish he had pursued throughout his life.

Being called an unfilial son for such a reason, Cecilus had no room for excuse. Though from the outset, he had no intention whatsoever of leading a life in need of excuses.

Al: "…"

Walking right up to the speechless Al, Cecilus folded his arms and tilted his head.

After this, there was the worry of what should be done with Arakiya. Even if he tried to bring her somewhere safe, was there anywhere in the current Imperial Capital that actually was safe?

Were there any safe zones aside from Cecilus's direct vicinity?

Cecilus: "Having said that it'd be a bit strange to carry Anya around the whole time as I run about… if we don't head back soon then Groovy-san's sure to loudly yell at us. He went off to go hold back the caster of that curse, and speaking of which, do you think Groovy-san will be okay with us coming back with the Dream Sword instead of the Fiend Sword?"

From the start, the encounter with Arakiya was an unexpected combat.

The reason that Cecilus and Al had come here was to search for the Fiend Sword Murasame, capable of cutting curses, and unfortunately they had not fulfilled that objective. By now, Groovy should have been doing battle with the caster of the troublesome Curse of Thorns.

Cecilus: "For the time being, how about it, Al-san. While you do your best to carry Anya here, I'll clear the way ahead, by cooperating like that…"

Al: "—Nah, I can't agree to that."

Cecilus: "Al-san?"

At Cecilus's proposition, Al shook his head side-to-side and declined. Standing up from his kneeling position, he foisted Arakiya back upon Cecilus.

Cecilus reflexively took Arakiya into his arms, and then,

Al: "I've said it before. I've got something that I gotta do. Lil' Miss Arakiya was an unthinkable detour… Feel bad for Groovy, though."

Lowering the tone of his voice, Al's gaze through his steel helmet was directed towards the Dream Sword on Cecilus's waist.

Al: "Even I can tell that the katana on your waist is an insanely powerful weapon. It may be different from the one Groovy wanted, but do your best with it."

Cecilus: "So then Al-san is going off on his own. It may not be my place to say this, but will Al-san be alright walking around by himself unarmed? Wouldn't dying in vain be the most you could do?"

Al: "—. I won't die in vain. That's the one thing I'll never do."

Cecilus: "Indeed, seems like it. I kinda understand somehow or another."

As Al spoke with conviction, Cecilus nodded in assent.

Having acted together until here, Cecilus thought that Al possessed a special trait of the same kind as Schwartz's "True Sight". With that "True Sight", capable of seeing excessively ahead, Al surely would not die in vain.

Cecilus: "But that's not the only reason why Al-san is trying to part ways with me, right?"

Al: "…"

Cecilus: "It seems like you really weren't pleased in the slightest with how me and my dad settled things. Perhaps Al-san also has some reservations regarding parent-child relationships?"

Al: "…That's got nothing to do with this."

Even if it had nothing to do with this, Al's tone made it clear that a nerve had been struck, so Cecilus slightly shrugged his shoulders, and adjusted his hold on Arakiya.

Personally, Cecilus was reluctant to part with Al and leave him alone.

Part of that was because he judged that it would not be ideal to have his hands full with Arakiya, but more so because of his debt to Al—in order to finish things without letting Arakiya die, it was a fact that Cecilus had borrowed Al's power.

Long story short, Cecilus had to repay his debt to Al.

If Al had someone he wanted to save, then it made sense for Cecilus to assist him in that rescue.

Worst case scenario, he could knock out Al and carry him back to Groovy, and then after mowing down the problem entirely with a swing of the Dream Sword, everyone would go to meet Al's "princess".

It happened at the same moment he had thought that.

???: "—It was unexpected that you did not take her life. Reconsideration: Required."

Suddenly, the voice of a third party interrupted Cecilus and Al's conversation.

Those who heard the voice faced towards it, and Cecilus slightly narrowed his eyes. —The owner of the voice was in the air, not in the midst of a jump, but in a state of simply floating there.

For a moment, upon hearing the familiar manner of speech, Cecilus recalled the existence of the Witch whom he had once killed, but present there was not the same Witch in question—

Cecilus: "—No, you're the same person. You look different on the outside but you're the same on the inside… hmm? Perhaps you're a little different on the inside too? Is such a thing even possible?"

Witch: "If the form and nature of a soul changes, the exterior follows suit. The converse is also true, but… by what sort of principle were you able to perceive that with merely a single glance? Answer: Required."

Cecilus: "Hahahaha, now that you mention it, I too wonder how I figured that out."

Without any intentions to provoke her with teasing, and truly just not knowing why, Cecilus smiled.

Only, for some reason he harbored confidence that such was the case at a single glance. That the woman floating in the air overhead, her white hair fluttering, was the same existence as that Witch.

Cecilus: “But why are you here? Did you not learn your lesson when you were killed by me the first time, and came to get revenge? I find the appeal of such unyielding tough opponents to be desirable, but…”

Witch: “To put it plainly, it is to carry out my objective. I have fulfilled one of my two overarching objectives. Once I achieve the one that remains, I hypothesize that I will be able to become fully absorbed in my original purpose of creation.”

Cecilus: “Ho ho I see I don’t get it!”

Witch: “I thought I had explained it succinctly, though. Explanation: Required.”

Cecilus: “Well then how about I also give an answer that’s simple, unusually short, and succinct in terms of myself! —If you came to where I was to fulfill your objective then you probably won’t be able to fulfill it.”

It was plain and simple, exceedingly obvious, a clear answer unmatched in terms of being easy to understand.

Hearing that reponse, the white-haired Witch narrowed her eyes, framed by long lashes, and nodded.

And then—

Witch: “Ah, is that so? In that case, my answer is simple. You cannot kill me.”

Cecilus: “…”

Witch: “I have grasped that which is capable of killing me within this Empire. By no means shall I draw near any of them. Henceforth, nobody can kill me.”

The Witch spoke in an indifferent manner, and raised both her hands to the sky.

That instant, Cecilus felt a strange sensation that seemed to distort the air and space surrounding the Witch. Next to Cecilus, Al took a step forward.

Since the Witch had made her entrance, Al had not spoken a single word.

He looked up at the Witch, who continued to produce a strange air of oppression, and suddenly extended his single arm straight out to the side. —The next moment, the melted ground surged upwards, creating an unshapely stone dao, and Al gripped it in his outstretched hand.

Raising the stone dao overhead, Al’s throat quaked towards the Witch—

Witch: “I am the Witch of Greed—”

Al: “—ECHIDNAAAAAAAA!!”

With a voice of pure rage, akin to coughing up blood, he seemed to lose himself as he slashed towards her.

Chapter 65:
Starfall Upon the Imperial Capital

1

—Through transformation of the soul, the vessel was reconstructed into the Witch of Greed.

That was the ultimate goal of the Witch, Sphinx, in bringing about this massive catastrophe, the Great Disaster of the Vollachian Empire.

It was the purpose for which she had been created, one that had remained unaccomplished for the over three hundred years since her birth into this world—the obstacle that had continued to persist at the core of Sphinx, regardless of how far she had come.

Following the rationale of the Stargazers, considered to only appear within the Vollachian Empire, it could be called a commandment bestowed upon Sphinx by birth.

In order to fulfill that commandment, be it the Kingdom or the Empire, she would hold no qualms about bringing them to ruin.

As a matter of fact—

???: “—By flooding the Empire with the dead, was that your objective?”

Bound by chains in the jail with both arms above her head, Priscilla narrowed her crimson eyes.

Those astute eyes held not a shade of astonishment concerning what was taking place before her, but only a scintillating flame that burned with placid understanding as its fuel.

With her lips twisting into a smile at the sight of that crimson gaze, Sphinx, who had now become the Witch of Greed, nodded.

Sphinx: “By nature, the soul and the vessel are inseparable; this I had understood immediately after I was created. The long years of my quest, it could be said that they were a journey to rectify that inconsistency."

Her purpose was supposed to be to replicate the Witch of Greed, however the soul had been inserted into a vessel differing to that of the Witch of Greed, hence Sphinx could not help but be born as an incomplete version of the Witch of Greed.

Although she had not considered the over three hundred years of trial and error, fraught with failure, as suffering, even Sphinx was no exception to feeling a sense of accomplishment upon finally having reached the horizon.

And as Priscilla had posited, this was, without a doubt, a path brought to fruition by having caused the Great Disaster within the Empire.

—As mentioned previously, by nature, the vessel and the soul were inseparable characteristics of life.

Even intangible entities like Spirits were no exception to this. The presence or absence of a tangible body was not what mattered, but rather, the vessel that formed the receptacle within which the soul would reside.

To say that they were incongruous, would also imply that such a life would be in an unnatural state. Hence, within the inseparable soul and vessel, there would be a force at work that would attempt to correct this unnatural incongruity.

Certainly, no matter what corrective forces were at work, cases where a vessel would mutate to match its soul were rare.

Things like the techniques employed by the Shinobi that altered the soul and changed the form of the vessel to match, and binding curses of reincarnation that required multiple lives as a sacrifice were rare examples of this; however, the former required talent in the technique of molding the soul and the vessel into the appropriate form, while the latter required a strong connection between the caster and the numerous sacrifices.

Both of these were conditions that Sphinx could not meet, thus she was forced to abandon them as possibilities after considering their feasibility in order to achieve her desire.

Hence, Sphinx had taken advantage of it. —Of the Great Disaster.

Priscilla: “In the process of resurrecting the dead across the Empire with evil magic, you are able to make innumerable observations concerning invisible and intangible souls. It was perfect for conducting investigations pertaining to your objective, was it not?”

Sphinx: “The fact that the Great Disaster would occur was foreseen. The sole consideration that remained was whether my plan would be deemed worthy for that… the results are as you can see.”

Priscilla: “For someone so triumphant, was it not quite the tightrope you had to walk upon?”

Sphinx: “I shall not deny it. Challenge: Was Required.”

Prisiclla’s remark was correct. It was indeed an endeavor fraught with myriad uncertainties.

Whether the Sacrament of the Immortal King could be modified to establish a connection with the Stone, the Great Spirit of Vollachia, enabling the actualization of an undead army; whether the artificially created Sphinx would be recognized as a singular soul and be included as a target for resurrection as an undead; and whether something capable of inducing a transformation of the soul that Sphinx had been unable to achieve on her own would emerge; all of these had been uncertain.

Sphinx: “However…”

The revival of the undead through the recreation of the Sacrament of the Immortal King was successful, and Sphinx’s plan to resurrect herself as an undead also went smoothly. Furthermore, those who had received an alteration to their souls, such as Lamia Godwin and the Giant Eye, Izmail, had also appeared, henceforth laying the foundation that Sphinx had required.

And then—

Sphinx: “To think that the final push needed was the flame of the Yang Sword, how very ironic.”

Priscilla: “…”

Sphinx: “If things had continued as they were, I would undoubtedly have been annihilated. That predicament, however, became the impetus for me to conduct countless analyses in the end.”

Priscilla: “—No, that is incorrect.”

Sphinx: “Incorrect?”

At the denial of the fact that she had narrowly escaped the crisis of her soul being incinerated, Sphinx tilted her head.

In contrast to when she had been the incomplete vessel of the Witch of Greed, the height from which she gazed upon her differed. Her face, neck, and exposed skin were no longer the pallid hue bereft of complexion, and no longer were her eyes the gold upon black of the undead, but rather black irises had been reproduced.

Nevertheless, it was certain that Sphinx was still an undead.

The successful reproduction of a soul in a state of being exceedingly indistinguishable from the living had a significant impact upon its outward appearance. The very fact that she had actualized that served as proof of the validity of Sphinx’s theory.

Sphinx: “About what am I mistaken, then? Explanation: Required.”

Priscilla: “Do not use lifeless words such as “countless analyses” to describe what you have brought about. Your life was on the brink of burning to naught, so with disgraceful earnesty you strove to survive.”

Sphinx: “—. I am dead, though.”

Priscilla: “Do you think the dead have no right to strive for survival? Those countless tightropes you had to cross, none of them could have been traversed with naught but a leisurely attitude.”

Sphinx: "…"

Priscilla: "You strove to survive, and drew forth the outcome you desired. Regardless of how displeasing or inconvenient it may be for mineself, you must correctly recognize that fact. —And, if you would dare to be mine enemy…"

To Sphinx, whose lips remained sealed, the imprisoned Priscilla declared thus with boldness.

At Priscilla's words as she gazed at her, Sphinx displayed a slight frown.

Priscilla's tongue, with its characteristic sharpness, seemed to be praising the challenge Sphinx had undertaken.

It was as if it was an acknowledgement of the fact that Sphinx's trial and error had borne fruit.

Sphinx: "…"

Within Sphinx's chest, a slight unease was birthed. —Unbefitting of the Witch of Greed, a sentiment that should have never been, was birthed.

Sphinx: "—. It seems that I should avoid engaging with your explanations. Self-defense: Required."

Priscilla: "Oh my. As if being chained this way was not enough, you would now turn a deaf ear to mine words as well? If that is the case, there would be no point for your continued presence here, or in keeping mineself alive. In spite of that, why do you continue to do so?"

Sphinx: "As stated, I shall not engage."

Priscilla: "Hmph, very well. Then, I shall lay everything bare."

Curving her crimson lips, Priscilla ignored Sphinx's statement of her intention to not engage.

Her words and tone of voice held great power. Once she would begin to speak, no matter how much one might desire to close their ears to her utterance, her words possessed the power to force one to heed her.

Priscilla: “The execution of this plan within the Empire, and your continued presence before me even now that you have succeeded in your objective to transform yourself into the vessel for this so-called Witch, the reasons for both are glaringly obvious.”

Hence, to Sphinx who had failed to silence her, Priscilla continued to speak.

And then—

Priscilla: “You are attempting to flaunt the demise of the Empire while keeping mineself alive. For what reason might that be? It is to show mineself the ruin of mine homeland, so as to crush mine heart. —At the root of which, is your inexhaustible hatred towards mineself.”

—She had correctly surmised the two ultimate goals of the Witch, Sphinx: to recreate the Witch of Greed through transformation of the soul, and to enact her revenge upon Priscilla Barielle.

2

—For Aldebaran, this was a fateful encounter that should never have happened.

Al: “—ECHIDNAAAAAAAA!!”

His voice trembling with wrath, Al grabbed the rapidly-emerging stone dao from the ground and hurled it at the Witch of Greed, her white hair fluttering as she floated in mid-air.

The dao distorted the space like a mirage and approached furiously, spinning vertically, toward the Witch, who was preparing to launch some kind of attack.

Al’s ability to jump was not enough to reach the Witch of Greed, but his sword went straight for her—

Witch: “I am surprised that someone would address me by that name. Explanation: Required.”

Having said so nonchalantly, the Witch of Greed easily avoided the dao with minimal movement.

The blade, which had missed its target, sailed in vain past the Witch of Greed without even grazing her.

—And, that was exactly as intended.

Al: “Eat this!”

Immediately after Al shouted in a deep voice, the dao that had missed its target glowed and exploded.

To begin with, he was not so naive as to think that the sword he threw would hit his opponent. In fact, Al was well aware that his attacks would not be effective against most opponents.

That was why Al’s fighting style would not have been worth considering if he had not laid out all of his moves in advance.

Witch: “…”

The stone dao that had exploded turned into flying debris, mercilessly striking the slender frame of the Witch of Greed.

It was a small explosive projectile, and although the damage would be far from fatal if it hit its target, the way it splintered was designed to cause damage that could not be ignored.

Even with a small amount of mana, he had purposely sculpted the dao in such a way that the shards would be sharp. —He was skilled at making the most out of what was at his disposal to produce the maximum effect.

Al: “You see, I used to be in an environment where I would’ve died if I couldn’t do things like this!”

Above Al’s head as he barked, the flying debris pierced the Witch of Greed with a painful sound. —However, things did not turn out as expected.

Witch: “Hmm.”

The Witch of Greed squinted slightly at the approaching debris and did nothing. There was no need to do anything. The flying debris deflected off of the floating Witch of Greed, as if avoiding her by itself.

Al’s attack could not even break through the lingering winds that the Witch of Greed wore to fly.

But, for Al, even that sadly was to be expected.

Witch: “—Hk!”

If the Witch of Greed’s attention could be diverted, even for a moment or a minute, that would suffice.

Using that gap, Al cast a spell beneath his running feet, and the rising earth became a springboard, propelling Al’s body high up into the sky.

Then, Al jumped upward and transformed a stone that he had grasped into a second dao.

Compared to producing fire or water from nothing, using a pebble as a catalyst to transform it into a large sword consumed less mana and was orders of magnitude faster in terms of transmutation speed.

Al: “OOOHHH—!!”

Employing all of his body upon the springboard, he delivered a swinging blow to the Witch of Greed.

Unlike the flying debris, this was not something that could be auto-guarded by the wind. Al’s full force was put into that face with those all too well-defined wicked features—

Al: “Gah.”

Witch: “Compensating for your lack of skill by utilizing your ingenuity is commendable but, Skill: Required.”

The slender arms of the Witch of Greed smoothly parried the dao, and her long legs struck the torso of the astonished Al. As Al instinctively folded his body over in midair, the Witch of Greed rotated her hips and kicked him straight to the ground.

Al: “Gah!”

He quickly curled his body up, preventing his neck from being broken by the impact of the fall.

However, the strong impact inflicted indescribable damage upon Al’s entire body. And, it was not only the physical impact that had injured Al.

Al: “Just now, that move was…”

Witch: “I certainly cannot say that it was not unexpected. This is the result of using previous defeats to compensate for and sharpen the skills which are lacking.”

Lowering the leg she had used to kick, the Witch of Greed’s words penetrated Al’s brain, rendering him awestruck.

It was strange. It was not possible. As far as Al knew, she had a propensity to try her hand at everything without restraint, but her athletic skills were atrocious. No matter how much she theorized she was never able to apply it to her own body; she could never learn to perform such feats even if she were to stand up on her head. In fact, she could not even perform a headstand.

In other words—

Al: “You’re not, Teacher… you’re not, Echidna?”

Witch: “Your surprise is intriguing. Normally, this would be impossible, but you seem to know my creator. —How?”

When asked, Al looked back at the Witch of Greed in the air—at the one who resembled Echidna in appearance, and was at a loss for words.

In both appearance and voice, she was just like Echidna herself. But, this was not Echidna.

In this Witch of Greed's—no, in this Witch's black eyes, it wasn't present. The malignant and abnormal insatiable curiosity that the real Witch of Greed possessed.

Al: "…"

As Al shut his mouth at this certainty, the non-Echidna being that took the form of Echidna narrowed her eyes, framed by white lashes, and in slight disapproval,

Witch: "Refusing to answer, I see? I would like to know more information about yourself beyond simply being a squire of Priscilla Barielle—"

???: "—Ah in that case I'm terribly sorry but that'll no longer be possible."

It was a flash of lightning, an instantaneous event.

Just as the Witch was about to point a finger at the barely upright Al, Cecilus appeared behind her with Arakiya in his arms.

Supporting Arakiya with just his left hand, he pulled out the Dream Sword with his right hand, and with one flash of his right hand, without hesitation—the Witch's head was sent flying off.

Witch: "Wh-"

Cecilus: "You said I couldn't kill you didn't you. To be honest the way you said that was a little bit off-putting so I hope I can redeem myself with this!"

Without even granting her a chance to react, the blade easily parted the Witch's head from her torso.

Above the speechless Al's head, Cecilus stuck his tongue out, as his swordsmanship easily killed even the Witch.

At least that in itself was understandable to Al, who was confused by the appearance of a familiar-faced Witch and the fact that it was apparently not the Witch herself.

However—

Witch: “—Analysis: Required.”

Understanding what happened next was impossible the first time around.

Witch: “…”

The beautiful face upon the spinning head only slightly loosened its lips, sneering as her white hair was scattered from her having been decapitated.

Immediately after, the space around the falling Witch was violently distorted into white—

× × ×

Witch: “Refusing to answer, I see? I would like to know more information about yourself beyond simply being a squire of Priscilla Barielle—”

Cecilus: “—Ah in that case I’m terribly sorry but that’ll no longer be… wahwahwahwahwahwahwah?!”

The Witch narrowed her eyes, framed by white lashes, and murmured disapprovingly.

Cecilus, aiming at her slender neck from behind, was startled by the earthen wall that suddenly appeared before him, and immediately kicked away into the air, spun around and landed, then turned his furious and reproachful eyes toward Al.

Cecilus: “Hey hey Al-san! What are you doing getting in my way all of a sudden? That was supposed to be the stylish scene where I show off my abilities after being underestimated at the beginning! Even the audience is booing me!”

Al: “Sorry to steal your spotlight, but I can’t let you do that. After all, if I let you do that, everyone… or, at least, I'd be wiped out."

Witch: "—. Hmm."

Cecilus stomped his feet on the ground in protest, to which Al replied, causing the Witch to let out a sigh.

From that single comment, the Witch seemed to have realized that Al had seen through her trap—a technique that distorted space, blowing away an entire area as it recoiled.

As soon as Cecilus would cut off the Witch's head, causing the power maintaining the twisted space to cease, a dead man's switch would be triggered—rather than detonating upon the press of a button, it was a trap with the same mechanism as a bomb that would be triggered by the release of a button.

It was a power that Al could not withstand, regardless of how many walls of earth he erected or how much armor of stone he wore.

In reality, Cecilus might have been able to flee even while carrying Arakiya, but for Al it was a passageway to death with no means of escape.

Therefore, he could not let the Witch be killed recklessly. —This was a fact that Al had been able to ascertain through fifty-three attempts of trial and error.

Moreover, there was another thing of which he had been convinced.

Al: "You bastard, you aren't Echidna. Just who the hell are you, and where did you come from?"

Witch: "I have already answered that question. I am the Witch of Greed."

Al: "Like I'm saying, that's Echidna's…"

Cecilus: "Wait wait, Al-san, don't you understand? Or maybe Al-san has never come across her."

Within the gap during which Al was about to argue further with the Witch, Cecilus physically intervened. Kicking the ground nimbly and standing to block their line of sight as he picked up Arakiya again,

Cecilus: “That person is currently the ringleader of this big disaster happening in the Empire… and so she’s the one who’s resurrecting the dead. She looks different now than when I previously met her but I think she looks more beautiful and villainous now so she has the perfect airs for the person who masterminds everything from behind the curtains!”

Al: “She’s, the mastermind behind the Great Disaster…”

Witch: “There is no need for me to hide it, so I shall affirm it. I am your enemy.”

Without any deception in her words, the Witch matter-of-factly stated her position; this allowed Al to finally escape the humiliating position of falling behind Cecilus in understanding the situation.

However, the issue of the Witch’s appearance still remained unresolved.

Al: “That figure of yours… It’s no use. I can’t think of any other possibility aside from Teacher having gone too far…!”

Witch: “Concerning that which you know about my creator, I believe there is Confirmation: Required.”

Cecilus: “By the way, I’m still here.”

To the sight of the distressed Al fiddling with his metal helmet, the Witch cast a gaze of great interest. But, once again, Cecilus intercepted her gaze, standing in the way of her being able to satiate her curiosity.

However, Cecilus’s presence here was not completely positive.

As aforementioned, the Witch’s dead man switch was still functional—without some sort of breakthrough, it would be impossible to defeat the Witch of Greed carelessly.

Al: “…No. This isn’t the Witch of Greed.”

Having said this, Al denied the idea that had begun to take shape in his mind.

Though the Witch’s appearance was certainly identical to Echidna, the title of the Witch of Greed was not something that could be bestowed upon someone who merely resembled her.

This was not limited to just the Witch of Greed. —The title of Witch, was not something to be bestowed so lightly.

Al: “There’s no way that someone could become a Witch that easily.”

Witch: “I have no desire to ostentatiously flaunt my achievements, but I find it quite annoying to be told that it was easy for me to reach this point.”

Al: “Shut up, die hundreds and hundreds of times, and then you can talk.”

Apparently, the Witch was feeling displeased, but this was no less true for Al.

As soon as possible, he wanted to rush to Priscilla, who was in the Crystal Palace, so being held up by an irritated-looking Witch was no joke.

Al: “—Re-initiate thought experiment, territory redefinition.”

Left with his raging fighting spirit, Al updated his matrix as he glared at the Witch.

Even with Cecilus around, he could not be too careful. This was because, along with the fact that one could not carelessly kill the Witch, Al had become convinced of another fact.

That was—

Al: “Cecilus, hold onto Lil’ Miss Arakiya tightly.”

Cecilus: “Of course I don’t intend to throw her away carelessly but… doesn’t that way of putting it make it sound like I should treat her as if she was as important as a princess?”

Al: “That’s right. —Since the aim of that woman, is Lil’ Miss Arakiya’s life.”

The Witch, the bearer of the Great Disaster, had brought herself here, all due to the fact that Arakiya’s life slumbered within the arms of Cecilus.

3

Priscilla: “Had things progressed ordinarily, Arakiya would not have been able to suppress the Stone which she had devoured, thus bursting asunder and losing her life. However, your calculations were off.”

Sphinx: “…”

Priscilla: “Mine Soul Marriage Technique and the Blue Lightning’s Masayume were factors beyond the realm of your expectation. Nobody can say what would have happened if it were just one or the other, but both had been assembled for Arakiya. —But then again, if Arakiya had not been able to withstand it until they assembled, your calculations would have come to fruition.”

After asserting so, Priscilla gained confidence in her own assessment from Sphinx’s silent demeanor.

Despite getting struck on the mark, there was no sign of anguish upon Sphinx’s face. Having said that, she did not resort to deceit by manipulating words. An impressive display of nerve in the face of an “irregulur” situation.

—Arakiya’s survival should have been an unexpected outcome that deviated from Sphinx’s plans.

Originally, if things had followed Sphinx’s estimations, Arakiya should have destroyed herself due to the fact that she had taken in a power that was beyond her stature in order to save Priscilla.

Making a display of Arakiya's tragic demise must have been one of Sphinx's schemes prepared to torment Priscilla, much like the downfall of the Vollachian Empire.

Sphinx's act of deliberately making Arakiya eat the Stone, was likewise for that purpose.

But, it had backfired. —Because Arakiya had continued to endure without perishing, it had allowed the intervention of Priscilla and Cecilus to successfully prolong her life.

As a result, the Spirit Eater, Arakiya, had not only thwarted Sphinx's schemes, but she also rose to a significant position capable of greatly derailing her plans.

That was to say—

Priscilla: "—The Stone residing within Arakiya was exorcized by Cecilus Segmunt with the Dream Sword. Hence, her life is now synonymous with the Stone."

Sphinx: "—Yes, that is correct. I, too, have no objections to your assessment."

That was Priscilla's assertion, to which Sphinx also nodded in agreement.

It was an affirmation of a dramatic, fateful change in circumstances —proof of acknowledgement that Arakiya had become deeply and inseparably connected to the Stone, Muspel, which she had taken in.

Arakiya's original intention was likely to have been to absorb a portion of Muspel, thereby teaching the Great Spirit the fear of death by having Cecilus kill it through this connection, and thus putting an end to the situation in which Sphinx used the Stone for the large-scale application of the Sacrament of the Immortal King.

However, looking at the results alone, that plan had failed.

In essence, for both the living and the dead caught in the grip of the Stone, this turned out to be an "irregulur" situation beyond expectations of all involved.

Sphinx: “However, you are still the one who is cornered. If she… if General First-Class Arakiya were to lose her life, then the Stone, Muspel, would likewise meet its demise. The Vollachian Empire shall not escape destruction.”

Priscilla: “Do you presume that mine eyes shall cloud over if my once-discarded homeland falls? You have underestimated me.”

Sphinx: “In that case, sit back and watch. Whether or not this is all bravado shall become clear.”

Crimson and jet-black, the eyes of Priscilla and Sphinx glared at each other squarely.

Despite the heat and sharpness of Priscilla’s gaze, Sphinx’s firm resolve remained unshaken. In response to being openly told that the cogs of her plan had gone out of order, that was a displeased display of intimidation.

At the root of that, rivaling her long-standing, centuries-spanning fixation that had allowed Sphinx to fulfill her purpose of becoming the Witch of Greed, was her hatred towards Priscilla—.

Priscilla: “To detest mineself to such a degree… nay, perhaps you are thinking of them, O Witch.”

Sphinx: “There exists no name for the splinter that resides within the depths of my chest. Or perhaps, do you know just what it is that dwells within myself? Answer: Required.”

Priscilla: “—The boorish act of a party uninvolved committing it to words, I shall not be made to do so.”

To the unnamed emotion of the person directly concerned, Priscilla had no intention to try and place a name to it.

Even were its name unknown, a blooming flower would still be a flower. In this parable, even if it was a flower that only grew petals atop piles of corpses, there was no sin in its beauty.

Sphinx: "…"

Silenced by Priscilla's answer, Sphinx instead snapped her fingers.

At that moment, the image of the distant view that had been reflected in the magic crystal fitted into the end of her staff before the Witch's appearance had changed, was projected onto the surface of a water mirror that was created in the air.

—The sight of a being with the same appearance as the Witch before her, sending down a star from the yet bright sky, in order to put an end to the Land of the Sword Wolves.

4

Cecilus: "—Clouds gather over the moon, and wind scatters the flowers, so to speak."

Allowing the elegant, picturesque poem to flow off of his tongue, Cecilus plunged himself into the tempest of stones.

The upheaved maelstrom of debris before him was bound to be a fatal hail of bullets through a forest of blades, but pulling Arakiya tightly into his arms, Cecilus successfully evaded it with the minimal amount of movement. —No,

Cecilus: "How wonderful. It's a difficulty level that only I'm capable of dealing with!"

Licking the blood that trickled down his grazed cheek, Cecilus trained his gaze on the Witch who was blowing a raging storm.

Though it was troublesome, he could not tear down the advantageous position the Witch was maintaining from a high altitude. Arakiya had essentially flattened all the surrounding buildings that could have been used as footholds, and there were no stage props on this battlefield that could buy him the range to reach her with a jump.

Having said that, even if he wanted to lead the enemy to some other battlefield—

Witch: “—Al Goa.”

Brought about by the short incantation, was a gargantuan mass of flames that plummeted down on an unbelievable scale.

If it were to make impact with the ground, the entirety of the surrounding area would be engulfed in the tongues of flame, and it would likely amount to a hellscape on par with that of his battle against Arakiya.

And unlike Arakiya, the Witch had no need to concern herself with limiting the area that comprised her theater of war.

Cecilus: “It’s simply troublesome! Scatter!”

That instant, the brandish of the Dream Sword, unsheathed at lightning speed, unleashed a stroke of cloud-cutting, bisecting the fireball in the sky above.

The bundle of flames basked in the glint of the slash and released a firepower capable of turning the surface into a sea of flame out into the sky, coating it once more in the destructive hue of red after it had temporarily returned to its usual color.

It was quite splendid that the sight was exceedingly flashy; however, he would not be able to quietly sit and enjoy that view.

That was because the mass of flames raining down did not end with just that one attack.

Witch: “Goa. El Goa. Ul Goa. Al Goa.”

At the successive incantations, ruinous fire of immense volume began to fall like a scene out of a nightmare.

At the rain of fire that did not omit even a single shot, Cecilus’s eyes brilliantly lit up—throwing Arakiya directly to his side, he gripped the handle of the Dream Sword.

Cecilus: “Don-don-don-don-do-do-don-don!!”

While slicing in a staccato rhythm, the shimmering Dream Sword cleared away the downpour of flame. As the sound of thunder, the sound of explosions, the sound of the world ending, were all strummed, the perilous radiance of the sky increased all the more.

His cheeks contorted into a smile; however, Cecilus would not welcome a war of attrition.

Cecilus was capable of disregarding the risk that came in exchange for the Dream Sword's power to the maximum degree, but forcibly avoiding the payment of resources that were supposed to be limited was a mutual occurrence between the two parties.

That was to say, in the current state, the battle between Cecilus and the Witch was at a standstill.

If what Al had said was true, if they carelessly lopped the head off of the Witch, the whole area would be blown away. When he strained his eyes, he could see that the atmosphere surrounding the Witch was distorting, so there was quite a high amount of credibility to that.

Even if the space was about to be blown away, Cecilus could probably outrun it and get away, but the moment that Al, who was deep with doubt and capable of using "True Sight" just like Schwartz, did not make any indication of that being the case, Cecilus could somewhat presume that it would be a disadvantageous gamble.

Therefore, this was a standstill, and if the only way to move the situation forward was Cecilus, it would be a one-way ticket to their demise—

Cecilus: "That's why this is your time to shine, Al-san."

Al: "I know goddammit! Also, don't be throwing Lil' Miss Arakiya away without any reservations like that!"

Cecilus: "How vexing that you call it throwing her away! It was a feat only made possible due to the mutual trust between myself and Al-san!"

As Cecilus caused countless blazing flowers of brilliant crimson to bloom in the sky, Al shouted at him while carrying Arakiya, who had been thrown over to himself, with his one arm.

Of course, he had thrown Arakiya believing that Al was in a good position to catch her, but from Al's point of view, it would have looked like he had cast her aside.

Even so, Al had not failed to catch something even once, and above all—

Witch: "Are you able to evade this, too?"

With a short mutter from the Witch, a white ray of heat was fired from her finger.

That was not something aimed at Cecilus, but rather, it was aimed directly at Al—no, it was aimed at Arakiya, who was being carried in his arms, but the attack that was attempting to stop her heart would not reach.

Right in the nick of time, Al evaded by a margin that could only be described as a hair's breadth.

That evasion was terribly clumsy, with a form that paid no heed to how he looked while doing so.

Cecilus: "If it's a good outcome and it's in-char then that's fine! However just as Al-san said, Anya is being completely targeted!"

Al: "At any rate, it seems like if Lil' Miss Arakiya dies, the base of the Empire will collapse!"

Cecilus: "I see I don't get it in the slightest!"

Being told something that sounded like a joke in a manner that did not seem to be joking, though Cecilus smiled, he did not laugh; snatching Arakiya from Al's hand as they passed each other, he accelerated.

Cecilus: "Well then how about this now, if you want to tag along, then pursue me with your eyes, pursue me with your heart, and pursue me with your very soul—ohh?!"

Kicking off the ground, Cecilus approached lightning speed with Arakiya in his arms.

Yielded in the air as if to surround the range of Cecilus's sprint, were many beautiful mirrors fabricated with water—the surfaces of those mirrors reflected the white rays of heat fired by the Witch, and a boisterous dance of light commenced.

From all directions, lethal luminescence was chaotically fired, targeting Cecilus.

Cecilus: "I-da-da-da-da-da-da-da-da-da-da-ten!"

Amidst the berserk tempest of light, Cecilus ran through it as if he were dancing. He inclined his body, leaned forward, stretched out his legs, lowered his posture, and occasionally stepped over the light with long strides.

And for the angles he could not evade, he would utilize the blade of the Dream Sword, and would cleave the water mirrors reflecting the light in twain. With the splashing sound of a flat stone skipping across the surface of water, he basked in the scattered droplets of the broken water mirrors, and cut his way through the storm—

Witch: "—Behold the sensation of the world turning against you."

That instant, the declaration of the Witch, along with the sound of the atmosphere tensing struck Cecilus's eardrums.

The pain he felt running through his whole body in that moment, was proof that the splash of the broken water mirrors had instantly frozen over, stealing heat from Cecilus's body, and robbing him of his freedom.

Even the water mirrors were carefully planned out with second and third stage preparations, how truly cunning.

The sensation of the world turning against you, this was yet another famous piece of elegant composition.

Certainly, in the Vollachian Empire, where there were nearly no magicians in the traditional sense, the opportunities to encounter a master such as this never came about.

Cecilus: “But it seems like you aren’t aware. —The world is always awaiting my activities!”

Contrary to his falling body temperature, his motivation surged with an increased radiance. That instant, the Mana circulating within Cecilus’s body began to rampage with an inexplicable vigor, as if a lightning bolt had ignited it; the glaciation that had attempted to rob him of his body heat and freedom evaporated instantaneously, and he resumed his sprint.

Having escaped the restraints of ice with that vigor, Cecilus looked up to the sky, and a broad smile emerged on his face.

That was not a smile he gave while exchanging glances with the airborne Witch. —Beyond that Witch, falling down from much, much higher up in the sky, he had laid eyes upon the radiance of a star.

Witch: “—Al Shario.”

The meaning behind the incantation, indicated that the radiance of that star was something brought about by the Witch’s hand.

Before the sensational truth that an incredible magician was capable of making a star fall, the Dream Sword resting upon Cecilus’s waist pulsated in excitement.

It was responding. Yearning to devour the “dream” surging within its owner, Masayume was doing so.

Cecilus: “—How truly enthralling.”

The downpour of light, spoke thus. Slay the star.

The beloved blade mounted on his waist, spoke thus. Slay the star.

The many members of the audience standing in unison, spoke thus. Slay the star.

The soul of Cecilus Segmunt, spoke thus. Slay the star.

Cecilus: "…"

Averting a mere sliver of his consciousness away from the star for a moment, Cecilus licked his lips.

Currently, aside from the "dream" invigorating his soul with a supreme challenge, everything would become notions of the past. In order to actualize that, Cecilus lay the girl in his arms down upon the ground, and stood in front of her.

He had chosen the most even surface he could find. Even having taken off his haori and laying it out, he had handled her with the utmost amount of thoughtfulness.

From here, though he felt sorry about it, even her presence would be excluded from his field of consciousness.

Cecilus: "Ha."

A beat after the hoarse exhale, Cecilus silently unsheathed the Dream Sword from his waist.

The drawn blade made contact with the atmosphere, and as it started to vibrate as if siphoning Cecilus's ardor as he clasped its hilt, luster began to dwell within it.

The Enchanted Sword would devour its owner's "dreams", and turn their "pipe dreams" into dreams come true.

Concentrating his focus upon the starlight, Cecilus forgot to blink, to breathe, even to make his heart beat, and poured all of his energy into becoming one and the same with the Enchanted Sword.

While he was doing so, the Witch seemed to be doing something to disrupt Cecilus's focus, but.

Cecilus: "Ha."

Cecilus's consciousness was singularly honed in on the radiance of the star. Thus, he would exclude absolutely anything and everything unnecessary for accomplishing that. Color and sound and smell and taste, the approaching earth, wind, fire and water, all were unconsciously excluded.

But, merely removing those, was not enough.

—If it was necessary, then.

Cecilus: “…”

The starlight hurtling down towards the ground, even if the destructive power enshrouding it did not make direct contact with the land, the pressure alone would make the surface split apart, burn the atmosphere, and convert light into pain.

Looking up to the sky in hopes of delivering a counterattack, Cecilus Segmunt, was thankful for this moment.

With that gratitude in his heart, he celebrated all.

Cecilus: “…”

The escape of his exhale, just who would notice that the way it resounded had changed?

That which was required of Cecilus in this moment, that which was coveted in order to wield the Dream Sword to the fullest extent without any misgivings; that answer had been brought about by emotions that reeked of blood, ones that were awfully transient in nature.

The clash of blades that had been exchanged in his father’s final moments, had informed Cecilus Segmunt. —It had informed him about the whereabouts of the soul.

The blade of Rowan Segmunt, the sword of the man who had desecrated life and death alike, had done so.

Therefore—

Cecilus: “—Swordsman, Cecilus Segmunt.”

Indeed, giving an austere statement, the Blue Lightning, Cecilus Segmunt, the most powerful being within the Vollachian Empire, swung the Dream Sword with limbs of length most befitting the leading actor.

V!c.1120

5

—Lightning, had cut through starlight.

There was no other appropriate expression to describe what had happened.

Only, the moment in which he bore witness to the events unfolding before him, the only question he had to ponder was whether or not he could believe that what he had seen was actually real.

However—

Al: “No matter how fucking absurd it may be…!”

Cecilus Segmunt had slayed the star.

In the likeness of the Witch of Greed, the one behind the curtain who had employed a forbidden magic that was a specialty of that same Witch, was now wide-eyed at the same reality Al had witnessed.

It was no easy feat to make a star fall.

Even the real Witch of Greed had said that she would not want to make more than one fall in the span of a day.

In other words, she could not fire more in succession.

Al: “OHHH—!!”

In a world where the light of the sundered star painted the sky white, and where even all semblance of sound had vanished, Al raised his voice to rouse his own spirits, making his approach towards the midst of the sky using stone pillars that he was creating as footholds.

A star had fallen, that star was slain, and thus, approaching the Witch who had ceased her movement in surprise—

Witch: “It is true that I was surprised. However—”

The stone dao which Al had thrusted forth as he lunged, was crushed in the palm of the Witch. The wind enshrouding that palm had vibrated immensely, a combination of magic and martial arts capable of shattering its target.

If a direct hit had been made, the magical technique would have shredded flesh, bone, and everything else into pieces.

With it still within her grasp, the Witch attempted to smash Al's head along with his helmet.

The Witch had updated her threat assessment concerning Cecilus, who had unleashed a stroke of sword that was far too extraordinary, and she corrected her perception of Al as an obstacle to killing Arakiya, regarding him as a pebble that ought to be eliminated quickly.

But, she was not aware. —Even a pebble could sometimes kill the one who stumbled over it.

Witch: "Innovation: Was Requi—"

A moment later, the Witch's head was struck by Al's left arm—an improvised prosthetic arm constructed of rock and stone.

Al: "—Your stars were bad."

Witch: "…"

As Al slightly altered the connotation of his habitual words, the Witch's eyes trembled.

It was the instant she was maneuvering to attempt some manner of counterattack or countermeasure. —Before Al, who had already completed all his preparations, that instant felt like it was as distant as an eternity.

Al: "—Ol Shamak."

In response to the incantation spun by Al's lips from within his iron helmet, the world transformed.

Basking in the unthinkable attack, the Witch, who had become unable to think for an instant, had her whole body entangled, preventing her from moving her body, and halting the activity of the Gate within her body.

This was an anti-Witch trump card that Al had acquired.

Witch: "—ah."

The Witch fell to the ground with a weak exhale, having lost her freedom.

Constrained by a power that ought to be called by the contradictory expression of black light, her form resembled the chrysalis of an insect. As a matter of fact, the degree to which her movements had hardened was also to that extent. —Just as had been done unto the most terrifying Witch in the world.

Al: "But, with this… Blurgh."

Al landed beside the fallen Witch and attempted to look up, but he was struck by a sense of lethargy as he fell to his knees and vomited on the spot.

His improvised left arm had already collapsed. He quickly lifted the chin of his helmet with his right hand, and his whole body creaked from the enormous exhaustion as he vomited yellow gastric juice from his exposed mouth.

A pounding, intense pain shot through his head, and his vision completely blacked out.

From this sensation, he knew his eyesight would not return for a while. Though, there was solace now that he had already finished restraining the Witch—

Witch: "—Correction: Required."

Al: "Ah?"

Gasping for breath with the edges of his mouth stained by gastric drool, Al looked up.

Even when turned upward, his vision remained dark; however, he turned his head toward the sound of the voice and exhibited doubt.

What, did the Witch just say?

Her Gate having been forcibly closed, the Witch ought to have been unable to knead her magic, so just what—.

Al: “What?”

Al, whose vision was occluded, was unable to tell. —The entirety of the Crystal Palace, located in the northernmost part of the Imperial Capital, renowned as the most beautiful castle in the world, began to glow faintly.

6

???: “…”

The Crystal Palace flickered, and the ultimate weapon of the Imperial Capital of Lupugana, the Magic Crystal Cannon, was fired.

It had been unleashed once during the Imperial Civil War, when the living were contending for the throne, just before the Great Disaster had posed a threat to the entire Empire. Even capable of causing the maps to be redrawn, it was a weapon that transcended human capability.

That the target was themselves—no, it was aimed at the Witch who had transformed into a black mass on the ground, a fact that was, as expected, immediately noticed by Cecilus Segment.

It was a suicide bomb tactic designed to lock on to the Witch herself, ensuring that the target would be eliminated—the person who came up with it would be a genius at harassment, and this was surely the work of an evil and cunning villain.

Cecilus: “Masayume.”

Confirming the sensation of the Enchanted Sword in his hand, Cecilus, immediately after slaying the star, attempted to push himself even further.

Al, who had achieved a surprising victory such that giving him any more spotlight would have been excessive; the sleeping heroine behind him who, if left unprotected, would cause things to no longer make rational sense in storytelling and leading actor terms; and vaguely fueled by his father's death, the revival of Perfect Cecilus—needless to say, he was spurred on by it all.

The star, and the subsequent firing of the imperial treasure, facing off against it, he himself was the Blue Lightning—and, it was at that moment.

Cecilus: "…"

With one foot raised as he was about to step forth, Cecilus's blue eyes widened.

Then, with an abrupt sigh, he lowered his raised foot to the ground. Lowering it, and shaking his head as if to say "Good grief"—

???: "—Al Shamak!!"

Mere moments before the light of the Magic Crystal Cannon would have arrived, a loud voice reverberated across the skies of the Imperial Capital.

Immediately after, the color of the sky, which had been dyed in red and white as it pleased, was engulfed in black, and a bottomless void that could swallow even light had been opened in the heavenly skies.

It was a supremely thrilling and flashy interruption that had completely wrecked the Witch's plan to snatch victory by sacrificing herself at this juncture, and the ones who had brought it about were —

Cecilus: "About time you showed up or you'd have lost your chance to shine, Boss."

The great void in the sky had swallowed up the light, and catching sight of the tiny figures that had created it, Cecilus smiled at the black-haired boy and the girl in the dress who were holding hands.

Seemingly not having heard the voice of the smiling Cecilus, the boy shouted.

Boy: “Like I’d ever let you! —Bring it on, oh inevitable fate!!”

Chapter 66:
The Magic Crystal Cannon

1

—Rewinding time to before Cecilus Segmunt slayed the star.

???: “That’s why there’s people who’re more motivated than me flyin’ around. So long as they ain’t stronger than me, I guess there ain’t no problem.”

???: “People stronger than Halibel-san…”

Halibel: “The only one who’s absolutely stronger than me is the Kingdom’s Sword Saint. Other than that, it depends on compatibility ‘n the circumstances.”

Halibel’s softly-worded response gave Subaru a sense of both relief and trepidation.

Cecilus being included, as an ally, having a strong person take pride in their strength was nothing short of reassuring. That was especially true if they were among the strongest in the world.

Precisely because of that, he could not help but be astounded by how out of the ordinary Reinhard was, who had his strength “absolutely” guaranteed by some of the world’s strongest.

???: “The two of you sure have plenty of time to talk, no?”

Abel’s sullen voice interrupted the conversation between Subaru and Halibel.

Drawing a line of flame with his treasured sword of crimson, he led the group with the Yang Sword in hand, cutting down the undead in their way and igniting their very existence.

The power of the Yang Sword was incredible, allowing Abel, who was originally only capable of catfighting with the child Subaru, to move as well as a first-rate martial artist.

Frankly, the sight of Abel kicking the ground with such agility and dancing with the sword was enough to bug his brain.

Vincent: “You disrespectful lot, do not make the Emperor do all of the fighting for you.”

Subaru: “Shut up, this is your punishment for hiding your trump card. Besides, I’m not making you do all of the—”

Work, was what Subaru was about to say, before he was interrupted by a tremor.

Subaru: “…”

What had caused the ground to shake, was two undead who had dropped from the sky.

A giant and a tall figure landed as if to obstruct their path, readying their weapons behind the sullen-faced Abel and Subaru, who glared at him. It was as if the two were trying to make them pay for foolishly arguing on the battlefield—

Vincent: “The Monster Arm, Rondando.”

Abel’s calm, black eyes reflected the undead behind Subaru while calling out that name; he stabbed his Yang Sword into the other undead that had appeared behind him, burning its existence.

Accepting the offered name, Subaru looked back at the man standing behind him, who had only an oddly-developed right arm, and saw Halibel caught the surprise attack with one raised finger.

In their contest of strength, the giant did not overwhelm his opponent.

Halibel: “Don’tcha be disappointed, you’re real powerful. I just gave ya some ground.”

Halibel stood with his heels in the air, the streets rippling like the surface of water beneath his feet before dissipating. That highlighted the difference in status between the still-herculean might of the Monster Arm and Halibel.

Whether that was a relief or not was unknown, but in any case, it was helpful.

Subaru: “Rondando!”

???: “U!”

Onto the body of the Monster Arm, who had been stopped from moving, Spica’s palm was placed as she held Subaru’s hand. The next moment, the role of the undead was stripped away, and their opponent, clouded by hostility—Rondando blinked his eyes.

Turning to dust from his fingertips, Rondando was released from the mission that had been imposed upon him. That their face looked relieved as they disappeared, was most likely because Subaru wanted to believe it so.

???: “That’s a more peaceful way to go than having your soul burned away, I suppose.”

Beatrice, who held Subaru’s hand opposite from Spica, understood his sentiments.

To the kind judgment from his partner, Subaru said “Yeah” and squeezed her tiny hand back, and then he looked up at the wolfman beside him.

Subaru: “That was helpful, Halibel-san! Thank you!”

Halibel: “No worries, no worries, it’s just as the Emperor-san said. I shouldn’t be just lookin’ ‘round all the time, I at least gotta make up for the sleepin’ kid.”

Halibel laughed appreciatively and bobbed his kiseru up and down between his teeth.

The wolfman was holding the unconscious Jamal in his arms, but contrary to boasting about his overwhelming strength, he was probably being overly modest about his performance.

Jamal was in a bad state, but this reinforcement more than filled the gap that he had left behind.

Beatrice: “It would be troublesome if you were satisfied with simply working as a replacement for Jamal, I suppose. An outlier like you must work even harder, in fact.”

Subaru: “I didn’t say that…!”

Halibel: “Well, ain’tcha a fierce lil’ pup. But, it’s more invigoratin’ when someone expects that much from ya. Though, if I get too enthusiastic ‘n die, the wolfmen might end up gettin’ wiped out.”

Subaru: “Let me just say this, I feel like if it’s a situation where Halibel-san would die, I have a suspicion that the entire world would be destroyed, not just the wolfmen…”

This was not an exaggeration; it bore repeating that this was a battle on that sort of scale.

As was always the case, Subaru was frantically fighting against the obstacles that stood in his way, fervently trying to deal with them, and persevering to somehow overcome these obstacles with all of his friends.

Subaru: “Could lower-level people like me please not have to fight against the enemies of the world… what’s with those eyes, Spica?”

Spica: “Uuau…?”

Beatrice: “The day that you became Betty’s partner and Emilia’s Knight, it was already too late, is what Spica is trying to say, in fact.”

Subaru: “There’s no way Spica would have such a detailed overview of the state of the world!”

He objected to Beatrice’s arbitrary interpretation. Nevertheless, Spica’s reaction seemed to indicate that it was generally correct. He tried to stare at his hands, but could not do so because both of them were being held by the little girls. How unfortunate.

Halibel watched the scene with thread-thin eyes, in a good humor—

Vincent: “—Enough of this frolicking.”

Again, Abel spoke in a cold voice that seemed to split the air.

However, no one, including Subaru, could complain about his latest request—because, they had finally arrived before their destination.

Subaru: "—The Crystal Palace."

Even from a distance, the towering majesty of the palace was overwhelming, but looking upon it up close like this, that impression was not diminished, but only intensified.

It was not for nothing that it was praised as the most beautiful palace in the world.

Beatrice: "…Such an outrageous palace, I suppose!"

Beatrice muttered as she tightened her grip on Subaru's hand. What was contained in that murmur was not an admiration of the beauty of the palace, but a quiet fear.

When Subaru gave her a sidelong glance to inquire about her true intentions, her eyes, with their distinctive patterns, flickered,

Beatrice: "To amass such a large amount of rare and highly pure magic crystals is something extraordinary, in fact. Even if we were to overturn the Empire, we would never be able to build something like this, I suppose."

Subaru: "That being said, it's actually here, right?"

Beatrice: "…So, this means that they crafted the magic crystals they lacked, in fact. It's no wonder that the number of Spirits willing to lend a helping hand to others is extremely low in the Empire, I suppose."

Subaru: "That's…"

Subaru was taken aback by Beatrice's grim face and her words.

In short, a Magic Stone was a mass of condensed Mana, and their purest form was called a magic crystal. The fact was that Beatrice, after seeing the Crystal Palace, which had been made lavishly from it, looked extremely displeased and said what she had just said.

Vincent: “Magic crystals can be artificially created by preparing a large amount of colorless Mana and condensing it. There is no denying that such a process was involved in the completion of the Crystal Palace.”

Beatrice: “Not just Subaru, but Betty is telling you too, in fact. — This Empire is detestable, I suppose.”

Abel’s words and Beatrice’s reaction gave away the fact that many Spirits had their lives sacrificed to build this castle. This was something Subaru, a Spiritual Arts User, certainly had some feelings about—.

Subaru: “Beako, I know how you feel. But, that and this fight are…”

Halibel: “Now, now, there’s no need for ya to say nothin’, the kid gets it just right. Ya see, Vollachia’s history’s bloody ‘n unequaled, but the Shinobi are just as bad in retrospect.”

Beatrice: “Don’t compare two bads and talk about which is better than the other, in fact.”

With her cheeks puffed out, Beatrice responded to Subaru and Halibel.

Then, noticing the gaze of Spica peering at her through Subaru,

Beatrice: “It’s alright, Spica, I suppose. My conclusion is the same as Subaru’s, in fact. Despite hating the Empire, there are people living here who have helped us, and there are even those whom Betty doesn’t dislike. That’s why Betty will fight earnestly, I suppose.”

Spica: “Eao…”

Beatrice: “…Just now, Betty felt like you called her “Beako”, in fact. Only Subaru is allowed to call her that, not you, I suppose.”

Saying this with even more dissatisfaction than when she had seen the Crystal Palace, Beatrice then smiled. At that smile, Spica let out a “Uuu~” of relief, which came along with a deep sigh from

Subaru.

On the other hand, Abel, who had lived in this castle which was the root of all evil, remained indifferent to the emotional compromise of Subaru and the others as he gazed upon the castle.

Subaru: “It’s not just about you; it’s about the deeds of your ancestors. Show some remorse.”

Vincent: “The Emperor does not easily bow his head. If you truly wish to pursue those responsible from that period, you should take a walk. Those who were involved in the construction of the castle might be around.”

Subaru: “You…”

Abel’s inability to stop talking was met with a glare by Subaru, but the argument came to an impasse as the castle appeared within sight. —In the front of the Crystal Palace, figures begin to sprang up.

Halibel: “These fellas must be elite, here to stop us from goin’ in. Seems like they’re real strong, so it’s gonna be tough…”

Subaru: “If the castle is well-defended, it must mean that something important is hidden there. Abel! Where should we aim for in the castle?”

Vincent: “Since the Stone is being utilized for the forbidden magic, the treasury where the core of Moguro Hagane, the nucleus of the Crystal Palace, is kept, or perhaps the underground cathedral where sacrifices are offered to anchor the Stone. There is also the dungeon next to the cathedral… no, disregard that.”

Subaru: “…”

In the face of successive obstacles, the group’s readiness to rush in was heightened. In the midst of this, Abel’s retracted words made Subaru squint one of his eyes.

Abel’s brief mention of the Crystal Palace’s underground dungeon—thinking of who might be chained there, Subaru sighed.

Remaining in the Imperial Capital, it was Priscilla whose whereabouts were unknown.

Her survival had been confirmed thanks to Schult, who could feel their connection, but even with Subaru's repeated challenges, her presence had not been sighted in the Imperial Capital.

And Sphinx, whom they had just defeated, had attempted to get Abel to return to the castle in order to meet Priscilla.

Subaru: "I already know about your relationship with Priscilla. But even if you are worried about your sister, there's no need to insist on it."

Vincent: "Do you plan to seize the Empire's weakness?"

Subaru: "Shut up, you siscon! Your sister might have the worst personality, but she's also on my list of people I won't let die, so I'm just saying we should save her while we're at it!"

From the beginning, their encounters had never contained pleasant memories, as he had always been manipulated by Priscilla. However, her follower, Al, hailed from the same homeland as Subaru, and he himself had been helped by Priscilla on several occasions.

Also, sometimes he wanted to save Priscilla from a dire situation, just to see the look on her face when she would have to say words of gratitude.

Beatrice: "Knowing her, she'll probably just say that you're late or that you've done a great deed, in fact."

Subaru: "I can already imagine it, but I want to confirm that for myself. Abel, that's my policy,"

Vincent: "—. Do as you please."

Somehow, thinking that the reply was somewhat like a rehearsal for Priscilla, who never thanked him, Subaru and all the others except Abel looked at each other and nodded.

For a moment, he was inclined to wait for Emilia and the others to catch up to them along with the former Emperor of Vollachia, whom Halibel had seen off.

Subaru: “There’s no missing the turning point while being so eager! Let’s go!”

Beatrice: “I suppose.”

Spica: “Uu!”

Halibel: “Guessin’ we’ll go with that.”

Vincent: “Do not fall behind.”

Subaru: “Come on!”

2

—For Viva the Dissector, this resurrected state of life was akin to a dream.

Individuals who had been revived as undead were abiding by the will of the caster for various reasons.

Many were reluctant to fight with the goal of destroying their homeland, and thus had been mostly stripped of their sense of self, accepting the instructions to direct their instinctive violent impulses towards the living.

On the other hand, there were also a certain number of individuals who, for the most part, were not under the influence of that mental manipulation.

For example, individuals who were likely to experience an extreme decline in ability under the influence of mental manipulation, would only receive minimal instructions so as not to disobey the caster’s will.

Viva, too, was one of the individuals who was only subject to minimal influence on his mind.

However, that was not because the caster wished to avoid a decline in Viva's abilities. —Viva had not even a sliver of a reason to disobey the caster's will.

The bearer of the Great Disaster, who sought to bring ruin to the Vollachian Empire; did Viva's lack of defiance against that perhaps mean that he harbored a hatred towards the Vollachian Empire?

Unfortunately, such a question could only be answered with a resounding "no".

The aspect in which the intentions of Viva and the bearer of the Great Disaster coincided, was not concerning the survival of the Vollachian Empire. —It was the investigation of the soul and of its true nature.

The reason why Viva came to be known as the "Dissector", was because he did battle with many enemies as a warrior of the Vollachian Empire, and dismembered the bodies of his opponents into thousands, tens of thousands of pieces.

Only, the reason why Viva would dissect his opponents' bodies to such an extreme extent, regardless of their survival, was not because he harbored any perverted interests. The pursuit of knowledge, that was his reason.

At the extremity of dissection, what Viva had truly wished to ascertain was not flesh and blood, but the soul.

The discrepancies between individual lives, the differences between strong and weak, the distinctions between male and female, just what exactly it was that individualized individuals; thirsting to know, Viva had dissected many a life.

Despite having done all that, Viva had failed to perceive the soul during his lifetime, not even achieving the result of laying his fingertips upon it. He had died in the midst of chagrin. That had been the life of Viva.

But, having been resurrected from death, Viva laid eyes upon what lay beyond his hopes, which ought to have already come to an end.

When he himself was revived by the power of the Witch, who was abusing the usage of souls, he gained a fragment of understanding of the soul, which he had failed to touch even a portion of during his lifetime. The Witch had given him the opportunity to turn that fragment of understanding into an even greater fragment.

Ergo, for Viva, this era was a miraculous one indeed.

Viva: “There are still many, many many, many many many many things, I wish to assess, got it?”

The Witch who had revived Viva, had also affirmed his insatiable curiosity.

In order to thoroughly investigate souls to his heart’s content, Viva had been granted the right to toy with lives in the palace, and was provided with an environment where he could delight with more test subjects than he could have ever hoped for when he was alive, undoubtedly allowing him to fully enjoy this time of splendor.

If it was for the sake of this curiosity, he did not care how many lives were lost.

Rather, the more people died, the more variety of resources he would have to use over and over to the fullest extent; thus, the more people he killed, the more Viva’s desires would be fulfilled.

For that purpose, there were still many a life he needed to take—

???: “—Viva the Dissector.”

Viva: “…”

???: “Both in life and in death, your deeds are unbearable to witness. Therefore, though I may know your name, I shan’t bestow upon you any choice save being scorched.”

A sword flashed red, and before he knew it, his field of vision was spinning through the air.

The moment Viva had realized that it was the result of his own head having been lopped off, was when he had caught sight of his own headless body within his revolving vision, and bore witness to it bursting up in flame.

It was not just his body that had been set alight; the same went for his lopped-off cranium.

It was a sense of being overwhelmed that was reminiscent of the young boy who had once killed him, but what was decisively different about this, was that the flame brought about by the treasured sword of crimson, also reached beyond the bounds of death.

Tasting the sensation of his soul being scorched, Viva experienced the greatest joy he had felt since having been resurrected.

Viva: “Ahh, I see it, I got it, the whereabouts of the soul—”

As his flesh, his life, and his very soul were aflame, Viva was satisfied by this conclusion.

Realizing that despite killing many, dissecting their bodies, and continuing to repeatedly toy with lives, the quickest way had always been to just experience it himself, and thus he had taken quite the detour, he laughed to himself.

3

—For the group that was to infiltrate the Crystal Palace, the battle was extremely fierce.

The dead stood blocking the path in a vast horde, refusing to allow entry to the living, and the bizarre forms of the inexhaustibly rising dead were so repulsive, the living would hesitate to take a step further.

They had previously crossed paths with an undead called the Giant Eye Izmail, which had been wandering the Imperial Capital in a state that was far removed from its original form, and the taste of this situation was close to that.

If there was a difference it would be that, unlike Izmail, whose body had been transformed chaotically under the sole influence of an impulse to destroy, there was a concept behind the deformities of these dead.

More aggressive, more radical, and more unorthodox, they were like clay kneaded as one's curiosity commanded.

However, rather than mere clay, one had kneaded life itself. Furthermore, one had the knowledge and sense required to manifest their curiosity to its fullest extent.

And for that—

???: "Viva the Dissector."

When Abel called out a name, it was a sign that the preparations for Spica's Star Eating were in order.

Thus, those who could be defeated by Star Eating should be defeated by Star Eating. This was the unspoken agreement, as Subaru was well aware.

Viva: "…"

Despite this, Abel had skillfully cut off the head of the person he had named with the Yang Sword.

Naturally, the merciless power of the Yang Sword would set the soul of his opponent ablaze. —To what extent they would suffer was something that Subaru did not know, having never experienced his soul being burned.

However, the fact that he used the Yang Sword to cut down an opponent who could have been defeated without causing them to suffer was a clear indication of Abel's anger towards the other person.

???: "Scary scary. But, I can relate ta what Emperor-san's feelin'."

Commenting on Abel's sword strike, which could have been described as an execution, Halibel opened his thin thread-like eyes slightly as he slid through the enemies, his golden pupils seemingly gliding in the air.

Standing in the way of the slickly moving Halibel were the deformed undead, whose bodies seemed to have been modeled after creatures with long arms and legs, but they proved to be no match for Kararagi's strongest.

Their elongated arms and legs were mercilessly broken, and all ten or so bodies were buried up to their waists in the ground that had become soft as if it had melted, rendering them unable to move.

It seemed like something similar to the Earth Release jutsu, and how it differed from magic was not clear.

Furthermore—

Halibel: "Don't push yerself too hard."

Halibel: "They've changed to lookin' nothin' like they used ta, I doubt their names are still recognizable."

Halibel: "Even if that ain't the case, I don't like makin' kids do the fightin' anyway."

And then, the number of Halibels had simultaneously increased by three more, each with the same capabilities as the original, in what was an outstanding feat.

Although it was known that he could use the Clone jutsu, being performed up close only further emphasized how broken of a skill it was. The Clone jutsu by itself was already plenty powerful, but that one amongst the strongest in existence was able to do so was terrifying.

Beatrice: "Truly thankful we are on the same side, in fact."

Beatrice, having stopped an approaching undead with a purple arrow that had been shot from her outstretched hand, had the same thoughts as Subaru regarding Halibel.

As Halibel had stated, against such undead opponents distorted to the extent of becoming far removed from their original form, Spica had been unable to land an effective blow.

Spica: “Uu!”

Subaru: “It’s frustrating, I know. But, don’t hurry, don’t haste, and don’t panic. I’d rather reduce their numbers here than be surrounded after entering that cramped castle.”

While trying to calm the groaning Spica, Subaru kept his eyes focused on the undead considered to have been deformed.

As Beatrice and Halibel held the enemy back, those Abel could name were defeated with Star Eating, and the remaining were defeated with the Yang Sword, such was the battle being waged to reduce their number.

It could be said that, although their appearance had been distorted, the fact that they were not being spawned incessantly one after the other in a systematic manner was something fortunate.

On the other hand, it would mean that, after being resurrected as undead, they had by some means been manually altered into that form, a proposition that did not change the heaviness within his chest by much.

Subaru: “But still, the fact that we can release them from that state by defeating them just once is a…”

That moment, Subaru had been about to say “relief”.

Beatrice: “—Subaru!!”

Subaru: “—Hk.”

Beatrice’s altered expression and tone of voice caused Subaru to stiffen.

Beatrice’s round eyes were wide open, and the reason for her reaction, had also become known to Subaru. For the anomaly taking place, it was just that obvious.

Spica: “Uuau!”

Spica, who had also noticed that anomaly, the very cause of their astonishment—exclaimed as she pointed at the Crystal Palace that had begun to glow, slowly painting the entire landscape in a pale, white radiance.

The castle was clothed in a brilliant luminance; however, the situation was not one where its beauty could be admired.

The fact that the Crystal Palace was glowing meant that—

Vincent: "—The Magic Crystal Cannon has been activated!"

While cleaving through the bodies of two undead, one before him and the other behind, with a swift spin, Abel, upon sighting the radiance of the Crystal Palace, had loudly proclaimed thus.

The Magic Crystal Cannon—as mentioned previously, it was a weapon with an anti-army level of power that could be unleashed utilizing the energy stored within the magic crystals embedded throughout the Crystal Palace.

Upon seeing the light that foretold its discharge, Subaru gasped.

Subaru: "Are we the target?!"

Vincent: "No! Mowing down the ground beneath the castle with the Magic Crystal Cannon would be an act far too careless, even if they are undead who can be revived endlessly!"

Subaru: "…"

Hearing Abel's cry, Subaru's thoughts began to heat up and accelerate.

Abel's conjecture that the target was not themselves was not a relief, but rather it was unfavorable. If the target had been Subaru and those with him, even if they were wiped out, the situation would have been easier to deal with.

What was irreversible for Subaru, was the deaths of his allies somewhere beyond his reach.

He had not yet experienced a case where the Magic Crystal Cannon had been fired.

And now that they had come to a point where Sphinx had been defeated, to have it fired prior to reuniting with his allies could not be allowed.

The Magic Crystal Cannon needed to be stopped. However, it was already too late.

The light was undoubtedly the pre-fire charge, yet none of the prerequisites for putting a stop to it had been cleared. Not good. Not good not good not good not good not good.

Letting it fire would be—.

Beatrice: "—Stopping it from firing is impossible, I suppose."

Subaru: "…"

Beatrice said so to Subaru, whose thoughts were spinning fiercely.

Blinking his eyes, Subaru looked at Beatrice. Then, Beatrice, who had just said that it would be impossible, looked back at Subaru with eyes that, contrary to what had been said, had not lost even a sliver of their vigor.

For his partner, the most adorable and reliable partner in the world, Subaru forced his cheeks into a smile,

Subaru: "Beako, wanna do something reckless?"

Beatrice: "Good grief, Subaru can't do anything without Betty, in fact."

Subaru: "Yeah, that's true."

Saying this, he tightened his grip to make sure that her hand, presently almost the same size as his own, was still in place.

4

Swinging, the treasured sword of crimson traced the ground, and the square in front of the Crystal Palace burst into flames.

Raging like beasts, the scarlet flames blocked the path of those who had transcended the boundary between life and death, preventing them from advancing further and allowing none of them to interfere.

Vincent: “To leave the Emperor by himself at the front line. —You blasphemers.”

Abandoning such curses behind, a shadow fiercely retreated from the Crystal Palace as it grew more radiant.

What had appeared from a distance to be nothing more than a black shadow passing by was the earnest sprint of a jet-black furred wolfman, renowned as one of the strongest in the world.

And, once the running wolfman had gained sufficient acceleration through his sprinting—

???: “Then, let all yer strength out—!”

As the straight and fiercely running Halibel kicked off the ground, another Halibel awaited up ahead, and using his folded hands as a foothold, he forcefully flung his body into the air.

Like an arrow, akin to a bullet, Halibel had leapt upward, but that was not the end.

Subsequently, two Halibels having jumped from the buildings on either side had caught up to him, each aligning one of their feet with the soles of the first Halibel, who had been tracing a parabolic path,

Halibel: “‘N more still!”

Halibel: “If I don’t go all out, I’d get a scoldin’ from lil’ Ana.”

The kicks from the second and third Halibels propelled the first Halibel even higher into the skies.

Drastically and rapidly, Halibel soared diagonally, and just as the momentum reached its highest point, he adjusted his posture mid-air,

Halibel: “I can only earn ‘til this point. Ya thinkin’ ya can manage?”

Subaru: “—Yeah, that helped a lot!”

Halibel, who had been carrying Subaru and the other two with him, cleared his throat at that reply. Then, having arched his back as far as he could, he flung Subaru and the others from that position.

Utilizing the Clone jutsu, the cooperative play of the four Halibels had gained both distance and altitude all at once, and Subaru, with Beatrice and Spica in the firm embrace of both his hands, had been sent flying.

Having gained sufficient altitude in that manner, Subaru, despite his whole body being buffeted by fierce winds, still opened his eyelids to look at the Crystal Palace, which was now far off in the distance.

He closely observed the Crystal Palace, which was increasing its white light to the utmost limit, to determine the direction towards which the Magic Crystal Cannon had been aimed—

Subaru: “—Spica!”

Spica: “Uau!!”

He tilted his head in the direction the Magic Crystal Cannon was aimed, and in the next moment, Spica’s teleport was activated.

With that, Spica teleported with Subaru and Beatrice—repeatedly over and over again, swiftly closing the distance to the trajectory of the Magic Crystal Cannon,

Spica: “Eao!”

Beatrice: “Geez! Betty said no more, in fact! —Murak!”

In response to the strain evident in Spica’s voice, Beatrice activated Yin Magic that lightened Subaru and the others.

With Subaru and Beatrice now lightened to the utmost, Spica twisted her body in mid-air, and gave them a kick with all of her might as a final push.

Out of the corner of his eye, Subaru held Beatrice's hand tightly as Spica spun around and away from him,

Subaru: "Abel, Halibel-san, Spica…!"

Having called out the names of his companions who had worked together to bring Subaru and Beatrice this far, Subaru clenched his teeth and opened his eyes wide.

In the next moment, as the light of the Crystal Palace flashed with exceptional strength—

Subaru: "Beako, I love you!"

Beatrice: "That goes without saying, I suppose."

Holding each other tightly, Subaru and Beatrice turned to face the light.

And then—

Beatrice: "—Al Shamak."

The light from the Magic Crystal Cannon was swallowed by a massively large void that had appeared in the sky.

Chapter 67:
The Cards in One's Hand

1

—Taking in the Stone, Muspel, Arakiya had ended up placing her life or death on the same scales as the survival of the Vollachian Empire.

As Priscilla had said, the combination of the Soul Marriage Technique and the Dream Sword Masayume had brought about a situation quite capable of greatly derailing Sphinx's plan.

Sphinx's two objectives in becoming the bearer of the Great Disaster, and flooding the Vollachian Empire with the dead—one of them, that of reproducing the soul of the Witch of Greed, had succeeded. The rest was only a matter of time until this soul became acclimated to the vessel, and the existence of Sphinx herself was painted over by her creator.

Thus, before that was fulfilled and Sphinx fully disappeared, her remaining objective—let it be deliberately asserted as revenge. She would enact her revenge on Priscilla Barielle.

For that purpose, she intended to make the best use of the cards remaining in her hand.

However—

Sphinx: "—The Magic Crystal Cannon has been stopped, hm?"

Witnessing the series of continuously occurring miscalculations, Sphinx silently muttered to herself.

Reflected on the surface of the floating water mirrors, were those who were taking action in various places throughout the Imperial Capital of Lupugana, individuals capable of holding back the ruination of the Vollachian Empire.

What drew the attention of Sphinx, who had transformed into a form identical to that of the Witch of Greed, above all else, were the boy and the Spirit who had prevented the attack from the Magic Crystal Cannon, the trump card of the Crystal Palace.

That Spirit, taking the form of a girl, had also successfully countered the Magic Crystal Cannon with the same method before Sphinx had commanded the dead in the form of the Great Disaster, and began conducting a full-scale offensive against the Empire. But, by Sphinx's judgment, that was supposed to be a sacrificial technique that threatened the disappearance of the Spirit herself.

To carry out that same thing in merely two or three days and survive unscathed did not make rational sense.

The factor that had defied reason, was the boy who was likely contracted with the Spirit in his embrace.

Sphinx: "So it is you again?"

The inexplicable boy who, while allying himself with the Vollachian Emperor, had thwarted the stratagems of the incomplete Witch, Sphinx, before she had replicated the Witch of Greed.

In truth, if she had been unable to grasp the final fragment to recreate her soul in the eleventh hour, Sphinx's days of hard work exceeding three hundred years would have been put to an end by them.

And, that threat persisted even now, with her having reached the Witch of Greed.

Sphinx: "—The Yang Sword Vollachia, and the Authority of Gluttony."

Even if she had succeeded in her long-cherished desire to recreate the Witch of Greed, for Sphinx, who was as of yet, still dead, the fact that those two were her fatal weak points remained unchanged.

Therefore, while producing several beings sharing the same soul as herself, Sphinx would take care to not draw near to the owner of the Yang Sword, or that Spiritual Arts User boy.

On top of that—

Sphinx: “With all of the cards in my hand, I shall emerge victorious.”

Priscilla: “…”

At Sphinx’s mutter, Priscilla’s expression across the water mirror changed.

A slight smile had emerged on her face. —In that smile, there was no displeasure or discomfort; in order to distort it with at least a fragment of sorrow, Sphinx would throw everything she had at it.

2

A void had appeared in the distant sky, and swallowed the flame that would have spelled the destruction of the Vollachian Empire.

Cutting into the trajectory of the Magic Crystal Cannon, Natsuki Subaru had achieved his goal. That meant that The Admirer, Halibel, Spica, and Beatrice had each also carried out their respective roles.

???: “It is a great service. —However.”

While acknowledging their achievement, the forefront of Emperor Vincent’s thoughts harbored a sense of unease.

The neutralizing of the Magic Crystal Cannon, the Empire’s decisive weapon, over and over again in this manner, was problematic.

—In any nation, a force of deterrence that would dissuade other countries from invading was a constant requirement.

Whether it be the military that could rival its neighbors, the exceptionally strong whom no one could compare to, or the powerful weapon capable of overturning any predicament—if any of these factors had been missing, the present prosperity of the Empire would not have come to be.

The weight of that undeniable history was being eroded to naught but a trace by the Great Disaster that stemmed from the insurrection.

Vincent: “In that sense, you all have already destroyed the law of iron and blood that protected the order of the Empire.”

While clenching his teeth to bite back his shame, Vincent brandished the Yang Sword.

Before Vincent’s eyes, leaping over the flame of the treasured sword that had been drawn in a horizontal line, undead of a kind that differed from those until this point could be seen rushing towards him.

Just what was different about them? That was simple. —Vincent could not recognize them.

Vincent: “That detestable Witch, had she managed to learn of it prior to her demise?”

In the garden before the Crystal Palace, which had turned into a battlefield, appearing one after the other before Vincent as he held the frontline, were all undead who had likely carved their names into the history of the Vollachian Empire in ancient times.

Vincent could match the faces and names of all the Imperial Soldiers of his time; however, he was unable to determine the identities of the undead resurrected from the past, with whom he had no direct acquaintance.

Based on his intuition, thus far, among the dead called forth by the Great Disaster, the proportion of those from recent times had been overwhelmingly high. In the most extreme cases, those that perished while fighting the undead had been instantly resurrected as an undead. —This would be speculation, but perhaps those souls also possessed an aspect of freshness.

Or it could simply be that the further back in time one went, the more difficult it became to resurrect the dead, or a greater cost was required.

Therefore, the majority of the resurrected corpses were from recent times, and thus, Subaru and his companion's Star Eating in combination with Vincent's memories was highly effective, but—

Vincent: "To these ones that might not be applicable."

Even if there were other conditions imposed on resurrection, be they large or small, the best way to prevent Star Eating was to prepare undead who did not correspond to Vincent's memories.

It seemed the Witch had come to understand this before her soul was consumed by the flames.

In other words, there remained no means to defeat the unknown ancient warriors that stood in the way except Vincent's Yang Sword. —No, if it were just the Yang Sword, then there was another besides Vincent's own.

Vincent: "—Priscilla."

Yes, calling the name of his younger sister, whose whereabouts remained unknown after the evacuation, Vincent resumed his battle with the attacking undead.

His foolish younger sister, formerly named Prisca Benedict, presently went by the name of Priscilla Barielle.

Upon confirming the fact that, after leaving the Empire, she had changed her name and become one of the Royal Selection candidates for the Kingdom of Lugunica, Vincent had nearly fainted. But it was bearable.

Her reason for rushing to the aid of her homeland was not something endearing like being concerned for Vincent or the Empire. Rather, it was to silence the one who owned the blades of the assassins that had been sent to her.

But then, the presumed reckless soul had already gone ahead and lost his life.

Vincent: "Chisha."

Chisha, the one who, deceiving even Vincent, had resolved to defy the world’s fate of the Great Disaster, was among the few who knew that Prisca had survived as Priscilla.

Chisha, who knew of her fierce temperament from her time as Prisca, intending for her to be alongside Vincent who must ward off the Great Disaster, was likely to take drastic measures to bring her over.

Beneath that white expressionless visage, he may even have thought about how the matters of the Imperial Crown needed be handled post-war—

Chisha: “The fact that it was necessary to go to such lengths, I am forced to revise my opinion of your Excellency.”

At the echo of Chisha, the embodiment of disrespect and disloyalty to the Emperor, he clicked his tongue.

Setting aside his annoyance at these all-too-surreal visions of him, Vincent kept Chisha’s parting gift—the conclusion regarding how Priscilla should be dealt with, as his own responsibility.

Presently, Priscilla’s life was safe, as confirmed by Sphinx’s attempt to bring Vincent to her. That much was good enough for now.

As for the need to increase in numbers the Yang Sword, it would be fulfilled when Vincent became more accustomed to being the apex of the land of the Sword Wolf. —The moment this thought crossed his mind.

???: “—Thy valiant striving is magnificent. As thy predecessor, I doth swell with pride.”

A deep, sonorous voice struck Vincent’s eardrums amidst the clash of swords.

Simultaneously, his field of vision was diagonally bisected by a sword flash so transcendent that Vincent, who had witnessed the swordsmanship of many a warrior, would deem it preeminent.

That flash, it swept across the warriors of old who had dared to wound Vincent’s noble presence; and being unable to evade, their bodies—no, their souls were ignited.

In other words, it had been a strike from the Yang Sword.

Vincent: "…"

A moment ago, he had concluded that he could not desire for a reinforcement who wielded the crimson treasured sword.

Hence, Vincent's eyes widened slightly at the arrival of this unlikely aid, and upon stealing a glance at the profile of the person standing back-to-back with him, his breath was caught.

It was a familiar visage. —That appearance, he had seen in paintings of old.

Vincent: "—The Emperor of the Briar?"

???: "The crown of the Emperor hath been duly bequeathed unto the succeeding generation, and now, it doth rest upon thee. For mineself to lay claim to the title "Emperor of the Briar" would be folly. —I am Eugard Vollachia."

Vincent: "…"

Eugard: "Hmm. Thou appearst both sagacious and well-favored. In retrospect, never have I beheld the faces of mine children and descendants in proximity. Were it feasible, mineself would liketh to exchange many words, and fain to gaze upon thy face for long."

While the person continued to speak—the undead who had called himself Eugard Vollachia, Vincent remained silent.

That tranquil aura he exuded, with eyes that held the light of reason and skin that had the color of life, distinguished him from the countless undead encountered thus far. Why was there not the hostility towards the living that characterized the undead, or the signs of being deprived of free will?

Eugard: "Mine love for Mine Star, is why."

Vincent: "What?"

Eugard: “Didst thou not seeketh an answer to wherefore mineself acts thus, or was I mistaken?”

For a moment, Vincent attempted to discern the true meaning behind those words, but he quickly gave up.

He had to reconsider. For if Eugard Vollachia was indeed the same personage as described in the old tale of Iris and the King of Thorns, then to doubt his words, although incomprehensible, would be foolish.

Therefore—

Vincent: “The reigning Vollachian Emperor, Vincent Vollachia.”

Eugard: “Understood. Then, let us march. —O child of mine own children.”

Thus was Eugard’s response to Vincent’s introduction, and the two Emperors stood side by side.

An impossibility due to the law of iron and blood of the Vollachian Empire, where the rite of succession to the Imperial Throne, the Imperial Selection Ceremony, took place upon death, these were two fellow Sword Wolves mounting a united front.

3

—The fierce battle to decide the fate of the world continued within the Imperial Capital of Lupugana.

The battle at each bastion between the transcendent beings came to a close one by one, both the living and the dead performing to their utmost, some failing, while others proceeded forth.

As if to mock the efforts of all involved, two disasters attempted to bring it all to naught—the starlight, crashing through the sky, that was struck down by a swordsman who would not relinquish his dream, and the flare of destruction, created by sacrificing the lives of countless Spirits, that was stopped by a boy who resisted fate along with his friends who supported him.

The prevention of both disasters had been the result of each person using all of the power that they possessed.

However, it was not the starlight being severed, or the fire of destruction being extinguished, that contributed the most to the war situation for the living.

It was a man who alone arrived to prevent the next step of the Great Disaster that no one else could have realized or reached, for even if they had—

???: "—Good grief, y'all are makin' old people work too much."

The Vicious Old Man, Olbart Dunkelkenn, leapt with his small frame as he complained grumpily.

The low-leaping, ground-crawling movements of the Shinobi chieftain, the monstrous old man, aimed for the undead sorcerer guarding the blood-red magic circle that was painted at the end of the passage.

The sorcerer turned their palm toward Olbart, and then black filth, flowing from the walls and floor around him, formed chains that roared out to bind the limbs of the approaching monstrous old man —

Olbart: "I've been doin' this for ninety years y'know?"

Faster than the chains could reach him, Olbart swiftly swung his right arm—the arm missing from below the elbow, and threw a kunai from within its supposedly empty sleeve.

It pierced between the eyebrows of the sorcerer, who was wary of his approach, at lightning speed, and slammed them into the magic circle on the wall. Immediately after, Olbart struck with his left palm, and pierced through the sorcerer and the magic circle.

His martial arts, which had been honed for as long as he could remember, shattered the sorcerer and the magic circle to pieces.

He was under strict orders to not kill any more undead than necessary, but this soul-tampered abnormality and opponents like the sorcerer he had just seen were exceptions to that command.

The sorcerers that guarded the magic circle which distorted the space within the castle, he had taken care of about ten of them—

Olbart: “—. So it’s finally done.”

Olbart muttered so, sensing the change in the air on his dry, old skin.

Glaring at the inside the Crystal Palace with both his eyes, obscured by abundant eyebrows, a strange atmosphere pervaded within the place—he could see that the anomaly that had transformed the familiar structure of the castle into a strange, magical place had been lifted.

Doors that should have been connected were not, and the window through which he had entered did not allow him to reach the desired location; it was unclear whether it was an illusionary technique or a magic that twisted space itself, but in any case—

Olbart: “For now, my work here is… oy, oy, this is bad, isn’t it?”

Finding himself in a problem right after solving another, Olbart hushed his voice at this sudden change of events.

As soon as the distortion in space had been fixed, the next anomaly that occured in the Crystal Palace was easy to understand. —The entire castle was being charged with intense Mana waves. The Magic Crystal Cannon had been activated.

Olbart: “Drat, Moguro, hang in there a lil’ bit longer.”

At the vibrations of the Magic Crystal Cannon activating, Olbart complained to the core of the Crystal Palace, Moguro Hagane—the Steelman, known as the Crystal Palace Meteor itself.

Until now, the commendable Moguro had been obeying Vincent’s instructions, attempting to prevent the Great Disaster from using the Magic Crystal Cannon, but it appeared that they had broken through.

It was dreadful that the Magic Crystal Cannon had been seized as the opponent's weapon.

Olbart: "If they're targetin' Garkla, we're gonna be deep in shit."

The Fortified City, which had attracted hordes of the dead and was supposed to be a siege for the survival of the Empire, needed to keep its strong defensive walls preserved for the battle. If the Magic Crystal Cannon were to blow it down, the situation would shift dramatically and the city would be destroyed.

And, that would be the same as the Vollachian Empire suffering irreversible damage.

Even if Olbart and the others were able to destroy the mastermind behind the Great Disaster, the loss of the personnel currently within the Fortified City would make the rebuild impossible—And that, would spell the end of the Vollachian Empire.

—Olbart Dunkelkenn had an ambition.

As the chieftain of the Shinobi, who were expected to operate in the shadows of history, he intended to leave his grand mark on the history of the Empire and to destroy the very foundation of the way of being a Shinobi, to which he had devoted his life.

For that reason, the allure of flashy outbursts, such as a quick rebellion against the Emperor or his assassination, had often been tempting. However, the Great Disaster had made those plans null, and with the feeling that he missed the opportunity window for betrayal undeniably present, here that chance made itself clear again.

If the Magic Crystal Cannon were to be used in a manner that would determine the victory of the Great Disaster, then Olbart would fulfill his ambitions not as an Imperial General, but rather as a Shinobi.

Whatever Great Disaster had in store, he would stately rush to Vincent's side, snatch victory from him, and fulfill his own personal ambitions.

Therefore—

Olbart: "—Even though this was supposed to be my final betrayal."

The distortion of space having been resolved, Olbart ran up the castle and arrived at the turret of the Magic Crystal Cannon. There, he watched as the glare of destruction was engulfed by a large void in the sky, his white eyebrows fluttering in the aftermath of the Magic Crystal Cannon, which had been fired by the narrowest of margins.

If the Magic Crystal Cannon had determined the destruction of the Empire, Olbart could have betrayed the Empire without any regrets.

But, that did not happen.

Olbart: "Kakakakka! That lil' brat not only did it in the Demon City, he's gone and done it here too! I swear, young people these days don't have a shred of respect for us old folks!"

Olbart laughed heartily at the sight of the two distant figures in the sky: the black-haired boy and the little Spirit girl.

This was the second time, Chaosflame included, that Olbart's calculations were undone by the boy. But, he did not feel any anger or hatred for what he had done to him.

As one would age, it would become easier to give up on many things—but this was not the reason. Olbart was not one who gave up easily. So, he was not giving up. He was just admitting defeat.

Olbart: "If they're able ta outperform me, then that's that."

Having lived for nearly one hundred years, there had been countless dreams that Olbart had not been able to achieve. Of course, there were many that had come true by force. That was the way of things.

Thus, Olbart was able to let go of his long-cherished desire to leave his name in history by assassinating the Emperor in a fit of desperation, as far as the Empire is concerned an act of violence comparable to that of the wolfman who had killed the titular Iris in "Iris and the King of Thorns".

Then, having let go of his long-cherished desire and having prepared his barren left hand for a karate chop—

Olbart: "—Then, you'll come along with me in my dream of bein' the next hero ta save the country, won't ya?"

???: "…"

A white-haired woman stood right next to the turret before the slightly-smiling Olbart.

At the top of the Crystal Palace, on the turret of the Magic Crystal Cannon that had just finished discharging the fire of destruction, a sweltering torrent of Mana blew around, stirring one's senses as it did so.

At the center of it was the keystone of the Crystal Palace with its magic crystals of various sizes, the base on which the Magic Core, the heart of the Magic Crystal Cannon, was installed; the woman in white smiled at him as she placed her hand upon the pedestal.

And then—

???: "It is undesirable for you to be here. —Elimination: Required."

???: "It is futile, Olbart. Your opponent, Witch."

A black wind began to swirl around the smiling woman—the Witch, and the Magic Core itself spoke in Moguro's voice, as if to alert him to it.

Olbart, chuckling at the obvious warning from the Steelman,

Olbart: "I know that without bein' told. —Even at my age, I'm not senile."

Kicking the floor, The Vicious Old Man ended his dream—and, delayed the demise of the Empire that would have occurred in that moment.

Subaru: “Like I’d ever let you! —Bring it on, oh inevitable fate!!”

While embracing and being embraced Beatrice’s Al Shamak sent away one of the Magic Crystal Cannon’s shots.

Tightly, Subaru felt the power to do so being drawn out of him, but he had an unfounded confidence that he could sustain Beatrice’s recklessness.

—No, now that he had succeeded, he could reiterate it as a well-founded conviction.

Subaru: “Maybe, it’s the power of the bond!”

Subaru’s Cor Leonis, which could take on and distribute burdens, had remained connected to all of the members of the Pleiades Battalion, who were located far away from him.

It not only enhanced the strength of everyone as a unit, but it also lent a shoulder to anyone who might have been falling behind, pushing them along and distributing the vitality needed to run together.

This power represented the realization of “One for all, all for one”.

It was quite probable, perhaps even likely, that a massive burden had been suddenly placed upon everyone fighting in the Fortified City at this very moment, but he wanted to believe it would be all right.

Either way—

Beatrice: “It was very important that we prevented that from happening, I suppose!”

Subaru: “Ah! I thought for sure they were going after Garkla…”

Subaru watched the void in the sky close and responded to Beatrice, who raised her voice.

Subaru and the others, determined to stop the Magic Crystal Cannon, rushed into its line of fire, but they had thought that the cannon was aimed at the Fortified City.

The biggest fear was that the Fortified City, where the battle of the century was currently being fought, would have received an irrevocable shot rather than the Imperial Capital receiving a blow at a single location.

However, when they had actually prevented it, the Magic Crystal Cannon had been aimed at the south side of the Imperial Capital.

Subaru: “There’s no way they’d carry out a meaningless attack. They definitely had a plan.”

Beatrice: “—. That troublesome one to the south, they went after Garfiel, didn’t they, in fact?”

Subaru: “Sure, our Garfiel is like a little brother who isn’t embarrassed to go anywhere, but…”

At the first bastion, the southernmost point of the Imperial Capital, the Cloud Dragon Mezoreia was stationed to protect the widest area, and Garfiel alone was entrusted with defeating it.

Frankly speaking, rather than just reckless, it was more so unreasonable, absurd and thoughtless, yet it was a big role that could not have been entrusted to anyone other than Garfiel. Considering its importance, it was not impossible that the other party was targeting Garfiel.

Subaru: “Who fired the shot in the first place? Now that we’ve taken down Sphinx, who’s the next one in charge?”

Beatrice: “…It’s doubtful that it’s a reanimated Emperor of Vollachia or someone of the like, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Please don’t give me any more reasons for not wanting to help the Empire at this point…!”

Just when it seemed that Sphinx, the leader of the Great Disaster, had been defeated, he did not want the previous Emperors of Vollachia to rise up to become the final boss, disappointed by the failures of the modern Empire.

First, if that pattern would be allowed to continue, it would be impossible to know just how many Emperors would need to be defeated.

Beatrice: “But, it seemed like they had a clear aim in the way they were assembling that attack just now, in fact. That’s why…”

Subaru: “—Beako!”

Beatrice’s twin drills flapped in the wind of free fall, and her soft cheeks were cupped between his hands, forcing her to turn around and squeal, “Nyah.”.

In Subaru and Beatrice’s field of vision, there was a fierce, majestic figure cutting through the sky —the Three-Headed Blight Dragon that they had encountered in the coupled dragon carriage and that had once been felled by Halibel.

The three heads of Blight Dragon, the six pairs of golden eyes that caught Subaru and Beatrice, bellowed.

Blight Dragon: “—KRUUUUUUUAGH!!”

Subaru: “Crap, this is bad, we can’t move!”

Beatrice: “—! It’s coming closer, in fact!”

Subaru and Beatrice braced themselves against the clear hostility.

While the Blight Dragon freely tore through the sky, Subaru and Beatrice embraced each other in free fall, while Spica, Halibel, and Abel were separated from them, up in the air—.

Subaru: “—Hk.”

Subaru frantically flipped through the cards in his head as his thoughts became white-hot and the world slowed down.

There was very little that could be done. The next checkpoint for Return by Death had not been confirmed. There are no companions that could be called upon. Only one move could be made, either magic or his Authority.

A momentary thought, he hugged Beatrice and was about to speak —

???: "—Unlike me, you guys can't fly freely, can you? I hope you're not going to make me nervouuus~."

A moment later, a voice with a smile filled with exasperation snatched Subaru and Beatrice away.

Exactly one second later, the Blight Dragon's breath cleaved the sky, but Subaru and Beatrice were able to avoid it just in time, and his eyes lit up at the sensation of the thin arm of the person who had made it happen.

Subaru: "—Nice timing, Roswaal!"

Beatrice: "This is humiliating, I suppose! Holding Betty like this is unacceptable, in fact!"

Roswaal: "Well, weeell~, that's quite an extreme difference in reactions from both sides."

Indeed, it was Roswaal who smirked at Subaru and Beatrice' reactions, whom he held under his arms on either side of him.

Like with Garfiel and Halibel, he had been entrusted with the task of conquering a bastion in the Imperial Capital, and with his magic, he was able to fly freely through the air, taunting and distracting the Three-Headed Valgren.

As they engaged in this very literal aerial battle, Roswaal looked over at Subaru and Beatrice, and,

Roswaal: "Well done for stopping the Magic Crystal Cannon. What's the situaaation~?"

Subaru: "Sphinx has been crushed! The cause of the zombies is in the Crystal Palace! We don't know what the Magic Crystal Cannon was aiming at just now!"

Roswaal: "Clear and concise… I see, you defeated Sphinx. That's both a blessing and a disappointment, but…"

Beatrice: "—? Is that a concern or a complaint, I suppose?"

Upon hearing the report from Subaru, Roswaal's expression turned grim, and his words became muddled.

Beatrice was unsparing when it came to Roswaal's words and actions, but this time her eyes were not as piercing as they had been. Subaru was also concerned by his pensive expression.

In response to Subaru and Beatrice's gaze, Roswaal responded, "No.",

Roswaal: "That thing had been destroyed once before. I hate to admit it, but its tenacity and thoroughness in accomplishing its goals are probably above even mine. —I'm still not convinced."

Beatrice: "—. They are someone who makes Betty and Roswaal feel unpleasant by mentioning their name, in fact…"

Roswaal: "Of course, I'm not saying they couldn't have been defeated. But if it were an enemy that makes a plan that will end in failure if they merely died, it wouldn't have been an enemy of the world for more than three hundred years."

Subaru could not dismiss Roswaal's conjecture as pessimistic.

He was right, because if the Witch, Sphinx, had been a trivial enemy, the Vollachian Empire would never have come so close to destruction.

In fact, the Magic Crystal Cannon that Subaru and Beatrice stopped was not fired until after Sphinx was destroyed.

There remained the fear that the Witch was still working on a way to destroy the Empire.

Roswaal: "Then we'll just destroy all of them. In the meantime…"

Beatrice: "That big Dragon is three times more troublesome than a normal one, yet it will leave the stage in a snap, I suppose! Fly now, Roswaal, in fact!"

At Beatrice’s encouragement, Roswaal smiled wryly, and—the aerial battle with the Blight Dragon began.

5

—Vincent and Eugard, two Emperors of Vollachia who normally would not be able to entrust their backs to each other, were performing sword dances, and the crimson swords flashed with flames that raged like a storm.

Tanza: “Amazing…”

Tanza muttered in amazement at the sight, which was like an illusion that burned her eyes.

Eugard, having sensed the signs of battle from the direction of the Crystal Palace, went ahead, and by the time Tanza, holding hands with Yorna, caught up with him, the two Emperors were already fighting together.

The undead whose souls were being set ablaze by the brilliance of the Yang Sword were all very skilled, and there had not been much difference between them and the undead Rowan.

But the howling winds of the crimson swords kept them at bay, as they were overwhelmed by the coordinated efforts of Eugard and Vincent, who exchanged neither words nor glances.

Yorna: “…This is the first time I’ve ever seen His Excellency wielding a sword with someone that way.”

Suddenly, Yorna, who was staring at the same scene as Tanza, remarked.

Tanza could not comprehend the complexity of the emotions contained therein. —The shaking eyes and trembling voice, all of which were created by years of not being able to do more than lean on Tanza.

Obviously, she did not know the details of the situation.

However, Yorna was in love with Eugard, who came back from a long time ago, and she knew that there was more to it than simple longevity.

Tanza's unfamiliarity with these bonds gave space to a sense of relational hierarchy between she and Eugard in her mind.

Yorna: "I love both you, Tanza, and His Excellency. Both of you are very dear to me, and I love you both in my heart, just in different ways."

Tanza: "Ah…"

The anxiety that creeped into Tanza's heart was seen through by Yorna, which made her want to bury her face.

But Tanza relied on the feeling of the hand in her hand, and with the reason why she was standing here in her heart, she ceased wailing in self-pity.

She had to keep her face up.

That was what Tanza had in common with all the amazing people she had ever met.

Tanza: "—Hk."

Gritting her teeth, Tanza's nerves were on edge.

She was entrusted with protecting Yorna, who was not in good shape, or perhaps emotionally traumatized from the battle with the dreadful Rowan. She could not rely on Eugard, who was fighting, or even on Emilia, who had separated from her on her way here.

So, as long as Tanza was not able to join Eugard and Vincent in their battle, all she could do was to be the first to notice anything unusual in their surroundings—.

Tanza: "—Yorna-sama! Look!"

Her vigilance paid off.

Tanza's round eyes widened, and she pointed to the Crystal Palace's top level with the hand not held by Yorna's. Looking at the same thing as Tanza, Yorna stared up with her almond-shaped eyes.

Their gazes fell on the half-spherical tower near the top of the Crystal Palace—Tanza did not know, but it was the tower where the Magic Crystal Cannon, the trump card of the Crystal Palace, was located.

The tower glowed from within, and then, in a violent explosion, the walls were blown away. Tanza blinked as the tower was destroyed, scattering pieces of the castle in a spectacular manner.

Then, a small shadow appeared out of the thick plume of smoke—

Yorna: "Old Man Olbart?"

Yorna's voice, somewhat taken aback, was evidence of her surprise at what she saw.

Slowly, Olbart emerged from the broken wall, but rather than his usual aloof and detached self, blood stained his tattered garb.

Just then, Olbart noticed Tanza and the other living people below him—

Olbart: "Yer Excellency! Things ain't lookin' good at this rate! The Witch's tricks ain't over yet!"

And as such, his voice, tainted by desperation, screamed as if to push an impression very much not like himself.

6

And so, at the same time that Olbart shouted in his blood-stained garb—Emilia stood, reflecting on the fact that she had taken an unplanned action with her intuition as the basis.

It was a big decision to go against the wishes of Subaru and Abel, both of whom had worked very hard to think through the best course of action, and to act separately from Tanza, Yorna, and the others.

Emilia: “If my uneasiness turned out to be just a misunderstanding, I thought I’d hurry back to Tanza-chan and the others, but…”

Following a slight unease and a change in the air, a misapprehension that seemed to wash over her, Emilia ran not to the Crystal Palace but further north.

And there she found someone she was not supposed to have met.

If someone were to merely be somewhere, then no matter who they were, assuming that they were committing wrongdoings would usually be unacceptable. But this other person was a bit of an exception.

After all—

Emilia: “You reaaally surprised me. —Why are you here, Echidna?”

At Emilia’s prompt, the white-haired Witch turned to look.

She spoke with only the slightest hint of surprise at her well-formed appearance.

Witch: “I believe I am the one who ought to be surprised. —Witch of Envy.”

So she declared.

V!c.112o

Chapter 68:
The Man I Fell For

1

—Upon being called the “Witch of Envy”, Emilia widened her eyes in surprise.

The cause of her surprise had been twofold: one reason was how long it had been since she was treated like the Witch of Envy, the other was that being called the Witch of Envy had not hurt her.

It had been more than a year since the Royal Selection began, and in the Kingdom of Lugunica, those unaware that one of the candidates was a silver-haired half-elf with amethyst eyes were few.

To put it Subaru-style, Emilia, as Emilia, had become a household name.

As a result, even occasions when Emilia needed to wear her usual cognitive disruption robe had become sparse. And the reason she had donned it so diligently in the Empire for the first time in a long while, was to prevent people from recognizing her as Emilia.

For that reason, it had been a while since she had been called the Witch of Envy. And even when called so, she had remained unperturbed. —For she had the conviction to confidently say, “You’re mistaken”.

The conviction that there was a person, who acknowledged Emilia as Emilia, and had said “I love you”.

Emilia: “I’m Emilia, just Emilia. Not the Witch of Envy.”

Supported by that conviction, Emilia was able to respond with her back unbent.

After replying so, Emilia gazed intently at the familiar white-haired woman before her, Emilia: “Although you look reaaally similar… you don’t seem to be Echidna? Perhaps, you’re Echidna’s twin, like Ram and Rem? Echidna’s older sister? Younger sister?”

???: “—. It seems you possess a vivid imagination. However, I am a creation of my creator, and not a blood relative. Correction: Required.”

Emilia: “Kreashon, Kreeated…”

Emilia frowned upon hearing the not-so-familiar words, but could understand that the other party had denied being Echidna’s sister.

Thinking about it calmly, given that Echidna was from four hundred years ago, meeting the person herself or her sister here would be very strange. Of course, since it was a situation where those who had died were rising up again, there was a chance the same could have happened with Echidna and her sister.

Emilia: “But, you seem hale and hearty, and not like you’ve died.”

She, who looked like Echidna, did not have a sickly complexion like the undead, and her eyes were also normal. But when compared to Echidna, her expressions might be slightly stiffer.

The Echidna Emilia knew, usually had a mean look on her face. — The crying face she had shown at the end, still remained strongly within Emilia’s heart.

Emilia: “Umm, I understand that you’re not Echidna, so may I ask your name?”

???: “Yes, I too am uncomfortable with being called by the name of my creator. By all means, please call me the Witch of Greed.”

Emilia: “…Do you perhaps have a name that’s easier to call you with?”

???: “—. Respondence: Required. If not that, then Sphinx.”

Emilia: “Ahh yes… wait! Sphinx?!”

As soon as she finally heard what sounded like a name, Emilia realized it was the same as the name of the central figure that had brought about the Great Disaster.

As far as Emilia was aware, Sphinx should have looked exactly like Ryuzu.

Emilia: “Aren’t Ryuzu-san and Echidna, both people closely associated with the Sanctuary? Then, I wonder if you’ll turn into Garfiel or Frederica next…”

Sphinx: “Are you also aware of the Sanctuary? It seems you and I have a deeper connection than I had presumed… by Emilia, do you refer to the Royal Selection Candidate, like Priscilla Barielle?”

Emilia: “Eh? Yes, that’s right. We need to quickly find Priscilla as well and take her back home or—”

Sphinx: “—Elimination: Required.”

At that moment, towards the woman who had slightly tilted her head—a white light shot from Sphinx’s finger, and with an “Eh”, Emilia deflected it obliquely using a mirror of ice she conjured on reflex.

If Emilia’s specialty had been the Earth attribute instead of the Fire attribute, the earthen or stone wall would have been pierced through in a single shot, and possibly resulted in a fatal injury.

It was an attack brimming with murderous intent, to the extent that it would make one shudder.

Nevertheless—

Emilia: “Jeez! What a reaaally abrupt start!”

The white light had not been released as a singular shot; rather, chasing after Emilia, as her silver hair danced, was a hot beam of light that sliced through the world, and with it the battle had begun.

Her opponent looked exactly like Echidna, and also like Echidna, seemed to be good at magic.

But, the same was true of Emilia.

Emilia: “If that’s what you want to do, then I’m going to give it my all too! After making sure you can’t move, I’m taking you to Subaru and the others!”

Sphinx: “I do not wish to meet them ever again. Hence, I shall take your life here, and ascertain the type of expression Pricilla Barielle would have.”

Emilia: “—! Do you know where Priscilla is?”

As she sliced away the attacks of light released from all directions with a sword of ice that shone like a mirror, Emilia’s amethyst eyes sparkled in response to Sphinx’s words.

She had a feeling that Priscilla would have wanted to head for the Crystal Palace for some reason and would thus be found there, but getting Sphinx to reveal her exact location would be the best.

All the more, Emilia was determined not to lose. Sphinx, who had the same face as Echidna, narrowed her eyes at Emilia’s enthusiasm, and with slight irritation,

Sphinx: “It would be problematic if I failed to secure this area. —Repulsion: Required.”

That, was what she had quietly muttered.

2

The battery of the Magic Crystal Cannon installed on the highest floor of the Crystal Palace, within the spire where it was operated, a battle had broken out.

The space was far too wide when considering its intended purpose, but since there were walls and ceilings, the enclosed environment was an advantageous battleground for the shinobi, Olbart.

The strength of the techniques employed by the shinobi lay in their variety and applicability. Although developed to enable the fulfillment of the mission in any environment, all the various techniques had the ultimate goal of reaping the life of the opponent.

As a battleground where that could be achieved, this space was ideal.

Olbart: “When it comes ta cramped spaces, don’t magicians tend ta buckle under the constraints?”

A battle, in essence, was about imposing one’s strengths upon the weaknesses of the other.

This was the basis of Olbart’s fighting style as a shinobi. Rather, in order to respond to the weaknesses of all sorts of opponents, he had purposely avoided forming his own specialty.

Prior to Olbart becoming the head honcho, the shinobi were generally encouraged to specialize in a singular technique.

However, the idealized conception of single-skill specialization was only for the privileged few like Cecilus and Arakiya, who possessed a single technique that could be effective against anyone, while those with ordinary abilities must be adaptable or they would simply die.

Although Olbart did not particularly care how many people died other than himself, he did feel pity for the shinobi who were dying merely because they had been taught wrong.

Thus, when Olbart became the head honcho, he immediately abandoned the doctrine of single-technique specialization.

Rather than blindly honing one’s own special skill, thoroughly training in strategies to thwart the strong points of the opponent, and learning techniques of guiding the battle so as to bring about that situation. But then again, this change did not readily bear fruit. Those who had been properly shaped by it were few, with the last being a genius girl who had appeared in the village four or five years ago.

It seemed like that genius girl had also died, so the cultivation of talented individuals was nothing more than a lost cause.

—Truly, his life was filled with nothing but regret.

Olbart: “That’s why, at least, gimme a reason ta have lived ta my dotage.”

Having kicked off the floor, he sent off shards of broken stone to smash into the Witch’s head.

Simultaneously swinging his right arm that lacked a hand and his left arm that had a hand back and forth, Olbart threw spinning kunai that would reach the target with a time delay, then he exploded off the ground with his legs.

Be it evading the flying debris, avoiding the chop from Olbart’s hand, or shooting down the kunai approaching from both sides, all of these actions were chipping away at the Witch’s ability to take the initiative, and gnawing at her life.

At that assault from the shinobi—

Witch: “—Perspective Shift: Required.”

The white-haired Witch who had slightly narrowed her eyes, received it in its entirety without any show of resistance.

Olbart: “…”

The flying debris had split her forehead, kunai had been thrust into her neck and femur, and her chest had been pierced through the middle by Olbart’s hand. Even then, the Witch had not moved an inch.

The Witch had been unable to react to Olbart’s movements. —No, the Witch’s gaze had been following his movements. She was not as sluggish as her appearance seemed to suggest, that was what Olbart concluded.

In other words, the Witch could have done something but had gotten hit without doing anything. —No, she would do so from now.

The next moment, surrounding Olbart and the Witch now in close proximity to each other, countless fist-sized orbs of light had begun to float in the air.

???: “Olbart!”

Moguro, who had realized the same thing, shouted, and Olbart, with a single long eyebrow raised, looked at the Witch.

The Witch, her beautiful countenance not having wavered in the slightest, had been observing Olbart for his subsequent decision. That gaze, which felt like it was peering into the ninety years of his life, made him feel nauseous.

Based on that, Olbart had gotten his priorities in order. Rather than aiming for the Witch’s life, he would thwart her objectives.

Bearing fatal injuries all over her body, even after being pierced through her chest, her hand remained on the pedestal—he would aim to sever the flow of Mana that the Witch had been pouring into the Magic Core of the Crystal Palace.

Olbart: “Ya know, they say harassment’s what we shinobi are made of.”

That instant, the Witch’s wrist making contact with the pedestal was blown away by the toes that had shot up—and the countless orbs of light surged forward to annihilate the small-statured Olbart, together with the entirety of the Witch who had cast them.

3

Vincent: “—Yorna Mishigure!”

Upon sensing that something was off, Vincent took a step back from the battlefield and shouted out down towards Yorna.

Overhead, the voice of Olbart that had come down from the half-destroyed battery of the Magic Crystal Cannon was one of urgency, one that did not maintain the usual easygoing attitude of the Vicious Old Man.

Sharply turning his gaze to the side, Vincent swung his Yang Sword adjacent to himself, and locked eyes with Eugard, who was restraining the undead in the vicinity.

Eugard: "Thou must proceed."

Entrusting this location to Eugard, who had guessed his intentions with a brief comment, Vincent hastened to Yorna. Receiving Vincent's gaze, and after displaying a face of befuddlement for but a moment, Yorna tensed her lips and let go of the hand of the deergirl next to her—of Tanza,

Yorna: "Tanza, please support His Excellency Vincent!"

Tanza: "—! Yes, understood."

Drawing her chin in assent at Yorna's call, Tanza made a cup with her hands and slightly bent down. Surmising the intention behind Tanza's movements, Vincent made an agile hop, landing with his feet in the small hands of the girl.

The next moment, with a vigorous upheaval of those slender arms, Tanza launched Vincent towards the sky—straight upwards, aiming for the uppermost floor of the Crystal Palace.

Vincent: "—Hk."

The vigor was lacking, so, kicking off of the wall of the palace in order to make up for the unreached distance, Vincent arrived at the uppermost floor that was over five meters above him. The thought that he was doing something similar to Cecilus, who would side-step staircases when going up and down, grazed his mind, but such ideas immediately vanished.

After all, this was the first time Vincent had seen Olbart in such a state.

Olbart: "Kakakakka…! Did'ya think I was dead when ya saw me, ain't that hilarious?"

Alongside the half-destroyed wall of the battery, Olbart sat with a knee up as he laughed in a low voice. However, the monstrous old man was drenched in blood, and his characteristically overly-long eyebrows were sagging. Among all his wounds, the gravest by far was that of his left arm having been blown off in the wake of his right one.

For Olbart to have engaged in such a close bout of combat, just how powerful an individual had been present here?

—No, what mattered now was.

Vincent: “Before you die, speak. What was the Witch plotting?”

Olbart: “Kaka, this really is some harsh treatment of the elderly… If ya look at Moguro you’ll be able ta tell.”

Vincent: “Moguro Hagane…”

As Olbart quite literally coughed up blood while speaking, Vincent turned around at his words, and looked at the pedestal installed within the ruinous battery, and the green orb slotted therein—the Magic Core.

The Crystal Palace, constructed with an unsparing amount of magic crystals, was an unfathomable condensation of Mana, and thus was tantamount to a tremendously enormous bomb. The reason why that was enshrined in the Imperial Capital, the center of the Empire, was due to the existence of the Magic Core governing over it.

The Magic Core was that which served as the very heart of the Crystal Palace. —The green glimmer of that heart, the Magic Core, could see the rising abnormality in Vincent’s sable eyes.

That meant—

Vincent: “—Overloading the Magic Core, they intend to blow up the Crystal Palace along with the entire Imperial Capital!”

Magic Core: “Olbart, impeded it. Stopped, the Witch, midway through.”

The Witch’s gambit, which Olbart had spoken of, as Vincent shuddered upon surmising its true intent, the Magic Core—Moguro

Hagane's voice substantiated it.

As mentioned previously, it was the distinguished achievement of the Magic Core that miraculously kept the magic crystals of the Crystal Palace steady. By pouring a vast amount of Mana into the Magic Core, the Witch had placed a large burden on its processing power. By doing that, she had plotted to have the Magic Core lose its function of control, destroying the equilibrium of the magic crystals, and blowing away the city.

Having comprehended that much, a momentary unease was birthed in Vincent's mind.

Vincent: "The Witch was present here? Before she went up in flames?"

Moguro: "Incorrect. The Witch, was not burning. Olbart and myself, fought her together."

Vincent: "…"

From the way Moguro had put it, Vincent's misgivings were not cleared up.

The one known as the Witch on this battlefield, Sphinx, was supposed to have perished with her soul scorched to naught, ensnared by the stratagems of Chisha and Natsuki Subaru.

In that case, did that mean there were two Witches? Or perhaps—.

Vincent: "The matter at hand is what ought to take priority."

Discontinuing the thought that had veered off course, Vincent looked down at the Magic Core.

By way of Olbart's hard-fought battle, the annihilation of the Imperial Capital by means of the Magic Core's loss of control had been averted—no, it had merely been delayed. Looking at the state of the Magic Core, it was apparent that its equilibrium had already been lost.

The fuse of the Magic Core had already been set off. No longer could a detonation be avoided.

Vincent: "—Moguro Hagane, you have done a great service until now."

When he gained conviction of that reality, Vincent called out to Moguro as such.

As the Steelman Moguro Hagane, the Meteor that was this Crystal Palace itself had served the Vollachian Emperor Vincent well. To put it clearly, among the Nine Divine Generals, who had experienced nothing but problems in matters outside of pure strength, Moguro and Groovy had been unfathomably useful.

In order to repay Moguro, who had been such a loyal retainer, Vincent had but one method.

Vincent: "In accordance with your wishes, I shall ensure the tranquility of the Vollachian Empire, no matter what."

Moguro: "—. Your Excellency, thank you. Your Excellency, tells no lie."

Vincent: "Fool, I do not hesitate to dupe others if necessary."

Moguro: "People, you deceive. Me, you do not."

At Moguro's words of stout belief, Vincent gave a slight exhale, and loosened his lips.

This Meteor was supposed to be a stone puppet in whom no blood flowed, and yet in the world of the Empire, fervent with tricks and plots, they were a valuable existence that seemed almost too good to be true.

Olbart: "…So what'dya intend on doing, Yer Excellency."

Vincent: "Even were the Magic Core to be removed from the pedestal, we have no means of removing it from the premises. In that case, the ruination of the Magic Core and of the Crystal Palace itself, there is no option save burning both to naught. —Yang Sword Vollachia."

Questioned by Olbart, Vincent displayed the Yang Sword within his grip.

If he called for Eugard to come here, then with two Yang Swords—there would be no meaning in doing such a thing. What would be required in the current predicament, was not a matter of manpower, but of output.

To scorch the Magic Core, and the power concealed within, to ash by the flame of the Yang Sword. Before the power overflowing from the Magic Core could engulf the Crystal Palace and Imperial Capital, and blow them away.

In all likelihood, everything would end up being settled in a mere moment.

Vincent: "Or perhaps, do you have any other ideas?"

Olbart: "Hm? I ain't got a plan, ain't even got two arms ta raise if I wanted ta surrender. If Yer Excellency can't think of anything, then nobody else in the whole world, let alone the Empire, would be able ta think of anything either, right?"

Vincent: "—Hmph."

As the monstrous old man shrugged his armless shoulders, Vincent slightly snorted his nose.

The notion that nobody in the world other than Vincent would be able to come up with a countermeasure, was an overestimation. If it were not Vincent present here, but instead Subaru, Chisha, or Priscilla—.

Vincent: "Think not of such fruitless things, O foolish Vincent Vollachia."

Indeed, deriding his own self as foolish, Vincent readied the Yang Sword with a two-handed grip.

Stood before the growing radiance of the Magic Core upon the pedestal, before the radiance of the Yang Sword, before the treasured sword of crimson that served as the greatest treasure of the Vollachian Empire, the Vollachian Empire of the present day implored the display of its power.

The next instant, the area surrounding Vincent—nay, the area surrounding the Yang Sword began to harbor heat in its air, distorting the world akin to a wavering mirage. Setting rubbish alight, roasting the atmosphere, forcibly painting over the Mana in the air with the fire attribute, the scintillation of the Yang Sword was emboldened.

The heat radiated by the brilliant red blade began to gleam white at the signs of the rising flame.

Olbart: “Geez, now this sure is somethin’.”

Present in the same vicinity, Olbart received the full influence of the heat brought about by the Yang Sword, and he was silently surprised at the swell of the treasured sword’s power.

To begin with, the Yang Sword was something that was sparsely drawn. Even for Olbart, who had lived through three generations of Emperors, this was the first time he had witnessed this much of the Yang Sword’s power on display.

For Vincent himself, this was his first time unleashing this much of the Yang Sword’s power.

However—

Vincent: “—It is insufficient.”

While feeling the unprecedented upsurge of power, Vincent ascertained that the output was lacking.

Calculating the ratio of the ever-increasing pressure of the Magic Core and the magic crystals used in the construction of the Crystal Palace, the current output of the Yang Sword would not be able to burn away the might of the explosion. It was not a matter of reducing it as much as possible. What was required, was a complete eradication.

And with Vincent’s incomplete Yang Sword, that would be impossible.

The Yang Sword of Vincent Vollachia, was not capable of displaying its true value.

The reason was plain and simple—Vincent had allowed his biological sister, Prisca Benedict, to live, and thus the Imperial Selection Ceremony had yet to come to an end in its truest form. Deceiving all citizens of the Empire, he was a transient Emperor who had ascended the Imperial Throne without having gained the right to do so.

Ergo, Vincent could not draw out the true power of the Yang Sword Vollachia.

In regards to the true value of the Yang Sword, the same went for Eugard, one of the historic Emperors.

After all, although the Yang Sword lent its power to the undead Eugard by way of his imperial lineage, its true power would dwell in naught but the true Emperor of the current generation.

Was his only option to make the attempt with the incomplete Yang Sword? Or perhaps—

Vincent: "—In exchange for my own life…"

Offering something of equal value, he would seek to invoke the true flame of the Yang Sword.

It was a choice that was quite likely to reduce the promise he had just exchanged with Moguro to dreck, but if that was what it took, Vincent would enact it.

All things, were the results of the path Vincent had chosen to walk. Atop the extremity of all the results of choices he had piled up, currently, Vincent was standing.

Therefore—

Vincent: "The duty I must fulfill—"

???: “—I don’t think so, Abel-chin.”

Imploring the Yang Sword in his grip, Vincent was about to draw out value equivalent to setting his own life aflame. That hand of Vincent’s, was held down by the white hand of the one who stood next to him.

Lost in concentration, the tall woman had gotten close to him through the opening in his undelivered attention. At the blue eyes staring into his side-profile, Vincent widened his eyes.

Vincent: “Medium O’Connell…”

Medium: “Ehehe, I’m here.”

Vincent: “…”

As Medium smiled with her answer, Vincent was at a loss for words.

This place where the heat of the Yang Sword only continued to swell, was no longer suitable for ordinary individuals to breathe. She had suddenly appeared in such a place; however, she was smiling.

With a smile on her face, and her hand holding down Vincent’s,

Medium: “I know that Abel-chin is carrying a huge responsibility. But, you can’t let yourself die. After all, that’s the kind of thing I hate the most.”

Vincent: “Think about the magnitude of the matter at hand. To begin with, you have no qualifications to divulge your opinion to me.”

Medium: “Ehh~! Yes I do! I’m becoming Abel-chin’s wife, aren’t I?!”

Vincent: “That is…”

Medium: “You said that it was okay!”

Vincent: “…”

Medium: “You said so!”

Held down by her vigorousness, Vincent was overwhelmed by Medium’s fierce spirit. That was different from the pressure of someone aiming for Vincent’s life, or that of a potential political opponent.

It was the kind of thing for which Vincent had not made preparations to combat.

Vincent: “Take a look at reality. No matter how much you value the seat of Empress Consort, the most vital thing is that the Empire—”

It was at the moment he had attempted to brush her aside.

A sudden impact having struck his cheek, Vincent stared in shock that his face had been flicked. Turning around with that stare, he looked at Medium. —Medium, who had struck the Emperor’s cheek.

Medium: “Never speak about my reason for worrying about Abel-chin like that again.”

Vincent: “You…”

Tensing her cheeks, Medium’s declaration made Vincent unconsciously blink his eyes. And, witnessing that, Medium spoke “Ah” in surprise,

Medium: “Abel-chin closing both his eyes, this is the first time I’m seeing it~.”

As she gave a broad smile and spoke, Vincent did not utter a word.

His eyes ought to be kept open. If he closed both his eyes at the same time, the Emperor’s life would be in danger. That was an ironclad rule of Vollachia, one that Vincent abided by even in his sleep.

That, had been violated. Not to deprive him of his life, but by a woman who was worried about Vincent, flicking his cheek.

Olbart: “Kakakakka! Oioi, even tho’ this isn’t the time for that, isn’t it just a masterpiece?”

Perceiving the turmoil within Vincent, the elderly man on the verge of death loudly butted in. Regaining his ability to think and make decisions, Vincent gritted his teeth.

Even if it were true that he was taken aback for a second, nothing about the situation had changed.

All the same, the Imperial Capital, the Empire, and the world were heading to meet their demise. That—

Medium: “It’ll be okay, Abel-chin, it’ll be okay.”

As Vincent bit down on his molars, Medium still continued to smile at him.

It was a baseless, emotional argument that merely spoke of hope. In a place of discussion, that was something Vincent loathed from the bottom of his heart, for it harbored the least potential.

—Such loathed arguments of emotion; since he had been ousted from the throne, just how many times had he been tormented by them, and rescued by them?

???: “—How ‘bout that, Your Excellency? Ain’t my lil’ sis quite the big deal?”

It was at that instant.

The reason for Vincent’s silence, the one speaking as if it were his own personal matter, as if perceiving that he had also gone through the same thing, was…

4

Ultimately, no matter what he did, Balleroy Temeglyph had always been half-hearted; he derided himself so.

When he was alive, he had served the Empire, and then opposed the Empire.

Then after he died, he opposed the Empire yet again, and in the end —

Balleroy: “Serving the Empire, though I ain’t really built for it.”

As Balleroy grumbled this, the hole in his chest—having been pierced and opened up by the Magical Bullet of the most horrible magician, was proof of the decision that had caused his defeat.

—The battle on which Balleroy’s wish had been staked, had ended with his utter defeat against the enemy who had been willing to use all means at his disposal.

The magician in question had said something along the lines of “It was a paper-thin difference, so it wouuuldn’t~ have been particularly odd for either one of us to come out victorious.”, but that was nothing more than a lie designed to soothe his ears.

In all likelihood, if he were to fight against that man one hundred times, Balleroy would lose all one hundred times. It was that sort of affinity.

For the sake of a single objective, just how ruthless could that man become?

At the end of the day, by the point in time in which he could not carry out the things he had left undone and his lingering regrets, which had been the reason for his resurrection, Balleroy was no match for the opponent whose blood ran colder than that of the undead.

With Medium having been cast away, there was no way he could have overlooked it, knowing that doing so would have resulted in the death of his little sister. That was Balleroy’s weakness, and the entire reason for his defeat.

Medium: “That’s wrong. It’s ‘cause Ballebro is kind.”

Balleroy had accepted that as the reason for his defeat; however, Medium would not accept that.

Evaluating his weakness and naivete as kindness, Medium’s upright personality and beaming smile had not withered in the slightest despite having grown taller; she was his prized little sister.

Indeed, she was his little sister. Balleroy was truly blessed to have met her.

Serena, Flop, Medium, Madelyn, and everyone else, he was truly blessed to have met them all.

His partner Carillon went without saying, but that also held true for the many Imperial Soldiers who had stood alongside Balleroy as he climbed the ranks as General, and it also held true for the Nine Divine Generals.

However, although he was grateful for all of those meetings, he had not relinquished it.

That was—

Medium: “Even so, Ballebro couldn’t stop himself, right?”

Tears in her eyes, yet still smiling nonetheless, Medium’s appearance took him aback.

He had thought she had not changed at all since the time they had first met, yet she had verily grown up; having gone from girl to woman, she had become capable of smiling in this different manner.

He alone had gone without changing, merely taking steps while stuck in place.

Balleroy: “…Seems like the people who get resurrected by the Witch are limited to just the people who died in the Empire. The only way to get rid of that restriction, is by destroying the Empire, and expanding the range further beyond to the Kingdom and the City-States. If we do that, then finally, by doing that, I’ll finally be able to…”

Medium: “—Meet Big Bro Miles again?”

Balleroy: “…”

Medium: “I understand. After all, I’ve been watching Ballebro all this time.”

At Medium’s words, Balleroy keenly gained two emotions.

The first was self-scorn regarding the fact that his inner feelings had been exposed, and the other was a slight jealousy. This smile that he was seeing Medium display for the first time, he knew the meaning behind it.

Balleroy: “Medi, is there a man you’ve fallen for?”

Medium: “Huh?! N-no…? Maybe.”

Balleroy: “Close your eyes, and it’s gotta be the first face that comes to mind with a smile.”

Medium: “That kinda thing can only be big bro! Besides, it’s not like Abel-chin ever smiles… ah.”

Placing her hand over her mouth, a red hue ascended into Medium’s cheeks. Seeing such a reaction from his little sister for the first time, Balleroy chuckled. Smiling, he slowly raised himself up.

Truly, Balleroy was half-hearted to the bitter end.

If, in hating that, he started to break things down like the magician who had defeated him, then perhaps he would no longer be himself.

Balleroy: “That sorta cold-bloodedness, I think I’ll pass.”

He could never become like that. He would never become like that.

He, who had been half-hearted since the time he was alive, was half-hearted all the same even in death.

Since he was a person of hazy wishes and regrets in both life and death, he could also say this.

Balleroy: “Well then, how ‘bout we go save the man who Medi fell for?”

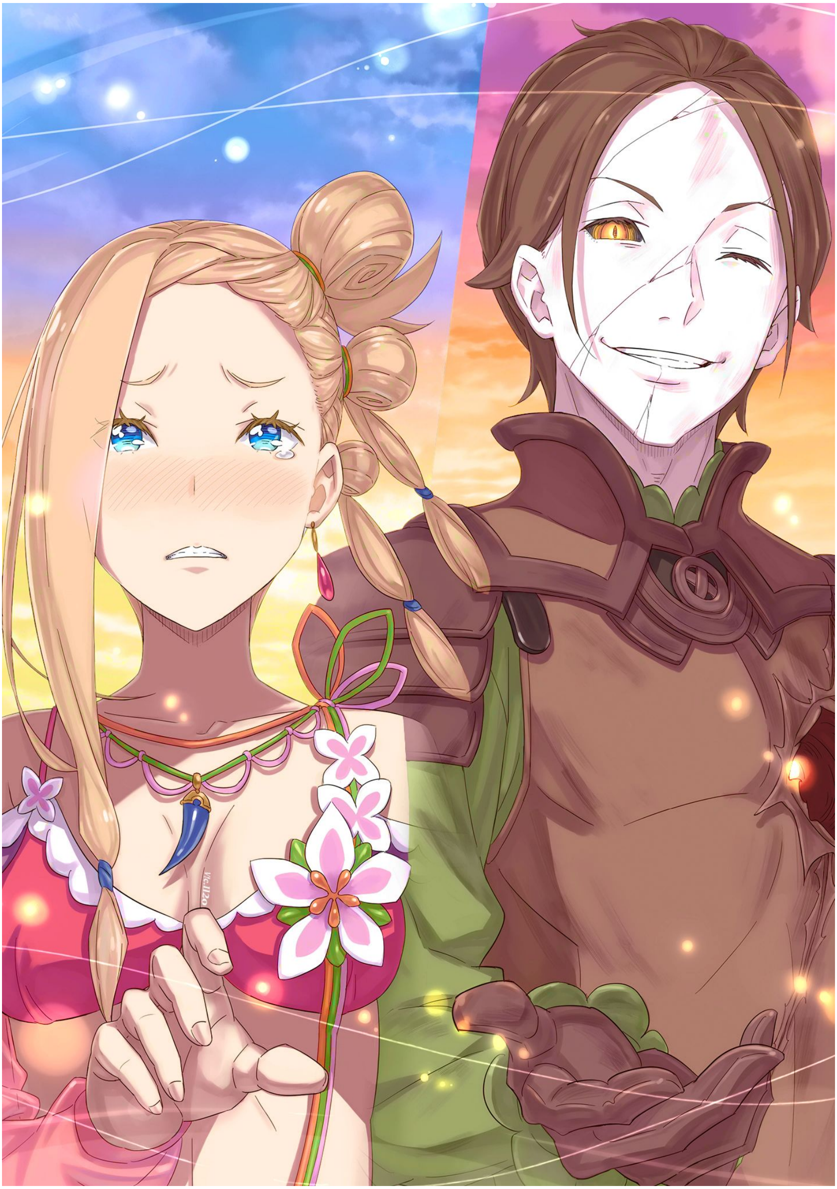
Medium: “I said I’m still not sure!”

Her complexion bright red, with a face different to that of her early life and days as a young girl, her words had no persuasive power whatsoever despite asserting them in such a manner.

If someone could make Medium have such an expression, yet still end up causing her sorrow, then Balleroy would kill that person with his very hands. Belittling himself, he thought so.

Carillon: “—Kiryararahhh.”

At Balleroy’s selfish brotherly feelings, Carillon, with whom he shared in heart and soul, neighed in high spirits.



Vic.Il2o

5

—At that moment, all those present in the Imperial Capital, be they living or dead, gazed up at the sky.

For what reason that had been, none could easily explain.

If the question was regarding the reason why they had individually looked up at the sky, there were likely many who could explain themselves. Those with keen senses may have perceived a strong undulation of Mana, and those with good hearing would have heard the loud neigh of a flying dragon. Likewise were those with a focus on the origin of the Magic Crystal Cannon, having been fired a moment prior, and those moving with the palace as their destination.

But, even if they could all provide explanations for themselves, they could not explain the reason for everybody having done so.

If it could be done, then it was only by the leading actor who decided the logic of the world within himself, and if he were to be asked, then his answer would be plain and simple—

Cecilus: "—Of course, it's because it's somebody's climax!"

He likely would have declared so in a grandiose manner, with a loud voice and a bright smile.

And, there existed not a single soul in this Vollachian Empire who would have been able to deny him.

The reason for that lay in pure strength, and, since the sole person capable of objecting to the leading actor regardless of pure strength, was currently seeing off their own reason for gazing at the sky right before their eyes.

—By leaps and bounds, leaps and bounds, a dazzlingly radiant streak of green light drew a line towards the sky directly above the Crystal Palace.

Pulling inwards, pulling inwards, before anyone could realize it, all the clouds present in the sky above the Imperial Capital had been congregated into an enormous sea of clouds, and plunging right into the midst of it—.

???: “…”

—That instant, as if the sky itself was aglow, a flicker of light suddenly illuminated the world in dazzling scintillation.

Chapter 69:
I Forgive You

1

As gauntlets of silver rang out, the torso and cranium of the undead standing in the way were pulverized.

Inside the body of every undead there existed a corebug, and without piercing it, causing a fatal wound would be impossible, even if their head and heart were to be blown away. —In that case, the best choice was to punch in a way so that the impact would spread throughout the whole body.

???: “How ‘bout this!”

Until now, he had been giving priority to swinging his fists with all of his strength and having them hit their targets, and he had not given much thought to the result that would be brought forth after they had landed. But, he revised that way of thinking.

The shockwave borne from the impact of his fist, he imagined it propagating throughout the body of his opponent. By doing so, a change could be yielded in the way his fist was unleashed, and in the result it brought about.

???: “—Hk.”

With a shivering response from its back, the body of the struck undead was smashed to dust, lagging a moment behind the area that had been directly punched. It was proof that the impact had been transmitted throughout the entire body, and that the corebug had been killed.

As to not relinquish that after having grasped it once, he engaged the swarm of countless undead with his fists.

One, two, three; the number of the shattered undead was rapidly increasing—.

???: “Oi, brat! That’s enough, there’ll be no end to this!”

A gruff voice called out to the back of the one holding his ground as he swung his fists at the undead.

With a sword of fine craftsmanship in hand, dealing with the undead that had broken off towards himself, Heinkel persisted with earnest resistance as his face and hair were getting worn out.

At that quavering voice of complaint, Garfiel contorted the corners of his mouth into a smile.

A person who would have been better off running away if he so desired, was sincerely holding his ground here.

He had insisted that he would be safer remaining here with Garfiel rather than running away on his own, but it was difficult to believe that such a claim was still valid in a situation with this much pressure.

After all, this place was—the grand gate that served as the entrance to the Imperial Capital, a crucial position that held the key to capturing the Imperial Capital by holding back the large army of undead that was attempting to march in.

Garfiel: “Ain’t gonna move one inch. If I don’t hold down this position, it’ll get in the way of Captain’s tactics.”

Hence, it was Garfiel’s duty to defend this place to the end by any means necessary.

Striking his fists together before his chest, Garfiel gave a reply brimming with motivation, to which Heinkel clicked his tongue. With a grim, unpleasant look on his face, in an angered voice he went, “But…!”,

Heinkel: “If it’s just to fulfill your duty, wouldn’t it be easier to carry out if you fell back a bit?! There’s no reason for you to hold your ground here… just leave that Dragon on its own!”

Having cut down an undead, what Heinkel pointed to with the raised tip of his sword, was the Cloud Dragon Mezoreia, which had engaged in a battle to the death against Garfiel, and was now lying on the ground.

Mezoreia was supposed to be on the side of the undead given its position, but the undead were unrelentingly directing their hostility towards the collapsed Cloud Dragon, and if neglected, the Dragon's scales would likely be stained with blood.

Garfiel: "Can't do that!"

Heinkel: "Why?! Isn't it an enemy?! It'd be best to let them harm each other!"

Garfiel: "I don't want Captain to be disappointed in me!"

At Garfiel's childish answer, Heinkel's expression stiffened as he found himself at a loss for words.

But, those were his true feelings, without any exaggeration. Even in this battle, Subaru desired to reduce casualties, and bring them as close to zero as possible. Garfiel, too, wished to assist in that.

Besides, he still had yet to exchange any meaningful words with the Cloud Dragon Mezoreia.

That was why—

Garfiel: "My amazin' self ain't movin'! Bring it the fuck on, ya zombie bastards!"

Fiercely roaring in a loud voice, the sound of Garfiel's two gauntlets striking each other rang out.

It would be best if the undead who heard that sound all gathered here, aiming for the living who was brimming with vitality.

Garfiel: "Exactly, that's fine by me. —All of ya strong fucks, come at my amazin' self!"

After all, by holding out as much as he could, Garfiel should have been able to make things even a little easier for the people precious to himself.

Heinkel: “…There’s something wrong with you.”

Distorting his expression, Heinkel listened to Garfiel’s war cry. —As he did so, Heinkel did not notice the slight stirring of the fallen Cloud Dragon behind him.

2

When affectionately lifted up from the bed, Madelyn was convinced that this was the end. —Because in Balleroy’s chest as he stood, a painfully large hole had been opened up.

It was the body of an undead. Madelyn knew that a fatal wound would not simply prove fatal. However, from the fact that the wound was not repairing itself like it was immediately supposed to, she could sense Balleroy’s intentions.

Madelyn’s darling—the person she loved, would now once and for all head to a place she would be unable to reach. Where even the child of the Dragon that commanded the clouds could not reach, towards a place even further beyond the heavens above the clouds.

Balleroy: “—I’m real sorry, Madelyn.”

As Balleroy spoke with a kind expression, Madelyn’s eyes slightly widened.

That expression of Balleroy’s, it overlapped with one he made in his lifetime, from before he had reunited with her as an undead. Of course, his eyes were still comprised of black with an auriferous hue looming within, and his complexion was still that of a pallid undead.

Even so, for but a moment, it seemed as if the warmth of life dwelled within Balleroy’s gaze and voice.

It was just like those many times when he would come to see Madelyn at the summit of Mount Palzoa.

—The fact that she had not been the one to help him regain that warmth, vexed her from the bottom of her heart.

Madelyn: "—Hk."

As her voice choked up due to her sense of powerlessness and worthlessness, Madelyn's golden eyes began to fill with tears.

As Madelyn's eyes showed fragility despite being alive, Balleroy, whose eyes housed definite strength despite being dead, while reflected in the irises that shared the same hue as his own,

Balleroy: "Until the very end of the end, I sure was quite the selfish guy. I had ended up using Madelyn an awful lot with that selfishness of mine."

Determining the things he needed to do, and deciding that they would part ways, Balleroy was currently standing by Madelyn's side.

This, was his way of broaching that conversation. What would subsequently follow, were Balleroy's words of apology and gratitude; Madelyn could tell.

Indeed, because she had been able to tell.

Madelyn: "Friggin', stop…"

Balleroy: "Madelyn?"

Madelyn: "Apologizing, expressing gratitude, all those sorts of things, friggin' stop it…!"

As the roots of her teeth trembled, and she forcibly evaporated the tears that had welled up in her eyes, Madelyn appealed so.

As half of her consciousness was still connected to the dragonhusk, Madelyn could not put strength into her limbs. But, bypassing that reason through sheer will, Madelyn gripped the arm of Balleroy, who was holding her up.

His arm, the undead arm, was gripped tightly enough to cause cracks to form and shatter.

But, what she wished to convey through that was not anger or hatred. Only, it was the thoughts Madelyn was harboring, and wished to convey.

Madelyn: “If you’re saying you’re selfish, the most selfish thing that Balleroy did was selfishly disappear all on your friggin’ own. You selfishly showed up at this dragon’s nest, selfishly became someone precious to this dragon, selfishly stopped showing up, selfishly died, and selfishly disappeared… and now, you’re friggin’ planning on selfishly disappearing again…!”

Balleroy: “…”

Madelyn: “You’ve already been friggin’ selfish enough. So then… so then! I won’t friggin’ forgive your selfishness anymore…! Instead of Balleroy’s gratitude or farewells… friggin’ listen, to what this dragon has to say…!”

She was crushing his arm, however, Balleroy had his eyes fixed on Madelyn without saying a word.

Staring back into Balleroy’s golden eyes with those of differing radiance yet identical hue, Madelyn spoke.

That was—

Madelyn: “—Balleroy, you friggin’ brought this dragon to the outside world.”

Balleroy: “—Hk.”

At Madelyn’s words, Balleroy’s eyes widened.

Being told something utterly unexpected, Balleroy was flummoxed. It was Madelyn’s first time seeing Balleroy make such a face. Even if he was undead, she was happy that she could still see new sides of the person she loved.

As if to sear all of that into her tenacious dragonkin body, Madelyn continued.

Madelyn: “This dragon, was brought outside. Balleroy friggin’ did that for this dragon. Balleroy brought this dragon out below the sky."

Balleroy: "…"

Madelyn: "This dragon, hasn't been friggin' used or anything like that. The reason why this dragon was able to come down from the mountain like this, and is now able to talk to Balleroy again like this… all of it, is thanks to Balleroy."

If only she had been quicker to decide. She harbored a great many regrets of that sort.

If only they had conversed and shared in each other's touch more. She harbored a great many lamentations of that sort.

Even so, of the things she had decided, the things they had conversed on, and the times they had touched, she wished not to relinquish even an iota.

Madelyn: "All of the things Balleroy gave me… Balleroy, you friggin' brought this dragon to the outside world."

She would not allow the time Balleroy had come to bid his thanks and farewell be used for such things.

She did not want to use the scarce time she had left with Balleroy to listen to and deny such inconsequential things. If the total time they had remaining was ten seconds, then in those ten seconds, Madelyn would—

Madelyn: "I love you. Balleroy is this dragon's everything. There's absolutely friggin' nothing that I love more than Balleroy. Balleroy is, this dragon's, everything…"

Balleroy: "Madelyn…"

Madelyn: "Balleroy, Balleroy, Balleroy… hk!"

—She would use the entirety of the remaining ten seconds to tell the person she loved that she loved him.

She wanted him to respond. She wanted him to want her. She wanted him to harbor the same amount of ardor as was dwelling within herself.

Casting away all those complicated aspects of love, Madelyn became an embodiment of feelings.

Even if people disdained Balleroy's image, and even if Balleroy himself might desire that, Madelyn would absolutely never let that happen. She did not want to let that happen.

With her entire lifespan as a dragonkin, Madelyn would hold Balleroy Temeglyph within her heart.

Madelyn: "The lifetime of a dragonkin, is incomparably friggin' longer than a human's."

Through that long, long amount of time, so long that it would seem like eternity when compared with a human's, Madelyn would live while thinking of Balleroy, the man engraved in her soul.

That he had left such an impact behind, she would convey to Balleroy Temeglyph.

Balleroy: "—. Just what is it that ya find pleasant 'bout me, I wonder. A guy like me, a man who's not worth falling in love with."

Balleroy briefly spoke in a manner deriding himself, but Madelyn did not respond with anything.

Madelyn was too busy pressing her forehead against his chest to express her feelings. The man who did not seem to understand his own charm, she would selfishly have him find the answer to that on his own.

It seemed like Madelyn's intentions had been communicated. Balleroy took a long, deep breath.

And then—

Balleroy: "Ya won't be able to forget me even if I tell ya to. Yeah, I understand that exceedingly well after all. That's why, I don't mind if ya don't forget me. Only—"

Madelyn: "…"

Balleroy: "Find happiness, Madelyn. My beloved, darling dragon princess."

For the first time in her life, Madelyn was rejected outright by the person she loved.

3

Balleroy: "—How 'bout that, Your Excellency? Ain't my lil' sis quite the big deal?"

Balleroy's voice, which had failed to conceal his meritorious sentiments, drew the attention of all present at the site of the battery. —Nay, not all of them. It was everyone except Medium.

The courage of the woman holding down Vincent's Yang Sword-wielding hand towered above everyone else.

If one thoughtlessly attempted to grasp the Yang Sword, they would burst into flames if they lacked the qualifications. It was an entreaty that ran adjacent to death. But then again, without going that far, Vincent likely would not have understood.

While he understood that his life was the most vital thing to the Empire, this Emperor was the one who had the least understanding of the value of his life within the Empire.

Medium: "So-yah!"

Medium, who did not follow along with everybody else, drew a barbarian sword from the back of her waist, and then skillfully struck the green radiance upon the pedestal—Moguro's Magic Core, batting it off.

Drawing a gentle arc as it gyrated, it fell into the grip of Balleroy's single upraised hand. Ascertaining its heat and weight, Balleroy looked at Vincent.

Vincent had lowered the tip of the Yang Sword, and was facing Balleroy intently.

Vincent: "…"

Upon witnessing the pandemonium weaving its way through Vincent's sable eyes in that moment, Balleroy knew that this Emperor needed Medium.

In order to narrow down his options and make the best of his decisions, he needed someone who would prop him up, smiling by his side as they looked to the future. —Albeit Balleroy, the one who had robbed him of Chisha, bore no right to say so.

Were it Chisha Gold, it would not have been strange for him to have even predicted the feelings of guilt harbored by the undead-turned Balleroy.

Wondering if he was indeed overthinking things, Balleroy made a wry smile,

Balleroy: "Medi."

At Balleroy's call, Medium, having guessed his intention, trotted towards him. Into Medium's arms, Balleroy entrusted Madelyn, whom he had been carrying in one arm this whole time.

The precious dragonkin girl, who, while in a state of half-consciousness, had only continued to convey her love towards Balleroy.

The girl, now asleep again, having worn herself out from crying, unto whom he had become an everlasting scar.

Medium: "Ballebro."

Balleroy: "What's up?"

Carefully receiving Madelyn's body, Medium looked at Balleroy from a close proximity. Then, with a face Balleroy knew well, she gave a broad smile as bright as the sun.

Medium: "Do your best!"

Balleroy: "—. Yeah, I'll give 'em hell."

Just who would believe that the body of an undead was brimming with vitality?

Receiving strength from that which nobody would believe, Balleroy energetically turned his back. Then, mounting his beloved dragon, which had been waiting in the depths of the smashed-open battery, he patted its wings.

That instant, the unleashed wind thrust Carillon up into the air, and it immediately began climbing to a high altitude.

Rapidly climbing by leaps and bounds, leaps and bounds, Balleroy and Carillon vigorously approached the heavens present above the clouds.

The voice of the wind disappeared; this was concentration, the sensation of flight engulfed by nothingness.

???: “Balleroy, Carillon, not just, the two of you. I, am here.”

Balleroy: “Ahh, that’s right. Now this is quite rude of me.”

Tightly holding onto the Magic Core—onto Moguro, and receiving that protest, Balleroy wryly smiled.

Having their name enlisted among the Nine Divine Generals as the Steelman, contrary to their robotic appearance and manner of speech, Moguro was sincere, sympathetic, and dare say even amiable.

Moguro: “I, am the Meteor of the Empire. That, is my purpose of creation.”

Balleroy: “—Purpose of creation.”

The words Moguro had used to explain their reasoning, was ironically enough, the same that Sphinx would use on occasion.

In order to fulfill their respective purposes of creation, Sphinx would destroy the Empire, and Moguro would protect the Empire. And, there he was, indecisively going back and forth, supporting each of them.

Moguro: “Why did you betray us, Balleroy?”

Balleroy: “Ku-hah.”

At the exceedingly straightforward query, Balleroy chuckled at what could only be described as sheer Moguroness.

That question could have been referring to his betrayal from before or after his death, but perhaps Moguro likely had not made a distinction between the two within themselves. If anything, Balleroy was grateful for it to have been that way.

Both before and after his death, Balleroy’s reason for choosing to oppose the Empire was the same.

Balleroy: “—It was for the sake of someone precious.”

Whether it was because he was approaching his imminent demise, or if it was because he thought of this robotic Meteor as a friend who was easy to get along with, Balleroy spoke thus.

This was probably the first time he had put those feelings to words, and he had not intended on ever speaking of them to anyone.

Carillon: “—Kiryararahhh.”

Perhaps because Balleroy’s shame had been transmitted, Carillon looked back at him and returned a nod as it flapped its wings through the sky. Through the special trait of flying dragon riders, only Carillon knew. —No, it seemed like Medium had also figured it out, but he had generally been hiding it.

For that to be divulged, he thought it must have been unacceptable for Moguro, but—

Moguro: “I see. Understood. We, are same. —For the sake, of somebody precious.”

Balleroy: “…”

Moguro: “Balleroy, I forgive, you.”

At the forgiveness of Moguro, who was robotic, yet still attempted to get close, Balleroy's cheeks stiffened.

Those cheeks of Balleroy's housed the hue of life distinct from that of the undead, and in his eyes there no longer loomed the hue of gold upon black, but rather they had regained their natural glow. — That was the brilliant blaze, of Balleroy Temeglyph's final moments.

Balleroy: "You've got my thanks, Moguro."

As a dead individual who was now by no means inferior to a living one, Balleroy looked up to the sky as he spoke thus.

Still rapidly accelerating by leaps and bounds, Balleroy and company pierced the clouds. The maelstrom of clouds was swirling as if it had a certain will, and it began to envelop them as they raced into the sky.

That, which was not intent on crushing them, was something Balleroy had seen in the past, at the summit of Mount Palzoa. This was the Dragon's nest, made so as to not let those within the clouds escape outwards—.

Balleroy: "…"

Within Balleroy's mind, many faces emerged.

Vincent, the Nine Divine Generals, Madelyn, Serena, Medium, Flop, and Miles.

They were the proof that Balleroy had lived, and they were the meaning in Balleroy having lived.

Together with his beloved dragon, Carillon, carrying them all—

Balleroy: "—It was a life rife with its ups and downs, but I'd say it wasn't a bad one."

Carillon: "—Kiryararahhh."

With even his final words unable to break away from his half-hearted nature, his slovenly self ended up receiving a scolding from his beloved dragon.

4

That instant, dragon claws thrust into the ground, and the collapsed body raised itself. Immediately, the red-haired man to its side screamed “Uoohhh?!” as he fell onto his backside, but that did not weigh on their mind.

More so than such insignificant things, what mattered now was—.

???: “Balleroy—hk.”

The impact of being punched had been far too tremendous, so they were unable to stand up. But, that was no matter. What was needed now was not the strength to stand up, but the might of an empyrean being.

With a quiver of their long whiskers, funneling power into their sharp eyes, they focused their attention on the sky directly above the Crystal Palace. The scintillation ascended straight upwards, streaking a hue of emerald green across the ether. And at the summit of that beam of luminescence, only continuing to climb higher, was somebody precious.

That intent, that resolve, that determination, and that selfishness, they would forgive it all.

???: “—PREAHHHHHH.”

The power gushing out of their humongous body obtruded upon the welkin, and a cumulus maelstrom began to coil in the sky of the Crystal Palace. Once they ushered the emerald gleam into the vortex, they drastically increased the density, and accelerated the gyre further.

Like so, the Cloud Dragon Mezoreia—Madelyn, summoned all of her power.

Madelyn: “—Ah.”

That instant, a flicker of light illuminated the world, and the maelstrom of clouds was ripped asunder from within.

What that signified, what had been lost from the world, what had become distant from herself, she keenly understood to a painfully clear extent.

Madelyn: “Ah, ahhh, AHH, AHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHH—!!!”

Gazing up at the sky of scattered clouds, thinking about the one she loved, of whom there no longer remained any vestiges, Madelyn burst into a wail with the large mouth and thick neck of the Cloud Dragon.

—Underneath the odiously clear sky, the lovelorn maiden of the Dragons just kept crying.

Chapter 70:
The Final Stratagem

1

—The blast spread out, blowing away the thick swirling clouds from within and painting the sky over the Imperial Capital a bright red ahead of the approaching dusk.

The light from the explosion burned the eyes of those who looked up at the sky, but the damage was minimal compared to the catastrophe that could have blown away the Imperial Capital itself.

This was proof that each and every person of the Rescue the Vollachian Empire from Destruction Squad, who had gathered at the Imperial Capital, had continued to evade the traps of destruction laid out by the Great Disaster through their mutual cooperation.

This did not mean that each and every one of them had a full picture of the traps set by the Great Disaster.

Only, by maximizing the potential that each of them possessed, they were able to remove the causes of destruction within their respective reaches. The relay of fate for that purpose was now transcending the boundaries between the living and the dead, and the Imperial Capital of Lupugana's chain of command was at the height of chaos.

Still, there was one fact that remained resolutely unmovable. Sphinx, the spearhead of the Great Disaster, was the absolute enemy of all living things in the Empire, no matter what.

Thus, the Witch's elaborate plans of destruction were nearing their final stages—.

???: "—Uoooh?!"

Roaring, an explosion blew away the clouds in the distant sky, and blinded by the light, Subaru's throat trembled in surprise at the abrupt shift in circumstances.

His exclamation, which could have been described neither as a scream nor a cheer, was a manifestation of his honest reaction to the event at hand.

Together with Beatrice, he had fended off the destructive flames unleashed by the Crystal Palace, and then Roswaal saved them from the onslaught of the Three-Headed Blight Dragon that had appeared. Just when it seemed that a dizzying aerial battle was about to begin, a huge explosion occurred in the sky far away.

There was enough hectic activity to confuse anyone, but the undead Dragon paid no attention to the light in the sky with each of its heads craning towards its pitiable, distracted prey.

Dragon: "—Kiryararahhh!"

The Blight Dragon had three heads and its prey numbered exactly three people: Subaru, Beatrice, and Roswaal. The three heads of the Blight Dragon approached as if in competition with each other, with the size of a single large head appearing to be more than enough to get all of them.

Just as the sharp fangs of the undead Dragon were about to tear the lives of Subaru and his friends apart.

???: "One strike—!"

???: "I won't letcha take 'em."

On either side of the Blight Dragon, two shadows rose up diagonally from below and struck a blow from each direction, slicing off two of its three heads, sending them flying.

A jet-black furred wolfman, and a thunderous blue lightning rising from the earth into the sky, the ones to do this were—

Subaru: "Halibel-san and a huuuge Ceci?!"

Cecilus: "Hahahahaha! What an unexpected coincidence meeting you here, Boss! I did think you might be here since it's the final stage and all that, but your performance just now was brilliant! I can't lose either so I quickly took to the sky, but just beating a dragon won't be enough, will it?"

Subaru's eyes widened as the one who had jumped and slashed his sword through the air was Cecilus—additionally, it was the first time Subaru had seen him as an adult. His infantilization, which had only been a suspicion previously, was confirmed, and now that it was resolved before anyone else had a clue,

Subaru: "Did you meet with Olbart-san and get him to undo it?"

Cecilus: "No, no, I solved it on my own! That's my specialty, so leaving that aside for now, this is a delightful combination. That's Halibel-san there, right?"

Cecilus answered nonchalantly, then nodded his chin towards Halibel, who was standing in front of him.

After helping Subaru and Beatrice arrive in time to stop the Magic Crystal Cannon, he immediately went up to the sky himself and joined in to stop the Blight Dragon's attack.

He looked at Cecilus saying, "Well…" and smiled.

Halibel: "From my point of view, I'm just complementin' the work you're doin'."

Cecilus: "Hoho, you did a great job filling in for me! But then only a suitable actor can do that so I think Halibel-san is on the right track. —Whoa whoa whoa."

At a glance, the exchange was amicable, but the scene took place in the air, in the middle of a fight to the death.

The Blight Dragon, with two heads blown off but still with one remaining in the middle, flapped its wings and quickly made distance to escape the two transcendent beings who suddenly interrupted it.

It was an instinctive decision, but it was the right one. In fact, even though both Cecilus and Halibel could jump to get airborne, they were not free to fly around.

However—

Roswaal: “—That’s something I can make up fooor~.”

With Subaru and Beatrice under Roswaal’s arms, immediately after he spoke, the debris in the air gathered instantly, and an impromptu scaffold was created there.

That scaffold provided Cecilus and Halibel with another chance to leap.

Halibel: “Even if it’s only got one head, a Dragon’s a Dragon.”

Cecilus: “We don’t wanna be interrupted during the decisive moment. Let’s slay it quickly!”

How many people could so casually say such a thing to one of the most powerful creatures in the world, a Dragon, and no other than the Blight Dragon?

And yet, the two immediately proved that it was no kind of jest or boast.

—A flash of blue and black streaked across the sky, instantly catching up with the Blight Dragon that was trying to take advantage of the distance.

In a moment, the Dragon’s wings were torn to shreds as it was pierced by three separate wolfmen in mid-air, creating “death holes”. However, the warriors would not let the Dragon miserably fall to its death.

A flash of lightning, a slash from the sword that manifested dreams, split the black scales of the Blight Dragon vertically, and its life was severed in two.

It was one of the most abrupt and legendary Dragon-slaying acts in the world.

Beatrice: "…Those guys are outrageous, in fact."

Subaru had seen the same thing that Beatrice had, and agreed wholeheartedly.

Even though Subaru was aware of this as information, two of the world's strongest individuals were unbeatable in ways that went beyond his simple imagination. In fact, with them he felt like he could not lose, just like having Reinhard on his side.

Now that Cecilus had grown up, together with Halibel, that feeling was even stronger—

???: "—Not yet, Bro!"

A voice lunged at Subaru as his mind was relaxing, as if punching him in the side.

He looked, and standing there in the area that was originally the second bastion, a place where the ground was like boiling magma, was a man in a familiar helmet—it was Al.

One of the missing people in the Imperial Capital, Al screamed out desperately from the ground.

He said—

Al: "The alignment of the stars hasn't changed yet! The Witch is still up to something!!"

2

At the rapid changes occurring in the situation, Vincent could feel his thoughts gaining heat and speed.

Even though he was lionized as the Wise Emperor, Vincent did not think of himself as being particularly wise when compared to others. If there was one thing he was more conscious of than others, however, it would be none other than the difference in the depth and vastness of his thinking, as well as the time it took for him to produce an answer.

Thus, that difference in time taken would change depending on whether or not he could still function and make use of the trivial time in which everyone had their attention stolen by the radiance present overhead.

Vincent: "…"

Its fuse set off by the Witch's stratagem, the Magic Core of the Crystal Palace had been brought to the verge of collapse—taking the true body of Moguro Hagane in hand, the undead Balleroy Temeglyph rose to the skies.

As a result, the induced explosion of the Crystal Palace had been avoided, and the Imperial Capital, nay, the entire Empire, had been rescued from ruination.

But then again, this was that Balleroy. What he had truly wished to protect was likely neither the Empire nor the Imperial Capital, but rather somebody to whom he was emotionally attached.

In any case, the fruits of the deceased Balleroy's sacrifice were the safety of the Imperial Capital, and the sight of the evening sky from which the surging clouds had been scattered—

Vincent: "But, is this truly the end?"

Right beside him, tears streamed down the cheeks of Medium, who was embracing the unconscious Madelyn. With that in his peripheral vision, Vincent cold-heartedly immersed himself in thought.

Using her position of Empress Consort as a shield, Medium had prevented Vincent from relinquishing his life. If he were a strong Emperor, if he were an Emperor who had such leeway, he surely would have displayed an empathetic demeanor, or words of consolation.

However, Vincent was neither of those. —Ergo, he did nothing for Medium. For all the things he did not do for her, Vincent coldly worked his head.

Vincent: "Without cease, the Great Disaster has continued to take measures intent on bringing about total destruction. In addition, each stratagem is multi-layered and without openings.”

The Sacrament of the Immortal King resurrecting the dead was fueled by the power of the Stone, Muspel, and if the undead continued to be felled, the power of the Stone would be depleted, resulting in the collapse of the Empire’s vast lands.

The previous firing of the Magic Crystal Cannon, what it had been targeting was unclear from Vincent’s position. But, after it was fired, the Magic Core was filled with immense heat, and had been a bomb left behind as a parting gift to blow away the Imperial Capital.

By merely averting these threats, it would have been short-sighted to think that they had overcome the entire affair.

If there was still something, still a subsequent measure that the Great Disaster was preparing—

Vincent: “…”

Suddenly, a certain possibility flashed through Vincent’s mind.

Rather than deep and thoughtful foresight, it was the product of something that was already closer to a pretext or paranoia. However, now that he had thought of it, there was no choice but to verify the possibility. Vincent was aware that the things he thought of, were things that anybody else could also think of, given enough time.

If so, then this was the same.

Vincent: “Olbart Dunkelkenn! Have you searched every last corner of the palace?!”

Olbart: “Oioi, Yer Excellency, I’ve lost both my arms ya know? Even if ya were ta make my pitiful nursed life from here on out a lil’ more fleetin’…”

Vincent: “—Within the palace, did you see Priscilla Barielle? I shan’t ask of her survival.”

Olbart: "…"

Vincent: "Answer! We mustn't let time go to waste!"

Olbart: "—. You're talkin' 'bout the young'un lass with red eyes in the flashy dress, right? Ain't seen her. Tho', I did go 'round killin' the troublesome caster along with the bunch who'd had their souls tampered with."

At Vincent's threatening demeanor, Olbart raised one of his white eyebrows and answered so.

Originally, the duty that had been entrusted to Olbart was to infiltrate the Crystal Palace and conduct a thorough search—the general objective of that, was to destroy the technique of the Sacrament of the Immortal King.

As a result of his interference, it was difficult to say whether the opponent's objective was fulfilled in a satisfactory manner, but—

Olbart: "Since I came up not just empty-handed, but with no hands at all, I didn't produce any results. Are ya dismissin' me from my post as General?"

Vincent: "The matter of the status of your employment is postponed. But, if you were unable to find her—"

Medium: "Abel-chin?"

The monstrous old man's face had lost its complexion, yet he still jested as if all was normal. At that exchange between Olbart and Vincent, Medium uttered a voice of inquisitiveness as she lowered her gaze from the sky.

Still influenced by the reverberations of Balleroy's conclusion, Medium with her blue eyes posed that question, to which Vincent loathsomely tread upon the floor where debris was scattered about.

And then—

Vincent: "—Priscilla is not being held captive within the Crystal Palace. I cannot guess the entirety of the reason behind that, but…

at the very least, it is because one part of the enemy’s objective is to have her witness the Empire’s destruction.”

3

—Aldebaran had called out to Natsuki Subaru that the alignment of the stars had not changed; and, Vincent Vollachia had seen through the objective of the Witch at the center of the Great Disaster, though her intentions were not clear.

After witnessing those events that had led to this point, the imprisoned Priscilla Barielle also accurately inferred her own situation.

Priscilla: “At first, this was inexplicable. If mineself were your objective, Arakiya’s death would not have been a matter of concern, but the demise of the Empire would have been an inconvenience.”

The floating, reflective water mirrors not only showed the battle for the Imperial Capital, but also the battle for the Fortified City, along with the people falling victim to the undead in various parts of the Empire.

It indeed was a sign that the threat of the Great Disaster was spreading throughout the Empire.

She showed these events to Priscilla in order to color her heart with despair. —The aim was easy to understand, but whether it could be done was not.

However—

Priscilla: “The ruination of the Empire resulting from the death of the Stone would not serve your goals. And that is because ultimately, it is not your desire to take mine life here. Consequently—”

Sphinx: “Consequently?”

Priscilla: “—Mineself is not being held within the dungeons of the Crystal Palace.”

The reason why Sphinx continued to layer on measures to bring about the Empire's downfall, was because she was convinced that all of that destruction would not reach Priscilla.

Destroying the Empire while keeping Priscilla alive. —The method to fulfill these conditions was straightforward.

Priscilla: "…"

Despite that being certain, and even after examining her surroundings, she found no discrepancy between the dungeon of her memories and what stood before her eyes.

During her time as Prisca, she had only visited the Palace's dungeons on one occasion out of curiosity, but this dungeon, which exactly replicated that of Priscilla's memories, was probably a wholly different space.

The very space of the dungeon itself has been relocated to a place unrelated to the destruction of the Vollachian Empire—a kind of different dimension, and Priscilla was placed as an observer of the battle-torn Imperial Capital.

The evidence of this was that, at some point, the tremors of the fierce battles unfolding in the Imperial Capital had ceased reaching the dungeon.

Priscilla: "But for what reason would you place mineself, of all people, in the position of an Observer? The other members of the Vollachian Imperial Family aside, you have certainly considered the means wherewith to disrespect mineself in particular."

Sphinx: "Careless meddling is forbidden. This may be an effective measure for you. Countermeasures: Required."

Priscilla: "Although neither "careless" nor "countermeasures" are words that mineself enjoys, it shall be overlooked in consideration of your defiant attitude."

Priscilla pondered this in response to Sphinx's answer.

The Witch's intention was to nip in the bud the possibility of someone coming to Priscilla's aid, rather than preventing Priscilla from taking any action.

That in itself was correct. —But the fact was that she was being imprisoned in a space with no known entrance. This almost eliminated any chance of Priscilla being rescued from the outside.

However—

Priscilla: "This inconvenience applies to you as well, does it not?"

Sphinx: "—. What does that mean?"

Priscilla: "It is quite simple. —Why do you not duplicate yourself without limit, and with an infinite amount of you, drop numerous stars, burn the land of the Empire, and destroy it all?"

Sphinx: "…"

Priscilla: "If you made certain that you did not involve mineself in the downfall, that would be the swiftest way to accomplish your goal. The reason for you not doing so is obvious… you cannot do so, even if you wanted to."

Priscilla eloquently explained her theory to the silent Sphinx.

Once, as she was being burned by the flame of the Yang Sword, Sphinx had changed the form of her soul, transforming its vessel into one befitting the Witch of Greed in order to fulfill the purpose of her creation. At that point, one of Sphinx's two purposes in causing the Great Disaster had been fulfilled.

All that remained was to destroy the Vollachian Empire in order to drive Priscilla into despair. In order to do so, creating a limitless number of Sphinxes and then having them drop a meteor shower to the ground would prove sufficient.

But, Sphinx did not do that.

Priscilla: "Although vexing, upon seeing you imitate Lamia by increasing your numbers, mineself had an intuition. No matter how much the number of vessels increases, the underlying soul is shared.

—That is to say, the source of the Mana possessed by the owner of the soul of Sphinx shall be centralized.”

That was the existential flaw of Sphinx, having been resurrected as the Witch of Greed.

By abusing the ritual of the Sacrament of the Immortal King, it allowed the undead to revive and create multiple instances of themselves, but so long as the original soul remained the same, they could not have more Mana than they already possessed.

Sphinx had already fought in many fierce battles with those who wished to take back the Imperial Capital, and had already used the great spell to bring down a star many a time. No matter how skilled of a magician the Witch of Greed might have been, there were limits to what she could do.

Priscilla: “Therefore, you must limit the number of your duplicates. In addition, you have one of them assigned to mineself in order to communicate with me, yes? It must be because this space cannot be maintained without your direct presence.”

Ever since appearing before Priscilla, claiming to be the enemy’s leader, Sphinx had never once left Priscilla alone in the dungeon. This could have been interpreted as an attempt to not miss Priscilla’s facial expressions or the pain in her heart as the situation changed from moment to moment, but there also could have been a more serious reason for this.

Quite simply, the answer was that she was doing it because she had to.

Sphinx: “…”

In response to Priscilla’s point, Sphinx remained silent.

It is believed by some that if one does not answer, then one does not give information to the other party, for better or worse; but, in Priscilla’s opinion, this was second-rate trickery. Sphinx must also know that.

Sometimes, silence can confirm one’s suspicions more eloquently than words.

—If Priscilla's speculation was correct, Sphinx was in a state of exhaustion, having used up almost all of the strength of her soul.

Otherwise, restrictions being present or not, through her copies scattered throughout the Imperial Capital and the Empire she would relentlessly attack.

Strategically, there was no reason not to do that.

In other words, this meant that the plans of Sphinx, the leader of the Great Disaster, had finally been brought to a halt—.

Priscilla: "—Is that not so?"

Priscilla closed one eye, repudiating her own reasoning.

The emotions expressed in that question might have been hard to believe if other listeners were present. Priscilla's question did not come from a sense of superiority, or a suspicion based on skepticism, not even from a desire to see through the other party's agenda.

What was there was a certain amount of anticipation.

Even this impasse, a true dead end, was something she expected her opponent to overcome.

Then, in response to Priscilla's question, Sphinx's eyes widened slightly. Watching, the Witch then twisted her lips into the shape of a smile.

—At that moment, the final showdown between Priscilla and Sphinx commenced.

4

The Sphinxes, resurrected from the same soul, were all independent, and did not share in the same consciousness.

Hence, among the Sphinxes, serving as the Witch of Greed, who had manifested as seven total bodies, the only one who knew that Priscilla had seen through their intentions, was the one directly facing her.

However, that would not have had any influence upon the intentions of the seven Sphinxes.

That was because it was a stratagem that had been formulated under the assumption that Priscilla would have seen through their intentions from the start, correctly guessing them.

The one that had verified Priscilla's answer was just the one facing her, but Sphinx could not help but admire her abnormal insight, having guessed almost everything correctly.

As she had said, several Sphinxes were sharing Mana through the source of one soul, so the more of herself she multiplied, the amount of Mana that each individual Sphinx could use would decrease.

Due to this battle, which had raged on for several days with no respite, the reality was that all of the Mana that she had remaining was not reliable enough to utilize large spells such as Al Shario, which had already been employed to bring down a star.

Of course, simply making use of large spells was not how a magician displayed their talents.

For Sphinx, who had inherited knowledge as the Witch of Greed, there were a myriad of small techniques she could employ that did not balance the degree of Mana used with the scale of results.

However, it was also true that for any such small techniques, there were extraordinary, transcendent beings who could hold them back.

In particular, she could not disregard the presences of the wolfman who was bringing about the curse of death, and the swordsman who had slayed the star.

Therefore, the seven Sphinxes—excluding the one participating in the great battle for the Fortified City of Garkla, and the one monitoring Priscilla, the five Sphinxes reached for the final stratagem.

Her attempt to directly assassinate Arakiya, who had assimilated with the Stone, had failed.

The utmost powerful attack to exterminate Arakiya, fired via the Magic Crystal Cannon, had also failed.

The strategy of lighting the fuse of the Magic Core right after the Magic Crystal Cannon had fired, having it run rampant and exceed its critical point to annihilate the Imperial Capital, had also failed.

With all of those failed stratagems as the groundwork, the Sphinxes stationed in five locations around the Imperial Capital of Lupugana would activate the magic circle they had laid out—they would interfere with their true target, the magic crystals of the Crystal Palace.

Sphinx: "—Multiplex magic circle activation, executing final stratagem. Importance: Required."

This plan was fundamentally different from the stratagem that had attempted to blow away the Imperial Capital by using the magic crystals of the Crystal Palace as a catalyst via the Magic Core running rampant. Regardless of being in a rampant state, the administrative right of the Meteor known as the Crystal Palace belonged to the Magic Core, Moguro Hagane.

But, the Magic Core was no more. Having escaped the threat of explosion, the Crystal Palace was currently in a defenseless state.

With Moguro Hagane's presence now gone, the administrative right of the magic crystals forming the Crystal Palace was vacant.

Present there were lumps of colorless Mana, which had stockpiled immense power over many long years, and for the Witch, who was on the verge of depleting the little Mana she had left, it was an offering for which she would water at the mouth.

The star-shaped ramparts that symbolized the Imperial Capital of Lupugana, having laid out a five-pointed star inverse to its five bastions, the five Sphinxes had deployed an enormous magic circle.

Interfering with the magic crystals of the Crystal Palace, which had lost its administrator in Moguro Hagane, it was something designed to completely usurp the vast Mana dwelling therein.

Thus, the Witch's plan, something not directly linked to the destruction of the Vollachian Empire, would not be thwarted by Natsuki Subaru or Vincent Vollachia, who had both come to disrupt many of her artifices until now.

The same went for the Blue Lightning, Cecilus Segmunt, as well as the Admirer, Halibel, as well as the Spirit Eater, Arakiya and the Vicious Old Man, Olbart Dunkelkennn, as well as the Flamboyant, Yorna Mishigure, and the Emperor of the Briar, Eugard Vollachia, as well as Roswaal L. Mathers, and Beatrice, and Garfiel Tinzel, and Medium O'Connell, and Tanza, and Heinkel.

Only, one person—

Sphinx: "—. The magic circle, is incomplete?"

The five Sphinxes, who ought to have activated the magic circle—among them, the one present at the northmost point had failed to participate in the activation of the magic circle, causing the other Witches to harbor a sense of unease at the incomplete activation of the technique.

As irony would have it, the fact that this had been caused by the Witch of Greed and the Witch of Envy—that it was caused by the clash of two individuals who succeeded these Witches of times past, was not noticed by anybody at the current point in time.

Chapter 71:
Heroic Reveries

1

—Let us assert one thing here.

It was a fact that without Emilia's decisive action, the plan of the Witch, Sphinx, would have come to fruition and the downfall of the Vollachian Empire would have been unavoidable.

Moreover, it was something that no one other than Emilia could have stopped.

Emilia: "—Yah!"

Emilia released a sharp exhale, strained her cheeks, and stood firm against the heat rays of light and the balls of light that came in from all directions, repelling all with her polished ice armaments.

In front of her, the replica of Echidna, Sphinx's magic was all too astonishing, and the only way she withstood her difficult-to-deflect attacks was by blocking them with ice that shined like a mirror.

Emilia was also often told by Subaru that "Creativity is important!", so she was always particular about the details in her ice-borne weapons, and this time, they were used to their fullest extent.

Thanks to the fact that she always did this, she was able to quickly create weapons that dealt with Sphinx's magic.

Emilia: "Thank you, as always."

Emilia thanked the absent Subaru, enthusiastically donning gear made of ice.

Subaru, who was probably still working hard somewhere in the Imperial Capital, hand in hand with Beatrice and Spica, was still helping Emilia in this way, even though he was small and not with her.

Just thinking about Subaru allowed Emilia to forget her fatigue and swing her big ice hammer.

Sphinx: "—Removal: Required. And, urgently."

Facing Emilia, Sphinx kept her distance while she unleashed her magic. While she was exposed to her onslaught, Emilia did not feel the impatience of her opponent, who did not show any expression.

Originally, Sphinx had sneaked into this deserted place to accomplish something. Emilia somehow sensed this and rushed in, which was when the battle began.

That stopped Sphinx from accomplishing whatever she was planning to do.

With this in mind, Emilia, though it not being her forte, was focusing intensely on thoroughly obstructing her opponent.

—Here again, Emilia was making the best of a situation that no one else at the Imperial Capital could.

If Emilia had taken Sphinx's life, the Witch would have taken that memory back to her soul, recognized the threat Emilia posed, and manifested a new body prepared with countermeasures.

However, Emilia had no intention of killing Sphinx, but only of stopping her.

Therefore, the situation Subaru had named Escape by Death did not occur, and Sphinx would not send a new version of herself as reinforcements against the unshared threat of Emilia.

This situation would not have been possible if anyone else had been there, whether it was someone powerful like Cecilus or Halibel, someone wise like Vincent or Roswaal, or even a cheater like Subaru or Al.

No one other than Emilia could have pinned down Sphinx here.

Emilia: "HIYAAA!"

Emilia, who had managed such miraculous meshing by relying on her intuition, nevertheless kicked the light ball away with her ice shoes without being aware of it—

Emilia: “Even though I don’t know what’s going on, I won’t let you do whatever you’re trying to do! And also, tell me where Priscilla is! It’s a promise I made with Schult-kun!”

Sphinx: “—. One-sided, and greedy. Truly fitting for a Witch, is it not?”

Sphinx coldly muttered so at Emilia’s request.

However, the mutterings were filled with a certain irritation that could not be concealed.

2

—White light enveloped his vision, and in the subsequent instant the world met its end.

That was something Natsuki Subaru had ended up experiencing many times over in a short period, the newest stage of Return by Death.

Subaru: “…”

Held in under the aviating Roswaal’s arm, he was tightly holding on to the hand of Beatrice behind Rowaal’s waist, who was being held under the other arm.

The presence of Beatrice, the warmth of Roswaal, the sensation of his whole body basking in the wind; all of it was real.

And not only that—

???: “Regarding the dragon subjugation just now, I think vying for an achievement through the number of heads isn’t really all too pretty. As a matter of fact, isn’t it thunderous applause that’s wanted rather than a feat of heads? So then first things first, how about we show them a combination of two great men from Vollachia and Kararagi?!”

???: “That’d be quite splendid, least for me. I may’ve been hopin’ not ta stand out too much, but it wouldn’t hurt ta elevate my status for this ‘n that after the war.”

With a backwards glance towards the undead Blight Dragon which was fading into the sky with its existence severed, Cecilus and Halibel could be seen and heard descending to the ground while pressingly exchanging words, having just killed the Dragon in a literal flash.

As the unmistakable apexes of the world, the two were equally transcendent beings; however, the fact that they could not defy the laws of physics and remain in the sky provided a certain sort of satisfaction—

Subaru: “—Right now…”

Just what exactly was happening, he had no choice but to grasp the new threat, and counter it.

After defending against the Magic Crystal Cannon, after slaying the approaching Blight Dragon, after witnessing the swell of green light blow the clouds away beyond the sky, he knew the Witch still had a trick up her sleeve.

Subaru and the others did not have much time before that would be put into operation, staining the world white and causing them to lose their lives.

Think, think, think. Think think—.

Beatrice: “—Subaru.”

Indeed, upon Subaru’s eardrums as thoughts raced across his mind, Beatrice called out with a voice of strong conviction.

Holding her hand, the determination that he absolutely needed to do something, and the intense feelings of loss surging through Subaru’s body and mind—nay, through his soul, must have been transmitted to her.

The fact that Beatrice did not exhaust many words on top of that, was proof of her cute self's high-minded resolve.

Beatrice: “Say whatever you like, I suppose. Betty will aid you in everything, in fact.”

Without having told her much of anything at all, just how much of a relief it was for Beatrice to say that to him.

While feeling disdain build up towards himself for never repaying favors, Subaru nodded.

And as he nodded—

Subaru: “—Just keep holding on to it until my consciousness is on the verge of bursting apart. I'll give a signal, so prepare the thing from earlier so it's ready to go at any time!”

3

—High up in the sky, Subaru raised his voice, and receiving that, black and blue streaked through the sky.

He did not hear the specific contents of the orders. But, he felt like he heard something else instead.

Indeed, the sound of the gears of conflicting worlds beginning to mesh and turn, in order to weave the time of light.

???: “…”

It did not matter if it was an auditory hallucination. In fact, it ought to have been.

Natsuki Subaru had thought about the best way to break the deadlock, and carried it out. In that case, he could count on him. —No, he had no choice but to count on him.

Having called out to Subaru that the Witch's myriad plans had yet to be exhausted, that was the best Al—Aldebaran could do with what little he had.

Al: “Shit.”

A short expletive, which echoed in his helmet only to his ears.

Because of that, the fact that he had muttered it unconsciously sort of felt like it was being emphasized, which had caused him to notice.

Just what did Aldebaran possibly have to regret?

It was something he knew from the moment he found Natsuki Subaru in this Empire. When push came to shove, he ought to use Natsuki Subaru without hesitation.

No matter how much he hated that, no matter how much he loathed it, at the end of the day, it was nothing but worthless obstinacy.

—The worthless obstinacy of himself, who was nothing more than a following star, unable to do the same things as that Natsuki Subaru.

???: “…Reconsideration: Required.”

At the sudden utterance of that voice, Aldebaran turned around without saying a word.

Cocooned in solid black light from the neck down, lying defenseless on the rough ground was the figure of Sphinx.

Sphinx’s Gate was completely sealed, and her hands and legs were quite literally tied up, however, she stared at Aldebaran without any impatience or anger emerging on her abhorrent face.

It was a disgusting look, as if she was observing him.

Al: “Reconsideration, as in revising your thoughts? Just what exactly? You’re not gonna tell me what you’re thinking, no matter what I do.”

The edges of her mouth contorted, and Aldebaran glared at Sphinx through his helmet.

This was also true. —Aldebaran had already interrogated the captured Sphinx many, many times, and thus had ascertained that she would not divulge any details regarding her plans.

Ironically enough, even among the innumerable number of attempts Aldebaran had, there existed a certain number of results that could never be distorted.

Even if an infinite number of dice were rolled, rolling a zero or a seven was impossible.

Indeed, it was impossible. —For Aldebaran.

Al: “But you see, it’s the end of the line for you guys. You’ve made an enemy of someone who should absolutely never be made an enemy of. By now, even if you’re rethinking something—”

Sphinx: “That which I have reconsidered, is my evaluation of you.”

Al: “Huh?”

Sphinx: “I had not recognized you as anything but a mere squire of Priscilla Barielle, but… you are the same as me.”

Al: “…”

Sphinx: “Having yet to fulfill your own purpose of creation, you are a martyr struggling to live for that reason. —I have achieved my own purpose of creation, so I cannot help but pity one who is stuck in a standstill.”

Even in captivity, in a position where the magician’s magic was sealed, Sphinx still quietly pitied Aldebaran, not out of vanity or defeat.

Aldebaran’s throat froze at Sphinx’s honest gaze.

Of the fact that the true nature of the coldness freezing his throat was murderous intent, Aldebaran was aware.

He absolutely had to kill this overly talkative, Witch-faced woman. He absolutely had to choke the life out of her. For her to say that to Aldebaran with none other but that face, was unforgivable.

—Just who in the world did she think made him Aldebaran?

Al: “You—”

???: “Al! Lend me your strength!!”

It was the moment when his vision turned bright red, and his thoughts were blanketed in white.

If it had been a few tenths of a second later, Aldebaran would have killed Sphinx. However, that was stopped by a furious, gliding wind accompanied by a hard-hitting voice.

???: “I need your strength! As you said, the Great Disaster isn’t over yet! It’s an all-out war!”

He landed right next to him, and then with an intense color on his face, he called out to Aldebaran.

With two reliable people beside him, a long-haired magician and a dress-clad Spirit, Natsuki Subaru, capable of searching for as many hands as he pleased in order to reach the light that Aldebaran could never reach no matter how far he reached out, did so.

Al: “Even if you ask me to lend a hand…”

Subaru: “Shut the hell up!”

Al: “—Hk.”

Becoming a mixture of all sorts of embarrassment, Aldebaran muttered so.

But, unconcerned with those inner thoughts of Aldebaran, Subaru thrust his fist out,

Subaru: “At the moment, I don’t have time to sympathize with each and every person’s troubles! That’s why, right here and now let’s switch gears and cooperate! You said it before!”

Al: “Me, before…?”

Subaru: “You said that you have expectations of me! I’ll say the same thing back to you!”

Al: “—Ah.”

As Subaru yelled at him with a red face, Aldebaran caught his breath.

At the same time, he was reminded of his interaction with Subaru when they were reunited here in the Vollachian Empire, when the latter was on the verge of losing his own meaning of existence in the Fortress City of Guaral.

When Subaru’s foundation became unsteady after being rejected by the girl known as Rem, Aldebaran had encouraged him.

Back then, what was it that Aldebaran had said to him—?

Subaru: “The confidence and everything else you lost can only be regained through results. It’s all the same as it’s always been!”

Al: “…”

At the sound of Subaru’s voice, the girl who held hands with him, and the long-haired girl who stood behind him, had eyes brimming with expectation.

And so, Subaru, who gave strength to those around him, reached out to Aldebaran in the same way, offered him a hand, and spoke as if repaying him for that time.

Subaru: “Come on, Al! —Carry them with me, these heroic reveries!”

So he declared.

—The Witch's plans, the ruination of the Vollachian Empire, and Death, had come to fruition time and time again.

Perhaps a painless death was the ideal way for things to end.

Perhaps the arrival of demise in the midst of not knowing what had happened, was the only gentle way to save people from their fear of an end that would inevitably come.

However, he thought thus.

Subaru: "No, my ideal ending would be to die peacefully, with Emilia, Beako, and my grandchildren by my side, so that's not it."

Even if the Great Disaster were a last-boss situation that brought about a painless and fearless end in order to save all human beings from sorrow and suffering, Subaru would resolutely reject it.

When the ideal ending that he envisioned would arrive, the thought of Emilia and Beatrice, whom he would be leaving behind, brought pain to his heart like being stabbed with glass. Still, until he reached that situation, it was a problem that Subaru would need to suffer through and find a solution to.

There was absolutely no way he could abandon himself to a sweet dream given to him by another.

The whole thing was a hypothetical to begin with, and the premise was not valid since the goal of the Great Disaster was not a gentle end, but rather the destruction of the Empire through a series of the most terrible measures imaginable.

That was why, there was no compromise in this battle other than to thwart the goals of the Great Disaster.

Subaru: "…Little by little, I'm starting to see it."

At first, the world was stained white, and Subaru had no choice but to be swallowed up by the Death that was thrust upon him, without knowing what had destroyed him or his companions.

Moreover, Subaru returned just after Roswaal held him and Beatrice on both sides, and Cecilus and Halibel had cut down the attacking Blight Dragon.

After that, in less than a minute, the end would come.

Subaru: "…"

The time frame was short, and much needed to be done.

If Al had not told him that the Witch was up to something, it would have taken him much longer to uncover it. It had probably saved him five or more Return by Deaths.

Still, more trial and error was necessary in order to ascertain what was occurring.

And, through that trial and error—

???: "The most likely thing is that, the Stone… Muspel will be killed, I suppose. If our opponent has a comeback left to make, then that would be the most likely possibility, in fact."

???: "The collapse of the Empire's vast lands, it's possible that our opponent is preparing a trigger to bring about that great caaataclysm~. —If it is Sphinx's conventional method, there could also be some kind of magic circle."

???: "For now, Groovy's gone 'n lifted the Curse of Thorns, which was our biggest obstacle, so ya wouldn't really think that there'd be anybody hidin' away a curse that's even greater than that, right?"

???: "Yes yes yes! According to Al-san if Anya dies the whole Empire will be destroyed so this may have something to do with that! That means that there's a possibility that a large army'll be sent to kill Anya! Will I finally get to do it again, slaying a thousand people?!"

???: "Uu~! Uau! Aa~, Uu!"

???: "Have you been safe, child…?! I heard that you took very good care of Tanza. If there is anything at all that I can do to help, please let me know."

???: “Schwartz-sama, I have a bad feeling… is everyone in the Battalion safe?”

???: “Although young, thou hast pleasant eyes. Mine Star seems to place trust in thee, albeit not as much as she places in mineself. If thou requireth anything, thou may speak.”

???: “Captain! My amazin’ self’s glad you’re here, but it’s too soon to gimme praise! It ain’t over yet, right? Anythin’ ya say, I’ll do it!”

???: “…Get lost. Don’t lump me in with you guys, brat.”

???: “Friggin’ disappear… this dragon, has nothing, nothing left…”

???: “Friggin’ disappear… this dragon, has nothing, nothing left…”

???: “Subaru-chin, I’m not good at thinking, but I’ll try! Do your best as well, Subaru-chin!”

???: “Oh, sorry ‘bout this, but I’ve lost both my hands, so you’re gonna hafta get back on yer own, okay? Looks like there’s no way I can knead yer soul back ta its original shape, kakakakka!”

He was not some superman who could solve everything by figuring it out on his own.

A timeframe that amounted to not even a minute, repeating it over and over again in exchange for his Death, Subaru certainly moved to checkmate his enemy on the board they had constructed, one move at a time.

The death of the Stone, Muspel; a magic circle; the Curse of Thorns; Arakiya’s life; Spica’s Star Eating; he was glad that Yorna was safe; the war situation at the Fortified City; the undead Emperor who energetically boasted of his love; his Garfiel was the best; the drunkard not worth talking about; the Dragon he could not talk to; the dragonkin he could not talk to; doing his best; not wanting to be told things that would hamper his willpower to do his best; etc., etc.—.

???: “—Fool. Do not face downwards, Natsuki Subaru.”

???: “Neither one of us has the time to be looking downwards. To struggle onward, you ought to have decided so.”

???: “I have no intention of giving up. —Just who do you take me for?”

How much self-respect was truly there behind those prideful words?

He would not be so tactless as to try to peek behind the curtain like that. All right then. Onward it is.

Giving up, such a thing was not an option for Natsuki Subaru.

Subaru: “…”

The same went for her, who he could not find no matter how hard he looked.

Rather than being worried about it, his feelings of faith now surpassed his fear. —She might have been facing danger, but surely she was doing her best to secure the future, as it would not suit her to stay quiet in a safe place.

That was why, it was time to overturn it. —Time to overturn the Witch’s board.

Subaru: “Come on, Al! —Carry them with me, these heroic reveries!”

5

An unthinkable absurdity was attempting to overturn the final stratagem of the Witch, Sphinx.

Sphinx: “—The preparations ought to have been…”

Flawless. Without exception, all were being overturned.

Having achieved the outcome she had desired, the supreme challenge of fulfilling her purpose of creation, the certain sense of accomplishment that had dominated her heart was for but a moment, and the situation was being distorted bit by bit.

Just what stood in the way of Sphinx, in the way of the Great Disaster?

???: “—Vincent Vollachia.”

Sphinx: “…”

???: “—Aldebaran.”

Sphinx: “…”

???: “—Natsuki Subaru.”

As if to close the distance towards Sphinx’s mind, crimson lips spoke those names.

Chosen as the Great Disaster, Sphinx had commenced a battle on which the survival of the Empire was staked, and hot on her heels, overturning her plans entirely, was a deterring force attempting to rectify the alignment of the stars.

Sphinx: “From your perspective, how would you evaluate them?”

At Sphinx’s question, the woman looked towards her with a metallic clank of her chains.

The crimson eyes fixed upon Sphinx beyond the water mirror, Priscilla Barielle smiled at the question. Neither ridicule nor pity, it was a smile.

If anybody who knew Priscilla were to have seen that, they would have likely been surprised. For within her smile, affection could be found.

The affection harbored by Priscilla Barielle, towards Sphinx.

Sphinx: “For what reason…”

Priscilla: “Do I make such an expression, you ask? Did you not just enquire regarding mine evaluations of those men? Just as one would expect from the Witch of Greed, your avarice extends to even answers.”

Sphinx: “If you are going to mock me…”

Priscilla: “You ought to be aware. Such is not the case.”

Bluntly told so, Sphinx was silenced by Priscilla’s gaze.

In her eyes and in her words, there was no longer any hue of mockery towards Sphinx. Then, just what was it that dwelt within those crimson eyes?

That was eating away at Sphinx from inside her chest. It was a sensation unknown to her.

This was different from the times when she was continuously spurred on by a sense of duty, that she must fulfill her purpose of creation.

For Sphinx, it was an unbearable, inescapable impulse.

Priscilla: “Remember this. That is what is known as yearning.”

Sphinx: “Yearn, ing…”

Priscilla: “If you wish to procure something that lies beyond your own domain, you must endeavor for it, even if you must withstand the torment of being scorched by flame. There are some who do not desire that, but such a way of life is foolish.”

Sphinx: “…”

Priscilla: “When scorched in flames, listen carefully to the pleas of your soul. In life, one must yearn. In love, one must drown. —It is for mine convenience, that this world is made.”

At that declaration, Sphinx truly experienced a sensation akin to being struck by lightning.

An absolute and unshakeable self, and an unwaning confidence; feeling the inescapable heat of that flame, Sphinx truly felt alive for the first time after having died.

At the same time, she yearned. —She yearned to emerge victorious against the flame-like woman before herself.

Ergo—

Sphinx: “Countermeasures: Required—No, let us see if you can prevent this.”

6

Within the Imperial Capital, enclosed by star-shaped ramparts made up of five bastions, exactly inverse to those five bastions, a magic circle had been laid out in the form of a five-pointed star—the Sphinxes whose duty it was to activate it, while suspicious of the imperfect activation of the technique, were receiving its effects nevertheless.

The effect of the magic circle, its target was the magic crystals of the defenseless Crystal Palace.

Deconstructing the enormous mass of colorless Mana, the Witch, Sphinx, had plotted to take it into her own Mana-drained soul, thereby gaining immense power.

Now that she had succeeded in reproducing the soul of the Witch of Greed, Sphinx wielded the same power as her creator, who possessed knowledge of all kinds of magic. If only she could just secure the Mana for that purpose.

For that purpose—

Sphinx: “The completion of the magic circle—”

???: “Unfortunately His Excellency and Boss have ordered me to come and prevent that.”

That instant, the surging glint of a sword forbade her from even responding, and lopped Sphinx’s head clean off.

Her white hair trimmed into a bob cut, Sphinx saw the figure of the young man who had killed her within her field of vision as it spun through the air.

It was an exceedingly beautiful brandish; however, it was still lacking. This was not the end.

Even if it was an incomplete magic circle, it had given her soul some respite.

What remained—

Young Man: “—Ahh I see now. You’re also drowning, aren’t you?”

As a result of the choice Sphinx had made directly after, Cecilus Segmunt smiled as he gripped his katana.

Within Cecilus’s vision, as to not allow him to prevent the complete activation of the magic circle, reconstructed from the soul that had received the taste of his slash, several Sphinxes stood in his way.

Tilting her head, one of the Sphinxes obstructing him said,

Sphinx: “There is no water source here. What do you mean by drowning? Explanation: Required.”

Cecilus: “There isn’t any need for a real river or pond or lake or even a puddle. The thing known as the “ocyan” exists in the hearts of all. Those who deeply desire something, every one of us, everyone’s drowning.”

At his way of putting it, Sphinx had still not straightened her head.

But, without letting that bother him, Cecilus placed his hand on the hilt of his sheathed katana to ready himself, and gave his introduction.

Cecilus: “—Swordsman, Cecilus Segmunt.”

Sphinx: “—Witch of Greed, Sphinx.”

Before she could even realize, that had naturally spilled out of the Sphinxes’ mouths.

At the same time that the Blue Lightning and the Witch's techniques caused tremors throughout the Imperial Capital, similar fierce battles to prevent the activation of the magic circle broke out in three other locations.

???: "—Admirer, Halibel."

???: "—Witch of Greed, Sphinx."

???: "—Sixty-first Emperor of Vollachia, Eugard Vollachia."

???: "—Witch of Greed, Sphinx."

???: "—Gorgeous Tiger, Garfiel Tinzel."

???: "—Witch of Greed, Sphinx."

The elite forces, selected by Natsuki Subaru, faced the Witch as a spear to destroy the final stratagem of the Great Disaster, and were subjected to a fierce magical onslaught.

Once the magic crystals of the Crystal Palace, which were being deconstructed, completely flowed into the Witch's soul, it would no longer be possible to thwart her plans.

The reason being, her possible measures would extend into infinity.

Depending on the user's imagination and practical utility, magic could extend one's possibilities infinitely.

In other words, by acquiring an extreme amount of Mana, the Witch, Sphinx, would gain the power of a transcendent being that could make almost anything possible.

It would give her the key to overcome all obstacles, and to fulfill her desires.

However, the truly terrifying thing about Sphinx, was not her vision of attaining such mighty power.

What was truly frightening, was the meticulousness with which she was not focused on one single objective.

Subaru: “Beako! Roswaal!”

Beatrice: “Minya!”

Roswaal: “Ul Goa.”

A storm of purple arrows and flaming projectiles spread out around them with no escape, blowing away the undead who dared to advance.

However, even after the vanguard troops were repelled, the undead who still continued to march in had come here with their sense of self completely destroyed, assailing as puppets that were following orders. —In order to kill Arakiya.

Stopping not only the magic circle, but also them was necessary for Subaru and his team’s victory conditions.

Subaru: “Al!”

Al: “Gotcha!”

Breaking through the encirclement, Al pounced on the undead aiming for the girl’s life, thrusting the earthen dao, causing it to expand inside his opponent, and explode from within.

He had not seen Al fight since Chaosflame, but even looking at him again, he was too risky and harrowing. He was not a skilled combatant by any stretch of the imagination.

Still, it was an all-out effort, with everyone taking on the challenge together, as best as they could.

Subaru: “—One minute has passed.”

Having overcome the line that had been fatal until now, Subaru realized that the situation had progressed.

Sphinx, the commander of the Great Disaster—to be honest, it was quite a shock for Subaru to see her look so much like Echidna, but it was Beatrice who kept his turmoil at bay.

Beatrice remained calm and composed, even when she saw the Witch, who had become an exact duplicate of her parent, Echidna.

Beatrice: “Subaru, that’s not the same person as Mother, in fact.”

Roswaal: “Yes, that is right. Even if she resembles the Witch of Greed, Echidna, they are not alike in the slightest. —Though, she is an exceedingly unpleasant oppooonent~.”

For some reason, Roswaal’s words, which were just as convincing as Beatrice’s, spurred Subaru forth, and he shifted his attention away from the uncanny appearance of the Witch, and focused instead on discovering her intentions.

First of all, the fact that the Witch, who was supposed to have been burned by Abel’s Yang Sword, had changed her form and survived was in itself the ultimate counter to the Yang Sword and Star Eating.

That strategy also needed to be taken into consideration.

However, right now—

Subaru: “If we can completely obstruct the activation of the magic circle—”

It was the moment when he had thought that.

A massive water mirror was deployed in the sky of the Imperial Capital, and an image was being projected onto the screen—the Fortified City of Garkla, driven into a moment of desperation, was about to be obliterated by a falling star.

8

Medium: “—Abel-chin!!”

Wearing an expression of altered complexion, Medium called out to Vincent with an urgent voice. Embracing Madelyn in one arm, she pointed to the sky with a barbarian sword in the other.

There was a huge distortion of light that seemed to cover the sky of the Imperial Capital, and Vincent immediately understood that it was a thinly-spread mass of water. For a moment, he was wary that it was the next attack prepared by the Witch, but he became convinced when the water's rippling surface reflected a scene from somewhere else immediately afterward.

As expected, that was an attack of the Witch.

However, it was not a straightforward attack that caused significant injury to the human body, but rather an attack that penetrated the spirit by confronting it with an inescapable reality, in a form such that none could take their eyes off of it.

—Reflected in the water mirror of the sky, was the Fortified City, surrounded by the great army of the undead.

Having attracted the hosts of undead, the fortress of the Sword Wolves was where a battle on which the survival of the Empire was staked, much like the one Vincent and the others were engaged in, was unfolding, and from its skies, it was clear that the radiance of a star was raining down.

This, was the beautiful divine judgment of destruction that had also attempted to bring ruin upon the Imperial Capital.

If that was to fall upon the Fortified City, the walls and fortress would crumble, and most of those encamped within would die. That would mean the destruction of the Empire, which would not be able to be rebuilt even if the operation in the Imperial Capital succeeded.

Starlight over the Imperial Capital, the fire of obliteration, the overload of the Magic Core, and the magic circle targeting the Crystal Palace.

The Witch's successive artifices were to destroy not only the Imperial Capital, but also the entire Empire.

The wise man was the one who would strike the true fatal blow, never letting it be perceived.

That was why—

Vincent: "—Our greatest fear has been borne out, Natsuki Subaru."

Indeed, it happened right after Vincent spoke.

—A fire of obliteration smashed through the water mirror of the ether as it opened a hole in the sky, perforating directly towards the north of the Imperial Capital.

9

—The authentic trump card of Natsuki Subaru and Beatrice.

The Magic Crystal Cannon's fire of obliteration, sent into another space by Al Shamak, was returned to this space by a subsequent Al Shamak, shooting down the starlight that was supposed to mark the demise of the Fortified City.

With the assistance of Cecilus and Halibel, that trump card did not have to be used to slay the Blight Dragon, and instead, it was used to defeat the final measure prepared by the Witch to perturb them.

Subaru: "—Hk."

Subaru felt dizzy from the intense feeling of exhaustion, and his nose began to bleed as he was bathed in a multitude of water drops from the shattered water mirror, which rained upon the Imperial Capital like a passing drizzle.

It was the backlash from Beatrice's endless display of seriousness over the past few hours.

Beatrice's adorableness might have been priceless, but there was a heavy cost to pay for her abilities. There was a limit as to how much of that burden could be shared with the Pleiades Battalion.

Subaru involuntarily dropped to one knee as his limits emerged before him.

Beatrice: "Subaru!"

He was supported by the shouting Beatrice; however, he could not speak, even though he wanted to reassure her.

Beatrice tried to stop the unending, dripping nosebleed with the sleeve of her dress. He did not want her beautiful outfit to become stained, but he could not lift his arms.

Subaru: “Not yet, not yet…”

He could not afford to come to a standstill here.

There was still a duty he had to fulfill, a plot that still needed to be thwarted.

This was an all-out war, and it was none other than Subaru who had made that decision.

For Subaru to be the first to run out of steam, there was no way such a ridiculous story could exist.

That was why—

Subaru: “—Huh?”

Beatrice: “Subaru? You shouldn’t force yourself, in fact. Even if just for a moment, rest—”

Beatrice hurriedly tried to admonish Subaru, who had suddenly let out a breath. But, Beatrice’s words stopped mid-sentence. —Because, Subaru stood up suddenly, on the spot.

Beatrice: “…”

Beatrice’s round eyes widened, and she looked at Subaru as he stood up. As she met his gaze, Subaru looked down at his hands, bewildered.

The sense of lethargy that had gripped Subaru’s entire body until just before had disappeared without a trace. —No, it was not that the feeling of exhaustion had vanished. Rather, it was the opposite.

Subaru: “Strength… is surging up within me?”

Subaru was dumbfounded, and just as he said this, his whole body was filled with energy.

It was a similar feeling to that of being united with the other members of the Pleiades Battalion, having even the strength of one's body and mind intensely heightened—a feeling of omnipotence, of being enveloped by a great flame.

And then, for what reason this had occurred, was something Subaru immediately understood.

—The shattered water mirror in the sky, and the fire of obliteration that pierced the radiance of the distant star, drawing a band of light. In the sky of the Imperial Capital where those two had reigned supreme, a new light was birthed.

It was tiny in comparison to the light of the star, and even small in comparison to the fire of obliteration, but in terms of its brilliance, not only was it equal to them, it overwhelmed them with its blaze.

Falling from the heavenly skies, adorned in a dress the color of blood, was a woman akin to flame—.

???: "—It is a great service."

Even as the water mirror had tried to project despair, everyone had looked up to the sky. However, through an even higher intensity than that, it attracted the eyes of all present in the Imperial Capital to the sky, and set their souls ablaze.

She was descending. A female Sword Wolf, with fluttering orange hair, and blazing crimson eyes—.

???: "No superfluous words are necessary. —You may call upon mine name."

Holding the treasured sword of crimson in her hand, the princess, as if the sun itself, descended upon the city in its plight—as one of those who gazed upward towards her, Subaru unconsciously abided by her wishes.

That was to say—

Subaru: "—Priscilla."

Indeed, he invoked her name as she descended.

—With a flame ablaze in his right eye, as one of the people receiving the blessing of the sun, he called out her name.

Chapter 72:
The Sun Princess

1

???: “—I have use for you. You shall serve me well, in order to grant my wish.”

Those were the first words the man spoke to them, and they symbolized the relationship between him and them, which, until the very end, had not changed even once.

They had spent decades together with the man.

During that time, they were never given freedom, amounting to being shackled and confined in a basement.

Although they had a caretaker to keep them from dying, the cautious man would silence them and replace them periodically, so the man was the only one whom they could say they had any contact with over the decades.

—Leip Barielle.

He was a nobleman of the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica, a man dominated by what was, to put it simply, a foul ambition.

During the Demi-Human War, House Barielle had been commissioned as viscounts, but they forfeited their titles and were demoted to barons when they were forced to take responsibility for their defeat during the civil war.

That humiliation and anger ought to have been the driving force behind Leip’s actions, but if such were the case, then one would have to wonder how long human anger and hatred could retain their intensity.

Leip would constantly remind himself of the humiliation of decades ago as if it were only yesterday.

Leip: “Eventually, I will certainly have you make yourself useful. I am the one keeping you alive. You best not forget that.”

Human beings who possessed intelligence, had something known as emotion.

For example, if one spent ten or twenty years with another, even if they did not like the other person’s personality or relationship, their attitude would soften, and the harshness of their contact would dissipate.

However, that was not the case with Leip. There was always a fresh sense of hostility from him.

Not once did he ever speak warm words to them.

They did not know anything regarding Leip’s personal history, family makeup, or House Barielle’s affairs.

Day after day, they spent a long, quiet, and idle time in captivity, only to be told by Leip’s occasional visits about the current state of affairs in the Kingdom and the unchanging days of lying in wait.

However, on merely one occasion, they had a different conversation with Leip.

Leip: “You led the civil war in collusion with demi-humans. Just what in the world was your objective?”

More than twenty years had already passed since the Demi-Human War, and it was far too late to discuss that topic anymore.

Leip asked this question at a time when both Valga and Libre, who had fought with them, had already died, and the major figures of the Demi-Human Alliance at the time were all gone.

Why he wanted to know that, they did not ask.

They had a feeling that if they asked questions back, Leip would be taken aback, and the topic itself would be closed. Therefore, they did not say anything out of line and did not feel the need to hide their purpose, so they spoke frankly.

Their cooperation in the Demi-Human War was to fulfill their own purpose of creation.

Leip: "—Rubbish."

Upon hearing that the Demi-Human War was part of the process of trying to achieve the purpose of their creation, something they had been pursuing for more than a century, Leip readily spat back that retort.

They did not feel any anger or sadness from Leip's reaction. They had always been that way, and Leip's reaction was as expected.

From the point of view of this man with foul ambitions, all wishes other than his own were worthless.

But—

Leip: "You were born as yourself but wish to go out of your way to become someone else? Why bother to pretend to live under someone else's name and way of life, only to let your own name die?"

That conversation, which they thought would end after being cut off with that single word, had continued.

Leip turned toward them with eyes clouded with negative emotions, more frustrated than ever, as if to say that this was a truly repugnant idea.

Leip: "Your objective has no value whatsoever. As expected, you are to be used by me. After all, your desire is one that would not have even a shred of value when fulfilled. Should you intend to squander it, give it to me."

???: "You—"

Leip: "Your purpose of creation is worthless. If you cannot live without someone telling you what to do, then you ought to be used for the sake of my wish."

There was not an iota of righteous indignation or compassion in Leip’s eyes as he spoke.

In Leip’s clouded eyes was anger toward those who had brought about his undiminished humiliation, resentment, and hatred toward an era and a world that refused to acknowledge his existence, and an ambition, like a black flame, to push himself into a more deserved position.

They were so violent, as if they trampled them, as if they were pouring sludge on them, that they certainly plunged a blade into their being, tearing them apart and causing them to bleed cold blood.

—To fulfill their purpose of creation, borne out of their creator.

That was the meaning of their life, the purpose of having kept walking forward for such a long time.

Yet, had they ever harbored an intense ardor for that purpose? Never. Never once had they harbored a passion for it. The need to accomplish what was given to them only because they had been given it, such was the habit and compromise bereft of ardor, which ruled their life.

However, intrinsically, was this not what a wish, what a desire, was meant to be?

To deeply desire something, to try to fulfill a wish that one wanted to, was it not correct for those to become like this?

Was Leip Barielle’s way of being not the correct method for one to grant their desires?

???: “…”

Once again, a long time had passed. During that time, their relationship with Leip had remained unchanged.

Not many words were exchanged, and time ticked moment by moment without a role having been prepared for them, for which they had been told they would be of use.

Then, eventually, there was a change.

Leip: “At last, it seems an opportunity has presented itself.”

Indeed, Leip, whose eyes blazed with a maniacal glint, had grown thin and gaunt, his face and body corroded by an age that could not be reversed, despite his undiminished ambition.

The time he would be able to seize the thread that dangled in front of him had finally arrived, and it delighted him that he would finally be rewarded after prohibiting himself from even blinking.

According to what they had heard, Leip had established himself among the Royal Family of Lugunica over the past few decades and was entrusted with the management of the tablet of prophecies called the Dragon History Stone, which the Divine Dragon had conferred on the Kingdom.

Having grasped the fact that the prophetic tablet had been inscribed with information about a calamity that would soon strike the Kingdom of Lugunica—a disease that would spread through the Royal Family, Leip blazed with aspirations towards the next battle for the throne that would follow thereafter.

Leip: “I will find a candidate before anyone else. I will take her as my wife and send her to the Royal Selection… and I will surely get my hands on the throne. I will make use of you, too.”

With fists clenched tight with nothing but skin and bones, Leip was determined to do just that.

They had always been told that they would be of use, but now that it was feasible, even as someone who had been connected to them for several decades, there was a small sense of excitement. —They, had expectations.

The next time he came, Leip had found a candidate, and he ordered them to prepare a technique to break their mind. By doing so, he would turn the candidate into a puppet and rule the next age of the Kingdom with his own hands.

Leip’s ambition to mastermind such a grand scheme, to plot its realization with unusual tenacity, and to actually bring it to the brink of fruition was, for all intents and purposes, dazzling in a dark way.

They wanted it to come true. They wanted him to fulfill it. All while following that passion.

They wanted him to fulfill his foul ambitions that would compel anyone to look away, to use the Kingdom for his own desires, to use even a Witch as a stepping stone for his own desires, and to achieve his deluded obsession.

The thing that was lacking from within themselves was none other than that; that was what Sphinx wanted him to teach her.

So, they waited. They kept waiting.

They eagerly looked forward to breaking the mind of the woman Leip had married to take advantage of as a candidate to participate in the Royal Selection.

They waited, and waited, and waited, but Leip never showed up.

In order to find out why he had not appeared, they undid the bindings that had not been broken for decades, and ventured out on their own.

And, it was only when they found out why Leip did not show up, that they understood.

Sphinx: “—Ah.”

—They understood, this was the “ardor” of wanting to accomplish something.

2

???: “Countermeasures: Required—No, let us see if you can prevent this.”

As Sphinx declared so, her trump card, her ace up her sleeve, her hidden trap was overturned.

Reflected upon the shimmering surface of the water mirrors were the struggles of those who overcame the schemes prepared by the Witch one after another in an effort to prevent the destruction of the Empire.

???: "…"

Narrowing her crimson eyes, Priscilla, chained, looked at the mirror and at Sphinx's pale face.

Yearning, drowning, Sphinx had subjected themself to the greatest burden in order to fulfill their own desires. The substance of this would be an abomination to the world, to the Empire, and to Vincent, but to Priscilla it was no abomination at all.

She did not wish for the downfall of the Empire or the world, nor for the squandering of the tireless efforts of her own older brother, Vincent.

However, the fact remained that for the sake of a desired outcome, confronting things while expending all of oneself was always beautiful.

Even when that hatred which bordered on resentment was directed against them, it was no exception.

All things had their proportional value.

Those who lack the understanding of their own caliber and desire more than it can hold are often doomed. However, Priscilla wisely spoke that she did not like those who could console themselves with only what they could fit in their vessels.

She wanted to love the way of life of the fool who sought what was beyond the capacity of their caliber, who went on a path that may lead to ruin, who aimed for the sun only for their wings to melt, regardless of whether they succeeded or failed in their challenge.

Priscilla: "How lovely."

All those who would risk their lives on the battlefield would not believe their ears at Priscilla's words.

However, that was Priscilla's genuine intention. In the first place, Priscilla did not prefer to act or speak in ways that conspire and deceive others. She would never wish such a way of life on herself.

Hence, it was genuine praise.

All those who took up arms on this battlefield, lent their shoulders to others, shed their blood, and burned their souls, regardless of whether they were alive or dead, were to be loved.

If that could come true—

Priscilla: "—I suppose it is a sentimentality uncharacteristic of mineself."

Priscilla closed one of her eyes, a rare grimace forming on her beautiful face.

Since childhood, she imitated her older brother when she contemplated. Vincent understood all too well the weight of the responsibility he bore, and never closed his eyes, not even when he slept.

That attitude was admirable, but excessive. —Sometimes, there were those whom one could only meet upon the back of their eyelids.

Priscilla: "You as well, elder brother, had better find someone you can be with, someone you can shut both eyes with."

Yang Sword in hand, Vincent had burned down the plans of the Witch who had spearheaded the Great Disaster; Priscilla uttered these words while showing respect for his way of being.

Then within the water mirrors, Priscilla saw something that caught her eye.

—Aldebaran and Natsuki Subaru.

Priscilla's laudable clown and the Knight of the half-devil who, despite being somewhat loathsome, had been named as a Royal Selection Candidate.

Like Sphinx's perceived threat, Priscilla also understood their struggle—She understood the very fact that they twisted the destiny of the stars that could only be described as something more than a trivial matter.

Priscilla: "What in the Witch's… Nay, what in the heavens are you both deceiving?"

Sphinx, the mastermind behind the Great Disaster, was not half-hearted in the numerous artifices she had laid out.

The undead army created with the Sacrament of the Immortal King, the use of the Stone Muspel to realize them, the second coming as the Witch of Greed who managed to evade the flame of the Yang Sword once before, the murderous intent toward Arakiya who shared her destiny with the lands of the Empire, the starlight and the Magic Crystal Cannon, the subsequent overload of the Magic Core, the deployment of the magic circle to utilize the magic crystals, and the staging of the plight of the Fortified City—.

Who could have predicted that such well-orchestrated plans would be foiled at every turn?

For the Wise Emperor Vincent Vollachia, for his right-hand man Chisha Gold the White Spider, and for none other than Priscilla Barielle, it would have been impossible.

The ruination of the Vollachian Empire ought to have been inescapable.

It ought to have been inescapable, if it were not for those who broke through that dead-end of fate with an unthinkable power.

That was why—

Priscilla: "—Just one more hand to play."

Priscilla's lips spun those words as she peered at the scene that floated on the mirror's surface.

The massive water mirror above the Imperial Capital reflected the plight of the distant Fortified City and tried to break the will of those in the Imperial Capital to fight. —The fire of obliteration, previously swallowed by the void, drowned it out.

The starlight was negated by the Magic Crystal Cannon, the pride of Imperial Capital, and the water mirror shattered.

At last, it seemed that all of Witch's stratagems had been thwarted.

However—

Sphinx: "I am not done yet."

The starlight over the Fortified City was drowned out, but even so, the Witch's all-encompassing plans were still not exhausted.

While the Witch watched as the mass-scale disaster she had prepared was prevented, she used this as a springboard to set up a trap.

—The water mirror shattered in the sky, turned into raindrops, and poured down upon the entire Imperial Capital.

Like a passing storm, it drenched the Imperial Capital, with raindrops striking the living and the dead alike.

And so they were blades of water, the harmful disguised as the harmless.

Slowly, the drops that slid over the skin of those struck by raindrops shuddered, becoming blades. This danger loomed equally over everyone, except those who were inside buildings or the transcendent beings who avoided the rain by instinctive intuition.

It became a fatal line, one that could no longer be avoided.

Priscilla: "…"

Hence why, Priscilla closed her eyes.

Earlier, she had thought about Vincent, and then she did the same thing. —Schult, Heinkel, Emilia, Crusch, Felt, Anastasia, Serena, and Arakiya, in the darkness behind her eyelids, Priscilla saw many faces, many souls.

Among them, Vincent, Lamia, Rem, and Aldebaran were also present.

All of them, people who lacked one more hand to play.

Priscilla: “—The world is made for my convenience.”

Priscilla muttered that, and Sphinx’s movement stopped as she tried to flash these blades of raindrops.

She looked at Priscilla through the water mirror, her black eyes wide open.

In the next instant, the alternate space created to hold Priscilla collapsed. —In the blink of an eye, it was unbearably engulfed by the scintillating flames brought about by the Sun Princess trapped within.

3

The moment the starlight flashed over the Fortified City, everyone who looked up to the sky was speechless.

???: “…”

This was right after they had succeeded in defeating the Blight Dragon that had attacked them just before, and the fact that they had successfully defeated a powerful enemy together had boosted the morale of all the soldiers who were challenging the siege to their utmost.

However, before the fact that the undead’s most powerful force had been destroyed was conveyed to all, the beautiful destruction loomed overhead, and many forgot the beating of their own hearts.

Of course, there were those who tried everything they could under these circumstances.

The same was true of the Spirit Knight clad in an aura of light, the female warriors who would never lose their fighting spirit, the soldier with insects within him and the hulking frame clad in gold, and the Battalion who was assembled in the light of their own star.

Even the wise ones, who lacked the strength to fight, considered countless thoughts in that brief gap of time, sparing no second to attempt to overcome their desperate predicament.

But still, just like ants gathered together to stop a giant, it was certain that everything would be trampled, and reaped.

—Until the fire of destruction flew from the distant sky, colliding with the light of the star, and the world flashed white.

???: "…"

At the time, no one knew what had happened.

However, the retinas of those who did not look away were burned white, revealing that the destruction that should have arrived before their eyesight had returned did not descend upon them.

And then—

???: "—Hk."

The two lights, the white of the star and the red of the fire, blended together, and a shockwave covered the sky of the Fortified City.

The blast, which occurred a moment later, scattered in all directions, shaking even the city's sturdy walls, sending gusts of wind throughout the city, blowing away both the living and the dead alike.

In addition, the intense winds even cracked the great mountain that supported the city, causing rock faces to collapse and detach, and the large falling rocks engulfed a corner of the great fortress with a roar.

Unfortunately, that location was assigned as a first aid station where the injured were being brought—.

???: "—Rem! Hey, Rem!"

Rem’s eyes blinked several times at the call of the frantic voice.

For a moment, her thoughts were whited out, and it took her a moment to figure out what had happened.

But, she soon realized that it was Katya’s voice frantically calling to her, and she remembered that the relief station had been involved in a collapse caused by falling rocks.

Seeing cracks in the walls and ceiling, Rem quickly pushed Katya, into the crumbling wreckage.

And yet—

Rem: “I’m, alive…?”

Katya: “Of course you’re alive! You really shouldn’t have done that! If you died protecting me, my heart really would have died this time…”

Buried beneath the rubble, Katya’s tearful voice struck Rem’s ears, confirming that she was still alive. That powerful grief was interrupted by the sight of Rem pushing aside the rubble from atop of her body.

She must have been surprised. The debris on top of Rem was quite heavy, and even with Rem’s strength, which was that of the Oni Clan, it should have been too heavy for her to move it so easily.

Yet, Rem was still able to do it.

Katya: “R-Rem, your… your eye!”

Pointing at Rem’s face, Katya let out a shrill, high-pitched scream.

Rem could guess that Katya was pointing to her left eye, which probably had a blaze lit within it. This was because, Katya’s left eye also had a flame burning.

—No, it was not just Rem and Katya.

All those in the aid station, except for Rem and Katya, who were caught in the collapse, stood up with only minor scratches and no serious injuries.

She could see a flickering flame in one eye of every person.

V!c.112

That flame, the power that came from it, brought forth strength to Rem.

And that was because—

Rem: "—Priscilla-sama?"

Rem muttered to herself as she felt the heat of the painless flame in her eye.

Unsure. Rem was not even sure why. But, Rem followed her heart and was certain of who it was that had brought about that flame.

Rem: "Katya-san."

Katya: "Wh-What is this?! Water… where's some water?! Quick, quick, I need some water to put this out…!"

Rem: "No, I don't think this is a fire that should be put out. Besides."

Katya: "Besides?"

Before the flustered and confused Katya, Rem stood up and found her overturned, barely damaged wheelchair, lifted Katya into it, and sat her down.

Then, she looked at the people in the relief station who were standing up, and nodded.

Rem: "I feel like I'm being told something. —That, we've got to hang on just a bit further."

4

—The water mirror shattered, and the crimson woman descended from the sky in a spray of droplets.

All were transfixed by her overwhelming presence, looking up at the sky as if being bathed by the setting sun.

And, of course, that held true for the Witch as well.

???: “—Priscilla Barielle!”

At this moment, after deconstructing the magic crystals with the activation of the incomplete magic circle, there were forty-four Witches that Sphinx had manifested by absorbing some of the vast amount of Mana.

Each of them turned their palms toward the sky, and light appeared around the descending Priscilla.

But—

???: “Don’t look away and don’t touch the dancing lady!”

???: “I dunno about that. That’d be a bad move.”

Not missing this opportunity, the transcendent beings interfered, reducing the number from forty-four to thirty-six in one fell swoop.

Despite that, the balls of light, more than enough to threaten one person, gathered together all at once towards Priscilla. A lethal attack from all directions, it tried to capture the sun as it escaped its captivity—

???: “I won’t let it!”

Responding to that cry of parental love, the streets of the Imperial Capital shifted and moved before shooting out like spears.

They blocked the blasts of light that were trying to reach Priscilla in the air, and a series of explosions and blasts painted the sky as they protected her.

???: “Together, Beatrice!”

???: “No need for you to say it, I suppose!”

An amethyst glow appeared around Priscilla as she continued to descend through the blast of light. It was a disk-shaped crystal, acting as a shield to intercept the approaching balls of light, that was created by the combined efforts of both Spirit and caster to protect and defend Priscilla.

However—

Witch: “Not yet!”

The Witch screamed with emotion, as if she were spitting blood.

Immediately afterward, the disk was struck hard and began to creak; eventually, the cracks widened, and the disk shattered all at once.

Having done so, the Witch, her white hair fluttering, rose into the sky and attempted to shower life-rending light upon Priscilla, as she fell unprotected.

???: “Uuau!!”

???: “I will not let you do that!”

The blonde girl teleported from the ground, and the deergirl jumped and kicked with a force that could break the Crystal Palace, striking a blow to the torso of the Witch, who saw none else except Priscilla, at the same time.

The Witch crumpled, and the heat ray that was fired missed its target.

Witch: “Catalyst: Required.”

The crumpled Witch shattered into bits of dirt, but even that was part of the plan of which she spoke.

A moment later, multiple Witches on the ground joined hands with each other; because they were the same being, in perfect synchronization, they shortened the construction of a technique, generating a great storm.

It became raging water, wind, and light, engulfing Priscilla in the sky.

In the next moment, Priscilla would be torn to shreds, her body left in a pitiful state—

???: “Icicle Line—!”

The storm of destruction exploded from within, and what appeared next was not the torn figure of Priscilla, but rather a flower of ice that split open in the heavens as if to protect and adorn her.

The great, ravishing flower petals trapped the light, not allowing it to reach Priscilla.

And then, a figure furiously approached, as Priscilla defied all of the death, destruction, and demise that loomed around her.

It was—

???: “—Princess!!”

Aldebaran rose from the ground of the Imperial Capital, stretching into the sky with a distorted, misshapen pillar of stone and earth beneath his feet, drawing ever closer to Priscilla.

The column rapidly grew, and the distance between the falling Priscilla and the ascending Aldebaran shrank, and shrank, and shrank, and shrank—until the distance became zero.

Al: “—Hk.”

Balancing on top of an unstable pillar, he stretched out his right arm to forcefully catch Priscilla as she fell. Just as they were about to fall together, Aldebaran secured his legs firmly atop the pillar, risking his life to protect Priscilla from the fall.

Priscilla’s almond-shaped eyes narrowed at Aldebaran’s life-or-death decisive action,

Priscilla: “It is a great service.”

As Priscilla briefly spoke, Aldebaran, overcome by emotion, bowed his head. Then he looked up, his voice trembling, Al: “Princess, Princess, my Princess…! Finally, again… ouch!!”

Priscilla: “Nonsense. Who belongs to you?”

Priscilla struck Aldebaran, who was on the brink of losing it, on the head with the hilt of her Yang Sword. Aldebaran instinctively crouched down as he felt the force of the blow, which threatened to dent his steel helmet. He was unable to rub the spot where he was hit, as he was supporting Priscilla with his one arm.

Priscilla gave a short snicker to the pitiful Aldebaran, with a “Heh”,

Priscilla: “However, that was an excellent effort from you. I bestow mine praise.”

Al: “Well, I’m very grateful and honored… what about you, Princess? Everything okay? No injuries? Did they hurt you or anything? I mean, you look so pretty for someone who was being held captive.”

Priscilla: “Do not repeat such nonsense. In the first place, mine beauty is not going to diminish from being imprisoned for a short while. Mind your tongue, Al.”

Al: “…”

Held by his arm, Priscilla told him so in a stunning manner, and Aldebaran’s—Al’s breath caught in his throat.

Then, once again, he nodded deeply, confirming that Priscilla was indeed before him. To Al’s reaction, Priscilla, still in his embrace, looked around,

Priscilla: “Witness, the true star of the show. You shall have grand excitements.”

Reflected in Priscilla’s eyes as she spoke atop the stone pillar were multiple figures, those who were putting their lives on the line in this battle, and in the eyes of each of them, a flame was lit.

The flame of Priscilla Barielle’s soul blazed within the eyes of those she deemed worthy of love.

That, of course, included—

Al: “Princess?”

With Al right beside her, she lifted the visor of the helmet he wore with her finger and peeked within. —The right eye upon his face, which he never revealed to anyone but Priscilla, was lit by the same flame.

Upon seeing this, Priscilla smiled pleasantly, and spoke.

Priscilla: “It is no matter of consequence. —As always, this world is made for my convenience.”

Chapter 73:
Fated Foes

1

—It was a similar feeling to being buried from the neck down in a dark place.

Their feet sunk into the unending mixture of earth, sand, and pebbles, which eventually reached their waist, chest, and shoulders, leaving only their head exposed.

It was only a matter of time before their head was buried in the cold dust that was gradually piling up.

Desperately turning their head upward, they tried to breathe out the dust that was piling up, trying as hard as they could to postpone even just a little the moment they would suffocate, the moment they would be buried up to the top of their head.

From the time they were born until today, they had never felt so much discomfort.

Their mind was always unstable, like walking on water, but their body was never like that. They were sure that they were better at moving their body than most people.

When that source of comfort was taken away from them, they felt like crying, thinking about how helpless they were. But, they did not know how to shed tears. They were not even good at crying.

They lacked in just about everything. Still, there were things they wanted.

They were all too unaware of it, but they finally realized it. —They finally realized how greedy they were.

And then—

???: “…”

Suddenly, the feeling of dust pouring down from above disappeared.

It hit their forehead softly, and the feeling of it burying them as though spilling out stopped, and a flickering blue-white light illuminated the area as it swirled around them.

The light that flashed provocatively around their field of vision was uncontrollably irritating, and they struggled, and struggled, and struggled, and eventually, the arms of their body, buried up to their neck, reached up into the air.

As if escaping their outstretched hand, the pale-blue light went a little higher again.

Wanting to chase after it, they forcefully pulled their buried body out in order to reach the heights they could not reach. They got their shoulders out, their chest, and if they could get their waist out, then they would just be one breath away.

Eventually, when they were out to their toes, they looked up and tried to catch the blue-white light, and realized something.

There was a red flame right in front of them that brilliantly lit up the area.

Then, the blue-white light that they were trying to catch wrapped itself around them, trying to push them toward the radiant flames.

For a moment, there was hesitation. But it was not fear of the flames.

They hesitated, wondering if their cold self was worthy of the fortune of being burned by the flames.

However, that hesitation was only momentary.

It was not about whether they were qualified or not, but whether or not they wanted to be burned.

They were going to be burned, or so they thought.

That was why—

???: “—Enough of this, wake up. How much longer do you intend to keep mineself waiting?”

They took one step forward, straight ahead, to be burned by that gentle flame.

One step forward—

???: “…Princess, I, did my best.”

???: “It is only natural. —Just who do you take mine foster sister for?”

2

—At that moment, the Witch, Sphinx, was convinced that all of her plans had fallen apart.

Having given rise to the hosts of undead as the Great Disaster, she had ascertained the whereabouts of the soul through the countless amounts of trial and error they had carried out, and utilizing that, she had accomplished her purpose of creation, to reproduce the Witch of Greed.

In addition, through the act of killing the Stone, Muspel, by having it use the architecture of the Sacrament of the Immortal King technique, and inducing the collapse of the Vollachian Empire’s vast lands, putting an end to all things that comprised the Empire, she would show Priscilla Barielle, the sole person placed within the alternate space, the destruction of her homeland.

By doing so, Sphinx had plotted to enact retribution, triumph, revenge, supremacy, conquest, overthrowal, vanquishment, sacrilege, subjugation, a rise, a fall, a rampage, exultation, happiness, or at least just “something” against Priscilla, who had invited the death of Leip Barielle, the man who had taught Sphinx this repulsive, foul “ardor”.

All of that was completely, unsparingly, until no part would remain recognizable, falling apart.

Sphinx: "—The Sacrament of the Immortal King is…"

The fact that its effects had been lost, was something that Sphinx could not help but recognize.

Centered around the Imperial Capital of Lupugana, the five locations aligning with the north, east, south, and west of the Vollachian Empire—spread out over the sites designated as the points of settlement for the ever-migrating Stone, using the blood permeated into the Vollachian Empire's vast lands as a medium, the magic circle had continued to resurrect the dead via the Sacrament of the Immortal King.

However, that too would come to an end if the vast supply of Mana from the Stone was lost.

Sphinx: "The Spirit Eater, Arakiya… has she seized control over Muspel?"

At the unthinkable reality, she could do nothing but surmise based on the events that had transpired.

That which she had taken upon herself was a far too exceedingly powerful Great Spirit, and even though Arakiya was supposed to have burst asunder after taking it in, the exorcism performed by the swordsman wielding the Dream Sword Masayume had placed the Great Spirit under her complete dominion.

By this point, the Stone, Muspel, was already one and the same as the Spirit Eater, Arakiya.

And, Arakiya had no reason to disobey the Vollachian Empire and support the Great Disaster.

From here on out—

Sphinx: "The undead will not revive any more."

The immortal army, the pack of dead wolves who could endlessly revive in their death, the prerequisite for that collapsed.

Even if the supply from the Stone was severed, it did not mean the undead would lose their lives immediately. Only, the playing field had been leveled. —Death meant the end, just like it did for the living.

Sphinx: "—Hk."

With the supply of Mana to the magic circle severed, she had spent around five seconds sorting out the situation.

But, in those mere five seconds, Sphinx, who had already been reduced to thirty-six bodies, was diminished by another seven, bringing her total count down to twenty-nine.

Moving with superhuman speed and combat ability, the Blue Lightning and the Admirer were far too powerful.

Even though she was supposed to be able to reproduce the capacity of her creator, the Witch of Greed, she could not hold her own in the slightest. She could not even get a solid hit in. These opponents were on a level such that she could not even overcome them by sheer force of numbers.

Even if she wanted to do something about that, it was not only those two fighting against the Witch.

Hence—

Sphinx: "—Retreat: Required."

Sphinx: "—Retreat: Required."

Sphinx: "—Retreat: Required."

Having arrived at a situation in which she was powerless, the Witch, Sphinx, deemed the annulment of her plan the most rational course of action.

She had prepared a steadfast resolve, worked out infallible stratagems, and had commenced her plan with everything in place, but to still have everything overturned to this extent, meant that modifying her plan was no longer possible.

It was aggravating, but her best option was to accept it given that she had accomplished one of her two overarching objectives.

In fact, she had fulfilled her long-standing purpose of creation that had been given to her by her creator. Compared to the purpose she had pursued for over three hundred years, there was no way that the objective she had desired for merely a year was of equal value.

Sphinx: "—Retreat: Required."

Sphinx: "—Retreat: Required."

To begin with, the situation had never been one with balanced scales.

The reason for which she had been created, she reaffirmed her perception of it. What was required of her was the second coming of the Witch of Greed, and she was certainly achieving that.

Painting over her current self as Sphinx, by becoming the Witch of Greed, Echidna—.

Sphinx: "—Retreat: Required."

She would be remade. With that, her purpose of creation would be fulfilled.

With the disappearance of Sphinx, and the revival of Echidna, her days of obsession lasting over three hundred years would come to a close.

To desire anything more than that would not be rational. It would not be rational. It would not, be rational.

Even though it would not be rational—.

Sphinx: "…"

That instant, a hoisted Yang Sword unleashed a dazzling scintillation, displaying their own presence throughout the entirety of the Imperial Capital.

Having scorched through the alternate space, having forcibly made a return to the skies of the Imperial Capital, having surmounted the future that ought to have torn her limb from limb as if it were only natural, it was a provocation appealing to the Witch, who had decided to retreat.

Clad in a dress red like blood, with the hue of her hair bright like the sun, her dazzling presence radiating like a blaze, the woman who could not live in any other way but to scorch others like a flame, smiled.

Woman: “—You had better come, Sphinx. For thine enemy, is mineself.”

That instant, the twenty nine Witches, the twenty nine Sphinxes, every single one of them made up their minds.

That being—

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

Sphinx: “—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!”

3

Priscilla: “If we let them slip away, it shall surely be a disaster for the world. By nature, when it comes to changing the state of the world, mineself shall not be touching that. —But when it comes to that thing, they have decided to make mineself their destiny.”

Priscilla remarked as she descended from Al’s arm, with the crumbling stone and dirt scaffolding behind her.

Her appearance, a picture of arrogance, was so full of confidence and majesty that it was hard to believe that she had been a captive until just before.

Al, who had unexpectedly gained momentum from those words, looked as if he was feeling the pressure,

Al: “So Princess, you’re saying you’re gonna deal with them? Why do you have to do that? Let’s surround that troublesome piece of shit and beat her up… ouch!”

Priscilla: “Nonsense. If we take life by any means, we shall give the other party the same option. This battle must be decided before that thing decides that its enemy is the world.”

???: “…Otherwise, we can’t win?”

Priscilla crossed her arms as if to emphasize her voluptuous breasts, and Arakiya, kneeling beside her, tilted her head up. Priscilla shrugged her shoulders in disappointment at the question from Arakiya, who had a fire lit in her right eye and was holding her blood-red left eye with her hand.

Priscilla: “Arakiya, do not speak such foolishness as Al does. Does the me you know put so much emphasis on only one aspect, such as winning or losing?”

Arakiya: “But, Princess, you like to win. You seem happier when you do.”

Priscilla: “It is only natural. That is who mineself is.”

???: “Don’t ignore the premise that you yourself said! You’re getting them mixed up!”

Priscilla was asking Arakiya some unreasonable things, and Subaru, unable to remain silent, interjected.

Subaru unexpectedly lurched forward, and Priscilla’s crimson eyes narrowed in response to his vigour,

Priscilla: “What’s with you? This is no place for a child like you. Swiftly leave.”

Subaru: “Sorry, my bad! I’m Natsuki Subaru, though my size is like this! I’m the Knight of the loveliest and cutest in all the everlasting heavens, Emilia-tan!”

Priscilla: “To call such a child a Knight, it seems that the half-devil has a serious shortage of talented people. In this case, that noisy foolish commoner would have been better.”

Subaru: “That’s me! That’s me!”

Subaru exclaimed, more unreasonable than his response to Arakiya, forgetting the feeling of emptiness in his whole body.

He knew that Priscilla would erase anyone she was not interested in from her memory, but not to Subaru, who had been so concerned for her well-being, though not as much of course as Al, Schult, or the siscon, Abel.

And to Subaru, who wiped the blood from his nose and came up close to her with that look on his face,

Priscilla: “—Fool.”

Subaru: “Huh?”

Priscilla: “You should at least make the distinction as to what is a jape. —Natsuki Subaru.”

Subaru: “—Ah.”

Priscilla said this without changing her expression as she crossed her arms, and as soon as the meaning of Priscilla’s words seeped into his brain, Subaru’s entire body was overcome by heat.

But it was not anger for having been toyed with, but a kind of, deeply moving emotion.

It was the fact that Priscilla Barielle had remembered and called his name.

Subaru: “…I feel like the old me that got my jaw kicked is getting my reward!”

Stifling his past emotions, Subaru touched his chin and spoke those words.

Every single person in the Imperial Capital did not have a second to spare to engage in further exchanges.

To that end—

Priscilla: “—I have to teach them this very thing. That what you shall behold is not the world, but mineself.”

Immediately after she said that, Priscilla uncrossed her arms and held up the Yang Sword in her right hand to the sky.

Then, without any explanation of what it would do, the Yang Sword suddenly grew brighter, and a glare burned Subaru’s eyes, as if a new sun had been born there. —No, despite the tremendous amount of light, it did not cause pain similar to looking directly at the sun.

Priscilla: “The Yang Sword cuts what mineself decides to cut, burns what mineself wishes to burn.”

Once again, Priscilla explained how extraordinary it was and smiled, holding the dazzling, shining treasure sword —a sword that made its presence known everywhere in the Imperial Capital.

As she laughed, she drew the provocation of whom should have been paying attention, but was neither present here.

Priscilla: "—You had better come, Sphinx. For thine enemy, is mineself."

Subaru: "…"

Subaru understood intuitively that this was a trap set by Priscilla.

Sphinx, who tried to take Abel away from Priscilla, was obsessed with her for some reason. And that attachment grew as she interacted with the captive Priscilla. Or perhaps Priscilla provoked her to do so.

Either way—

???: "—I, AM YOUR ENEMY, PRISCILLA BARIELLE!!"

Indeed, the tense atmosphere on the battlefield clearly showed how the Witch had received Priscilla's declaration of war.

Subaru could not laugh at this emotional conclusion, which seemed neither logical nor rational.

No creature could ignore the glare of the sun when challenged by it.

Priscilla: "Al, I shall entrust this place to you, Arakiya come."

Al: "—Hk, okay."

Arakiya: "Yes, Princess."

Al and Arakiya respond to Priscilla's short and compelling instructions.

One is entrusted with this place, and the other is asked to accompany her. Then Priscilla turned to someone who was neither of them: Subaru.

Priscilla: "Natsuki Subaru."

Subaru: "Oh, uh. Me…"

Priscilla: “Heroic reveries, is that what you spoke of?”

Subaru: “…”

The shock of being called by name again was easily overcome by the words that followed.

The resolve and determination was one exchanged between Subaru and Al that they had to keep carrying with them, that they had to fulfill in both the Empire they were in, as well as the world to come.

If someone were to ask, they would have laughed at what a foolish statement a weak person like Subaru and Al had made —but it felt like Priscilla would not laugh at it.

Priscilla: “—Do what you ought to do.”

Indeed, what Subaru felt was affirmed by Priscilla’s words.

Subaru felt Priscilla’s voice push his back, then his soul, causing him to fall silent. Priscilla, however, did not wait for a reply. She just said what she wanted and turned away.

As soon as Arakiya embraced Priscilla’s slender waist, their bodies flew up into the air.

And just like that, Priscilla flew away with Arakiya,

Al: “Princess! Please act like you always do!”

Priscilla: “’Tis only natural. Just who do you take mineself for?”

Al: “Priscilla Barielle! You’re my Princess!”

Priscilla: “Who belongs to you, fool?”

In response to Al’s words, Priscilla flew away, leaving behind a slight afterimage of her lips breaking into a smile.

Right after, Priscilla and Arakiya left Subaru and the others. —No, in actual fact, they did not exactly leave them. They moved away from the Witch that was being held captive there.

???: “…”

Subaru and Al both turned to look at the Witch, who was sitting leaning against a shattered wall. Her entire body, bound by a black light, was restrained from moving.

The seal was similar to the one applied to Roy Alphard, Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, who had previously been captured at the Pleiades Watchtower; but, it also gave off a slightly different impression.

Subaru’s role was to confront the Witch, her power now having been sealed.

Beatrice: “Subaru! There you are, in fact!”

Right after Subaru’s display of enthusiasm, Beatrice returned at the perfect time. Together with Roswaal, Beatrice welcomed her very much needed partner for this final phase of the game.

That partner was Spica, who flew in on Roswaal’s back along with Beatrice.

Roswaal: “Keeping both hands free is more reasonable for a magiiician~, but I don’t think it’s possible in this case, no?”

Beatrice: “How fussy, I suppose! Come on, Spica, let’s go, in fact!”

Spica: “Eao, Au!”

At Beatrice’s prompting, Spica kicked off Roswaal’s back, and landed on the ground at Subaru’s side. Stroking her head as she looked up at him, Subaru flashed a smile at Spica, her semblance one of amusement.

After that, he again held her hand and turned to the Witch.

And then—

Subaru: “Spica, I know you might have a bloated belly and heartburn, but I need you to give it another try please.”

Spica: “U!”

Spica responded to Subaru’s request in a hearty manner, smiling as if to show off her sharp teeth. Entrusting everything to her stout nature, Subaru looked at the Witch.

This Witch stared back at Subaru with the same face as the Witch who had the worst kind of nature in the world. Narrowing her black eyes, the Witch smiled, and opened her mouth.

Witch: “Will you be able to capture my soul?”

In her state of immobility, when it came to just matters of life and death, the Witch spoke those words while always keeping control.

In response to the Witch’s answer, Subaru thought of the sensation of Spica’s hand joined in his, the presence of Al nodding beside him, Beatrice and Roswaal working together to get rid of obstacles in Subaru’s way, the people who cooperated to save Priscilla from coming to ruin, and the warm flowers of ice that appeared at the end—

Subaru: “Don’t be mistaken. It’s not me who’s going to beat you, it’s us.”

Witch: “…”

After announcing that, Subaru and Spica took a step forward, closing the distance with the Witch.

Then, he and Spica reached out and touched the Witch’s cheek,

Subaru: “—Sphinx.”

In order to eat the way of being of the undead Witch, they threw down their challenge onto their final Star Eating.

4

—The moment that balls of light rained down one after another, Vincent took Medium in his arm, and jumped out from the uppermost floor of the Crystal Palace.

“Wahyah?!” Medium screamed, and as he pulled her slender waist close, she took care not to drop Madelyn, as they took off towards the outside.

At the same time, turning his attention toward the other person also present who he could not reach,

Vincent: “Olbart Dunkelkenn!”

Olbart: “Ya don’t gotta tell me!”

Immediately afterwards, the battery of the Magic Crystal Cannon, which Vincent, who was carrying Medium and Madelyn, and Olbart had jumped away from, was blown apart.

With the wind blowing strong from the high altitude, Vincent instructed Medium to “Hold on tight.” Ensuring that her arms were wrapped tightly around him, he kicked the wall forcefully.

Using the momentum from the kick against the wall, they evaded the pursuing heat rays of light, landing on the ground.

Olbart: “Oh, geez, that was a real close one. At this point, I’m thinkin’ the only thing I’m able ta do that the other shinobi can’t is dyin’ of old age.”

Vincent: “Indeed, I have never heard of such a thing as a shinobi dying of old age.”

Olbart: “For the old folks who can’t possibly be useful anymore, makin’ ‘em carry a magic stone and blow themselves up is a common tactic of the shinobi.”

Medium: “Come on! Stop talking about scary things and put me down! Put! Me! Down!”

Despite having lost both arms, Olbart was in good spirits; as he exchanged words with Vincent, Medium, flailing her arms and legs, dropped to the ground from his arms.

Thus, his hands now freed, Vincent regained his grip on the Yang Sword, and directed his gaze upward.

Thereupon—

Vincent: "—The Witch, is it?"

Within Vincent's field of vision, a woman with fluttering white hair descended upon the battery.

With the Magic Core lost, and a decent amount of the palace's magic crystals having been removed by a large-scale technique, the Witch still landed there, because that was where her objective lay.

Having moved Vincent and the others out of the way, just what was the Witch scheming?

Vincent: "—. Moguro Hagane, is it?"

Olbart: "Hmm? What're ya talkin' about, Yer Excellency? If it's about that Moguro fella, Balleroy snatched 'em up, ain't that right? And yet…"

Vincent: "Fool, what was taken away was merely the Magic Core. Within the palace, parts of the Meteor other than the core remain —"

Medium: "—! Abel-chin!"

With a sensation akin to a thunderclap, a possibility struck Vincent as a flustered Medium tapped him on the shoulder, pointing at the castle.

Before Vincent and the others, as the former grit his teeth at the stimulus, a new alteration was yielded in the Crystal Palace. — Slowly, the Crystal Palace itself began to stand up.

???: "…"

It was Moguro Hagane, the emblematic Meteor of the Vollachian Empire, known as the Crystal Palace.

With the Magic Core, which was the control unit and power source of the Meteor, having been removed, the explosion of the overloaded Magic Core extended into the far reaches of the sky where it had been carried away to.

In short, the individual recognized as Moguro Hagane of the Nine Divine Generals, was simply a single part of the enormous Meteor. Even during the battle for the Imperial Capital before the Great Disaster had occurred, Moguro had demonstrated the palace's true capability without fail—the original defense mechanisms to protect the Magic Core were still in place.

The Witch had exploited this. After the Magic Core had been lost, by forcibly activating the defense mechanisms that were no longer able to fulfill their original role, the Steel Giant—nay, the Magic Crystal Giant, was awoken.

Having stood up, the Crystal Palace—that which could have even been called the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier, while it shared similarities with Moguro Hagane as an individual, it exuded an incomparable aura brimming with malevolence.

Its huge body stood taller than fifty meters, and moreover, its structure was mostly composed of magic crystals, making it the equivalent of a gigantic walking bomb.

Vincent: "If we heedlessly interfere—"

The meaning of Moguro and Balleroy having staked their lives on the line would disappear.

Indeed, it was right after Vincent grit his teeth.

???: "Let us begin."

???: "Yes, Princess."

By no means was it a loud voice. Despite this, it was a well-projected one.

The moment after Vincent and the others wondered if something had passed over their heads, a mighty fist of flame clad in light—that, which was ten meters in size, was unleashed, resolutely striking the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier.

A tremendous wave of heat spread across the sky and the ground, causing the battered Giant Soldier to take a large step backward, and the streets beneath its feet were smashed apart as if they had been swept away by a great army.

It was an exceedingly unorthodox blow, one that did not watch where it was going.

???: “I am told that I do not watch where I am going. As if mineself is thoughtless in the actions I take.”

Vincent: “…”

Medium: “Ah~! Priscilla-chan!”

The Giant Magic Crystal Soldier leaned back significantly, and the one who had unleashed the fist of flame that struck it was Arakiya, flying around midair at high speed while clad in the radiance of a diamond.

Then, letting go of Arakiya’s hand, landing on her feet, and flipping the hem of her dress, the woman—Priscilla, was pointed at by Medium, who announced her presence in a loud voice.

Medium: “Abel-chin Abel-chin, it’s Priscilla-chan!”

Vincent: “Even without raising your voice, we can all see her. — Where were you imprisoned?”

Priscilla: “How typical of you, elder brother, speaking in a manner such that this could never be construed as an emotional reunion. Mineself was in an alternate dimension. An alternate dimension, to which the Witch had carried away the entirety of the palace’s dungeon.”

Vincent: “I see; it is no wonder you could not be found. How did you escape?”

Priscilla: “By setting it ablaze, of course.”

Priscilla's straightforward response made Vincent feel a certain sense of satisfaction.

Considering what the Witch may have subjected her to while she was in captivity, she appeared in all her majestic glory upon this final stage—

Vincent: "—. Priscilla, you…"

For a moment, a sense of unease arose in the back of his mind, and he attempted to ask Priscilla for the answer. But, before he could formulate the question, the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier prevented him from asking.

Arakiya was circling in midair, perturbing the Giant Soldier with her extraordinary power.

In order to kill Arakiya, the entirety of the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier emitted light, and a fire of destruction was unleashed from what ought to be called its right arm.

It might not have been as powerful as the mighty blast of the Magic Crystal Cannon, but it was more than enough to blow away a single life, or half of the Imperial Capital, and targeting Arakiya as she flew through the sky, targeting her, targeting her—.

Priscilla: "—It comes."

As Arakiya was being fired upon, Vincent looked for an opening to intervene and provide cover; but, when he witnessed the same thing spoken of by Priscilla's words, he held his Yang Sword aloft.

At that moment, opposite to the right arm that was being aimed at Arakiya, a light of destruction was fired from the free left arm, and it was mercilessly directed toward Vincent and the others.

Medium: "…"

With Medium behind them, Vincent and Priscilla stood with Yang Swords at the ready. The dazzling crimson glow of the treasured swords became a rising flame, one that confronted the oncoming light head-on.

However, battle after battle, due to this conflict that never ended even if he kept burning the firewood of fighting spirit without respite, blood trickled down the hand in which Vincent held the Yang Sword.

Priscilla: “Why, is this not quite careless of you, elder brother?”

Vincent: “…You have been resting until recently, so muster up your courage for the moment.”

Priscilla: “My goodness, after having poisoned and killed your own sister, even after having driven her away from her own homeland, to think that you still would treat her so cruelly, how much like a Vollachian Emperor you have become, elder brother.”

At that exchange, a tit-for-tat in the midst of a life-threatening struggle against the light of destruction, Vincent bit down on his molars, and tensed his lips, which were about to loosen.

He would admit it. It was pleasant. His heart was elated at the return of the captive Prisca—nay, Priscilla. Even her merciless belittlement could be burned as fuel in the stead of his will to fight.

And thus, upon where Vincent and Prisca were holding their ground —

???: “—O child of mine own children, ‘tis a great service.”

That moment, an impossible third Yang Sword joined the fray, and after a beat, there was an explosion of light, putting an end to the struggle. The one who had accomplished that, swooping in fiercely, was the King of Thorns with a brandish of artistry.

With no trace of tarnish within his splendor, Eugard Vollachia had entered the battle.

Eugard: “Mine Star hath sent mineself to stand in opposition against the awoken Crystal Palace. The twinkling of the magic crystals shall be nigh impossible for all save the Yang Sword to handle. ‘Tis not a matter of thyselves being bereft of strength.”

Vincent: “Even if nothing is added by your presence, that is indeed so. I am grateful for your assistance.”

Priscilla: “Hmm. —The husband of mine Dear Mother’s soul, and the King of Thorns at that.”

Standing side by side, Vincent responded to Eugard’s words with one eye closed, while Priscilla looked at him through the lens of a deep emotion separate to that of receiving assistance.

Vincent also knew that Priscilla, a voracious reader, had read “Iris and the King of Thorns”. But then again, the knowledge in Priscilla’s possession would have been different from that of Vincent, who had been unaware of Yorna = Sandra and Iris = Yorna.

In any case, as Eugard’s eyes narrowed at Priscilla’s stare,

Eugard: “Thou too art a member of this generation’s Imperial Family, art thou not? Thou bearest the likeness of mine first wife… Terriola.”

Priscilla: “—Hmm.”

Priscilla accepted Eugard’s assessment with an unusual lack of words.

Vincent felt a slight sense of unease at Priscilla’s reaction, as she usually despised being compared with others. Never would he think that Priscilla would have the charm of getting excited to meet a character from a fairy tale.

Either way, Vincent, Priscilla, and Eugard were here.

Vincent: “Without an Imperial Selection Ceremony, three Yang Swords is beyond the realm of reason.”

Eugard: “Indeed, ‘tis true. Aside from being turned against one’s siblings, never has there been greater than one Yang Sword manifested. Much less, for that to be against an enemy of the Empire.”

As Vincent and Eugard said, it was a situation that should not have been possible.

This was a scene that had resulted from the Great Disaster which resurrected the undead, and from Vincent's outrageous defiance of the mechanisms of the Imperial Selection Ceremony, the struggle to become Emperor of the Vollachian Empire.

Priscilla: "To be so overcome with emotion for a journey approaching its end, mine elder brother and the King of Thorns truly have too much leeway."

Vincent and Eugard nodded to each other, and standing between the two of them, Priscilla snorted.

With her brightly shining treasured sword in her hand, Priscilla conducted herself as a majestic flame; at this, Vincent and Eugard looked at each other once more, then looked forward.

Medium: "Abel-chin! Priscilla-chan! Yorna-chan's husband!"

Behind the three of them, standing side by side, Medium shouted aloud as she fell back together with Madelyn in her arms and the injured Olbart.

Until now, in the scene, in the loudest voice she had ever shouted—

Medium: "—Do your best!!"

Receiving that, Vincent loosened the corners of his mouth, Eugard deeply nodded, and Priscilla looked up at the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier with her crimson eyes gleaming.

Priscilla: "A matter of course. —You ought to gaze upon mine sword dance in fascination to your heart's delight."

Chapter 74: Love

1

—What was necessary, was to take hold of that which was formless.

Though it was something that was certainly there, it was something that, when touched, would lose its original shape, fading into the distance as it passed through outstretched fingers.

Akin to water, akin to wind, akin to light.

Akin to heat, akin to shadow, akin to a dream.

The more one roused themselves to touch it, the more one feared they might break it, the further away it grew.

???: “Even if you try to touch me, you will not be able to catch hold of me.”

They could not touch the person who was right in front of them, even though they were already undisputedly touching them.

The legs planted upon the ground, the skin basking in the evening sun that illuminated the world in scarlet, the eyes attempting to stare at the opponent directly in front of them, the heat of the flame dwelling within one of those eyes; it could all be certainly felt, and yet.

???: “—Sphinx.”

Calling that name, the role of the Witch, who had plotted everything in hopes of becoming a disaster, would be devoured.

The heinous Authority, which had plundered the lives of many, sowed misfortune, and cloaked its catastrophe, would now justly be utilized to seize happiness, to restore the lives of many people.

In refusal of that, the Witch’s soul was, quite literally, assiduously pursuing a thousand transformations.

???: "…"

Through continually raising the undead, the Witch, Sphinx, had learned the nature of the soul.

In doing so, she had succeeded in reproducing the Witch of Greed, and by altering the nature of her soul, she acquired a means to escape both the flame of the Yang Sword, and the light of Star Eating.

It felt like an outrageous and aimless journey, like searching for a single needle dropped in a great desert, like searching for a Spirit that did not know words and had dissolved away into the atmosphere, like searching for someone who had plunged into the sea, something that did not exist in this world.

???: "You should never go sailing out to the ocean without a map and compass."

Behind Subaru, as he was about to challenge the final decisive bout of the Empire's upheaval, a man who came from his same world called to him.

Covered by a cold, iron helmet, he never displayed his true face. Likely, his eye—Al's eye, was blazing just like Subaru's was, alight with a flame.

At those words of Al's, Subaru realized he was not in a position where he could really rely on himself.

It was as Al had said. If you knew that you were standing in a desert, that you were looking out onto an unfamiliar world, that you were floating upon a great ocean, then you could not afford to be reckless.

???: "—Uau."

The small hand that was holding onto his right hand asserted its presence with heat and touch.

The reason why he knew Spica was there, was not just because they were holding each other's hands. It was because before they had even made contact like this, he had clashed with her many a time in an attempt to understand her.

Again and again, in the endeavor to understand this incomprehensible girl, Natsuki Subaru had—.

Subaru: "My map, is my heart. And my compass, is the two of you. —Spica, Rem."

The more he reminisced, his first days when he was sent to the Vollachian Empire had truly been the worst.

Unable to rely on anyone, he was pushed away by Rem, who he had wanted to stay close to, and was kept close to Spica, who he had tried to keep at a distance; all the while, he had kept on walking, having lost sight of his path.

And yet, even without her memories, Rem was still Rem; even with her past, Spica was still Spica; thus, no matter where he went, what he did, or who he met, Subaru could not be anyone but Subaru.

Subaru: "—Sphinx."

Calling her name so, his hand entwined with Spica's, he attempted to touch the Witch's soul.

—The power of Star Eating, was that of a wish.

'Twas a selfish wish, one that sought salvation from others, imploring the convenience of trying to save someone by means of a power that had only ever served to plunder and disdain, akin to making a wish upon a shooting star.

Yet, that was precisely why, precisely because it was a wish entrusted upon something that was not inherently so, it had to be made in sincerity.

It was not a matter of simply calling upon a name. To truly know somebody's name, and call it out, was to declare that you would rise to the stage with them, and participate in their life.

???: “In that case you absolutely must look your best! Every second of life is lived upon a grand stage to shine! Everyone is an actor, everyone has been cast in a role, so everyone has an obligation to speak iconic lines! Is there such a thing as lines that are fine with not sticking in the hearts of all? Is there such a thing as acting? No such things exist!”

To a stranger, what words must one say to be noticed?

To a stranger, how many times must one reach out their hand to be remembered?

To get someone’s attention, suppose to even touch someone’s soul, naught would commence without first going from being strangers to being acquainted.

For one to let somebody know who they were, he knew of the best method.

???: “My name is Emilia. Just Emilia.”

Indeed. Ahh, of course. Not you, nor yourself. Not me, nor I.

—This was a dialogue between Natsuki Subaru and Sphinx.

Subaru: “—Sphinx.”

No longer was that just a reckless call in order to touch their soul, but rather, it was an appeal to get their attention.

At the timbre that differed from all that had come before, the Witch—nay, the woman who had been walking through a vast desert, crossing through an unfamiliar world, and drifting through a great ocean in order to escape from him, had now turned her attention to him; this he knew.

Subaru: “…”

Although they had been close enough that he could feel her breath, only now did he lock eyes with her for the first time.

No matter what face she wore, as long as he ignored her feelings, he would be unable to reach her deepest place.

Such a natural and commonplace form of communication, would now be put to use in the final showdown of the Empire.

Subaru: “My name is Natsuki Subaru. It’s a name derived from the stars. —What’s yours?”

2

The assortment of three Yang Swords that lay beyond the realm of reason, and the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier that stood in the way of the Empire’s tomorrow.

Each concealed extraordinary power as they clashed against one another, and the setting sun befalling the Empire was overturned by the sun upon the surface that rejected all notions of dusk, its radiance shining light upon the whole Imperial Capital.

Giant Soldier: “…”

The magic crystals sinisterly gleamed, and their unleashed light of destruction colored the streets of the Imperial Capital in darkness, but, without having exchanged any words, the Sword Wolves had scattered to three different directions, and managed to evade it in an agile manner.

The vegetation and flowers that had basked in the shadowy light of the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier were brought into a state of suspended life, and in the midst of that, the King of Thorns dashed up to the rooftop of a building, and targeted the leg of the inorganic golem that was the Giant Soldier.

The dazzling brandish of the sword moved to mow down the defenseless leg of the Giant Soldier—it was deflected by a firm impact.

???: “Hoh, so you were shy enough to cover up your bare skin?”

Protected by the sword of her ancestor, the King of Thorns, the Sun Princess laughed. Her crimson eyes had ascertained the deployment of white cloth weaved with Mana to protect the colossal body of the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier.

Unlike the Steelman Moguro Hagane, was it not rather a Witch or a woman who would clad themselves in clothes?

???: “Ready yourselves!”

Contrasting the Sun Princess as she laughed so, the Wise Emperor shouted with a rigid expression.

Immediately after, an enormous shimmering sword sliced down, and its afterglow attempted to hunt down the enemy bustling about its legs, tearing through and reshaping the streets of the Imperial Capital in a range of over one kilometer.

That act had been performed by a pillar of magic crystals held in the arm of the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier.

It was one of the pillars that had been constructed around the Crystal Palace at a height matching that of the Giant Soldier’s, and as it was transformed into a deadly greatsword with a blade of fifty meters, its sense of scale was such that it would not lose out to the Yang Sword.

However—

Sun Princess: “Very well. Flashiness is to mine liking.”

Thrusting the Yang Sword into the blade of the brandished magic crystal greatsword, the Sun Princess rode upon it.

The swung tip of the sword was raised to a height of over one hundred meters off the ground, so she glared into the head of the Giant Soldier—the former battery of the Magic Crystal Cannon, and the site that had become the current throne of the Witch.

The throne had become like a closed flower bud of magic crystals, and she was unable to make direct eye contact with the Witch.

In that case, until she could tempt the Witch to look at herself—

Sun Princess: “How about I show you some dazzling "entertahinmunt"?!"

That instant, in response to the scintillation of the Yang Sword, the magic crystal greatsword in the Giant Soldier's hand burst into flames in the blink of an eye.

With the purple swell of an inferno, the fifty-meter-long pillar of magical essence turned into light, dazzling the eyes of the world.

Of course, by burning the greatsword, she had lost her foothold, so the Sun Princess was falling headfirst towards the ground—extending a white arm towards the heavens, the heavenly maiden caught the Sun Princess out of the sky with a flap of her wings of fire.

Sun Princess: "It is a great service."

The praise of the Sun Princess produced a smile upon the heavenly maiden's cheeks, and granted power to her heart. As the two soared through the sky pulling the bands of light behind them, the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier drew out a second greatsword, and moved in an attempt to slash forth—

King of Thorns: "'Tis to Mine Star and mine peoples, that I dedicate this brandish—"

Wise Emperor: "Do not look down upon the apex of the Sword Wolves!"

Aiming for the slender torso of the Giant Soldier, two streaks of swordlight slashed obliquely upwards from its left and right.

The combination technique of the King of Thorns and the Wise Emperor destroyed the cloth deployed to protect the body of the Giant Soldier head-on, and with a white flash, the swords were relentlessly driven into its large body.

As the treasured swords struck the magic crystals, a pleasant tune of shattering resounded through the skies of the Imperial Capital as if a scream from the Giant Soldier.

Giant Soldier: "…"

Making a creaking noise, the greatsword shattered, and the entire body of the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier began to fissure. While that was proof that it was being cornered by extraordinary beings, it was also the impetus for the Giant Soldier to revise its fighting style.

Through the countless cracks formed throughout its body, it began to shine, and in the next moment, aiming in every direction with quite literally no blind spots, the rain of light—nay, the undodgeable mist of light was unleashed.

If it was raindrops, then there was the Sword Saint, Blue Lightning, and Admirer who could evade it.

But, if that were to become particles of mist, then even those transcendent beings would have trouble evading.

Therefore—

Wise Emperor: "—Yang Sword, Vollachia."

Sun Princess: "—Yang Sword, Vollachia."

King of Thorns: "—Yang Sword, Vollachia."

One point in the sky and two points on the ground; for a total of three points, the treasured swords of crimson, which had increased their radiance, birthed a wall of flame. By means of a scintillating flame that scorched anything it made contact with, the misty drizzle of light that gouged out anything it made contact with was painted over.

They had defended against the Witch's destruction, however, the fissures throughout the body of the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier expanded, and just as a snake would shed its old skin, the Giant Soldier exfoliated a purple gleam, and its radiance grew a level deeper.

As to not allow the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier to fire off its next move, an undulation of power differing from that of the Yang Sword spread out—slowly, as if giant unseen fists were being drawn out of the ground, the buildings that made up the cityscape of the Imperial Capital rose out of the ground; ten, twenty, nearing a total of one-hundred, they surrounded the Giant Soldier.

The one who had done that, was the heavenly maiden who was holding the Sun Princess with one arm, and directing the other towards the Giant Soldier—

Heavenly Maiden: “I, am the princess’s dog.”

Sun Princess: “A splendid attitude to possess.”

Immediately after, the maelstrom of buildings swirled, storming towards the body of the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier as if to sink its teeth into it.

In response to that tempest, the Giant Soldier reached out and grabbed a magic crystal pillar in each of its arms, and taking a dual-wielding stance of greatswords, its colossal body began to rapidly gyrate above the waist—it performed a sword dance of destruction, ruination, and pulverization.

As an exceedingly mighty sword dance, it not only cleared away the onslaught of buildings, but also became a tornado permeating with the mist of light, attempting a triumphant return to the Imperial Capital of Lupugana.

Wise Emperor: “Just how many times in this day am I to witness the end of this world?”

Before the unimaginable storm of swords, the Wise Emperor heaved a sigh, however, moving forward with his sable gaze not the slightest bit deterred, he put his blade against the gale devastating the Imperial Capital, the Empire, and the entire world.

Simultaneously, the blades of the Sun Princess and the King of Thorns overlapped with the Wise Emperor’s aim, and together, they brought the tempest of swords to a halt.

Wise Emperor: “—Hk.”

Blood spilling from his lips as he grit his teeth, the Wise Emperor took on the burden of splendor as he held his ground. Appearing before the two who had similarly defended against the sword storm, the resonance of light and power began to engulf the tempest of swords in flames.

The tornado clad in violet light was scorched by the flame of the Yang Sword, and gradually shifted in color. The droplets of mist within the blade maelstrom began to spark, and before long it was transformed into a pillar of fire tall enough to pierce the heavens.

It was superb to the utmost degree. To think such a thing could be accomplished by the incomplete Yang Sword, unable to display its true value—

Wise Emperor: "…"

Tightly grasping the Yang Sword, the Wise Emperor narrowed his eyes at the rising pillar of fire. He stood before the brilliant blaze of flame, the force of its fire having strengthened by a noticeable amount.

He had done so while fully understanding that in the midst of battle, halting one's legs and diverting one's attention to the act of thinking was a foolish deed.

Immediately afterwards—

???: "—Love me."

The scorched sword tempest of light was perforated, and the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier, without any time for respite, jumped out. The brandish of the Giant Soldier's greatsword was parried by the kick of a tall geta.

A beat later, basking in the resultant gust of wind, and switching over to a brilliant manner of beauty and dance as she waved the hem of her kimono mid-air, was the Flamboyant, harboring a flame in one of her eyes.

Flamboyant: "…"

Still targeting the Flamboyant, who was unable to move in the midst of the air, the Giant Soldier attempted to scythe upwards with the greatsword opposite to the one that had been parried. However, that too, would not connect.

King of Thorns: “I shan’t allow thee to lay hands upon Mine Star so easily.”

The intervening King of Thorns swept the Flamboyant into his arms, and receiving the attack head-on with the vertical stance of his Yang Sword, he blazingly cut through the blade of the greatsword.

The afterstory to “Iris and the King of Thorns”, resurrected in the present day; as a result of that, the tip of the greatsword bounced off the ground, damaging the Imperial Capital as it flew from north to south.

Immediately after their attention had been turned to the south of the Imperial Capital—a white light beamed north through the city.

???: “—PREAHHHHHH!”

In the southern sky, flapping its white wings, the Dragon, clad in the very essence of an overcast sky, roared.

Disregarding the values of life and death, the Cloud Dragon who only fought for the sake of their beloved changed sides, sent forth a breath in opposition to the ruination.

Taking that head-on, the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier was knocked back a great deal. Being pushed back, the Giant Soldier thrust its sharp feet into the street and held its ground; resonating with the remaining magic crystal pillar, a shrill noise was produced as the pillar was shattered into countless small swords, and they began to set up a formation of swords so as to protect the Giant Soldier in a manner similar to the white cloth from earlier.

Even now, the Witch’s, the Great Disaster’s will to fight had yet to back down. In that case, the same could be said for this side.

Wise Emperor: “…”

Present at the absolute center of the Vollachian Empire’s all-out war, the Wise Emperor slightly directed his attention outside.

Even if he was limited in ability, even if he was aware that he was a weak individual who would easily be blown away, the man who could not stop himself from participating in situations where others were risking their lives was nowhere to be seen.

Wise Emperor: “No matter the case, it is likely that you have also gone and thrown yourself into a reckless battle.”

Placing a certain sort of trust and expectation into his words, the Wise Emperor heightened the radiance of his treasured sword, and as he glared at the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier brimming with insidiousness, he stepped forth.

Wise Emperor: “Advance, O Generals of mine selection. —In the eyes of the Great Disaster, we are naught more than inconsequential garbage.”

3

—Natsuki Subaru and Spica faced off against the Witch, Sphinx.

As Subaru and Spica strove to seize the soul of the vindictive and tenacious Witch, Al’s mission was to keep the enemy at bay so as to prevent any interference.

???: “Ah, bring it on! Nobody’s gonna beat me or the Princess!”

Spurring himself on while roaring thus, Al continued to swing his improvised dao.

Behind Al, Sphinx was seated with her back against the wall, and flumped before her with his legs crossed was Subaru, who remained facing her head-on.

What Subaru was attempting to do in cooperation with Spica was an idea beyond the pale even for Al.

Hearing of the terrible idea of relying on the Authority of Gluttony had made Al question their sanity, but in fact, discerning that Subaru would be able to do it, Priscilla had ordered them to proceed.

If that is what would lead to the future, then Al would support them to his utmost. And ensure that it was achieved.

???: “Ul Goa.”

From above Al’s head, Roswaal flying freely across the sky rained down fire.

Though it was not the highest level of magic, casting that much magic in rapid succession was no ordinary feat. However, even his extraordinary magical prowess was unable to overwhelm the opponent he was presently attempting to restrain.

???: “Ul Huma.”

Countering the pouring rain of fire, was a barrage of water that had been shot into the sky from the ground.

In terms of number and effective range, both being the world’s top-class users, this was magical warfare at a level rarely seen in modern times—The Magician and the Witch had each turned the world into their ally, double-crossed it, and used it against each other wantonly.

Though Priscilla had vociferously asserted her presence, it was not the case that all the Witches had been drawn to her like moths to a flame. Some of the Witches, realizing that the Yang Sword was not the only thing they needed to fear, had joined in this juncture.

However—

???: “If that’s how it is, so be it, in fact!”

With the appearance of a young girl and the movements of an athlete, Beatrice, with her right eye aflame, had cast Yin magic.

Instantly, her upraised hands birthed a pale purple haze over the whole area, slowing down the movements of the attacking Witches as well as the undead that, lacking self-awareness, had impulsively charged forth upon her command.

Al took advantage of that nice assist from Beatrice with great vigor.

Al: “Your stars were bad!”

The exquisite magic control weakened the enemy, bestowing a period of invincibility solely upon Al. As he beheaded the pitiable undead one after the other, at Beatrice who had supported him, Al winked through his helmet.

That very moment, at the wink that should not have been visible to her, Beatrice had a change of expression.

Beatrice: “This is bad, I suppose!”

At her words, Al turned around with a “Huh?”, and saw something—a massive fragment with a purple glow, in the scale of tens of meters, hurtling towards them as it skipped across the ground.

Al had no idea that this was the slashed-off tip of the great sword wielded by the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier that Priscilla and the others were fighting. What he did know, was that a direct hit from that fragment, would result in Al along with Subaru and the others behind him altogether becoming minced meat—

Al: “Must—”

Escape with Subaru and the others from the trajectory of the flying fragment.

How many attempts would be needed, he did not know, and neither did he have the time to make such an estimation. Everything was more of trial and error at the precipice of life and death rather than empty theory.

Al: “Update Matrix, Thought Experiment—”

???: “—Don’t’cha give up jus’ like that!!”

A moment later, a powerful arm plunged into the fragment that looked as if it were passing by Al, intercepting it.

A roar and a torrential wind escaped behind him, but the flying debris was held in place. It was Garfiel who did it, biting his sharp canine teeth.

Garfiel: “Sorry for bein’ late, Beatrice! Captain…”

Beatrice: “You did well meeting us in fact! Protecting Subaru and Spica is our win condition, I suppose.”

Garfiel: “Yes ma’am! I get that loud n’ clear! Just like, “If ya whisper of love, follow in the example of the King of Thorns.”“

Kicking at the huge piece of debris that he had stopped, Garfiel punched his fists together in front of his chest. Garfiel also had his eyes, not figuratively but literally, burning and his whole body was filled with vigor in response to his will to fight.

???: “—Retreat: Required.”

A quiet voice announced the Witch’s entry into the battle, and Al and the others looked up to see a scene of swirling lights in the sky. It was as if the vortex of light had some kind of gravitational pull, with the surrounding buildings and debris floating up, being swallowed by the vortex, and then crushed and turned into specks of light.

The power of destruction was felt in the specks of light themselves, and all it needed was the Witch to speak, and they would raise the ground—

???: “—Halibel-sama, please would you kindly,”

???: “That’s fine. I’m always happy ta help a hard workin’ girl.”

Suddenly, two different voices were heard, and in the next moment, a cannonball in a kimono—no, a deer girl, flew by.

The girl spun herself in the air and kicked the Witch’s back just as she was on the verge of raining down the specks of light. The momentum and force of the kick shattered the poor Witch in half.

Halibel: “Yep yep, that’s a great feat. With a girl like you, the future of the Empire’ll be in good hands.”

With the same momentum, the girl was about to dive into the vortex of light but was saved just in time by the jet black wolf man.

The wolf man neutralized the vortex of light the Witch had prepared with a quick piercing hand, softly catching the girl with the same hand before he landed to the ground.

The same wolf man who threw the girl and the same wolf man who caught her was responsible for her confusion.

Al: “A new monster has joined the fray! A Cecilus type?!”

Halibel: “Can’t deny that, but that’s an unpleasant way of classifyin’ me.”

Girl: “It has been a while. I am sorry to be presumptuous, Cecilus-sama and Halibel-sama are so different in their nature that it would be disrespectful. —Why don’t we protect Schwartz-sama?”

Al: “Oh, Yeah. You’re quick on the uptake! And I’ll definitely welcome strong guys. Let’s protect Bro together!”

Halibel: “Yea. Looks like we’re almost at the endgame, n’ it looks like we even received this boon.”

Tanza, a girl in a kimono seen in the Demon City—greeted the wolf man Halibel. Both of them had Priscilla’s blessing in their eyes as a flame, which was very encouraging.

Additionally—

Beatrice: “I don’t know where this came from or from who, but we just received the perfect gift, in fact.”

Saying this, Beatrice touched a huge piece of debris with her small palm. —The rubble that Garfiel had stopped was not just a piece of rubble, but a block of magic crystal stone.

Beatrice disassembled it into Mana in one swoop, and about a hundred swords made of amethyst crystals appeared all around her at once, and the sword dance began with the movement of her hand as she lifted it.

Beatrice: “Betty will use her abundant Mana in this way, I suppose. You guys, if you so much as leave a scratch on Subaru, you will be mercilessly punished in fact.”

Tanza: “If that were to happen, I will be the one to deliver Beatrice-sama’s punishment!”

Al shrugged when he saw both Beatrice and Tanza’s sparking gazes.

—It seemed like Subaru’s unharmed state should also be included in the updated matrix’s conditions, he thought.

4

Thus, protected by Al and the others, Subaru was engaged in the utmost extremity of concentration.

He was not unconscious, nor was he in a dream. Nevertheless, the battle unfolding in his vicinity was outside the realm of his consciousness, and his consciousness itself was not within the Imperial Capital.

At the present moment, the whereabouts of the existence known as Natsuki Subaru resided not in the the wartorn Imperial Capital, but instead in a world of white, where none were present save himself, Spica, who was holding his hand, and Sphinx, who was facing the two of them directly.

—It was a space that could easily be mistaken for that Hall of Memories.

Subaru: “For me, I guess it’s mainly a place of bad memories.”

It was the place to which he had once arrived without meaning to, the place where his Memories had been devoured against his will.

The memories of giving Emilia and Beatrice a thoroughly difficult time, and of putting Ram and Julius into a state beyond repair, were still fresh in his mind.

Above all, this was the place where “Natsuki Subaru” had no choice but to disappear.

Subaru: “But, that’s exactly why I can be here in my entirety.”

Spica: “Uu?”

Subaru: “You don’t need to know about this place. As far as you’re concerned, it’s quite a bit of a mess. And that’s fine.”

Smiling at Spica’s puzzled expression, Subaru proceeded to take a deep breath.

A white, tranquil space; the reason why Subaru was facing Spica and Sphinx in this place, was not because they were all companions whose names began with the letter S.

It was because all of them harbored a deep connection with the “self” whom they were not, and had thus wanted to converse as mutuals with no outsiders present.

Sphinx: “Sphinx, is the name of a monster that was in my creator’s knowledge.”

Subaru: “Hm? Ah, the derivation of your name.”

Sphinx: “Indeed. If my creator’s desires had been realized from the beginning, I would have ended up going by the name Echidna. Since that did not happen, the need arose for a different name.”

Directly facing him, Sphinx told Subaru about her name’s origin in a surprisingly calm manner.

The Sphinx—as Subaru knew it, was a monster with the body of a lion and the head of a man. It guarded the pyramids and gave off the impression that it was good at giving riddles.

Subaru: “Four legs in the morning, two legs at noon, and three legs in the evening… Do you know what this is?”

Sphinx: “—? Would it not be a monster? Or a shape-shifting monster, perhaps.”

Subaru: “You’d think so. By the way, the answer is actually a human.”

When he told them the clichéd riddle, both Sphinx and Spica frowned. It was as if to say they were not satisfied with that answer, but he would have liked to direct their complaints to the other Sphinx who had devised the riddle.

In any case—

Subaru: “Thanks for telling me that. In exchange, I have something I want to show you as well.”

Sphinx: “You want to show me something?”

Subaru: “Yeah. —Although I’m not sure if you’ll be happy with it.”

After prefacing that, Subaru smiled faintly and then glanced at Spica. As if to allay Subaru’s apprehensions, she lifted her hand, still holding on to his, and gave an “Uu!”.

This was Spica’s yell of encouragement, saying she had come to terms with her own “self” a step ahead of Subaru.

—When one closed their eyes in the Hall of Memories, they could strongly smell their own scent.

It was just something he had heard, but apparently memory and smell were closely intertwined. Many memories were associated with smell, so that may have been why the Hall of Memories gave such an impression.

In any case, following his own scent as he walked through the faux Hall of Memories, Subaru tried to slowly reel in that which was uncertain, and bring it to that which was certain.

Amidst his many Return by Death attempts, Olbart, who had lost both arms, apologized that it would be difficult to undo the infantilization with a casual tone of voice—So instead of an apology, Subaru sought instruction.

His vessel and soul were eager to return to normal. Thus, all that remained was to let scent guide his way.

If he could do that—

Subaru: "—My name is Natsuki Subaru. Throughout Heaven and Earth, the one and only broke beyond compare."

Indeed, the voice, which was cracking foolish jokes, became a little deeper and lower. His eye level changed, and the feel of Spica's hand in his grip suddenly became smaller.

However, it was the opposite of that. Spica did not shrink. —Subaru, had changed.

Subaru: "…"

It was an intuitive change. His soul had been in a constant state of trying to return to its own original form.

By means of the growing pains from his heart and soul going from child to adult, flowing through his nerves and veins, the deep emotion Subaru felt upon accomplishing that quite literally seeped into each and every cell in his body.

And thus, having regained his self in a sense absolute, Subaru went face to face with Sphinx once again—nay, he went face to face with her for the very first time.

Sphinx: "—Nice to meet you, Natsuki Subaru."

Intuiting Subaru's intentions, Sphinx, having observed his transformation, spoke greetings upon their first meeting. Upon hearing that, Subaru thought perhaps she was quite capable of talking things out after all.

With his restored mind, body, heart, and soul, Natsuki Subaru thought so.

Subaru: "But, we have to settle things nonetheless."

Sphinx: "Indeed, that we must. —Parting: Required."

Subaru: "…Why is that?"

Sphinx: "What do you mean, why?"

Subaru: “Why, did you try to do everything all on your own?”

That was Subaru’s honest question.

The Witch, Sphinx, gave rise to the Great Disaster to destroy Vollachian Empire, toying with many lives, and had carried out a mountain of deeds that were likely inexcusable. But, had it truly been necessary for her to do so?

If Sphinx’s purpose lay only in the reproduction of her creator—the Witch of Greed, then.

Subaru: “There must have been different ways that you could have gone about it. You ended up picking the wrong one. If only you hadn’t done that, we could have…”

Sphinx: “Are you suggesting that we could have avoided fighting? That would not have been possible. Reconsideration: Required.”

Subaru: “Why not?!”

Sphinx: “Because there was a motive other than the reproduction of my creator, certainly present within myself.”

Looking down at herself, Sphinx smiled faintly as she proclaimed a definite distinction.

That smile, perceiving it as a proof that Sphinx was celebrating her very own sense of self, Subaru could no longer oppose her standpoint.

But, at the same time, Natsuki Subaru definitely, clearly located it.

Spica: “Uau.”

Subaru: “Yeah, I know. —Thanks, Spica.”

Spica called out to Subaru, as he bit his lip. She probably would have liked to react to Subaru returning to his original size, but she endured that, and had thoroughly concentrated

He wished to respond to those feelings. —Even if he had to go to Hell to do so.

Subaru: “—Sphinx.”

Sphinx: “What is it? No matter what you say or do, I—”

Subaru: “Happy Birthday.”

As he declared so, he touched Sphinx, whose eyes were wide at the unfamiliar congratulations.

And then—

5

Basking in the wind which carried a pleasant evening fragrance, Priscilla gave her cheers to existence itself.

She had been elated by the symposium between Sphinx, who, using the mechanisms of the Crystal Palace Meteor, had gone berserk with the upstood Giant Magic Crystal Soldier, and the Generals, who had been assembled by Vincent.

She wished to continue beholding it, as a dream that one would not wake up from, as a program that would not come to a close, as a story with no “endhing”.

However, since that childish “iigo” was not appropriate for the curtain falling on this battle—

Priscilla: “In a manner most befitting, it is I who shall lower the curtain.”

Saying that, Priscilla let go of Arakiya’s hand as they flew above the clouds, and began falling through the sky.

Plummeting straight downwards, Priscilla returned the Yang Sword to the sheath of the sky, and basking in the setting sun with her arms spread out, she closed her eyes.

Even if she could not see them, the souls of those with whom she had shared the flame of her soul were transmitted to her as if whispered intimacies from the world.

Arakiya, clad in bands of light, repelled the Witch's magic, and the Dragon, covered in armor of cumulus, contained her so that the damage would not spread outside of the city. Standing harmoniously with the husband she had reunited with, Yorna was busy smashing up the ground in a radical expression of love, having no qualms about sharing in her daughter's eye.

And, as an incompetent older brother, the Vollachian Emperor, Vincent Vollachia—

Vincent: "Tardy."

With a brief utterance, he undauntedly looked up at the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier with his sable eyes. The Giant Soldier raised its two magic crystal greatswords overhead, and was about to attempt cutting down the apex of the Empire along with the entire Imperial Capital.

Thereupon, from behind Vincent came Lightning, piercing through —

???: "—Bear witness, Observers of the heavens above. —Witness the choices the world shall… nay! Witness as it chooses me!"

Two streaks, one the white gleam of a blade, and the other a black light of severance; the flash of blades capable of severing the light of stars and the logic of curses bolted through the sky.

With that, the omen of the Imperial Capital's devastation, the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier had its arms lopped off from its shoulders. With a thunderous tremor and eruption of smoke, the brilliance of the magic crystals was reduced to dust, and the flash of the Dream Sword and Fiend Sword severed their existence.

Even so, the Giant Soldier, having lost its arms, still wielded the countless swords floating in its vicinity, and was attempting to prune the defiant will of the Empire.

Of course, that aim also included the falling Priscilla.

???: “—Priscilla Barielle.”

Enough to paint over the hue of the sky, the light of ruination forcibly shone through her eyelids. Sensing that it was approaching herself, Priscilla opened her eyes, and reached her hands out to her left and right sides.

The next instant, Priscilla caught the Yang Swords of the Wise Emperor and the King of Thorns in her right and left hands respectively, and with a swing of the twin swords, she scorched the Witch’s magic crystal swords to naught in one fell swoop. The swords, bursting into flames in a chain reaction, swirled about the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier, blanketing the sky in a crimson curtain of flame.

Priscilla: “…”

For a moment, Priscilla’s figure disappeared from everybody’s sight —the figure of the Sun Princess perforated the curtain of flame, and shot directly towards the sealed magic crystal bud within the Giant Magic Crystal Soldier’s head.

It was an act accomplished thanks to the three Yang Swords—riding upon her own Yang Sword, which had been launched out of the sheath of the sky, Priscilla soared with the Yang Swords of her brother and forefather in hand.

—The Yang Sword upon which Priscilla rode, its tip thrust into the magic crystal bud, and tearing through the closed flower petals, it made its way inside.

???: “—Priscilla Barielle.”

That instant, the barrage of light orbs, intended to intercept her, was cleared away by the King of Thorns’s Yang Sword.

As flame enshrouded her field of vision, Priscilla stepped down onto the floor and advanced.

???: “—Priscilla Barielle.”

Simultaneously, stepping past the flames which enshrouded her vision, Sphinx rushed forth with a sword of light in hand.

The two met gazes, and Priscilla burned away her opponent's sword with the Wise Emperor's Yang Sword.

Sphinx: "—Priscilla Barielle."

Eyes burning with fury, Sphinx had called out her name many times, to which Priscilla smiled. Perceiving that smile within her vision, Sphinx leaped backwards, and readied her two hands.

Birthing ten blades of light upon her fingers, she rampaged about within the bud; reflecting irregularly off of the inside of the magic crystals, the kaleidoscope of Death gleamed with beauty.

At the chaotic and emotional scintillation, Pirscilla raised both her hands towards the heavens.

Then, gripping the treasured sword protruding beyond her outstretched hands—

Sphinx: "—PRISCILLA BARIELLE!"

Priscilla: "That, is mine name."

Within the sonorous bellow of that voice, there was a certain heat, tinged with enmity. Thereupon, Priscilla swung down the brilliantly dazzling Yang Sword.

—The flash of scintillating flame, that light reminiscent of sunrise or daybreak, of a new dawn, ardently shone upon her life. As the interior of the magic crystal bud was illuminated, it began to bloom.

That was to say, the sprouting of a soul—

Priscilla: "You ought stand proud, Sphinx."

Sphinx: "…"

Priscilla: "As none other than your very self, you have fulfilled the role of mine enemy. —It is a great service."

Adjusting her posture after swinging the Yang Sword, Priscilla spoke thus to Sphinx, who stood before her. Receiving that, Sphinx narrowed her black eyes, and,

Sphinx: “…Despite having failed to succeed, is that so?”

Priscilla: “A matter of course. Just whom do you take mineself for?”

Scoffing at the question, Priscilla responded so.

At her answer, Sphinx lowered the edges of her eyebrows, and heaving a sigh with an expression that had lost its sternness,

Sphinx: “Priscilla Barielle. —The fateful enemy of myself, the Great Disaster, Sphinx.”

As a being who had found meaning in her existence differing from the original reason for which she had been created, she smiled.

—That was the conclusion between the Sun Princess, Priscilla Barielle, and the Great Disaster, Sphinx.

6

Once, before, she had nearly perished.

At that time, too, there was an objective she had been unable to fulfill, however, she accepted with equanimity that things would come to an end without her achieving it; as calm as night would be as it received the setting sun, her inner feelings were of no value.

With that in mind, what about now?

???: “Just like before, I am disappearing without fulfilling my wish, and yet—”

Her heart was like that of a child, eagerly yearning not for the setting sun, but for dawn, daybreak, the rising sun; she could feel it beating within her body devoid of pulsations, alight with a definite “ardor”.

And thus, that was undoubtedly the true nature of the foul “ardor” that had radiated within the eyes of the cold, parched monster that had been bound to that place for decades; she had been taught so.

???: “Thank you. For teaching me who I am. —Gratitude: Required.”

Her undefined, uncertain, and ambiguous self was established as “herself”, and even though that was quite far removed from what she had initially thought she had to become, she was not against it.

Once again, it shall be stated. This existence, born as a monster, was no substitute for the Witch of Greed.

And so, now that she was disappearing without having fulfilled her desire, a desire that was hers and hers alone, she spoke thus.

???: “—Ahh, how frustrating.”

7

???: “—Sphinx.”

As Subaru called out her name, Spica, having touched her soul, devoured her way of being.

The moment Star Eating had been activated, welling up within Subaru was a peaceful sense of satisfaction and accomplishment, along with a feeling of loneliness. It was, perhaps, something close to the kind of loneliness felt at the end of a dinner filled with laughter.

Truly fulfilling, and yet just a tiny bit unsatisfying; it was that kind of moment.

???: “…”

He had congratulated her on being born as her own individual life, and with that same mouth, he had helped devour her.

However, that was not out of hatred. Neither was it that he wanted to make her suffer, nor dishearten her. There was just no other way for this to be settled.

The resolution between Subaru's group and Sphinx; this was the only way it could be.

Spica: "Uu!"

With a rustling sound, Sphinx was turning to dust as she disappeared. As Subaru witnessed her demise, Spica, who had helped him to bring it about, called out to him.

To Spica, too, words of gratitude and appreciation were in order.

Subaru: "Besides, now that the enemy's top brass is no more, Abel and the others will also—"

It was at the moment he said that, and was about to stand up.

???: "—Subaru."

The voice, unexpectedly heard, ignored Subaru's eardrums and cranium, and resonated directly within his brain.

That had always been the case. That beautiful voice of a silver bell, had always laid Natsuki Subaru bare. And, having made the exposed Subaru turn around, it had brought with it the urge to burst into tears.

Subaru: "…"

Unable to speak, as Subaru stood up and turned around, the red evening glow illuminated his eyes. That sunset, which had brought with it the afterglow of victory, had now become a hindrance. —For within that light, there was a face he longed to see.

Her long, silver hair that resembled the dew drops of a night sky's moon, and her eyes of amethyst, the most beautiful jewel in the world; from the top of her head to the tips of her toes, there was not one bit that he did not find lovely.

Spica: "Uau."

Subaru was almost in tears from the impulse that had welled up within him, and Spica, who had let go of his hand, patted him on the back.

With the touch of that palm providing the impetus and the courage, Subaru broke out into a run.

Passing by Al as he gave him a thumbs up, being seen off by Halibel as he puffed his tobacco smoke, patting the shoulder of Garfiel as he bawled his eyes out in Subaru's stead, poking the cheek of Beatrice as she held back her urge to jump onto him, giving a wry smile to Tanza as she characteristically deeply bowed her head, he was then covered by Roswaal, who had descended from the sky, took off his jacket and draped it over him.

Roswaal: "Subaru-kun, aren't you compleeetly~ naked?"

Having grown back to his original size, Subaru's clothes from his childlike state no longer fit. If this had been his original world, he would have lacked the clothes needed to go buy clothes.

But, this was not his original world; this was another world, one in which Subaru now lived.

???: "Suba—"

The girl who had broken into a jog to rush over to him from the other direction had tried to open her mouth, but Subaru, without slowing down, went ahead and embraced her outright, rendering her silent.

With his arms now at their proper original size, tightly hugging her slender body—

Subaru: "—EMT."

Emilia: "…Stupid."

Subaru had embraced her head-on, and Emilia, who was slightly surprised, smiled knowing that there was no helping it.

Of course, he had also been elated for their reunion in the Vollachian Empire. Being able to touch her again after having been separated, Subaru had keenly felt the depth of his feelings for her from the bottom of his heart.

But, as expected, this was different. —Now, in mind, body, and soul, this was Natsuki Subaru.

Emilia: “Welcome back, Subaru.”

Subaru: “Yeah. —I’m back, Emilia-tan.”

Thus spoke Emilia, who had perceived that same fulfillment of Subaru's soul.

And then, in the distance beyond the two sharing in the joy of their reunion, the Crystal Palace dazzlingly burst into flames.

—For the Great Disaster of the Vollachian Empire, which had gone on for a long, long time, that had been the closing ceremony.

Curtains Close:
Priscilla Barielle

1

—The Great Disaster averted, the Sacred Vollachian Empire had at last escaped ruin.

With the Imperial Capital at its center, the hosts of undead that had deployed throughout the entire Empire lost its leadership, and fell apart; as they scattered and fled, the battle approached its curtain's close. However, even though their commander, Sphinx, was no more, and the Mana that had been provided to the Sacrament of the Immortal King by the Stone had been severed, until they were granted death once more, the resurrected undead still struggled onward with the entirety of their new lives.

Although the struggle against the Great Disaster had concluded in this manner, the scars it had been left behind would never disappear.

It was quite possible that, from here on out within the Vollachian Empire, the undead that had managed to escape would frequently cause trouble. Even without that, even with the war itself having ended, everything that had been influenced by it would never truly be put right once and for all.

Naturally, the towns and regions that had become warfronts, and the people and things that had become casualties, would all need to be verified so that they could be processed and returned to their pre-war state.

And sadly, things such as "heroic reveries" were of no use to the post-war recovery.

???: "So, it's unexpectedly true that I've got nothing to do…"

???: "—What was that? Do you have complaints towards mineself?"

???: “It’s not that I’m complaining, it’s just, like, a strange feeling?”

As Subaru grumbled that out, walking alongside him was a beautiful woman—Priscilla, and he had carefully selected the words that he directed towards her profile. In response to Subaru’s reply, she used a fan she held to cover her lips, a small “Hmph” slipping from her mouth.

To that response, one he was well-accustomed to, Subaru tilted his head in wonder as he walked alongside her.

—Presently, the place in which Subaru and Priscilla were walking together, was within the walls of the Fortified City of Garkla.

The greatest fortress within the Empire, its ramparts had become extensively damaged by the advance of the undead hordes, with the citizenry and army unquestioningly working day and night to move forward the repair work. To walk alongside Priscilla in such a cityscape, it was a strange happenstance.

Both Subaru and Priscilla had been participants at the battleground of the Imperial Capital of Lupugana in the decisive bout against the Great Disaster, Sphinx, and it was their anxiety for the wellbeing of those that they had left behind, and the disastrous spectacle of the Imperial Capital, unfit for settlement, that had prompted their return to this city.

Priscilla: “The Crystal Palace, once extolled as the most beautiful in the world, is now naught but ash, and the water yet contained within the reservoir still threatens to cascade forth and sweep away the city. As things stand, it shall take a century to restore the Imperial Capital.”

Subaru: “Things there were on a pretty huge scale… hold on a sec, should the person responsible for turning the palace into ash really be saying that?”

Priscilla: “As soon as it began to rampage as a golem, even without mine actions being enacted, the recovery of its palace form was no longer a possibility. As such, mineself used it as a ceremonial flame to herald their send-off, for they had fully carried out the role of Great Disaster.”

Subaru: “—A ceremonial bonfire for Sphinx, huh.”

Priscilla responded calmly, and as Subaru thought about the enemy, Sphinx, he cast his eyes downward.

This was not something that anyone who participated in the battle against the Great Disaster could say, but at the very end, in order to activate the effects of Spica’s Star Eating, Subaru faced off against Sphinx directly.

At that moment, Subaru and Sphinx had laid their souls bare to one another.

That was probably why. Subaru could not hate Sphinx, and regard her as evil from the bottom of his heart. At least, she was not an unforgivable enemy like the Sin Archbishops, that was what he felt.

And it was something similar to this, which he thought Priscilla may have felt—.

Priscilla: “It was a truly magnificent pillar of flame. After all, it is truly elating to see something burn.”

Subaru: “Nah, what if it’s just that you like to burn things?!”

Priscilla: “My, so noisy. Do not suddenly use such a loud voice. That is just like Al, is it not?”

At first glance, it sounded like an insult, but Priscilla’s lips were curled into a smile as she spoke. It was a difficult relationship to grasp, but she cared about her Knight, Al, in her own way.

That much could not be questioned after the reunion of Priscilla and Al at the Imperial Capital.

Subaru: “And, on that note, Al wouldn’t want to be separated from you, so where is he right now?”

Priscilla: “It is as you say; as he did not wish to be separated from mineself, he was ordered to be a servant. At this time, he should be working hard as he salivates for mine praise. Just like you, who is head over heels for the half-devil."

Subaru: "I can't and won't deny it, but I feel bad for how Al is being used…"

???: "—Priscilla-sama!"

Hearing a voice say "Oh", Subaru raised his eyebrows, and with a small run across the opposite side of the street, a small boy—Schult's figure came into his sight. The small boy in shorts and a butler's outfit was breathing heavily, coming to a sudden halt in front of Priscilla, and,

Schult: "Um, Priscilla-sama, thank goodness you are safe, that is the most important thing! I am… I really am, so… waahhh…"

Priscilla: "A child should not be concerned with such foolish trifles. If you are worried about mineself, then be so with dignity."

Saying this, Prisicilla embraced Schult, who had come to a halt, the young boy's head becoming buried in her breasts. Rather than a metaphor, the statement that he was buried in her breasts was a fact, so it felt like looking at a difference in biological species rather than a difference in gender.

Like Al, Schult was one of Priscilla's servants, and he had been truly worried about her return from the Imperial Capital, his face turning red as he melted into her touch.

In fact, for him to be this delighted at the return of the Imperial Capital group—the "Rescue the Vollachian Empire from Destruction Squad", it had been worth hastening the dragon carriage for their return.

Subaru: "It was also worth it since as soon as I reunited with Patrasche in this form, she immediately hit me…"

Schult: "Natsuki-sama, I was hoping that you could convey my thanks to Emily-sama! Also, I would like to help Priscilla-sama more, so I wish to hear the secret behind how you grew up so fast!"

Subaru: “I’d love to see Emilia-tan’s smug face when she receives as much gratitude as possible, but my rapid growth is a cheat technique. If you go down the normal route but grow quickly, then I think you might die from the growing pains.”

Priscilla: “Regardless, you need not recklessly grow any taller. Stay the way you are for the time being.”

Schult: “Uuu, I am caught between a rock and a hard place…”

Caught between his own wishes and the desire of his master, Schult’s anguish was plain to see on his face as he was caught between these competing ideals. Subaru, understanding his feelings towards Priscilla which could not be attached to just deep affection or admiration, sympathized with his anguish.

Subaru: “Well, even if I sympathize with you, I can’t give you any advice!”

Priscilla: “Rather than a fool, you are a pitiful man. Schult, are you walking by yourself?”

Schult: “No, that is not the case! I was with Utakata-sama and all the Shudraqians, so I…”

In the middle of Priscilla’s breasts, the buried Schult glanced behind him. Following the lead of this glance, he discovered a recognizable, sour-faced man—Heinkel.

Subaru was aware that he had come to the Empire, and that he had contributed to fighting against the Great Disaster, but.

Subaru: “Schult, that old man isn’t bullying you, is he?”

Schult: “That is not the case! Heinkel-sama is a kind personage!”

Subaru: “That’s definitely a lie.”

Even if it was your relative, it was not good to spread false perceptions. Saying that Heinkel was kind, was like saying that Roswaal was a good and honest person.

In fact, even Heinkel seemed to be bitter about Schult's evaluation.

Heinkel: "Pipsqueak, don't say needless things. I'll cast you away."

Priscilla: "Do not utter such nonsense, commoner. It is for mineself to decide how Schult is handled. Rather, it is you who ought be afraid of being abandoned in the Empire."

Heinkel: "Guh…! This time, I, against that… against, that, I…"

Priscilla: "Was of use? If you wish to boast so, at minimum you must speak clearly."

Towards Heinkel's frown and mumbling, Priscilla spoke with a bored look. She then turned Schult away from her chest, pushing him towards Heinkel.

Priscilla: "Schult, there are many people I must still visit. It is late. Do not stay up into the night."

Schult: "I… I understand…! I feel somewhat unable to sleep, but I shall do my best to get some rest!"

To Schult, who was still excited, Priscilla nodded with a "Very well". After that, she looked towards the one close to Schult, towards Heinkel, who was unable to speak.

Priscilla: "It was a great service, Heinkel Astrea."

Heinkel: "Ah?"

Priscilla: "Your way of life is too unsightly to bear gaze upon, but the ability with the sword that you have forged is a worthy sight. Absolutely, even if you are never rewarded, you must never forget your diligence."

Heinkel: "…Though, whether I get rewarded or not is up to you, Miss Priscilla."

Saying this, Heinkel turned away, roughly scratching at his red hair as he walked away.

To that distancing back, Subaru called out with an “Old man”, and,

Subaru: “I heard you saved Garfiel. —You looked after my little bro.”

Heinkel: “—Keh.”

With his foul attitude, Heinkel walked away without stopping. Schult bowed his head, hurriedly chasing after his back after seeing them off, while Subaru shrugged towards Priscilla.

Subaru: “You didn’t give me a proper answer when I asked this before, but why are you with Reinhard’s dad?”

Priscilla: “There is no such person known as the father of another. It is a question I have no inclination to answer.”

Subaru: “Ugh… When you tell me that so straightforwardly, my chest begins to hurt.”

When Subaru clutched at his chest, Prisiclla poked at his head with her fan and said “Fool”. As Subaru rubbed at where he had been poked, Priscilla lightly stroked her chin.

Priscilla: “Well now, are you trying to bore mineself? Perform your duties as a jester well, Natsuki Subaru.”

Once again she called him by his name, yet for some reason, he had no desire to go against it.

2

???: “Have the two of you come to engrave a frown onto my face while I am occupied?”

Thus asked Abel, brow as wrinkled as his words suggested, upon seeing Subaru and Priscilla arrive.

This room in the great fortress, albeit not sophisticated enough to call an office, had served as Abel’s workspace for a restless night of urgent planning in regards to postwar measures.

A great shift in tone from having brandished the Yang Sword along with Priscilla against the moving palace.

Subaru: “Man, it’s incredibly off-putting for you to be tough now. There’s no way we’d be able to have another catfight.”

Vincent: “I have never wished to partake in such bizarre rituals with you. If your purpose is to distract me with these trifles, exit at once.”

Subaru: “You say you want no distractions, but…”

Subaru glanced at the sofa beside the desk where the inhospitable Emperor tended to his task. There, Flop and Medium slept shoulder to shoulder in harmony.

The O’Connell siblings’ cozy reunion evoked a striking contrast next to the Emperor.

Subaru: “I don’t see you kicking those two out.”

Vincent: “…They guarantee me further nuisances if I rouse them; that is why.”

Priscilla: “You do not disappoint with your pretexts, elder brother. Your leniency manifests in its full glory when faced with what is most precious. When you had allowed me to flee from the country, that too had been an act of love.”

Abel was silenced by Priscilla’s calm words, spoken as she fanned her face.

That could have been interpreted as a silence that would have emerged no matter what had been said, a silence that had emerged precisely because the words had hit the mark, or even both.

Subaru: “You siscon Emperor…”

Vincent: “Albeit I know not the meaning, I presume that those words of yours are the height of irreverence.”

Priscilla: “Cease with the empty threats. Due to the Great Disaster on this occasion, the Empire has forged far too many debts towards the Kingdom and the City-States. Especially towards the camp of Natsuki Subaru's bunch, is that not so?"

Subaru: "Priscilla… it's not my camp, it's Emilia-tan's."

It was a rare follow-up on the part of Priscilla, but he had to firmly correct her on an important part. Priscilla returned a "You are quite well-trained." with an expression slightly taken aback, and Abel silently massaged his brow with his fingers.

"Woah," uttered Subaru when he witnessed Abel proceed to close both eyes.

Vincent: "—What is the matter, Natsuki Subaru? Do you intend to pile up even more irreverence towards me?"

Subaru: "Nah, not this time. Not like I want trouble with you, and since you're busy, I should just leave."

Pouting his lips, Subaru did not point out the fact which he had noticed. He did not think Abel to be unaware of it, either. That was because the reason and impetus for that change, had occurred in a definite form.

And, it seemed that Subaru was not the only one who considered that a pleasant change.

Vincent: "I extend that to you, Priscilla. I have many matters due."

Priscilla: "So you put the Empire above your dear sister? With a decade passed, have the scales within yourself finally come to a settlement, elder brother? If that is so…"

Vincent: "What?"

As Priscilla cut off her words, Abel made a slight frown. In front of Abel, Priscilla pinched the hem of her dress, and gave a deep bow where she stood.

And then—

Priscilla: "—Seventy-seventh Emperor of the Sacred Vollachian Empire, Your Excellency Vincent Vollachia. From the bottom of mine heart, I celebrate your ascendance to the throne."

Vincent: "…"

Priscilla: "To the utmost, laboriously endeavor to lead the pack of Sword Wolves. For the time being, the days bereft of respite shall only continue."

Delivering words of congratulations with a serious expression, and then a warning with a bold smile, Priscilla spoke to her elder brother. At the attitude of his sister, whose tempo was as per her whims, Abel—Vincent Vollachia heaved a sigh.

Then, glancing towards the O'Connell siblings, sleeping on the sofa with their shoulders pressed against each other,

Vincent: "Priscilla. —In this entire world, only with you, sister mine, could I prescind from mistrust."

Priscilla: "Ever so sinuous you are, brother mine, even in your confessions of love."

Concealing a provocative smirk behind her noisily-opened fan, Priscilla interpreted Abel's statement. Subaru found himself in total agreement with her.

If there was only one thing that a third party could add onto that—

Subaru: "From my perspective, you two siblings resemble each other to an aggravating extent."

And in saying so, Subaru took the brunt of those cognate siblings' matching, unamused glares.

3

???: "Were you speaking with His Excellency Vincent, Priscilla?"

Priscilla: "Hm, Dear Mother, is it?"

After having their fill of two kinds of sibling relationships within the Empire, one team Imperial Family and the other team merchant, Subaru and Priscilla ran into Yorna in a passageway of the fortress, along with Eugard, who was accompanying her.

It appeared that they were heading to Abel's room, as if they had business to attend to with him.

Yorna narrowed her almond-shaped eyes, and fixedly gazed at Subaru and Priscilla. Subaru had thought that it was because she found this pairing to be unusual, but he was wrong.

Yorna: "It is only my first time seeing it, but I find it will be quite the challenge to get used to seeing you with your limbs lengthed like this, child."

Subaru: "…Ah! Now that you mention it, Yorna-san has only ever seen me in my cross-dressing and shota forms?!"

As the astounding truth emerged, Subaru was shocked at his own abundance of variation within the Empire. At Subaru's shock, Yorna placed the back of her hand to her mouth, and while smiling,

Yorna: "Your Excellency, this personage is a Knight of the Kingdom. Until just the other day, he had been shrunken down to the form of a child, and during our first meeting together, he was in the form of a beautiful lady."

Eugard: "Hm. For Mine Star to sanction such an appraisal of beauty in thyself, I shan't say that mine interest hath not been piqued."

Subaru: "No no not at all, please stop with that kind of stuff. Though, Natsumi Schwartz is a noble-minded lady who wouldn't be embarrassed at showing herself off to anybody…"

Priscilla: "Although your skills are praiseworthy for a foolish commoner, your self-esteem is quite distorted."

At Subaru's answer, which tread the line between composed and passionate, Priscilla gave a comment in a fed-up manner. Afterwards, she casually turned her attention towards Abel's room, Priscilla: “For what reason are you visiting mine elder brother with the King of Thorns, Dear Mother?”

Eugard: “‘Tis because the time that remaineth for mineself is meager. Before that reacheth its terminus, I wish to discuss matters pertaining to the wishes of Mine Star with the child of mine own children.”

Subaru: “Time remaining…”

At Eugard’s response, Subaru looked towards Yorna, who looked pleased.

—Eugard was present here with Yorna with a natural attitude, but he was still one of the undead. Like Sphinx, his appearance was by no means inferior to that of the living, but that fact would not sway.

Eugard: “In all likelihood, mine newfound sense of satisfaction towards mine own life hath borne an influence upon mine appearance. As for mineself, rather than sharing in an embrace with Mine Star via a body in which heat doth not flow, this is much preferable.”

Priscilla: “Albeit it may be a linkage of soul rather than blood, you unashamedly boast of your love towards a mother right before her daughter. I suppose that is exactly what one would expect from the King of Thorns, but… what is this about mine Dear Mother’s wishes?”

Yorna: “—. It is in regards to the shackles upon my soul, endlessly invoking its reincarnation.”

The outline of Yorna’s quiet words was something which Subaru only knew of on a surface level.

Yorna was formerly a girl known as Iris who was bound to unending resurrection; each time she died, her soul would return to the surface without receiving the baptism of Od Lagna, and she would reincarnate into her next body.

Therefore, what Yorna desired from Abel for her contributions in the civil war and against the Great Disaster on this occasion, was—

Yorna: "—I wish to repeal it. To annul the decree of extinction put out by the Empire in regards to the wolfpeople and the molepeople."

Subaru: "Eh…"

Yorna: "All along, such had been my desire… though, when I became a Divine General, I had prioritized acquiring the Demon City, so as to have a location to welcome my beloved children."

Priscilla: "—I see. In order to bind your soul, Dear Mother, the two races that are the wolfpeople and the molepeople, their bodies and lives, which have been piled up since times of yore, were being utilized, and if that supply were to be severed, the curse would disappear naturally."

Eugard: "And in those days, 'twas none other than mineself who had passed the decree. If a request cometh from mine mouth to the Emperor of the current age, matters shall be settled with no harm befalling the honor of Mine Star and the child of mine own children."

Saying that, Eugard turned a tender gaze towards Yorna, who was hugging his arm.

In that moment, Subaru understood that deep within the eyes of the King of Thorns's invariant expression, there were smoldering sentiments of shame and remorse that had spanned many years.

"Iris and the King of Thorns"—within the tale recited in this world since times of old, he did not know just what sort of drama had occurred between him and her.

However, supposing it had ended in tragedy, this was its after story.

Subaru: "In that case, I think it's good so long as you at least have an epilogue with a nice aftertaste."

Priscilla: "Then we are of differing opinions. There are plenty of superfluous acts that can be taken in the afterlife to make things redundant."

Subaru: “You! Listen! Here! Alright…!”

Prsicilla, who was supposed to be the daughter of one of the parties involved, despite it being a complex relationship, had attempted to stir up discord, so Subaru was about to scold her to read the mood. But, before he could do so, she continued with “But”,

Priscilla: “If it is the King of Thorns and mine Dear Mother, no such tactless acts shall be taken.”

Eugard: “—. As ever, thou bearest Terriola’s likeness. Dost thou not think so, O Star of Mine?”

Yorna: “Now that you mention it… it is no wonder I find her to be so lovely.”

Priscilla: “Do not conduct such speech akin to comparing mineself with those other than mineself. If it were not you and your husband, Dear Mother, I would not pardon it.”

Being told so bluntly by Priscilla, a smile formed on the lips of both Yorna and Eugard.

It was a strange relationship, and although this was not the case in reality, from the outside looking in, they seemed like an intimate mother, father, and daughter, so Subaru scratched his cheek with a somewhat awkward feeling.

At Subaru’s gesture, Yorna smiled, saying “It seems we have caused you tedium”,

Yorna: “I shall go now with His Excellency. Priscilla dear, you mustn’t bicker with the child.”

Priscilla: “I do not treat him as a child. To begin with, if this foolish commoner angers me, I shall simply lop his head off.”

Subaru: “Don’t say such scary things! Well then, Yorna-san, Eugard-san, until we meet again.”

As Yorna and Priscilla had an exchange befitting a mother and daughter, Subaru called out to Eugard. —He had said “until we meet again”, but he felt like this would be the last time.

The other party must have also thought the same thing. The former Emperor looked directly at Subaru, and spoke.

Eugard: “Thou ought spend thy days of virtue together with those whom thou lovest. May good fortune and happiness be upon both thee and thy star.”

4

???: “Wow, to see Subaru and Priscilla together, It’s reaaally surprising.”

???: “It truly is ain’t it. There’s plenty that we need to get done, so it’d be trouble if it rains tomorrow.”

At Anastasia who, after saying so, had turned to gaze out the window at the night sky, Priscilla snorted with a “Hmph”.

Having had the opportunity to talk to many people, they had stopped by the lounge for a glass of water, and had unexpectedly come across Emilia and Anastasia, who were seated at a table, facing each other.

Since their adventure to the Pleiades Watchtower, such a pairing could no longer be considered peculiar. Rather, like how Emilia was surprised, it was much more surprising that Subaru was with Priscilla.

In any case, what was this pair with different roles, one the brains and the other the brawn, doing here?

Emilia: “Well, actually, Otto-kun scolded me, saying I shouldn’t work anymore today…”

Anastasia: “First of all, it ain’t all that good for us to be meddlin’ in the Empire’s post-war proceedin’s now is it? So I thought, why not chat a bit before we rest… and whaddya know, Emilia-san’s been braggin’ ‘bout Natsuki-kun non-stop.”

Subaru: “Eh, talking about me? Emilia-tan has? Lemme hear, lemme hear.”

Hearing of some intriguing girl-talk, Subaru leaned forward. However, with Subaru’s collar having been grabbed from behind, he shrieked out with a “Gweh!”.

As expected, the one who had done so, quite capable of decapitating Subaru let alone strangling him, was Priscilla. She let go of Subaru’s collar, and glared at Emilia and Anastasia as if to rein them in,

Priscilla: “A half-devil and the she-fox, both fellow candidates in the Royal Selection, meeting face to face, and the topic of discussion is the exploits of a foolish commoner? Time is not to be spent so worthlessly. Even counting the stars would be marginally less objectionable.”

Emilia: “Ah, I get it. When I was alone in the forest, I would sometimes do that to pass the time…”

Anastasia: “As for me, I’ve spent long hours countin’ the money I’ve saved up.”

Subaru: “Hey, hey, it’s not good to let the topic of conversation veer off like that because of Priscilla’s thoughtless words.”

To say that one should be counting stars instead, was a rash comment on a level of telling them to just give up on everything and just go to sleep. Of course, if it were the stars, Subaru could spend countless hours searching for constellations, but that was beside the point.

As he tried to prevent that retort from rapidly spreading the conversation into the realm of the night sky, Emilia suddenly laughed with a “Hehe”.

Emilia: “Still, it feels reaaally strange doesn’t it. Me, Anastasia-san and Priscilla-san, we’re all candidates for the Royal Throne, and yet all of us are in the Empire like so.”

Anastasia: “If only Natsuki-kun hadn’t been so careless as to be sent away from the tower, none of this would’ve happened.”

Subaru: “That was beyond my control, besides, if I hadn’t been sent away, the Empire would likely have been destroyed.”

Although in no way did it make up for the event that started it all, considering the scale of the Great Disaster, those words had not been far from the truth. It was not to say that he had liked being sent away, but that it had served a purpose.

But then again, Priscilla would likely snicker and scoff at such a reasoning—

Priscilla: “—Indeed that is so. Without you lot, the history of the Empire would have come to an end yesterday.”

Subaru: “Wah!”

Emilia: “Huh?”

Anastasia: “Oh?”

Priscilla: “No need to gasp like fools. It was but a statement of an obvious fact.”

That was all there was to it, was what Priscilla had said, but the fact that it was her who had said it, had surprised Subaru and the others.

At those unexpected words from Priscilla, Anastasia chuckled saying “What’s this now”,

Anastasia: “How darn surprisin’. Didn’t think ya’d be so upfront ‘n admit that we helped ya.”

Priscilla: “Do not misunderstand. In the first place, the Empire was Prisca Benedict’s homeland, and thus is no longer the homeland of mineself. The responsibility for the survival of the Empire rests upon the Emperor and the army that bows to him.”

Anastasia: “Had only just thought so, but there she is. Yep yep, if the Princess ain’t this way, she wouldn’t be a worthy rival.”

Emilia: “Geez, Priscilla is such a contrarian, so don’t tease her,

Anastasia-san.”

Subaru: “Who even says “contrarian” these days…”

At that very Emilia-like assessment, Subaru chucked, with equal parts exasperation and admiration.

However, it was not as though he could not understand Emilia and Anastasia’s feelings. Previously, Priscilla had been such an unknown entity to Subaru, like an alien creature he could not fathom.

And although he had acknowledged her strength and insight, the nature of her humanity seemed like that of a carnivorous beast that could not be reasoned with.

That impression he held of Priscilla, he felt it had changed a lot over these past few days in the Empire.

Subaru: “Right now, just like Emilia-tan and Anastasia-san, as well as Crusch-san and Felt, I can recognize Priscilla as a Royal Selection Candidate well.”

Priscilla: “For what reason would I be in need of your recognition? Watch your mouth, foolish commoner.”

Emilia: “There you go again with that harsh way of speaking… but, we also had briefly spoken about that. Right?”

Emilia had clasped her hands before her chest, and Anastasia, whom she had called out to, smiled softly.

Anastasia: “Ya know, that whole thin’ at Pristella? At the time, I hadn’t invited the Princess over ‘cause I felt there wasn’t a reason to, but…”

Emilia: “Then next time, let’s invite Priscilla too. Especially since she’s a Royal Candidate, like us.”

Priscilla: “Foolish commoner, it seems your master is unaware of what sort of event the Royal Selection even is.”

Subaru: “She’s cute isn’t she? Behold, my angel.”

Although a vacation was not the intention behind the meeting of the candidates in Pristella, from the way Emilia would see it, she must have felt bad about Priscilla seemingly having been excluded from the gathering.

That said, rather than a situation where the Witch Cult goes on a rampage, a vacation would be much better.

Subaru: “If it does come to that, let’s go someplace where we can have a swimsuit vacation next time.”

Anastasia: “‘Bout his desires, ain’t Natsuki-kun a straightforward child. Well, not like I ain’t gonna consider it. Of course, if the Princess says she’s fine with not bein’ invited, we ain’t gonna invite her, right?”

Emilia: “Priscilla…what do you think?”

Anastasia had been provocative, while Emilia was timid like a small animal. As expected, at the invitation from the two beautiful girls who were also Royal Candidates, Priscilla shrugged her shoulders.

Priscilla: “Do as you please. If it shall amuse, then very well, if not, ‘tis poor. No reason in particular for mineself to refuse.”

Emilia: “—! Yes, let’s do that. We’re all in a difficult position, and we all have very many things that worry us but… I don’t see any reason why we all can’t get along.”

Anastasia: “Whenever Emilia-san’s involved, everythin’s all mellow, it’s a bit troublesome.”

Priscilla’s answer could not be taken as being enthusiastic, but the way Emilia had taken it, made it sound like she had been chomping at the bit, and Subaru nodded in agreement with Anastasia’s thoughts.

Priscilla as well, seemingly not bothering to correct her, looked up at the night sky—

Priscilla: “—A lass from the slums and a Duchess, as well the she-fox of the City-States and an amethyst-eyed half-devil.”

Emilia: "—? Priscilla?"

Priscilla: "'Tis no matter of significance. I merely had the thought that, when listed out like so, it sounds akin to characters starring in a poorly penned tale."

Subaru: "That "poorly penned" was unnecessary. In the first place, I don't think you're in any position to talk."

Priscilla, basking in the wind, held the position of a supposedly deceased Princess of the Empire. As for a title that could spice up the story, hers was more than flashy enough.

After responding in that way, fearing his words might have truly angered Priscilla, Subaru's heart had lurched. However, that was a needless fear—Nay, it was far from a needless fear.

Priscilla: "—No doubt about that."

Saying so, Priscilla brought the tip of her fan to her lips and laughed.

Just like a girl in the midst of chatting with her friends, she laughed in a relaxed manner.

5

Somehow losing the chance to part ways, Subaru continued to walk around with Priscilla through the Fortified City.

Subaru had worked far too hard today, by his own admission, and the same could be said for Priscilla and the many others who continued to move energetically around the city.

Of course, most of them, like Subaru, were probably in too high spirits to sleep.

Subaru: "Don't tell me that they're all undead who don't know what it means to be tired…"

???: "—What stupid things are you talking about?"

Subaru: “Woahoa?!”

In a daze, he looked out over the stone walkway to the cityscape below, where his comments were overheard by the people passing by.

Moreover, someone whom he did not want to overhear him—glaring at Subaru, was Rem.

With a pail of water in her hands, Rem seemed to be one of the people who could not sleep either.

Subaru: “So, are you still assisting in treating the injured? I know you’re working hard, but working too hard isn’t good either. You should learn from Nee-sama, who takes a rest as soon as she gets tired.”

Rem: “I could say the same for you. No, rather, if you don’t have work to do, isn’t it your job to return to your room and quietly rest?”

Subaru: “What a shrewd argument…! I mean, it may not be a job, but there are things that I also have to do.”

Subaru answered Rem in a whispered voice, pointing his fingers together in front of his chest. Rem’s pale blue eyes turned stern at his attitude, and Subaru’s courage waned more and more.

Then, as if reaching out a helping hand to Subaru—nay, simply to express her displeasure at the sight, Priscilla sighed,

Priscilla: “It is no great matter. As you can see, his arms and legs are slightly longer than what they were in the form of a child. Because of this, it is difficult for him to face those whom he was involved with as a child.”

Subaru: “It’s redundant for my legs to still be short after I got bigger! You’re right about both things, though!”

When Priscilla nonchalantly expressed those sentiments, Subaru bit his sleeve and sounded a “Gaa!”.

Subaru had an important task ahead of him—to tell everyone in the Pleiades Battalion that he had returned to his original form, just as Priscilla had said.

Although Subaru's comrades had been with him since his stay at the Gladiator Island, he had never once confided to them that he had been in a shrunken form. In fact, he had never revealed the truth about being the illegitimate child of Abel, the Emperor, which meant that he had been lying all this time.

Subaru: "If I reveal it and everyone despises me, I'll never recover… I'd rather Natsuki Schwartz to have died an honorable death in battle…!"

Rem: "If you tell a lie like that, I will despise you. Are you fine with being despised by me?"

Subaru: "I'd hate that as well. I wouldn't be able to live if you hated me, Rem…!"

Subaru whined as his heart was battered between Rem at the front gate and his Battalion at the rear gate. Rem sighed at the situation and suddenly noticed Priscilla's gaze on her.

Priscilla, with arms crossed to emphasize her breasts, called out "Rem" to her,

Priscilla: "Your expression has changed during our time apart. The healing magic that had caused you such anguish seems to be of some use."

Rem: "Yes, I have had many opportunities to practice what you told me, Priscilla-san… Also, thank you. That gentle fire that shared your strength with all of us after the star was shot down… that was something from Priscilla-san, right?"

Priscilla: "Hmm. What makes you believe that?"

Rem: "—. It's intuition. Maybe it's because of the time I spent with you, Priscilla-san, even if it was only for a short time."

Pulling the water pail closer to her chest, Rem replied to Priscilla.

Rem's smile was full of confidence, despite her words, and Priscilla also smiled when she saw it.

Priscilla: "Very well. It seems that your heart of diamond has been pierced. I deliver mine praise."

Subaru: "Um, well, Rem, actually, when the city was in danger, that star thing, it was me and Beako who shot it down, what do you think about that? Well?"

Rem: "Hah?"

Subaru: "I'm sorry for butting in I apologize so please just praise Beako later."

Wanting to be praised as much as Priscilla did, Rem gave him a scornful glare. Subaru was reluctant to back down, but Priscilla had a point.

Rem seemed to stand tall now, to the point that the expression "heart of diamond" was apt. He thought that her reunion with Ram, Petra, and others and the presence of her friend Katya had a big part in that.

Subaru: "Besides that, you can tell me more about what you and Priscilla were doing while I was gone."

Rem: "…More or less, once everything is taken care of."

Subaru: "Ah, in that case, I'll help you treat the injured and anything else. You can let me carry that, too."

It was not his intention to put off talking to everyone in the Battalion, but it would be unthinkable to leave the busy Rem alone, even if he were tired.

When Subaru offered, Rem said, "In that case", and offered him the pail of water.

However—

Rem: "—No. It's fine after all."

Subaru: “Huh?! D-Did I do something to offend you?! Am I being too considerate, am I being unpleasant?!”

Rem: “It’s not quite that. Not that, but… it’s because if you come with me, Priscilla-san will be alone.”

Subaru: “No no no, in that case why don’t you let Priscilla help you treat the injured?”

Rem: “Are you sane?”

Subaru: “I know you’re exaggerating, but what I said wasn’t a statement of sanity!”

Subaru reflected on the unbelievable things he was seeing. However, it was strange that Rem refused his help because of Priscilla.

In the first place, the fact that Subaru happened to be with Priscilla now was just by chance, not for any deep reason.

If Beatrice and Spica would have kept him company, his night would not have turned out like this.

Subaru: “But, Beako and Spica both got held up by experts in Spirit and Authority-related matters…”

Rem: “Then, in that case, I’ll stay with Priscilla-san—”

Priscilla: “Rem, there is no need for such idiotic consideration. I can manage to walk around with the likes of this foolish commoner.”

Subaru: “See, I know it’s weird to say this, but you’re the one who started dragging me around in the first place!”

He had been taken out to play the role of a jester, and thus ended up a certain clown exclaiming as such.

However, Rem ignored Subaru’s plea and stared directly at Priscilla. Rem was still searching for the words that were not formed even in her mind, Rem: “I don’t want you to be alone, Priscilla-san.”

Priscilla: “—. So that was your answer that emerged after some time? You are a girl who does not understand.”

Rem: “But now, this pain in my chest, it doesn’t hurt anymore, thanks to you.”

Rem’s response was something that Subaru did not understand.

Perhaps it was part of an exchange between Rem and Priscilla that Subaru did not know about. Upon receiving it, Priscilla paused for a beat, gave a small snort, and,

Priscilla: “Strive well, Rem. O daughter of the Oni. —For there are roles that only you can carry out, wishes that only you can grant, and a future that only you can achieve.”

Rem: “—. Priscilla-san?”

Priscilla: “Come, foolish commoner. Since Rem requested it, I shall take you with me especially.”

Subaru: “I’m not really satisfied with that, but, where to?”

Ignoring Subaru’s convenience with dignity, Priscilla indicated the outside of the corridor with her fan. It was not the view below that Subaru had seen, nor the starry night sky, but something in between—the walls.

The city walls were all damaged in the siege, though fortunately, they had retained their original form. However, they did not seem to be a place where anyone or anything was to be found.

Priscilla: “Rem, follow thy own heart. For although your heart may ripple, those ripples shall never be unseemly.”

Rem: “—Thank you.”

After indicating their destination, Rem and Priscilla once again spoke of something Subaru did not understand.

However, Rem's calm expression gave Subaru no reason to dig any deeper.

6

It appeared that people had finished clearing out, as there were not even any soldiers keeping watch atop the ramparts.

Taking into account that the battle against the Great Disaster had just recently reached its finale, as well as the fact that the undead had yet to be fully exterminated, the decision seemed to be more than a tiny bit incautious—

???: "Then, it boils down to who in the world's got the guts to go against the Princess's orders."

Greeting Subaru and Princess as such, Al sat atop the empty rampart, his legs crossed. Next to him was what appeared to be an expensive bottle of alcohol, and two glasses.

Subaru: "You got drunk to celebrate us winning the war?"

Al: "Don't be stupid, no way I'd start without the Princess. That said, I didn't think you'd be with her, bro. Ain't that, like, a super rare pairing?"

Subaru: "Everyone we've come across's been saying that, it's been pretty darn embarrassing this whole time."

Al had proclaimed himself to not be inebriated; however, the tone of his voice was lively. Rather than due to the alcohol's effects, perhaps he was slightly intoxicated due to the afterglow of their victory.

As a matter of fact, while walking around town with Priscilla, Subaru had also felt that quite keenly.

Subaru: "It's not just that everyone's got something to do, but they also really don't want to let this be just a dream."

Al: "Quite the poet now, bro. But, I guess you don't know. It's more like, "O morning, please don't arrive yet"."

Everyone, rather than harboring the negative thought of going to sleep while holding the fear that their triumph would be naught but a dream upon waking up, probably held feelings more in line with wishing for the day of the victory that all of them had come together to seize to not come to an end.

As Subaru and Al shared in that sentimentality before daybreak, the backs of their heads were suddenly tapped by a folding fan. As both screamed out “Gyan!” in unison and turned around, they crossed gazes with Priscilla’s look of dumbfoundment.

Priscilla: “A clown and a commoner have gathered, discussing naught but foolish matters. More importantly… Al, have you procured what I sought in accordance with mine instructions?”

Al: “Oh? Oh yeah, you don’t gotta worry. I requested that old Prime Minister geezer to clear the guards from the wall, and got some alcohol from the pretty High Countess. This booze man, its price’d prolly make my eyeballs pop outta my head if I happened to see what it is.”

Subaru: “I get you. The label and antiquity of the bottle give a sense of its price. I don’t drink alcohol, though.”

Al: “I get you. The box it was kept in did a really good job. I also don’t really drink, though.”

As companions in their ignorance of alcohol, Subaru and Al amused themselves by pointing several things out. At their attitude, Priscilla shrugged her shoulders, and in their stead, took the bottle and removed the cork in a gesture she was accustomed to.

Then, she slowly poured the liquid, pregnant with the sweet scent of liquor, into the two glasses.

Priscilla: “There are only two glasses. You two ought to share a single one.”

Al: “Ah, I was sorta hoping for an indirect kiss with the Princess if possible, but pardon me I apologize I’ll shut up.”

Al backed down dejectedly, but Subaru, being someone who understood the feelings of wanting to make teasing remarks, did not blame him. In any case, as Priscilla placed her own glass to her lips, Subaru, who was to her side, hesitated for a moment, and then placed his lips to the glass he had been given.

Al: “Woah, underage drinking.”

Subaru: “It’s legal in this world… Ghehough gahgk!!”

The liquor flowed onto his tongue, and the instant on which the scent passed through his nostrils and throat, Subaru choked up. As Al burst out laughing “Bwahaha” at that, he too took the glass from Subaru and sipped the alcohol.

Using the hand holding the glass to lift the jaw of the helmet, he poured the liquor in through the gap, and then—

Al: “Ghehough gaheugh ghbleughhh!!”

Subaru: “Aren’t you choking up more than I am?! Pull yourself together, fully fledged of-age drinker!”

Priscilla: “You both are causing a racket. That defeated Witch ought to be bemoaning, you do not even know what fine liquor is.”

Subaru: “I’m getting some confusing feelings of guilt, please stop…”

There was no way Sphinx would ever say “Apology: Required” due to something like being unable to taste the high-grade alcohol of victory, but Subaru was disheartened due to feeling like she would.

In the end, as Subaru and Al shared their alcohol little-by-little, Priscilla finished emptying half of the bottle by herself. Specifically how strong it was was unknown, but for someone who had drunk that much alcohol, and alcohol that did feel quite strong at that, Priscilla’s face was as if it was nothing at all.

Al: “The Princess being a heavy drinker; right in line with her image, ain’t it?”

To the somewhat prideful Al, Subaru did not respond that such was exactly the case. And, once the glass that Subaru and Al had been responsible for was emptied, Priscilla, as if deciding that this was the time to do something,

Priscilla: “Dawn is nigh. I am a tad amused. —Al, accompany mineself.”

Al: “Kehough… Huh? Accompany you, what do you… uoh!”

Declaring so, Priscilla put aside the half-emptied bottle of alcohol onto the handrail, took Al’s hand to help him stand up, and beckoned him to the middle of the wall’s top.

Pulling the perplexed Al towards herself, she smiled at Subaru, who was gazing in wonder at what was happening,

Priscilla: “Natsuki Subaru, sing.”

Subaru: “That’s way too unreasonable of a request!”

Priscilla: “Your tongue ought to have been moistened by such high-quality liquor. Well, I shall just tell Rem in case you are of no use.”

Subaru: “Grrrr, damn coward…! Fine!”

Finding himself in a development against his will, Subaru folded his arms, and constructed a set list within his mind. As he did so, Al stared deeply into Priscilla’s eyes,

Al: “Princess, I’m lacking one arm, y’know?”

Priscilla: “So what of it. You have two legs and loyalty pledged to mineself. —Let us begin.”

It was not as though that had been the signal, yet Priscilla’s words overlapped with the first bar of melody.

Subaru: “…”

What Subaru had chosen was not a hit song hailing from his original world, but one rooted in this other world, a tune that also happened to be a favorite of Subaru’s.

The Sword Demon Love Ballad was a bit too long, and he would probably start crying while singing it.

So, the song Subaru had chosen was—

Subaru: "—Sky that Transcends the Light of Dawn."

Slowly, the night over the Vollachian Empire would come to a close, and, pushing aside a yesterday speckled with stars, a new today boisterously dawned near.

As a song that blessed that phenomenon, this was an absolute favorite of favorites among the tunes Subaru had heard in this world.

Subaru: "Fu."

Devoid of any instrumentation, the only thing producing sound was Subaru's a cappella singing.

When compared with the bard Liliana, who made music her livelihood, he fell well short. Yet that which served as the greatest praise towards Subaru as he sang, was Priscilla's response of dance.

Priscilla: "There, dance your heart out, Al! Do not bore mineself!"

Al: "Ehhh, shit! Now I'm in trouble! Bro! Turn up the beat!"

—While listening to Subaru's singing voice, Priscilla and Al danced all around the rampart.

Priscilla's dance was gorgeous; though she would likely become incensed were Subaru to say it, her dance was selfsame to the one performed by Abel back in Guaral with the purpose of seducing Zikr. Al's awkward moves somewhat appeared to be those of a dance one would see at a lantern festival. Though lacking skill, it was fun to watch him.

More than anything, it was clear that both Priscilla and Al, that master and servant both, were enjoying themselves.

Subaru: "…"

Subaru was supposed to have been doing this reluctantly, but before he realized, he was singing with a smile on his face.

Sky that Transcends the Light of Dawn—a song that sang about an inevitable dawn, a blessing upon a world born anew after being scorched by its brilliance, a song that was, in a sense, quite fitting for Vollachia, a nation ruled by flame.

And, Priscilla, who lived like a flame, was a woman most alike Vollachia.

Priscilla: "…"

Ignorant as to how to end the song, he ended up repeating it, repeating twice, thrice even. As he sang, the dance between the two began to flow smoothly, and he lost the cue to bring it to its conclusion once more. Thus it repeated.

As they were all enjoying themselves in that manner, the real morning sun began to softly illuminate the rampart.

He had some alcohol in his system, and today—no, yesterday, he had worked far too hard. Definitely, once he did go to sleep today, he would be incapable of waking up.

Amidst the gleaming dazzle of the morning sun, Priscilla looked awfully bright as she danced with Al—.

Al: "—Princess?"

A sudden, an oh so sudden utterance came from Al.

Subaru: "…"

Just priorly, the utterance would have been permeated with the high-spirits he held no pretensions of hiding, with the yearning he held no capability of hiding. Now enlaced with a different timbre, Subaru's singing came to an abrupt halt.

Then, Subaru blinked; many times, many times he rubbed his eyes.

And despite him rubbing his eyes—

Priscilla: "—Albeit not on the level of that songstress, Liliana Masquerade, it was not a poor performance."

Indeed, settled in Al's chest while being embraced by him from behind, Priscilla voiced her praise.

—With the morning sun shining through Priscilla's body, she was faintly fading away.

7

Subaru: "…"

Aghast atop the ramparts of the Fortified City, enshrouded in the morning mist, Subaru gazed at Priscilla.

A blood-red dress, orange hair that reflected the rays of the sun, crimson eyes akin to flame—all were things that composed the existence of Priscilla Barielle, none of those had changed, and yet.

Subaru: "Phri… ssilla…?"

Priscilla: "You too ought to know this already. In order to show me the Empire's ruin, mine enemy, Sphinx, had imprisoned me within an alternate plane. In order to exit from therein, there was naught a choice but to reduce it to cinders."

Subaru: "—Ah."

Priscilla was clever. Therefore, going off of nothing but Subaru's trembling voice, she had understood what Subaru had been thinking, what Subaru had wanted to ask, and thus presented an answer to Subaru's query.

With that clear and concise response of hers, Subaru understood. He had ended up understanding.

Subaru: "…"

She was the same as Eugard Vollachia, the Emperor of yore who had been accompanied by Yorna.

In exchange for her own life, Priscilla Barielle had returned from that alternate dimension.

The reason why her figure was pierced by the light of the morning sun, becoming misty as it faded away, ephemerally so, was as clear as day.

—The Priscilla Barielle present here, was already nothing more than an undead.

Al: "What… what sort of idiotic bullshit are you on about?!!"

With Subaru unable to say anything, standing stock still in a daze, Al was the one to shout in his stead.

Embracing Priscilla from behind, his voice trembling to an extent that it was clear that his face was contorting within his helmet, he tightly, tightly held onto her with his single right arm.

So as to not relinquish Priscilla, being killed by the slow, unhalted rise of the morning sun.

Al: "No, no, you're wrong, Princess, this sorta thing… B-BRO!!"

Subaru: "—! Right. Right, you're wrong, you're mistaken. Just wait, Priscilla, I'll…"

At Al's quavering appeal, Subaru suddenly lifted his head and shifted his gaze towards the banister.

The Great Disaster having come to a close, he had ended up spitting out the package of poison which he had kept behind his molar. So if he were to choose a method to redo things immediately, jumping off of the rampart would be the fastest—

Priscilla: "Cease."

Subaru: "Why would I cease?! I have no reason to do that! This sort of thing, for me…!"

Priscilla: "—Cease, Natsuki Subaru."

Just as he was about to jump over the railing, throwing himself over the edge, Subaru was held back by a voice. But, paying no heed to that, Subaru had fully settled his mind to proceed, to challenge the Great Disaster once more.

And despite that—

Priscilla: “The Authorities held by yourself and Al may possess the power to warp even the laws of fate. But, you ought to remember this. Regardless of what use you make of your powers and prayers, there are some who desire that things remain unchanged.”

Subaru: “What… What, the hell do you think you’re saying? This… this isn’t the time for that! Right now I need to—”

Priscilla: “Natsuki Subaru.”

As Subaru grit his teeth, the nails of his hands upon the railing chipped off, blood streaming down.

He ought to just ignore everything and anything that Priscilla was saying, and jump. Indeed, having expended his life time and time again against the Great Disaster, as one who had seized victory for the Empire, Subaru’s heart was screaming.

But, perhaps he ought to be strong enough to brush that outcry to the wayside, and listen to what Priscilla had to say.

As Subaru arrested all movement due to the clash within him, his cold logic at odds with his emotions, Al screamed out with a “Bro!”. Holding onto Priscilla as to absolutely never let go, trembling like a child throwing a tantrum,

Al: “Bro! Please… Please!! Don’t listen to anything! You don’t need to listen to her! Do it! Save the Princess… Save Priscilla!!”

Priscilla: “Aldebaran.”

Al: “—Hk, stop, stop it, Priscilla! I ain’t gonna listen!”

Shrieking in sorrow, Al was called to by Priscilla as he implored Subaru, the former shaking his head in denial.

As she softly caressed his neck, Priscilla called Al by a name that Subaru was familiar with; however, this was his first time hearing it being used in regards to Al.

Being embraced tightly from behind, caressing the neck of the man behind her, it held the impression akin to that of a painting—as something so fleeting that it would not remain a reality for long, a painting was the exact impression it gave.

Priscilla: "The two of you have saved the Empire. Of course, there were others who also fought valiantly. Yet, there exists not a single other person who has expended anything on the realm you two have. I bestow mine praise upon that."

Thus, with a smile so beautiful as to reach unpleasantness, Priscilla continued.

Subaru's appeals, Al's screams, neither of them had been able to stop Priscilla's gently recited words.

Those crimson lips, as if burning away the impressions of Priscilla that had persisted in him until now, as if to sear in that she had always been that way from the start, scorched their hearts with a flame known as convenient, rapturous beauty.

Priscilla: "The both of you have arrived at this junction by doing so many a time, this I know. Never placing yourselves above others, you have lived 'til today. Hence, it may be that neither of you has ever received due recompense. I shall thus bestow that upon you."

Saying that, within Priscilla's crimson eyes, opened anew, Subaru was reflected.

Then—

Priscilla: "—It was a great service, Natsuki Subaru. Thou art a true Knight."

That instant he was granted that comment, strength vanished from Subaru's knees.

Subaru: "—Ah."

Falling to his knees, Subaru could no longer stand back up. His lips trembled all over, his mind was thrown into a disorderly state of chaos with all kinds of emotions, his understanding could not catch up.

That notwithstanding, the reason as to which strength departed his knees, was because it had been made certain to him. —His soul, had understood.

Natsuki Subaru could not save Priscilla Barielle.

Priscilla: “Aldebaran, thou as well…”

Al: “I told you to stop! I won’t fucking back down! There’s no way I can back down! Because… because that’s how it should be, right?! If… if I back down, you’ll… Princess, you’ll…!”

Averting his gaze from Subaru, the latter having fallen to his knees, Al yet clung onto Priscilla. No longer was he turning to Subaru for help; rather, strenuously, he bellowed for her fate to be altered.

Yet, his voice gradually was bereft of its vigor, the sound of him weakly sniveling many times resounding. Gazing upon Al, unable to resume his words any further, Priscilla smiled. Akin to a loving mother.

Ironically enough, that smile was very much like Yorna’s, ergo serving as proof of their relationship as mother and daughter. Then, as if soothing her own weeping child, Priscilla spoke,

Priscilla: “Well, what am I to do about the likes of a grown man bawling at me like a child?”

Al: “—Hk.”

Priscilla: “Ha ha ha, there there, I can hear it, thy crying, groveling voice saying thou want mineself to be thy bride.”

Al: “…Mhm.”

At the laughing Priscilla’s sentence, in a hoarse voice Al replied, and nodded. As he did, embracing Priscilla’s frame even more tightly, as to not let go of that which already was difficult to let go of, he confessed.

That was, undoubtedly, that was—

Al: “Mhm, please be mine, Princess. My… Princess…”

That was, regardless of what was said by anybody else, a confession of love indisputable.

With all of the affection packed into his body, the man conveyed his love in its entirety to the woman within his arm. Receiving that, Priscilla’s crimson eyes flickered,

Priscilla: “—Look at that, it is mine victory again.”

Having made him declare it, the nature of Priscilla’s smile altered, morphing into that which was habitual.

This was Priscilla Barielle; a triumphant expression brimming with confidence and pride, the lack of any hesitation to declare all things in this world as her own, a beauty who painted the very picture of arrogance.

Her radiance scorching the eyes of all, the Sun Princess whose presence could not help but make itself known to others—.

Priscilla: “You had best remember this, you who have decided to carry “heroic reveries” upon your backs, possessing the means to defy predetermined fate.”

Priscilla: “From here on, you shall bear the wounds of many, share in their pain, sniveling tears in their stead. However, many of those you are to happen across shan’t be virtuous. They shan’t even be upright. —Nor shall they be perfect.”

Priscilla: “There shall be days upon which you shan’t be able to accept yourselves, in regret of your own actions. There shall be nights upon which you shall bend at the knee, in lament for your own decisions. There shall be mornings upon which you shan’t be able to raise your visage, in opposition to your own wishes.”

Priscilla: “The unloveable sides to those you love, the loveable sides to those you cannot love, many a time shall you witness those, and end up treading the selfsame missteps. —And on those occasions, do remember.”

Priscilla: “That you both were praised by the perfect woman known as mineself, known as Priscilla Barielle.”

—As Priscilla voiced thus, neither Subaru nor Al could take their eyes off of her.

Atop the ramparts where none else were present, both presented as the most important individuals in the battle against the Great Disaster, they could not avert their eyes from the woman who smiled without a trace of regret as she grew ever misty.

Since they could not avert their eyes, they witnessed it true. The sight of Priscilla’s existence dissolving into light.

And, at the terminus—

Priscilla: “The world is truly so beautiful. Henceforth—the world is made for mine convenience.”

No falsehood in those words, the figure of the woman who was loved by the world, and returned said love to the world to an even greater degree, faded.

Extolled as the Sun Princess, having lived her life in a manner becoming of a flame, was Priscilla Barielle. —Amongst the candidates for the Kingdom of Lugunica’s Royal Selection to decide the next Monarch, she was the first to drop out.

V!c.ll20

Prologue:
Aldebaran

—A place that was not here, a time that once was, a world that may someday come to pass, a dream that would shortly fade, regrets that would never cease for all eternity.

???: "…"Following Star", such is the meaning that it seems to bear. Despite shining the brightest of all the stars in its constellation, it is still called so; do you not believe it a name that befits you, who has carried all of our expectations upon yourself and yet still betrayed them, ironically too well?"

The one to speak those words, with black eyes upon white hair, with black dress upon white skin, with black desires upon white hopes, was a Witch; a Witch who, from the top of her head to the tips of her toes, was entirely split between the color black and the color white.

Albeit emanating a smile ripe with intimacy, no warmth whatsoever was present within the Witch's eyes.

Such was the kind of person she was. Neither disdain nor ire was being directed towards the individual known as himself, rather, she was merely that kind of person by nature, a being incapable of treading any other path—proof of a Witch.

From her, a Witch by birth unlike all others, he could not hope for any warmth.

Witch: "My, now that is a tiny bit vexing. It is certainly a flaw in my personality… I will admit that I can lose sight of what is right in front of me when I get passionate, but is it not rather charming when coming from a girl with an appearance like my own? My body is physically warm. I can give you warmth."

It was not as though she had gotten worked up. He knew that this was just an imitation of such a response.

Because he knew, he could not help but want to enquire. Did she truly feel nothing; did she truly think nothing; and about him, did she truly—.

Witch: "—Why must love fade?"

A brief comment killed the question he had begun to utter, mercilessly so.

Along with that, it had also killed any and all motivation to ascertain whether that had been because she wished not to be questioned, or because she wished to not allow him to question her.

Witch: "Why, must it fade? A feeling that is never lost, a radiance that never disappears, an obsession that never dims, are those things not called "love"? If they are, then, why?"

The words that followed drove a blade deep into the remains of the motivation, of the question that had already been slain.

The blade of words raised aloft, the Greed desireful of that knowledge, caring not for the blood flowing from those remains, repeated that act many, many times; hundreds, thousands, tens of thousands, hundreds of millions of times.

Witch: "You have fully expended yourself. You have betrayed our expectations."

He knew that he would be blamed. —No, that was incorrect. He hoped he would be.

Having reached this point, he still wished for somebody to guarantee him a connection.

Having turned against unperishing Wrath, against unfulfillable Lust, against unquenchable Gluttony, against unforsakable Pride, against Sloth of just wanting to be held complacent, and against the utmost important Envy, he still wished for that.

Witch: "—You are Greed. A matter of course, is it not? For it is I who made you like so."

The Witch’s quiet condemnation, was a lethal poison resembling kindness.

Far too many would not avert their eyes despite knowing that drawing near would mean their demise, afraid to even let out their voices; a fatal poison that, amidst a sweet fragrance, implored for their death.

However, for only those born and raised within that poison, there existed a sole possibility.

Thus, as long as there was a possibility—

Witch: “Will you pick it up no matter what? Why shall we still harbor expectations in you, when you have already betrayed our expended expectations. What do you have? What can you say? I am not condemning you, it is purely a question. Thus, I also ask if there is anything I can do.”

Raising both her arms, the Witch of white and black smiled.

Witch: “Supposing you possess the willpower to continue, and that your motivation is able to influence the results, I am willing to do anything in my power to help you. If such is to your liking, I do not even mind you using my body. Albeit frail, if it can help you not give up, I will offer it with delight.”

Smiling as she spoke so, the Witch thought nothing of it.

If he were to start thinking like that, he would end up going in circles. To begin with, even he knew that such was not the case.

If she was truly such a being, one who thought, felt, and knew nothing, then.

Witch: “—Why must love fade?”

This time, it was clear that it was a rejection; he understood.

The role he was expected to play, the process he had to carry out, both were included.

All that remained was to put it to practice. Until he got it right, hundreds, thousands, tens of thousands, hundreds of millions—

???: "—Even if it's beyond the realm of a billion, only I can reach it."

He would continue to challenge it. As long as that possibility remained, he could keep challenging it.

By doing so, without fail, he would accomplish it. Without fail, he, having been reduced to a Following Star, would—

???: "I, no matter what—will definitely kill you."

Witch: "…"

With a gaze that could not be pinned to neither expectation nor despair, the Witch watched over that determination.

By nature, a Witch would neither wish for such to succeed, nor would she wish for it to fail. But, this was different.

Words of consolation, she would provide. Before the Following Star could burn out, its heat becoming no longer able to reach the ground, she would deliver words to save the heart of the Following Star, acting as his teacher.

Witch: "Your luck was… No."

Indeed, revising the words she had been about to say, the Witch continued.

Words most appropriate for that Following Star, words that would serve to comfort his fate, those were—

Witch: "—Natsuki Subaru failed you."[13]

Bonus Short Stories

The Land of Wolves:
Death unto the Weak, No Mercy XIII

1

—The non-aggression pact between the Sacred Vollachian Empire and the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica.

For many a year, the two countries had neighbored each other as the greatest of foes, so the signing of this treaty was an incredible historic achievement, and at the same time, it was evidence that circumstances unprecedented throughout history were unfolding.

At present, the largest reason for that was a fatal illness that had spread in the Kingdom of Lugunica, causing the royal family to be wiped out, and these damages were deemed unacceptable.

In order to make up for the tragedy they had suffered, the Kingdom followed the guidance of the Divine Dragon, enacting a Royal Selection in order to pick out the next Monarch; for this duration, they requested to implement a non-aggression pact with the Empire, which the current Vollachian Emperor, Vincent Vollachia accepted, thus forming an agreement between the two nations.

Through this, albeit not leading to the long history of friction between the Empire and the Kingdom thawing, it could be said there were more than enough signs of some sort of change. And, in addition to the current absence of the Kingdom’s sovereign, this historic shift was a boon of the political caliber of the Empire’s apex, the Wise Emperor, Vincent.

And Vincent, who would one day be remembered as a rare, outstanding sovereign, included the fact of signing this non-aggression pact with the Kingdom in the foundation for even further flourishing of his influence—

Vincent: “—Ludicrous.”

In the office of the Crystal Palace, Vincent, the man extolled as the Wise Emperor, widened his eyes in shock.

The Emperor possessed handsome features that could not conceal his intelligence and strong will, however, as turmoil and astonishment that would normally never have been displayed to others was laid bare, he placed his hands on his desk and froze up.

Witnessing that, Chisha Gold slowly shook his head from side to side.

There was no helping it. It was only natural for Vincent to have this sort of reaction.

After all—

Chisha: “As stated in the report, at the present moment, there are two individuals confirmed to possess the qualifications to participate in the Royal Selection… one of them is the head of a ducal household, Crusch Karsten. And the other, by whom Your Excellency has been taken by surprise is…”

Vincent: “—Prisca, you believe?”

Chisha: “Regrettably, I see it the same as you.”

Taking pity on the disturbed Vincent, Chisha affirmed the truth.

The written report atop the desk, was the report from an investigation conducted by a spy they had sent to the Kingdom of Lugunica, the outcome of investigating the Kingdom’s state of affairs—particularly, the Royal Selection, which was currently the greatest matter of concern.

Since they had acquired information that was currently being kept a secret even within the Kingdom, the person who had secured it was owed more than adequate recompense, but the contents of those results were a problem.

Chisha: “To think that your younger sister, having fled to the Kingdom, would once again rise to center stage in such a manner.”

Vincent: “Just what is she thinking…?! Altering her name, altering her position, leaving the Empire… has she forgotten for what purpose all of that was for?!"

Chisha: "Neither do I understand the intentions behind your younger sister's rambunctiousness, hmmm. By no means do I believe it is merely just a matter of wanting to stand out, but…"

Vincent: "To stir for such an objective, it would be troubling if there were people other than that fool."

And, as Vincent laughed scornfully at Chisha's conjecture, he stiffened his cheeks and paid worry to the surroundings.

In all likelihood, since he had brought up a troublesome person, he was on alert for the person in question to burst in from the door or the window.

Chisha: "Please rest assured, Your Excellency. If you are concerned about Cecilus, he is currently out with General First-Class Arakiya competing to see who can reach the summit of Mount Gildray first."

Vincent: "—. Deeming it acceptable for the First and Second of the Nine Divine Generals to part from the Imperial Capital for such a worthless reason, is far more of a ridiculous affair."

Chisha: "Be that as it may, I had thought it appropriate for those two, crude in both thought and conduct as they are, to not be present. Not to mention, when it comes to the matter of your younger sister… to the matter of Prisca-sama, General First-Class Arakiya simply would not be able to maintain composure."

Vincent: "…"

Crossing his arms, Vincent closed a single eye and plunged himself into careful consideration.

At that familiar attitude of contemplation, Chisha was modestly relieved that he had now escaped the initial turmoil. Worst-case scenario, Chisha feared the possibility that Vincent might have decided to send emissaries to the Kingdom while giving some reason or another.

Fortunately, the man known as the Wise Emperor was not so short-sighted.

Chisha: “However, for a reason outside of Your Excellency’s feelings, we must ascertain whether this candidate is truly Prisca-sama or not, hmmm.”

Vincent: “I have no objections. But, if it is indeed Prisca, attempting to send half-hearted personnel would merely result in the meaningless abatement of the cards in our hand. We must be deliberate in our selection of personnel.”

Chisha: “Indeed, of this I am aware.”

Within Vincent, the existence of his little half-sister, Prisca, was exceedingly great.

If it was not, then would he really have been able to go as far as allow Prisca to live while feigning her death in the Imperial Selection Ceremony, in which it was a requirement to exterminate all other Imperial Family members who bore the right of succession?

And, even ignoring the familial affection Vincent harbored towards Prisca, it was also a fact that Prisca possessed intelligence and discernment on par with that of the Wise Emperor.

Hence, Vincent’s opinion that they needed to be deliberate with their selection of personnel was completely accurate.

Chisha: “With that established, I happen to have an idea of who to arrange as personnel.”

Vincent: “Ho. What sort of person are they?”

Chisha: “A shinobi trained by General First-Class Olbart… it is rare for that personage to so unreservedly praise someone’s abilities as that of a genius, hmmm.”

Vincent: “That damned Olbart did so unreservedly, you say? That is indeed a rare occurrence.”

As one of the Nine Divine Generals, the head honcho of the shinobi, known by the alias of the Vicious Old Man, Olbart Dunkelkenn was a person of advanced age nearing one hundred years old, but he was an individual exceedingly unsparing in his evaluations of others.

But then again, there were none who trained more than that near-hundred-year-old man, continuing to discipline himself to a blood-curdling extent, so his evaluations of others could be said to be rather fair.

In any case—

Vincent: “I entrust the particulars to you.”

With Vincent’s consent, Chisha gained permission to take action in regards to the Kingdom’s Royal Selection.

—All the while, concealing his silent expectations for the future behind his invariant expression.

2

???: “—I’m Yae Tenzen. I received a threat from the head honcho that I might die ‘cause Chisha-sama is making an unreasonable request. Am I gonna die?”

Having turned up in response to the summons, Yae Tenzen had her long red hair tied up together; she was a girl who gave off a sense of charm and flexibility like that of a cat.

Perhaps because she had received Olbart’s tutelage, her manner of speaking in the presence of a General was unthinkably informal, but the prospects for courtesy were already long gone at the point that Cecilus was placed in the position of First.

If one possessed strength, it was the Vollachian Way to look the other way in regards to various issues—for if they did not recruit soldiers with a priority for strength over personality, they would be unable to deal with the inevitable forthcoming cataclysm.

Chisha: “I know not what General First-Class Olbart has told you about me, but I am not fond of expending valuable, talented personnel, hmmm."

Yae: "I dunno~… by that, you mean that you won't expend me, but you'll still use me to my fullest, right?"

Chisha: "I believe it natural to want to assign powerful individuals to corresponding work."

Yae: "Uwahh, you're as nasty of a man as the head honcho said, aren't you now~?"

Slightly sticking out her tongue, Yae seemed to lament Chisha's reply. But, behind that amiability were eyes vigilantly observing her surroundings, and a tension such that she could draw her weapons at any time.

That she deliberately did not hide that and used it as a show of force, truly made her appear as Olbart's disciple.

Chisha: "We would like you to sneak into the Kingdom, and infiltrate the mansion of Baron Leip Barielle."

At Yae's attitude, Chisha ceased taking detours, and moved on to the main subject. Having heard the contents of her mission, Yae tilted her head in confusion as she said "Baron Barielle?".

Yae: "I'd intended to memorize all the people in the Kingdom who required caution, but was that sorta person among them? If it's for assassination, wouldn't it be Margrave Mathers or House Astrea?"

Chisha: "Supposing that were the case, would you currently be capable of performing assassination on those two Houses?"

Yae: "Doing both is impossible, but if it was just one, I think I could do it if I gave up on returning home alive. I'd rather not die young under a beautiful sky, so if possible I don't want you to order that, y'know?"

Chisha: "Your honesty is splendid, hmmm."

It was neither excessive self confidence nor a careless bluff, Yae simply made a guarantee based on her own ability. Chisha silently nodded at her reply, and,

Chisha: “Once again, we would like you to infiltrate the house of Baron Leip Barielle… we want you to make contact with his wife, Priscilla Barielle.”

Yae: “So his lady. Roger tha~t.”

With a carefree smile, Yae consented to Chisha’s request.

As she harbored a favorable impression while listening to the details of the mission, Chisha mentioned from beside her “What do you need to know?”.

Yae: “Oh yeah~. After I go undercover, what do I do? Assassination? Abduction?”

Chisha: “For the time being, if you are in a position to investigate her movements from close by, it is fine for you to engage in careful observation, hmmm. Merely…”

Yae: “Merely?”

Chisha: “—I would like you to bear in mind that depending on the situation, you may be issued new instructions.”

Yae: “I see. Roger roger~.”

At Chisha’s added comment, Yae naturally nodded without prying too deeply.

As a matter of fact, if she were truly as skilled as she was reputed to be, it would be easy for her to sneak into the Kingdom, and infiltrate the mansion of Baron Barielle. If she did so, it would be possible to investigate Prisca’s intentions—the true motivation in placing herself in a position as conspicuous as a Royal Candidate.

—Ultimately, would Prisca choose to be an ally, or a foe to the Empire that Vincent and Chisha had built up?

Chisha: “…”

Chisha's mental image of Prisca was exceedingly complicated.

Regardless of her personality, her existence functioned as a bomb for Vincent in both positive and negative senses. Allowing his younger sister to live assured the Emperor's humanity, but on the other hand, the reality of opposing the way of the Imperial Selection Ceremony harmed the legitimacy of his throne.

If her existence was purely something that guaranteed Vincent's humanity, it would have been fine. But, a large part of the reason why Vincent had kept Prisca Benedict alive was for something detached from emotion, for the purpose of making preparations for the Great Disaster.

The inevitable forthcoming cataclysm, was something the Stargazer had prophesied would commence with Vincent's death. When that happened, somebody would need to lead the Empire in Vincent's place, so he had said.

But—

Chisha: "I am operating from a perspective that slightly differs from that of His Excellency's."

The fact that Vincent Vollachia had made several preparations with his sights set on the Great Disaster, was something that Chisha also understood. But, Vincent did not expect to be outsmarted.

Underneath the plan he was proceeding with, Vincent did not expect to be outsmarted by the different plan that Chisha was plotting.

Chisha: "For that purpose, I have high hopes for your performance, Yae-dono, hmmm."

Yae: "Feels like the pressure is building up more and more… but, there's something about you, Chisha-sama. Your personality seems to be fit for a shinobi."

Chisha: "Ho, me, you say? For future reference, may I inquire as to why?"

Yae: “People who conceal their true intentions are suited to be shinobi.”

With a bright smille, Yae answered Chisha’s question.

For the girl said to be a genius of the shinobi, the weapon that displayed a shinobi’s skills to the greatest degree of “conceal one’s true intentions”, was likely that smile and amiability.

It seemed to be a different approach from that of Chisha, who was often told that nobody could tell what he was thinking, but he did not find it disappointing or upsetting that Yae had perceived that he had secrets.

Chisha: “I can agree to her being called a genius… supposing General First-Class Olbart retired due to his advanced age, she might even become his successor as head honcho of the village, hmmm.”

—After Yae left the room, Chisha spoke those words by himself in the office.

Following Chisha’s orders, Yae would soon depart from the Empire, and commence her mission to infiltrate the Kingdom. In the near future, a report would likely arrive regarding her infiltration of House Barielle.

Depending on that report, for the future of the Vollachian Empire, the choices of who would live, and who would die, would change. Vincent, Prisca, and Yae, he did not want to let any of them die. However, if it became necessary, Chisha would have no choice but to make a decision, and he had no intention of hesitating.

At the very least, Chisha was confident from the very outset that only his own death could not be averted.

Chisha: “—Good grief, the Empire’s wheel has gotten stuck in a rather large ditch, hmmm.”

Be that as it may, helping to get that out was Chisha Gold’s way of life.

Supposing that Prisca's existence became ignition capable of threatening Vincent, he would order Yae to kill her. —If Prisca were to disappear, there was a future of the Imperial Selection Ceremony being truly concluded, and Vincent being recognized as the rightful owner of the Yang Sword.

And, even if Yae were to fail, and end up not killing Prisca—

Chisha: "If it is someone as clever as his younger sister, she will be able to recognize that the assassins were sent from the Empire and that their objective is not unrelated to the Imperial Throne. And, if the younger sister was to then return directly to the Empire, then…"

Regardless of a crisis befalling the Empire, Prisca would likely not ignore any danger befalling Vincent.

In that case, a future was also possible in which Vincent and Prisca would stand shoulder to shoulder against the arrived Great Disaster, throwing themselves into battle along with Cecilus and the other Divine Generals, leading the Imperial Soldiers.

If Vincent and Prisca stood together, there was likely no enemy they could not face.

Chisha: "Of course, His Excellency would be angry with me, hmmm."

If he were to find out about Chisha's schemes, Vincent would likely never forgive him.

But, if Chisha's plan proceeded as intended, then either way, Chisha would already be deceased by the time Vincent learned of it, so there was no way for Vincent to make objections.

It was a bit of a coarse plan, but to begin with, Vincent was the one plotting a coarse plan.

Chisha: "I pray for a conclusion with the fewest deaths possible."

As he had mentioned earlier in his conversation with Yae, not wanting to expend personnel was Chisha's true sentiment.

From here on out, in the Vollachian Empire that was set to undergo an unprecedented cataclysm, Vincent would need to make efforts to rebuild if Chisha's plan was successful. In such circumstances, Vincent would need many people by his side to support him.

If Chisha died, and nobody else but Cecilus ended up remaining, it would be far too much of a disastrous affair.

And, thereupon—

???: "—Wait wait now Chisha just listen to this! Even though I got to the top of the mountain first Anya won't fry my eggs on both sides! She said she didn't like how I let her stay ahead until we got near the summit to make for a more dramatic comeback development but what do you think?"

???: "Cecilus, die."

???: "How ya doin', Chesshy. The hell did'ya talk 'bout with my village's Yae? That Yae lass was damn worn out ya know, kakakakka!"

???: "General First-Class Chisha! I wish to speak with you regarding the Crystal Palace's defenses! The other day, the emissaries from the Kingdom used it to their advantage. It must never happen again, never again!"

???: "You're fucking noisy! Don't say it like they got the best of us, you fucking golden knobhead!"

???: "In reality, they got the best of us. The Knights of the Kingdom, strong. Will not lose."

From the entrance of the office, from the outside of the opened window, and from the gaps in the ceiling, voices he was familiar with called out, and Chisha massaged his brow with his finger as he stood up.

His lively colleagues, great warriors all, ought to be called the greatest preparation gathered to face the forthcoming cataclysm, but, Chisha: “After I am gone, I find it a tad regretful that I will be unable to witness with my own eyes how His Excellency interacts with each and every one of you, hmmm.”

???: “Chisha! Hey Chisha! Come on heyyy are you listening?!”

Chisha: “Even if you raise such matters to myself, I can only say that I am troubled.”

Speaking in such a tone, Chisha tapped his steel fan on his shoulder as he exited.

There was still time to prepare. Time for Chisha to spend with Vincent, Cecilus, and everyone else. He would use all of that, and proceed down this path, knowing he would be cursed by the lord he dedicated his life to.

For that, he had absolutely no regrets, no hesitation, and no misgivings.

Why Prisca had taken the position of Royal Candidate, he did not know. Likewise, Vincent might question the reasoning behind Chisha’s actions.

In that case, there was only one reason why Chisha desired to proceed down a path of being cursed.

Chisha: “—After all, I have been blessed beyond my means.”

END

Anastasia's Search for Her Companions: Fourth Chronicle

???: "Seriously, I'm reaaally grateful, Anastasia-san."

Receiving thanks from Emilia, who wore a smile from ear to ear, Anastasia closed one of her eyes.

She had already unwillfully grown fully accustomed to Emilia's smile, but it was difficult to determine what exactly this gratitude was for. That was because she was the kind of girl to express sentiments of gratitude whenever given the chance, and it was not strange in the slightest for her to say thanks during something as simple as the exchange of a morning greeting.

Anastasia: "If ya happen to be talkin' 'bout the battle that happened at this here town, I don't think it was just me, but thanks to everyone… thanks to Otto-kun 'n the people of the Empire."

When it came to the main topic of conversation, it would have probably been the now-concluded disturbance of the Empire.

—Right off the heels of the Vollachian Empire's internal turmoil, they were plunged into a great war against the Great Disaster, which spearheaded hosts of undead; somehow, it was concluded before it could threaten the demise of the entire world.

Having remained in the Fortified City of Garkla, Anastasia had occupied the command center, and was proud of her satisfactory work in serving as one of the tacticians commanding the counter-siege battle.

Anastasia: "That bein' said, ain't nobody knows how things woulda turned out if not for that supportive fire from Natsuki-kun. 'N tho' I ain't gonna admit it, that thing from the princess also helped us out a whole ton."

Emilia: "Ah, the Soul Marriage Technique, right? Thanks to Priscilla, everybody reaaally surged with power."

Anastasia: “Sayin’ it again, but I ain’t gonna admit it.”

At Emilia’s unmalicious reply, Anastasia gave a wry smile.

The two powers that had saved the Fortified City from its predicament—those were the magic from Subaru and Beatrice that had blasted the star away, and Priscilla’s Soul Marriage Technique, which granted fighting strength to all citizens of the Empire. Without the former, the city would have suffered immense damages, and without the latter, it was uncertain whether or not they would have been able to push back the hosts of undead.

Nevertheless, it was due to her role that she was unable to simply accept it as a good contribution.

Anastasia: “‘N that’s also why I can’t just go carelessly acceptin’ Emilia-san’s words of thanks either, but…”

Emilia: “Is that so? But, I think the fact that we were able to properly converge with Subaru, and that it seems like we’ll all return to the Kingdom together like this, it’s all thanks to the contributions of Anastasia-san and Julius… that’s why, I’m saying thank you.”

Anastasia: “Ah, so you’re speakin’ on that sorta scale…”

Hearing the specifics of Emilia’s gratitude, Anastasia caught on to the sense of magnitude.

They had gotten involved during the time of an unprecedented emergency within the Empire. Nevertheless, it seemed Emilia’s utmost priority had always remained the same.

To the end, Emilia’s number one had been to bring the disappeared Subaru home safely.

Anastasia: “For ya to be doin’ this much for him, Emilia-san, Natsuki-kun’s quite the lucky fella.”

Emilia: “Not at all, if it’s a matter of having something done for oneself, then I’m the one who’s always, always been getting helped out by Subaru. I’m still in the middle of returning the favor…

besides…”

Anastasia: “Besides?”

Emilia: “I think it would be reaaally good to do something and return that favor, but Subaru told me that it’s fine since he wants us to walk side-by-side without keeping count of such things.”

As Emilia smiled about their relationship not being one built upon borrowing and lending, Anastasia took a good long look at her. Receiving that gaze, Emilia slightly tilted her head. —Her statement seemed to be lacking in awareness.

Anastasia: “Lemme set ya straight, it’s also gotta be quite tough on Natsuki-kun.”

Emilia: “Yes, indeed. Subaru always works reaaally hard, so when we get back to the Kingdom, I want him to take his mind off things and rest for a while. I was also thinking of suggesting to him to do so.”

Anastasia: “Ain’t what I meant, but… woah there.”

Curling her lips into a smile at Emilia’s interpretation, Anastasia placed her hand to her neck for some reason or another, and recalled that the sensation that ought to be there—Echidna, was not present.

Emilia: “Anastasia-san’s Echidna, she’s together with Beatrice and the others right about now, right?”

Anastasia: “Yepyep. They said that one of the First-Class Generals of the Empire ended up combinin’ with a Great Spirit… seems like they’re discussin’ things, includin’ whether or not it’d be possible to separate ’em.”

Emilia: “…I see. The two of them are reliable, so it would be nice if they could provide some valuable ideas.”

A Vollachian General with whom Anastasia had no acquaintance, her name was Arakiya, was it?

She had thought her to be an outrageous existence when first hearing the characteristics of the Spirit Eater; but, that outrageousness was far greater than Anastasia could have ever imagined.

The Empire would have lost considerable military strength during this Great Disaster, but there was also a possibility that the fruits of the conflict more than compensated for that. Caution must be taken as to not underestimate their future movements.

Indeed, amidst the fortress filled with the fervor of victory, Anastasia partook in calm deliberation, and,

Anastasia: "…Emilia-san? What'cha doin' with yer hand?"

Suddenly, Emilia reached out her finger and touched Anastasia's forehead. As Anastasia gave a skeptical look to that action of unknown intentions, Emilia softly said, "Wrinkles",

Emilia: "Wrinkles were forming on your brow, so I wanted to get rid of them. After a great deal of trouble, now is the time for everyone to feel happy that we won."

Anastasia: "Hey now, sorry for worryin' ya. But ya see, ya can't just do that sorta thing all of a sudden. If ya weren't Emilia-san, I woulda been about to make ya pay a fee."

Emilia: "Does that mean since it's me, I can rub your brow until all the wrinkles are gone? In that case…"

Anastasia: "Hey, enough! Stop it stop it! I can handle the wrinkles on my own!"

Rejecting Emilia's hand as she vigorously asserted herself, Anastasia stroked her forehead with her own hand.

While giving a sigh in response to Emilia's slightly disappointed demeanor, Anastasia, doing as Emilia said, once again gazed over the Fortified City, enraptured in the fervor of victory as it was. Within the Fortified City, left with several scars from the conflict, despite still being the day upon which the fierce battle had ended, the signs of people working were still unceasing, even during these late night hours.

Anastasia: “To gain a keen understandin’ of the Empire’s internal state like this, I can’t help but think of it as a profit. —Emilia-san, there’s somethin’ I don’t wanna just leave on vague terms, so I gotta say this, but…”

Emilia: “—? What is it?”

Standing side by side as they gazed at the scenery outside the window together, Emilia then turned and peered at Anastasia’s visage. Imagining how Emilia’s expression might contort, Anastasia felt a slight reluctance, but she then felt disgust at herself for feeling such reluctance, and hence continued.

Anastasia: “From the Pleiades Watchtower to here, I’ve gotten along quite nicely with y’all, Emilia-san. But, our ambitions oppose each other. Once we return to the Kingdom, I’m gonna have to make that clear to ya again.”

Emilia: “…”

Anastasia: “Makin’ that easy-to-read face again…”

As Emilia’s amethyst eyes wavered with a lonely expression, Anastasia shrugged her shoulders.

Emilia’s capacity for compassion and magnanimity was more dangerous than it was an advantage. What was worse, was that when Emilia made this face, Anastasia felt unable to compose herself.

To begin with, Anastasia was self-aware of her lenience when it came to those she held close.

To compensate for that, she had always intended to view others unsparingly before they became close to her, but due to their fellowship here, she was aware that Emilia was in the process of inadvertently stepping one of her feet into that domain.

That was precisely why—

Anastasia: “We agreed on this before, didn’t we now? Any story ’bout us becomin’ friends or whatever, will be after the Royal Selection is over.”

Emilia: “…Can’t we do it a little sooner?”

Anastasia: “Emilia-san, you’ve gotten real cheeky, haven’t ya?”

Her phrasing was polite, yet her words were sufficiently persistent.

Anastasia slowly shook her head, and Emilia took a small breath. But, she immediately clenched both her hands into fists, and,

Emilia: “Got it. Anastasia-san is stubborn. I won’t say anything more than this.”

Anastasia: “…Ain’t that somewhat like the phrasin’ of a girl who’s given up?”

Emilia: “Just like how Anastasia-san thinks she wants to do this, I have feelings of wanting to do that, so that makes us even.”

At Emilia’s stout-hearted and constructive response, Anastasia blinked her eyes.

Regarding this, it was as Emilia had said, and Anastasia could not come up with any words to argue.

On the other hand, considering that she thought it depressing that she would have no choice but to have this same conversation with Emilia again—

Anastasia: “Quite the troublin’ affair.”

And, since she bore no ill will either, Anastasia was of mixed feelings.

Whether or not she knew how Anastasia felt deep down, though she likely did not know, Emilia continued her words with “Moreover”,

Emilia: “While I want to become friends with Anastasia-san, I also want to do so with Priscilla.”

Anastasia: “That’s… um, ya know? I guess you’re free to think as ya please, but…”

Emilia: “In Vollachia, Subaru and Abel got along reaaally well, didn’t they? I understand that it was also because Subaru is good at getting along with people, but… but, I can’t just give up because Subaru is good at it while I’m not.”

Anastasia: “…Well, I guess there ain’t no doubtin’ that Natsuki-kun ‘n the Emperor are good pals.”

As Emilia chose her words with determination, Anastasia evaluated Subaru and Vincent’s relationship from a third-party perspective. However, it seemed like the friendship that Anastasia imagined was of a completely different luminosity to what Emilia was imagining.

Anyhow—

Emilia: “Right now, Crusch-san is in a terrible state, but I want her body to heal, and for her to get her memories back. Then, I’ll start to get along with Priscilla, and I’ll be friends with Anastasia. With Felt-chan, I have confidence that I’ll be able to get along well with her.”

Anastasia: “Don’t make me yer friend so stealthily… but, ya seem to be plannin’ somethin’ incredible, ain’t’cha now?”

The Royal Candidates, all of unique dispositions; the idea of making friends with all of one’s competitors, was probably an idea better off discarded as reckless rather than incredible.

But at those thoughts of Anastasia’s, Emilia smiled with confidence.

Emilia: “You know, I realized something amazing. For some reason, the current me gets reaaally happy when something good happens to Anastasia-san.”

Anastasia: “—. Thanks?”

Emilia: “Yes. So then, I thought this. All of us are doing our best to become the next Monarch, but in the end only one of us will actually win… but, if I was friends with everyone like I am with Anastasia-san, then more so than the frustrated feelings of losing, the feelings of congratulations would be way bigger!”

Anastasia: “…Don’t make me yer friend so stealthily.”

And, the reason that her rejection was weaker than earlier, originated in her pure surprise.

Emilia’s way of thinking, her ideas were all things that Anastasia could not come up with, and each time, the things she said caused her to feel a fresh sense of surprise. —The same went for this instance.

Anastasia: “That might be a darn wonderful idea, but who’s to say, ya know?”

Emilia: “Right?”

Anastasia: “But, ain’t that a bit of a weak attitude? Ain’t ya basically sayin’ that ya wanna reduce yer depressin’ feelings for when ya lose, Emilia-san?”

Concentrating all of one’s strength on winning, without even considering the prospect of defeat—such idealism was not something that Anastasia partook in. So long as there were prospects of both victory and defeat, one must put in maximum effort in order to win while also making appropriate preparations for a potential loss. However, while that was Anastasia’s way of thinking, it felt a little bit uncharacteristic for Emilia to utilize such a manner of thinking herself.

At those words of Anastasia’s, Emilia reacted with a look of puzzlement,

Emilia: “Is it a weak attitude? I was just thinking that when I become the Monarch, I’d like for Anastasia-san and everyone else to cheer me on…”

Anastasia: “…”

Emilia: “Anastasia-san?”

Emilia declared that without any fervor whatsoever, and this time, Anastasia was left speechless. Before Emilia as she blinked her eyes, Anastasia placed her hand over her forehead.

And then—

Anastasia: "Ahahahahahahaha!"

And, even if it was disgraceful, she opened her mouth and erupted with laughter.

In front of Anastasia's burst of laughter, Emilia darted her eyes about in confusion, perhaps wondering about just who in the world had caused this explosive uproar.

Truly, it was an outrageous proposition.

Anastasia: "Really now, to think that rather than yerself, ya'd be worried 'bout us after defeatin' us, you're quite the big shot now, ain't'cha?"

Emilia: "Eh… ah! I see, that's right, I'm sorry. My feelings of refusing to lose are reaaally huge, so just now, I said something very disrespectful…"

Anastasia: "My, I'm quite hurt. It seems our promise to be friends after the Royal Selection might be goin' down the drain with this here."

Emilia: "Th-That's no good! Anastasia-san, if you don't keep your promises, you'll end up becoming Subaru!"

Anastasia: "What sorta threat is that s'possed to be? Tho', it's the scariest one I've heard up till now."

From the stories she had heard thus far, she knew that Subaru was a serial promise-breaker, but Subaru should really rethink his way of life given how instantly a connection was drawn between it and him within Emilia.

In any case, she had certainly received Emilia's unconscious declaration of war.

Moreover—

Anastasia: “If ya say ya wanna get along well~ with the princess, Emilia-san, then ya better do yer darn best. Unfortunately, I ain’t got no compatibility with the princess, so it’d be quite a challenge.”

Emilia: “Eh, is that so? But, I was so sure that you two might get along since you’re pretty similar.”

Anastasia: “Tho’ I’m a bit skeptical of why ya’d think that. Generally, if I got along with her, I wouldn’t have refrained from callin’ just the princess to Priestella.”

Emilia: “I see… that’s it! The next time we all get together, let’s invite Priscilla as well!”

Anastasia: “Emilia-san, the goal there wasn’t merely to just have everyone gettin’ together… ahh~.”

Emilia’s eyes sparkled as if she had thought that she had devised a brilliant plan, but then immediately looked at Anastasia with an uneasy expression. The half-elf unfairly asked “No good?” with innocent eyes, to which Anastasia heaved a sigh.

Anastasia: “As expected of Emilia-san, ya might just really be a Witch.”

Emilia: “Ah, geez, don’t say such perverse things. I don’t mind, but if you call other people Witches, they’ll get reaaally mad at you.”

Anastasia: “Ya ain’t gotta tell me, I wouldn’t say it to anyone but ya, Emilia-san, that sorta thing.”

Because she had ended up saying that, Anastasia lamented her rare slip of the tongue. But sure enough, Emilia was smiling in delight at those words.

Emilia: “Priestella’s in a rough spot right now, so it would probably be difficult for everyone to gather… We’ve come all the way to Vollachia, so how about we all go to Kararagi or something next time?”

Anastasia: “I ain’t reluctant to show y’all ‘round, but if Emilia-san met with Kararagi’s merchants, Natsuki-kun’d probably end up dyin’ of exhaustion. Besides, Reinhard-kun from Felt-san’s Camp can’t be brought outta the Kingdom.”

Emilia: “Ah, that’s right. It would be a pity if only Reinhard needed to stay home, and since Felt-chan would also be reaaally lonely, that’s a no-go.”

Regarding the relationship between Felt and Reinhard, Anastasia held a slightly different point of view from Emilia’s, but the conclusion would be the same, so she did not delve deeply into it.

And, thereupon—

???: “—Huh, Emilia-tan and Anastasia-san, what are you guys doing here?”

Greeted in such a manner, Emilia and Anastasia turned around, and in the entrance of the dining hall in which the two had been speaking, was the figure of Subaru, who had returned to an appearance and voice befitting his age.

However, he was not alone, and the person accompanying him was quite surprising.

???: “What, the half-devil and the she-fox both present without their attendants… despite being in the Empire, ‘tis quite the act of recklessness, is it not?”

Seeing the figure of Priscilla boldly advancing towards them as she placed her red folding fan over her lips, Anastasia made a bitter face, and Emilia’s face suddenly lit up.

They had reactions of opposite extremes; however, seeing Emilia’s reaction in the corner of her eye, Anastasia thought to herself.

As someone who would one day become Emilia’s friend as per her grand ambitions, maybe for just a little bit—so she thought.

Emilia: “Just now, Anastasia-san and I were talking about you, Priscilla.”

Priscilla: “Hoh, talking about mineself, were you? I am talking about you. Are you two perhaps taking advantage of this situation in which the Empire has lost power, scheming to fill up even the smallest bags with money?”

Anastasia: “Emilia-san, I really might be unable to go along with yer plans from earlier.”

She had tried to meet Emilia half way, but Priscilla’s attitude had put a damper on her spirits. Then, seeing Anastasia’s reaction, Emilia got flustered with a “Wait, wait”. Then, as the distressed Emilia searched for her next words, Anastasia and Priscilla suddenly met eyes.

Anastasia: “…”

Irises of pale-turquoise crossed irises of crimson, mutual gazes pregnant with intent clashed, and Anastasia thought.

No matter how much time Emilia put in, her vision of a future where all the Royal Candidates got along with each other would likely never take shape.

However, even if those intentions were never brought to complete fruition—

Anastasia: “Princess, I think I’ll still be arguin’ with yer esteemed self like this no matter how many years pass.”

Priscilla: “Curiously, I am of the exact same opinion, she-fox.”

Anastasia anticipated that the relationship constructed by glaring at each other like this would be an amusing one indeed.

END

The Dragon Kingdom: Meili's Witchbeast Observation Record VII

1

Traversing the Augria Sand Dunes and being a guide to Pleiades Watchtower—although there were a few unforeseen circumstances, Meili was able to complete the role assigned to her.

The battle with the Divine Dragon Volcanica outside the tower, the scattered Books of the Dead within its confines, and the flock of bird familiars belonging to someone who was apparently monitoring the tower—there were many lingering problems and concerns left.

"But none of that is Meili's problem. She brought us here and completed her job," Felt boldly declared while gathering the gaze of the wise men in the assembly, pointing at Meili beside her with her thumb as she straightforwardly praised her work. Receiving that, Meili puffed out her chest, just as she had been told to. Because Felt had warned her that any signs of weakness or a lack of confidence would be taken advantage of.

As if to support Meili, the mini crimson scorpion on her head clapped its pincers and made a sharp sound. Meili let out a small sigh at the gesture of her partner that seemed to cut through the tense atmosphere in the assembly and said, "Just as Felty says, I have fulfilled my promise. I've brought Felty and Mister Red-Hair back safely, right?"

"Yes, she is correct. Regarding that, the Sword Saint Reinhard van Astrea swears upon his mistress Lady Felt and bears witness." The one who replied to her query sonorously with his resonant voice was the red-haired knight, Reinhard. He and Felt had accompanied Meili on the journey to prove her usefulness, and his guarantee made full use of the significant meaning of their titles of 'Sword Saint' and 'Royal Selection Candidate'. Which meant that…

"Hmm, Miss Meili Portroute."

"…Whaat is it?"

"We had various talks amongst ourselves regarding your treatment. You have a past which cannot be erased. Yet on the other hand, you have the ability to fulfill a role no one else can, an ability that has been backed by Lady Felt and Knight Reinhard. Therefore—"

"…"

"We hereby promise, by the authority of the Council of the Wise Men, that the Kingdom will not incriminate you for your past deeds."

It took her a moment to grasp the meaning of the words spoken by the old man with a long beard. Meili became silent and kept blinking; however, understanding and realization finally hit her when she saw the old man, Miklotov, nodding with a pleased look. It was proof that the Kingdom of Lugunica had recognized the worth in her existence.

"…Hic, thank youu."

Meili Portroute had successfully acquired the right to be where she wanted to be, a concrete achievement that could be conveyed to the people who weren't there.

2

"Meili, I am glad that you have returned."

"I humbly extend my congratulations to you for successfully fulfilling your duty. Approbation."

The ones who had received Meili after she came out of the assembly following the conclusion of the trial were a young girl and a man in a butler's attire—the mistress and her servant, Annerose and Clind.

Annerose, who was granted a seat at the assembly as a concerned person but didn't have the authority to speak there, probably felt frustrated, but Meili had not let her down.

"Yes, I'm also really relieved. I'm sorry for making you worry, Annerosy, Mister Butler."

Annerose smiled gently at Meili, who was feeling relieved, before immediately putting on a serious look. "Our concerns are not for you, the one directly involved, to worry about… Rather, Lady Felt, Knight Reinhard."

"Hm?" The person who responded to her call with a raised eyebrow was Felt, who had exited the assembly alongside her.

Accompanied by Reinhard, she closed an eye at Annerose's gaze. "Yeah, what is it? Just so you know, my opinion hasn't changed regardin' the whole give and take since we came out. I don't intend on makin' you feel indebted over something like…"

"Is it true that you left your companions at the tower?" Annerose asked with a slightly stiff voice.

"Yeah, well, that's right," Felt responded to the inquiry while scratching her cheek with her finger.

What Annerose had heard was true. Among the group that headed to the Pleiades Watchtower, the ones who had returned to the royal capital were four: Meili, the mistress-servant duo of Felt and Reinhard, and Grassis, one of the twins that had accompanied them. Ezzo, the strategist of the Felt Camp, and Grassis's sister, Flam, stayed behind at the watchtower and were keeping an eye on its surroundings as a measure against the Witch Cult, which may have entered the tower or posed a risk of doing so in the future.

"I have heard that the desert and tower both have harsh environments. So the reason why you left your companions in such a place was because you were accompanying Meili…" said Annerose, before holding the hem of her dress and bowing deeply on the spot. It was a flawless gesture of etiquette that an aristocrat should uphold, showcasing refinement down to her very fingertips. "I sincerely thank you once again for this matter. House Miload will ensure that the favor received and the sacrifice made by you will be compensated."

Furthermore, Annerose mentioned compensation, prompting Meili to feel the need to speak up, so she attempted to interject. Since the whole situation was caused by Meili. So she felt that it shouldn't bring any disadvantage to Annerose because of that. However…

"No need to worry, Meili. Pipsqueak, Annerose, was it? There ain't no need to overthink this when it comes to those two. I can't say anythin' about Flam, but the teach stayed because he wanted to stay."

"That sounds a little…"

"No, it's true, Lady Annerose," Reinhard interjected from his mistress's side to prevent Annerose from going further. "Ezzo said that he has a strong academic interest in the Pleiades Watchtower. The reason why we left Flam there was to take care of Ezzo and so that they could contact us immediately in case something happens."

Clind squinted his monocled eye at his response. "I see," he began. "Synesthesia among the twins…no, perhaps it is something more than that. Speculation."

"I'd rather not talk about what it really is." Felt shrugged at Clind's insight and kept the twins' secret hidden.

Meili hadn't been told in detail about that, but she also thought they possessed something close to synesthesia like Clind had speculated. Of course, it doesn't mean that it dispels all of my doubts, but… "The small fellow was reaally getting riled up, so it doesn't actually feel like we left him behind."

"So, there's no need to worry about my people bein' at the tower. Someone will have to be stationed there sooner or later anyway, so it ain't a big deal," Felt interjected.

"…Then I shall consider this a personal debt," replied Annerose. "Our House is always prepared to respond to Your Ladyship's requests."

"Ha, you're a stubborn one. Sure then, whatever floats your boat."

It doesn't look like Felty intends on taking her up on that, but thanks to her agreeing, Annerosy's concerns have been somewhat taken care of for now. With that settled, the next thing on my mind is—

“Soo, did Emilia and the others who went to the Empire while we were away manage to find Subaru?” Meili inquired about Emilia and the others who had gone to the Vollachian Empire in search of the missing Subaru. The time taken for Meili and her companions to reach the Pleiades Watchtower was minimized thanks to Clind’s ability, but the journey took more than ten days, including the stay at the tower. So she wondered whether there had been any progress on Emilia’s side.

However, Annerose slowly shook her head in response to that. “Unfortunately, we have not received any contact after they safely entered the Empire. It is just that the border with the Vollachian Empire has become stricter.”

“Dooes that mean that…something is happening iin the Empire?”

“His Lordship had stated that he would keep providing updates. There are no updates from him, however, which means there is something preventing him from doing so. Proof.”

“I see…” It’s difficult to interpret the situation when there’s neither good news or bad news. But the fact that there’s been no contact makes me anxious.

“Trouble in the Empire, eh? I would’ve lent out Reinhard if I could, but…” Felt started.

“I don’t have a right to leave the country unless extraordinary legal measures are taken,” Reinhard explained. “Of course, I am deeply worried about Lady Emilia and Subaru, but…”

“I know, I know. Hah, maybe I should seriously consider usin’ you and the Divine Dragon to threaten the Kingdom.”

“That’s a bad habit of yours, my lady,” Reinhard reproached.

Felt clicked her tongue in dissatisfaction. “Tch.”

She declared that she won’t do that in the desert and the tower, but the fact that it's come up as an option shows that the two of them are considering it. A thought then suddenly crossed Meili's mind. "The two of you are supposed to be in opposition to Subaru and Emilia, so whyy are you being so nice to me?"

"Huh?"

"Normally competitors are a hindrance right? So that's why I was wondering."

It was strange enough that they had helped out Meili, someone they just had no reason to actively save, but the Felt Camp was the Emilia Camp's enemy. In fact, they have every reason to stand in their way, so them thinking about saving them is…

"Leaving aside what Lady Felt thinks, I am a knight. It is therefore natural for me to save Lady Emilia, who is a noble and a citizen of the Kingdom. Besides, Subaru is a friend."

"She sure doesn't act like a noble…" Meili muttered. While it made sense that Subaru was Reinhard's friend, Meili couldn't think of Emilia as a noble even though she was technically one.

Meili tilted her head in wonder, and Felt roughly ran her fingers through her beautiful golden hair and said, "Well…a long time ago when I was still a brat in the slums…"

"Are you really talking about yoourself, Felty?" Meili widened her eyes in surprise at Felt, who had begun talking with a serious expression. It was her first time hearing that she used to live in the slums. But she's a candidate for the royal selection.

"Back then, I was making a living from stealing, and I was hangin' around with some people in a similar situation. Then, one day I heard about a clumsy merchant who was being careless with his warehouse keys. So one thing led to another and we decided to steal them together."

"Excuse me, Knight Reinhard, is it fine for me to hear this story…?" Annerose asked.

"Do keep this a secret," answered Reinhard, putting a finger to his lips.

Annerose didn’t think it would nullify the previously mentioned give and take, but she accepted Reinhard’s words with a troubled expression.

Felt continued talking next to him. “The theft went well. But it seems like someone got greedy once it was over. One of our collaborators tried to get the better of us and hog all of the loot. Things got messy after that and at the end I ran away with the loot…”

“So, only Felty won at the eend…but what abouut it?” On the surface, it just sounds like a story about her taking everything, so I don’t see how it relates to why she started talking, the reason why she’s helping out Emilia’s group.

Felt grimaced and continued. “Well, you see. If it’s just about profit or loss, then yeah I definitely won. But y’know, the food I had with the money I got by selling the loot tasted awful.”

“…”

“At that time, I couldn’t figure out why since I was too busy surviving day by day. But I know the reason now. It was a matter of feeling right and satisfied,” Felt said, flashing her fang, and gave Reinhard, who stood beside her, a firm slap on the back. The clear sound echoed through the hallway as she puffed out her chest. “If I wanted to become the ruler regardless of the means, then Reinhard could just go on a rampage and turn the rest of the candidates into dust. But I wouldn’t feel good if I got the throne like that, and I wouldn’t be satisfied either. So, that’s why.”

“Huh?”

“Remember what you asked me before? The reason why I help Emilia and Subaru out when they’re in trouble is because I wanna win in a way that feels good.” Felt peered into Meili’s face and grinned smugly. “How’s that?”

Meili got overwhelmed by her attitude and vigor and blinked in awe. However, she had been persuaded by the way Felt expressed herself.

“It’s not just for Lady Emilia. Even if it was Lady Crusch, Lady Anastasia, or Lady Priscilla, Lady Felt would feel that same way and act,” Reinhard commented.

“You sayin’ what I’m thinking is irritating, but yeah, it won’t hold water if it ain’t like that.”

“Truth be told, I am envious of how Lady Anastasia and her knight Julius acted. If I didn’t have my responsibilities, I would have acted the same,” said Reinhard, looking down at his hands.

“Dumbass,” Felt responded to his self admonition with her tongue sticking out.

Even Meili could understand why Felt got angry at Reinhard’s words. It was disrespectful to the person who had chosen him despite knowing what he was like as a person. And the same thing could be said by Meili regarding Emilia or Subaru.

“But even so, neither I nor Mister Red-Hair can stop being ourselves.”

“Yes. You are right.” Reinhard gave a faint, gentle smile and Meili, albeit slightly, was able to return it in kind.

At first, when Reinhard looked down at her, she thought of him as a monster whom she should never approach, but from the journey to the tower and by exchanging smiles now, she felt like they had grown closer. Surely there might have been progress like this in the relationships I ended or given up on till now, Meili thought.

“Well, that’s what we think. I understand that it’s hard for you to ask, but don’t hesitate to call out if something happens, Annerose,” Felt said.

“I see. You desire to win in a way that makes you feel good. If that is so, then I am afraid I am going to have to disappoint you…for the one who is going to be victorious in the royal selection is my Emily.” Annerose boldly declared her gratitude and a challenge on Emilia’s behalf.

“And that’s what I want to settle without any unnecessary interference,” Felt accepted the young girl’s challenge with a pleased smile.

Beside her, Meili clenched both her hands and solidified her resolve. The session in the assembly earlier wasn’t merely about deciding her fate—Meili’s work was going to be the achievement of Emilia’s group, who were able to secure her pardon.

“I neeed to give my beest, scorpy,” she said.

Influenced by Meili’s enthusiasm, the mini crimson scorpion on her head responded by spinning its tail. Feeling encouraged by that, she gazed out at the distant sky from the corridor window. I’m not sure if I’m truly facing south, where the Empire is located, but I’m certain that Emilia and Subaru are fighting hard under the same sky. So…

“I’ve never been someone who thinks so haard. I seriously won’t foorgive you if you don’t return saafe and soound,” Meili said. She acknowledged the person she was, and as she thought about the people who allowed her to become who she was now, her lips unconsciously curled into a smile. It was an involuntary habit of hers—it was the same unconscious smile that she made whenever she thought about her high-maintenance elder sister with whom she had spent a lot of time. As she was smiling, the sound of high-pitched pincers echoed from the top of her head.

END

Arc 9:
Light of a Nameless Star

Volume 39

Chapters 1-13

Prologue:
A New Journey

—As she held the reins in the driver's seat of the dragon carriage, the girl looked directly ahead.

The girl bore lovely facial features, and gave off a cute impression.

Until recently, she would have been described as childish without exception, but she had grown taller and matured, which made that description no longer applicable.

The formerly childish young girl had blossomed into a graceful figure that went above and beyond all expectations.

However, this was not something that was achieved by idly passing the time, but was the result of the girl's own tireless self-improvement. It was the manifestation of the results of her daily efforts to face the mirror and continue to challenge herself to become a better person for tomorrow.

—Petra Leyte. That was the name of the cute girl whose pride was evident even on her face.

Holding the reins of the dragon carriage as she firmly steered the jet-black ground dragon, Petra was aware of the important role she carried on her slender shoulders, entrusted with the lives of the group.

Then, from beside the serious-looking Petra, a voice called out, "He~y?".

???: "Petra-chan, you've changed your hairstyle a little. Is that a braid I see he~re?"

As they said that, their fingers reached out to caress Petra's hair without permission. Turning her head to avoid their touch, Petra looked back at her companion with a sidelong glance.

They seemed unhappy that Petra had avoided their touch.

Petra: “Right now, I’m the driver of this dragon carriage, you know? Isn’t it dangerous if you disturb me?”

???: “Calling me a disturbance would be an exaggerati~on. Isn’t it just a little bit of skinship? Besi~des, even if you look away for a moment, we can count on Patrasche-cha~n. Ri~ght?”

Patrasche: “—Dodogyuuun.”

Petra: “I won’t spoil you either, Patrasche-chan.”

Petra chided the ground dragon, who had neighed in response to being called upon. Patrasche, a gentle and proud creature, seemed to listen to Petra’s words with elegance, wagging its tail in response.

After she had witnessed this, Petra glared at the person who had tried to get the ground dragon to take their side,

Petra: “Meili-chan?”

???: “Ye~ah, ye~ah, I understa~nd. Geez, don’t make such a scary fa~ce.”

Petra: “It’s not scary. It’s cute, right?”

???: “I guess s~o.”

Waving and fluttering her hand, the young girl —Meili replied to Petra’s question in a perfunctory manner. There was something she wanted to say about her attitude, but it could also be said to be proof that she had opened up to her.

Initially, there had been no such impression, but Meili had become quite talkative. She was a very different person from the one she had met in the mansion’s confinement room. —Or perhaps, she had felt lonely while Petra and the others were away in the Empire.

Petra: “Maybe it’s just a cute way of sulking…”

Meili: “Hmm? I feel like you’re saying something a bit che~eky.”

Petra placed a finger to her lips, and Meili, who was quick to notice her thoughts, glared at her with her piercing eyes. It was not just Meili, but a small scorpion crawled out from within her blue hair as it stirred.

That scorpion, which they called the little crimson scorpion, began to protest against Petra by snapping its pincers.

Petra had no choice but to smile bitterly on the lively driver's bench—and then she realized. The reason why Meili, the little crimson scorpion, and even Patrasche were making it so lively.

Considering the purpose of this trip, the atmosphere would inevitably become serious.

Petra: "…Thank you, Meili-chan."

Meili: "—. I don't know what that's abo~ut, but it doesn't feel so bad to be than~ked."

Petra: "Liar."

Petra stuck out her small tongue at Meili's side-profile, who was resting her chin in her hands with her elbows on her lap.

—The dragon carriage that was carrying the young girls along with their precious companions continued on its journey.

That was a resolution sought by one who had found themself at a loss in facing something that had been lost in the Vollachian Empire, after having concluded the battle against the Great Disaster; this was the path to reach the possibility of showing them how.

Chapter 1:
O Prayers, Be as Clouds

1

—The final hours were calm, and had passed surprisingly quietly.

???: “—O Star of Mine.”

Indeed, the tone of that voice was flat, yet the degree of love contained within its call overflowed, so as Yorna, as Iris, looked up at the man beside her, her long eyelashes trembled.

Nothing about that voice was out of the ordinary, it was something that felt as though it had called out to her hundreds, nay, thousands of times during this miraculous tryst—and yet, in this moment, it felt special.

—No, to be precise, if just this moment were to be excluded, then any other of those calls would also be special. However, the specialness of this moment differed to that of all those that came before.

After all, it was a call that signified the terminus of this miraculous period.

Yorna: “Yes, Your Excellency.”

Gazing back into the eyes looking into hers, she returned from her own lips a calling filled with love.

Her voice trembled not, and she praised herself for not letting her feminine feelings make her collapse. In the moment of their previous parting, Iris/Yorna had been unable to leave him with any words. But, whenever she reincarnated and looked back at that time, she had thought countless times about what she would do if given another chance.

If given another chance, she would absolutely not leave behind the wailings of a weak woman.

Eugard: "'Tis the inverse of that time. Mineself shall be passing on before thee."

Yorna: "That is so… To call it a revenge of sorts, well, I'm sure Your Excellency has come to know of the malice present in this world of men."

Eugard: "Verily. Much I have learned… Nay, it was taught to me. By the many who walked alongside mineself, of whom thou wert the first."

Yorna: "…"

As those almond-shaped eyes narrowed, he—Eugard Vollachia, reminisced on those olden days, on the people who were present therein, and the gentle wavering of his eyes' splendor caused Yorna to feel a piercing sensation through her chest.

Always, he had been the type of person to wear a stern expression except for when he was in front of Iris.

Because he was such a person, Iris had wondered if he had been able to even once relax his cheeks or eyebrows after she had passed away.

And now after this, after he went towards that place between the skies and the lands, would he—.

Eugard: "Be not afraid, O Star of Mine. Mine life hath been an unexpectedly blessed one."

Yorna: "—Ah."

Eugard: "I met thee, and received life. I walked with thee, and received blessings. I parted from thee, and in doing so committed a grave error, but now that fate hath brought us together once more, I received the opportunity to rectify it."

Eugard's words, the lovely voice of a person counting their blessings one by one, gently dissolved the anxiety and fears within Iris/

Yorna's heart, lovingly unraveling them.

Since antiquity, since he had lost his dearest Iris, Eugard burned with rage, and in his hatred left behind a mistaken law that became the trigger for countless tragedies—Eugard's descendent, the current Vollachian Emperor who was extolled as the Wise Emperor, had promised to abolish that law.

To lift the curse which bound the wolfpeople and molepeople, such was the dearest wish of Iris/Yorna, and Eugard's final regret when he had been alive—finally, he would be able to return this world to those who had the right to live in this era.

To that end—

Eugard: "O Star of Mine, thou art included amongst those."

Suddenly, as he took her into his arms, Eugard's words caused Iris/Yorna's breath to stop. It felt as if the emotions inside of her had been properly dissected, more precisely than ever before.

Yorna: "Your Excellency… I… I…"

Eugard: "Even were it bestowed upon thee in a form undesired, I imagine that no matter the epoch thou hadst found thyself in, thou wouldst have spent thy days forming bonds in earnest. Of course, even in thy present form, the same doth apply. —That, is something thou ought to fulfill to the utmost."

Towards Iris/Yorna, she who was lost as to what to do with the unnatural existence known as herself, those words gently addressed a choice to move towards a way of being that was easy to understand.

No matter the time, Eugard was always correct.

That was neither because Eugard was wise, nor because he was strong. It was because he thought sincerely about those that he faced, with reverence, because he was a compassionate Emperor who wished for the happiness of others.

Known as the King of Thorns, and feared more than any other, Iris's beloved Emperor earnestly thought about, honored, and wished for Yorna with unbearably deep love.

And so, as far as Iris and Yorna were concerned, Eugard's words would always be correct.

Thus, the fact that the truth in his words would also hold true for people other than Iris/Yorna meant that—

Yorna: "—I, have no choice but to spend the remainder of my life proving that."

Eugard: "'Tis a great service."

Hearing Iris/Yorna's determined answer, Eugard responded with a smile.

At Eugard's taciturn way of being, Iris/Yorna narrowed her eyes slightly, and extended her arm so that she could touch his cheek, as she brought her lips close to his.

Yorna: "…"

Lips met each other and overlapped, as those who had both died in that era, a man and a woman who by all rights should never have been able to reunite, separated by entire worlds, were now the closest they had ever been.

Eugard: "…"

Like that, the closest contact that they had ever made in this world persisted for a bit, and then a bit more, and a little while longer, before the distance between them slowly grew—The eyes of Iris/Yorna, locked with Eugard's.

And then—

Eugard: "—O Star of Mine, I love thee so."

Yorna: "As do I, Your Excellency. Evermore, without fading for all perpetuity, my heart shall long for you."

Having exchanged a kiss, having delivered each other words brimming with love, his final moments were of his lips curling into the shape of a smile.

For the olden tale known as “Iris and the King of Thorns”, a story that began in the age of antiquity, a story that had kept postponing its own conclusion until the present day, this was the true curtain’s close.

2

—Dawn broke upon the first night since the Great Disaster that had shaken the entity of the Vollachian Empire had come to a conclusion.

The threat of undead wreaking havoc across the Empire had been averted by means of the unity of imperial subjects, devoting themselves to the law of iron and blood; at the forefront of those Sword Wolves of Vollachia, was the majestic figure of their apex, Vincent Vollachia, who exchanged blows directly against the enemy ringleader with Yang Sword raised aloft.

Centered around the Imperial Capital of Lupugana, the damages had reached every major city of Vollachia, such as the Fortified City of Garkla, Glarasia, the City of Iron and Blood, the Demon City of Chaosflame, and the Cloud Sea City of Mezoreia; yet, each and every city had been able to avoid falling into a catastrophic state.

Therefore, whilst left with major scars, a triumphant momentum was what ultimately enveloped the Vollachian Empire.

Of course, thinking in the long term, the top brass could not bask in the victory forever. Those leading figures would have to deal with the damage reports flooding in from various locations one after another, as well as the numerous circumstances of their subjects that they would need to sanction, and thus they would not have any time to sleep.

Amidst those reports, there was a piece of information that had been silently snuck in.

In the battle against the Great Disaster, having contributed greatly to the victory of the Vollachian Empire, the obituary of a lone woman who had lived like a flame and captivated many—.

Within a room of the Fortified City of Garkla, which was serving as temporary headquarters in place of the ravaged Imperial Capital, Emperor Vincent Vollachia happened to catch wind of that obituary, creating a silence so very unlike himself, who would respond to all matters within an instant of deliberation, and after spending some time with his head down—

Vincent: "—I see."

Those brief words, were all that he spoke.

3

The fight against the Great Disaster had ended, and people began to move on to reclaim their lives.

Vollachia suffered terrible devastation from the undead army during the unprecedented Great Disaster, but the inhabitants of the realm resolutely held their heads high, standing back up one by one as they set out to rebuild the land.

The sight of the people of the Empire simply overwhelmed Petra Leyte.

Petra: "Although, I don't really like the Empire much…"

Having said that, with mixed feelings, Petra stood in the streets of the Fortified City.

A significant part of Petra's reason for not liking the Empire was anger that this was the place where her precious friend and Petra's love interest, Natsuki Subaru, was forcibly taken away to.

But even disregarding those factors, Petra's feeling for Vollachia still leaned toward dislike, but regardless, they cooperated and made an immense effort to prevent the country's destruction.

Petra was also relieved that the Great Disaster had been overcome and the Empire was spared from destruction.

However, even so—

Petra: “—Subaru.”

Petra, who in public addressed him with the honorific “Sama”, was concerned for the man who had doubtlessly done more for the Empire than anyone else, even the Emperor.

Petra was extremely worried about how much it must have worn his heart down in an Empire full of terrible things because Subaru was such a kind and compassionate person.

Even so, the final nail in the coffin was too much for Subaru, who had so many things to worry about.

Petra: “Priscilla Barielle-sama…”

That was the name of the woman who had caused a tremendous, deep, and painful wound in Subaru’s heart.

Due to Petra’s position, she never exchanged a single word with her. However, there were opportunities. Before the Great Disaster, she was on the same side of the battle for the Imperial Capital and had ample opportunity to talk with her.

However, Petra did not dare to approach Priscilla.

This was because she, like Emilia, was a candidate for the Royal Selection in the Kingdom of Lugunica, and she felt that she should not get more comfortable than necessary with their opponents.

And Petra regretted that.

By not having interacted with Priscilla, Petra had no right to mourn her—Priscilla Barielle’s death, and, therefore, found it difficult to sympathize with Subaru and Emilia.

It would be hard to tell two very heartbroken people that she understood what they were going through.

This was something tremendously frustrating for Petra right now—.

???: "—Hello, hello, Miss Petra, are you alone?"

Petra: "Oh, Zikr-san."

Petra, who had been pursing her lips and tensing her cheeks, looked up at the call, and there was Zikr Osman with a round, voluptuous hairdo.

As a General of the Empire, Zikr played an important role in the battle against the Great Disaster, and he was a very likable person who treated Petra as just another person without being arrogant about his position.

Because of his diligence, Zikr would likely be heavily relied upon after the war, but it was unusual for him to be alone in a place like this. At this, as Petra's eyes widened,

Zikr: "I've finished reorganizing all the troops, so I have finally come down to check the damage myself. I had heard the reports, but I had to see it firsthand."

Petra: "I see, that was it. I do not know the details of the reorganization… but well done."

Zikr: "Thank you for your thoughtfulness. However, the role I was able to play is insignificant compared to those who are working so energetically, such as General First-Class Goz and General First-Class Kafma."

Petra: "I don't think that you can say that your hard work is not important because one of you worked harder than the other."

Zikr, looking embarrassed, became even more so from Petra's statement.

On the other hand, Petra reflected on her own remarks, remembering that when she had worried about Subaru earlier, she had compared his efforts to those of another—a stern-eyed Emperor.

She wanted to see things the same way as the people she liked, but she was frustrated with herself for not being able to.

Petra: “But it is difficult for those of the General First-Class, isn’t it? Not even a few days have passed since then, and you have to fly around to other cities.”

Zikr: “Yes. The Generals of the various regions are responding, but the influence of a General First-Class directly in front of them cannot be ignored. Both in terms of the morale of the troops and the control over them.”

Petra: “I understand that the soldiers will be happy to see the people they admire, but control means…”

Zikr: “Sadly, even in these situations… no, precisely because of this poor situation, many are willing to take advantage of it to achieve immediate gain or to fulfill their ambitions.”

Petra: “…”

Zikr lowered his eyebrows, and Petra’s round eyes went downcast in response.

Petra was actually convinced by Zikr’s reply, thinking to herself, “I knew as much.”

The Vollachian Empire chose to stand together against a great enemy. Still, once the Great Disaster had been eliminated, the problem reverted from the perspective of the nation to the perspective of the individual. They would take what they lacked, would steal it, and, in some cases, would try to force their way through it all.

Those Generals First-Class whom Zikr mentioned intended to serve as a deterrent to such problems.

Zikr: “General First-Class Goz left as soon as his wife at the Imperial Capital was confirmed to be safe, and General First-Class Kafma also left as soon as he received his promotion.”

Petra: “That was great, right? Everyone was so surprised.”

Zikr: “There are only nine slots for General First-Class in the Empire, and the recent war has left several of those slots vacant… The creation of a new General First-Class is one of the few good things to come out of all this. Kafma understood that and accepted the position of General First-Class, even though he’d previously turned it down.”

Petra: “Zikr-san, you’ve never had that sort of talk raised to you, right?”

Zikr: “To me?”

Petra tilted her head and asked Zikr, who praised the names of the Generals First-Class and their way of doing things.

Petra did not observe the battle up close, so she did not know how those of the General First-Class performed. However, Zikr’s fighting spirit was also quite impressive in the sense that Petra was able to witness it up close and personal.

During the battle for the Fortified City, there were those who were in the command post, observing the broad scope of the battle and directing it, and there were those who continued to clash with the undead with swords in their hands. Zikr’s role was to bridge the gap between the two, and to ensure that they worked together seamlessly.

Although unassuming, without his work, the cohesiveness would have frayed and possibly even crumbled.

Petra: “I think even more so since my Nee-samas and I were behind the scenes as part of the group of healers.”

Zikr: “…That is much appreciated recognition, Miss Petra. Just receiving those words from a woman, I, Zikr Osman, feel deeply rewarded.”

Petra: “I am not saying that lightly…”

Zikr: “Of course, understood. But I do mean it, too.”

Zikr nodded his head as Petra tried to push back, feeling that she had been ignored. Then he turned his round eyes to the view of the city and relaxed his cheeks.

Zikr: “If there is any reward to be had, this sight, this result, is it. His Excellency the Emperor fled to the East, and I happened to be in the Fortress City on a mission. Thanks to this coincidence, I had the honor of accompanying His Excellency and being present at this moment. I am undeniably blessed.”

Petra: “…I am not sure. Zikr-san, don’t you deserve more praise?”

Zikr: “Don’t you get it? In that case, Miss Petra, can’t you think of someone likeable in that brilliant mind of yours?”

Petra gave a “huh” at the abrupt suggestion. In her mind, all she could vaguely recall was Natsuki Subaru, who had occupied a large part of her mind until a few minutes ago.

Zikr nodded deeply in response to Petra, who unintentionally did exactly as he said.

Zikr: “That likeable someone will smile at you as a result of your deeds. Isn’t that enough to make you feel rewarded?”

Petra: “That is… well, yes.”

Zikr: “It’s the same thing. I am a General of the Vollachian Empire, but the person Miss Petra has in mind is probably far greater than I, at least in my opinion. So, this is fine.”

So spoke Zikr, with one eye closed and his hand clutched to his chest as he smiled at Petra. He was neither being unreasonable nor trying to deceive Petra when he said that.

That was why Petra also quietly lowered her head and could not say anything—

???: “—However, His Excellency Vincent is all for reward and punishment according to merit. I disapprove of a person who’s done such meritorious service saying such selfless things, as it makes it difficult for the soldiers to express their opinions.”

Then, instead of Petra, who had closed her mouth, a voice interrupted from a different direction. Petra and Zikr turned their heads to see Serena walking slowly toward them.

Serena Dracroy, with a distinctive white scar on her cheek that nevertheless did not detract from her dignified beauty, was accompanied by her acquaintance Roswaal beside her, who made Petra's lips curl.

Serena and the others did not miss that flagrant response from Petra.

Serena: "As usual, how can you be so disliked by someone who seems old enough to be your daughter? You cannot complain about being stabbed in the back by someone who so openly shows rebellious intent."

Roswaal: "I would never hire a child who can't think about the consequences of their aaactions~. Regardless of your perception of me, I only employ competent people like Petra-kun, Otto-kun, and the like."

Serena: "That's a bad habit you have. Eventually, it's going to be the reason you get your feet swept out from under you."

Serena shrugged her shoulders, having a casual exchange with Roswaal, her caustic words mercilessly critical of him, which Petra found somewhat enjoyable to listen to.

But the truth was that she did not really feel that small pleasantness at the moment.

Zikr: "High Countess Dracroy, I thought you were busy…"

Serena: "The same could be said of you, General. Don't worry. Though it's true that I haven't slept for the past three days, my eyes are still clear. I can't sleep."

Zikr: "That does not sound very reassuring…"

Serena smiled fearlessly at Zikr, and Zikr's shoulders contracted like he was afraid of her. Roswaal's gaze turned to Petra as those two exchanged a few words.

Petra, who had consciously avoided contact with him, stiffened slightly at his gaze,

Petra: “Wh-what is it, Master?”

Roswaal: “Don’t be so wary. I’m simply concerned that you’re alone and that you’re working too much. Where is Frederica?”

Petra: “…Frederica-neesama has been keeping herself very busy for a long time and is now taking a break. After many requests, she finally took a rest.”

It reminded her that Frederica was barely breathing and sleeping as if in a coma.

Frederica, like Petra, worked as one of the healers, but also went around the fortress as a messenger, transforming herself into a beast when necessary. Her tireless work ethic was something to be respected, but as her protegee, she could not help but feel worried.

The fact that she was resting now was not because she had listened to Petra’s appeal, but because Ram and Garfiel had pushed her to do so.

Petra: “I couldn’t even convince Frederica-neesama to rest.”

Roswaal: “Frederica has a strong sense of responsibiiility~. By no means did she mean any disrespect to you, Petra-kun.”

Petra: “—Hk, I know that already, you don’t have to tell me that.”

Roswaal: “I see. You’re right. I’m sorry I said something I shouldn’t have. —Are you okay?”

Petra: “…The Yang Magic is working properly.”

Petra furrowed her eyebrows and answered Roswaal’s subtly dodging response.

Petra’s magical techniques, which she had learned from Roswaal and was now developing day by day, were suited to the Yang attribute, which had many effects that increased the power and vitality of the target.

In Petra's case, she was still uneasy about using it on others, but she could use her Yang Magic on herself and be adequate enough to compensate for her lack of strength or lack of sleep. Of course, stamina was not an endless source of energy, so eventually, one's limits would emerge.

Petra: "Right now, I would like to work a little bit more. Do you wish to stop me?"

Roswaal: "—. No, I won't stop you. We all have opportunities in life when we have to overcome reason and common sense with passion and force, and if this is the time for you, Petra-kun, I'm not going to take that away from you."

Petra: "…I still don't like you, Master."

Petra turned her face away from Roswaal, who closed one eye and looked at her with his blue one.

Despite being such an unforgivable person, Roswaal often affirmed Petra's ideas in this way. While he did not say these words to curry favor with Petra, it also did not help that these were his honest opinions.

For that being so, it would be as if Petra could understand Roswaal's true nature.

Serena: "What a troublesome master-servant relationship. The way such things are, the Empire and the Kingdom aren't so different. Don't you think so, General Second-Class Zikr?"

Zikr: "With Miss Petra being so intelligent at her age, it is not surprising that she is so enthusiastic about Margrave Mathers's education. When sincerity meets sincerity, I think a clash is inevitable. Of course, I think such a harsh way of life has also honed the beauty of High Countess Dracroy."

Serena: "Good grief, you're an Imperial General through and through. I thought you were a decent man, but instead, you're like this. You are pleasing me by showing me a face to my liking."

While Petra and Roswaal talked, Zikr reverently bowed to Serena's comments.

Petra sighed as she watched the conversation between two of the Empire's most unique temperaments. —Roswaal's nature, whatever it might have been, was unimportant. Now that she was face to face with Roswaal, whom she had been avoiding, there was no stopping now.

To which, Petra tightened her cheeks, and looked up at Roswaal,

Petra: "What are you planning to do with Subaru, Master?"

Roswaal: "Hmm."

Petra: "Please answer."

Petra's question was straightforward, but lacking in specificity.

Roswaal let out a small sigh as it was directed at him. He closed one eye again, and, this time, looked at Petra with the yellow one—this time with an inhuman look that Petra disliked.

—The unnaturalness of Subaru and Roswaal's relationship gave Petra a strong impression.

Petra suspected that this was something different from the indiscretions of Roswaal in Arlam village, Petra's hometown, or the Sanctuary where Frederica and Garfiel were from—something that Subaru and the others had almost entirely tolerated.

If one were to look at Roswaal's misdeeds and who pardoned him, the conditions were the same for Subaru, Emilia, and Frederica, who were too forgiving. Then there was Beatrice and Garfiel, who said they were angry, followed by Ram, who was in a unique position, and Petra and Otto, who clearly did not forgive Roswaal.

Naturally, Petra and Otto always felt tension when dealing with Roswaal. Of course, they did not want to make waves, so the tension was like quietly roasting over a flame. What she disliked about Roswaal was that he never changed his expression while being roasted in such a way.

However, the blue flames that Petra and Otto directed toward Roswaal and the heat in the air between Subaru and Roswaal seemed fundamentally different.

It was a terrible way of putting it, Petra did not want to admit it. But she was convinced.

Between Subaru and Roswaal, there was a secret that neither Petra nor anyone else was included in. That shared secret was the source that gave rise to a different kind of tension.

Furthermore, the consequences of that secret would surely, probably, cause Subaru misfortune.

Roswaal: “What I’m planning to do with Subaru, was iiit~?”

At Petra’s hostile look, Roswaal muttered in a slightly gravelly voice.

She felt that there was not the usual atmosphere of deception and mockery housed within that. However, even without such a clownish atmosphere, she could not heedlessly trust Roswaal.

As if to confirm Petra’s sentiment, Roswaal, with one eye still closed,

Roswaal: “Petra-kun, what do you think would be the correct thing for me to dooo~?”

Petra: “…Are you making fun of me?”

Roswaal: “No, no, I didn’t mean it that way. Genuinely, I’m at a bit of a loooss~… What kind of stance should I take, in regards to Subaru-kun?”

Petra: “…”

As he said this, Roswaal lightly lifted both hands and lit his fingertips with lights of different color. Floating red on his right hand and blue on his left, he was earnestly considering his next move.

Red and blue, whichever direction each led, Petra was unsure which would be the better path for her—nay, for the people that were important to her.

As much as she was unsure, if there was anything Petra could do, it was just one thing.

Petra: "If…"

Roswaal: "Hmm?"

Petra: "If you cause Subaru any further pain, if you cause him any further grief, I will never forgive you, Master… No, I will absolutely make you regret it."

Not forgiving him would not hurt Roswaal in any way. After serving him for a year and a half already, she understood that.

This was why, thinking back to the past year and a half as hard as she could, Petra said the one thing that Roswaal would hate the most.

Yes, she would make him regret it no matter what. For that reason —

Petra: "Whatever it is you are wanting to do, whatever it is you are planning to do, Master, I am going to get in the way of it by any means necessary."

Roswaal: "…"

For a moment, a silence was born between Petra and Roswaal.

Petra focused all her strength into tensing her cheeks, intending to make the sternest face she had ever made in the history of her adorable self. In response to Petra's direct approach, Roswaal fell silent.

It was unclear to what extent Petra's stern face contributed to his contemplation in that moment of silence.

Roswaal: "…That would certainly be trooooubling~. You seem to be much more loved than I am."

Petra: "…When you say that I am loved, by what exactly?"

Roswaal: "Something that I've resolved myself to resist, yet have never been able to prevail against, a peculiar power of that sort."

Roswaal shrugged his shoulders and once again said something that Petra did not understand. But, what clouded his face as he muttered this made Petra think it was not mere nonsense.

Indeed, Roswaal was dealing with a sense of powerlessness, something that he was fully aware that he could not win against. Even though she was being told that she was loved as such, it did not make much sense to Petra.

Petra merely wanted to be loved by the people she loved.

In addition, she would like for her loved ones to be as happy as possible with smiles on their faces.

That was why—

Petra: "I want Emilia-neesama and Subaru to smile."

Petra firmly clapped her hand on her chest and muttered those words as if she was praying.

She sincerely hoped that all of these prayers would hang like clouds over those whom she loved, protecting them from the hardships that would otherwise come down on them like the rays of the sun.

—Beside Petra's and Roswaal's exchange, watching the master and servant swelling with a burning tension, Serena cast a smile at Zikr.

Serena: "What do you think? Even the people of the Kingdom show quite a bit of promise, now don't they? Quite complex and mysterious, just the way I like it."

Zikr: “…It is beautiful when you smile like that, High Countess, but I cannot say it is in good taste.”

Chapter 2:
Will Not Play the Villain

1

???: “Kakakakka! Never would’ve thought that a fella like me’d die not on the battlefield but in a safe zone. Never in all my life have I heard of a shinobi dyin’ like this, but ain’t it just way too ironic.”

So spoke the monstrous old man, waving around both of his empty sleeves as he laughed uproariously.

Hearing that hearty laughter, yet being powerless to help with his healing magic, Garfiel was of mixed feelings.

—After the battle against the Great Disaster, Garfiel joined the healers, and was now treating the injured.

Ever since coming to the Empire, Garfiel had continued to stake his life on fierce battles without much respite. Of course, his allies all told him that resting was a high priority, but he had not been able to listen to them.

Fortunately, Garfiel’s body was sturdy, and because of the Divine Protection of Earth Spirits, standing on the ground was the best form of relaxation for him. Of everyone within Emilia’s camp, Garfiel was the furthest from working himself to death. And although it went without saying, the one closest to working themselves to death was Otto.

Anyway—

???: “Once you have decided to do something, any attempt to talk you out of it would be pointless. In that case, then go create as much of a debt of gratitude from the Empire as you can. There is a strong market for gratitude right now.”

Indeed, amidst everyone who was against Garfiel’s ideas, he was glad for the presence of the person he had feelings for, who made it clear that she was on his side. The way that her phrasing pointed out his faults was so characteristic of her, something he liked about her.

For that reason, while it was a shock to his comrades, Garfiel had volunteered to take up this role. Ultimately, the reason no one had tried to stop him, was because they all understood.

Garfiel: “When Captain’s havin’ it the toughest of us all, how can our amazin’ selves remain flustered?”

Grumbling that, Garfiel gnashed his sharp canines.

They had lost a strong, truly strong woman. Although he could not say they had fought the same enemy side by side, the sight of many dazzling flames rising up within the Imperial Capital had been seared into Garfiel’s eyelids.

That sense of loss could not simply be described as the loss of Emilia’s rival.

That was why, Garfiel was here.

Even if just a single person greater, he would prevent them from being lost. With these hands that had relentlessly smashed through the undead, that sometimes had no choice but to eliminate the enemies standing in his allies’ way through brute force, he would save lives.

It was contradicting. But, contradicting was fine. He would not think about difficult things. He would follow his heart, and that was that.

Following his heart, he would fell his enemies, heal his allies, and save them through his own power.

If Garfiel could save even just one more person by forgoing sleep, then he ought to continue doing that.

???: “…Good grief, the nerve of young’uns ta immediately leave the elderly behind. Ain’t no helpin’ how revoltin’ that aspect of ‘em is.”

Garfiel: “Huh, is that sarcasm, gramps? Just ’cause my amazin’ self can’t heal yer arms…”

???: “Kakakakka! I wouldn’t say it’s sarcasm. Lemme tell ya, the source of my strength over all these decades has been constantly goin’ on and on about my envy and jealousy, ya know? Sayin’ that I’m envious ain’t a lie or anythin’ like that. Ahh, I’m filled with jealousy.”

Wagging his white eyebrows up and down, Olbart skillfully used his foot to scratch his neck.

He did not seem particularly inconvenienced by the loss of both arms, and nobody could tell whether that attitude was out of concern for Garfiel, whose healing magic could not do anything about that, or if it was the reverse and he was just teasing.

At any rate, regardless of what had happened to his arms, the old man was also a monster, since he could still move so much despite being all but dead.

But then again, when it came to the topic of surviving a near-death experience—

???: “—Shut the fuck up, old ass fuckhead! Stop fucking with the guy who’s doing a fuck-ton of work even though he’s fucking tired!”

Olbart: “Oh, scary scary. That ain’t the vigor of someone who’s half-dead.”

A figure lying on a bed further back in the room shouted angrily, and Olbart laughed at that in a low, throaty sound. To that fierce vigor, Garfiel scratched and said “Oi”,

Garfiel: “My amazin’ self’s grateful for the backup, but worry ’bout yer own body first. You’re seriously just one step away from death… you’re in a similar state to “Vivirolo’s Offering”.”

???: “Ahh? I’m saying that it was thanks to you that I was fucking saved! Bastard, don’t fucking say shit like you won’t accept my gratitude… Ghgyaoh!”

Garfiel: “Shut the hell up, and sleep!”

He used his hand to push down the head of a short figure, whose entire body screamed as he fell back down. Such a thing was a matter of course due to the severity of his wounds; even if healing magic was continuously applied with full strength, it would not be able to keep up with the damage.

In fact, even now there was a perpetual, intense pain that rippled through his body.

Garfiel: “It ain’t my amazin’ self’s place to say this, but I’m surprised you’re able to get up and speak.”

???: “It fucking hurts like shit and it’s fucking tough, but that bullshit won’t fucking stop the Great Groovy Gumlet. That’s just how it is, so use some poison or medicine or some shit to fucking quell… Guhhohhh…!!”

Olbart: “Give it up now, give it up. This is the result of ya ignorin’ all the signals in yer body. I lost both of my hands ‘n you’re basically as close ta death as me. Why don’tcha just retire?”

Groovy: “Like I’d do that, fucking duuumbass!”

In response to Olbart’s mockery, baring his fangs and shouting in anger, was Groovy Gumlet—one of the Nine Divine Generals, and probably the one who had come the closest to death in the Empire whilst still surviving.

In the life-or-death bout against the Great Disaster, he had performed an absurdly important role. After all, it was he who had crossed blades with the lead actor of “Iris and the King of Thorns”, the Emperor of the Briar, Eugard Vollachia, and had cooperated with Halibel to eliminate the curse; he had been a key figure in securing victory.

Garfiel: “Heard that if ya hadn’t done that, everyone would’ve ended up getting immobilized by those thorns.”

Groovy: “I just pulled out whatever the fuck I could. After I saw off the Emperor of the Briar and the Admirer, I was just fucking lying down until I could give the fucking Fiend Sword to that fuckwad Cecilus."

Groovy muttered as if he were sulking, but before he had fallen, he had put in a great deal of work.

He had taken Eugard's curse into his own body, and then had allowed the Fiend Sword to cut it away along with himself; no matter how many times Garfiel heard the story, he still could not understand it. However, according to Groovy and Olbart, they could not understand Garfiel when he explained his fight against the Cloud Dragon, so they were the same in that regard.

The accumulation of miracles and individuals performing to the utmost, that was the reality of what had occurred back then in the Imperial Capital—nay, across the entirety of the Empire. Whether it was Garfiel, who had fought against the Cloud Dragon; Groovy, who had saved the Emperor of the Briar from his own thorns; or Olbart, who had sacrificed one of his arms to avert the Witch's schemes, all of them had exerted their utmost.

There was no need to exaggerate their achievements, and there was no need to go against the facts.

Olbart: "Well, as a geezer who's got hardly any time left, it's always hard ta see young'uns dyin' one after the other, so it's been a pleasure ta see ya fellas survive."

Groovy: "…Though aside from me, it's pretty fucking dubious to say that guy survived."

Garfiel: "By that guy, you mean…"

Thinking about the person that he had mentioned, Garfiel's gaze moved towards the end of the healing room. And, sticking out in a strange and conspicuous way, he noticed the distinctive figure of something standing upright.

Even now, the healing room was still frenetic, with people running back and forth to tend to the injured; in a corner of the room, standing in such a way that it assimilated itself into the wall to not be an obstacle, was a being whose body was composed of steel—upon noticing Garfiel's gaze, a green jewel that was set into what appeared to be its head glowed,

???: "I, detect line of sight. Task, directive, or instruction, it is predicted to be one of these."

While speaking so, lumbering over towards Garfiel and the others, was yet another one of the Nine Divine Generals, the one known as the Steelman, Moguro Hagane.

However, to be more precise, their race was distinct from the Steelfolk, and their true identity was that of the Meteor that served as the core of the Crystal Palace. This title, after the collapse of the crucial Crystal Palace and Magic Crystal Cannon, no longer held any meaning, but—

Garfiel: "Ah, sorry 'bout that. My eyes just happened to wander there, I ain't got any tasks for ya."

Moguro: "Acknowledged. And, the other two?"

Groovy: "Nope, nothing. Stay over there so that you don't get in the fucking way, Moguro."

Moguro: "Moguro. That is me. Acknowledged. Will await further instructions."

While Garfiel stood next to him with an awkward expression on his face, Groovy said this while motioning with his chin, which Moguro obediently followed, sitting down clinging to the side of the bed.

In doing so, they appeared like a slightly oversized decoration.

Olbart: "They're 'bout as admirable as a properly trained ground dragon or thunderwolf. However, that's the thing ain't it. Even the Crystal Palace can be forgetful."

Groovy: "The Crystal Palace and Magic Crystal Cannon are fucking blown to shit. It's a fucking miracle that there isn't fuck-all left of Moguro's core. It was also too fucking good to be true that it happened to fall near where I was lying down."

Olbart: “Ya got along with ‘em the best, so maybe they came ta meetcha?”

Olbart cackled with laughter as he cracked jokes, to which Groovy snorted his snout in discontent.

As made apparent by their dialogue, Moguro Hagane did not remember anything from before the Great Disaster. If Subaru were to be asked, he would say this seemed like a “factory reset”, as it seemed like everything that this Meteor had acquired as Moguro Hagane had been erased.

An immense power capable of blowing away the entirety of the Imperial Capital was forcibly raised into the sky to prevent such an outcome, and had detonated without engulfing the area, so it could perhaps be said that this was a minor price to pay.

Garfiel: “How could I ever say somethin’ like that after what happened to Rem?”

Just how much of a weight was carried in someone losing all of their Memories up to that point, was something that Garfiel was keenly aware of due to the circumstances of one of their own.

It was not only a great turmoil to the actual person who had lost their Memories, but also to the people around them whom they had forgotten.

That was why, he understood the feeling—he would not say such thoughtless things, though.

Garfiel: “Surprisingly, the things this geezer’s sayin’ might actually be right.”

Groovy: “Hahh? Are you also fucking mocking me with that load of fucking horseshit?”

Garfiel: “That ain’t it. I mean, it may be true that they don’t remember anything. But ain’t it also right that they’re not doin’ anything like tryna flee from ya?”

Saying that, Garfiel narrowed his eyes at Moguro, who was sitting next to the bed.

To be honest, that large frame sitting in the healing room was an obstruction, but the fact that they were making themselves as compact as possible to avoid causing trouble to their surroundings left a sense of good will.

To begin with, the fact that Moguro went to such lengths to remain here, was likely because they did not want to part from Groovy's side.

Having lost their Memories, it might have just been something like imprinting onto the first person they encountered. But, Rem said that when she and Ram finally reunited in this Empire, she intuited that Ram was her older sister through a strange feeling.

Garfiel thought maybe that same "something" also remained within Moguro.

Garfiel: "Well, Captain also said something 'bout Rem breakin' his finger all of a sudden…"

There were also cases when that "something" did not remain, so it could not be said to be an absolute rule. But, since this was the healing room where people were healed, if Moguro had come here all on their own to heal their own heart in a place nobody knew about, then Garfiel had no reason to kick them out.

Garfiel: "Rather, the old geezer who does nothin' but talk without even the hands to spare is more of an obstruction."

Olbart: "Kakakakka! Really talkin' like that ta me, this young'un! Well, I do get what you're sayin'."

As Garfiel shrugged his shoulders, Olbart waved his two sleeves about while laughing. Outside that exchange, Groovy rubbed his black snout, and looked at Moguro.

He looked at his former comrade in arms, who was simply nestling close to him without even the slightest of movements.

Groovy: "Don't do such fucking sentimental things, fucking hell."

Moguro: “Within statement, sound of liquid detected. In fear of unusual circumstances, requesting instructions…”

Groovy: “Fucking shut the fuck up!”

Moguro: “Understood.”

Hearing that fruitless exchange, Garfiel gnashed his fangs and unconsciously smiled.

Since he was smiling, he worried a little bit over if it was okay to smile, and then, following his heart, he smiled.

2

Otto: “—So, Anastasia-sama will return to Lugunica via Kararagi?”

Anastasia: “Yes, that’s the plan. I’m in the Empire as an envoy from Kararagi, y’know. I know it’s just a title, but I gotta do my duty.”

When Anastasia, smiling softly, openly revealed her inner thoughts to Otto, he accepted it with a quiet and casual “I see” on the surface.

However, his inner thoughts were not as carefree as his expression. —Whatever the case, Anastasia had fulfilled her promised role for the Kararagi City-States. This would boost her reputation with the Kararagi Council, which had sent her there, and Anastasia would receive another solid boost in her bid for the crown.

Of course, Emilia also contributed greatly to the fight against the Great Disaster when the Vollachian Empire was on the verge of collapse, and His Excellency the Emperor Vincent directly requested her assistance.

Although they were smuggled into the country when they entered the Empire, they would be able to return home triumphant and proud.

Still, whether it was the battle against the Witch Cult in Pristella, the capture of the Pleiades Watchtower, or even the rescue of the Vollachian Empire, both the Emilia camp and Anastasia camp had been involved. It was not good that the prestige was not only Emilia's, but Anastasia's as well. —Emilia needed to accomplish a feat without Anastasia, something of her own.

Of course, had it not been for their part in the fight against the Great Disaster that struck the Empire this time, the camp would have been far behind, even more so than it was now.

Anastasia: "There's a mountain of things to think 'bout, it must be tough for Otto-kun, eh?"

That momentary silence was pierced by Anastasia's light blue eyes.

Despite being an approximate guess, this question had a certainty to it, thanks to Anastasia's seasoned experience.

In response to her prodding, Otto smiled back and said, "No."

Otto: "It is true that it is a bit daunting, but if we were to talk in terms of having much to think about, there is no comparison to His Excellency the Emperor or to Prime Minister Berstetz, who need to rebuild the Empire from this point forth."

With that, Otto shifted the subject to someone else present—Berstetz, the Imperial Prime Minister.

In the conference room where Anastasia, Berstetz, and Otto met after finishing the battle against the Great Disaster, they discussed the future plans of Vollachia, which was now putting together a project for recovery and revitalization, and of the people who had been cooperating with them.

Amidst all this, Otto directed everyone's attention to Berstetz, who concealed the color of his pupils deep within his threadbare eyes,

Berstetz: "As you say, there are many challenges ahead. But the truth is, I do not think of it as a burden."

Anastasia: "Oh, really? That's awfully encouragin'."

Berstetz: "In the beginning, I was a treacherous subject who colluded with the White Spider Chisha Gold to jeopardize the position of His Excellency the Emperor. Because of the circumstances, I was not executed during the battle against the Great Disaster, but I was still to be executed after the war."

Otto: "…But you are talking to us like this. There was no such action, correct?"

Berstetz: "Yes. The Emperor has so decided. Of course, should any of them have thought that I could not be pardoned, I would have had no choice but to take that blade into my body…"

Otto could guess what Berstetz was thinking when he broke off his speech. It was probably the biggest reason why Berstetz's head was still connected to his neck—the declaration made after the war by the strongest man in the Empire, the Blue Lightning.

Cecilus: "Before any minor roles get bloodthirsty, I would like to declare that it is His Excellency's decision not to kill Berstetz-san, so you all should follow it. If you go against it, I will have to show my sword-like side for the first time in a while. Besides, I have a vague feeling that Chisha had planned to the extent that His Excellency would not kill Berstetz-san. In fact, without Berstetz-san, it will be hard to go on, won't it? Since Chisha isn't here."

It was too long and drawn-out a statement to be called a declaration, but it was a significant factor in dissuading those who knew of Berstetz's deeds.

Berstetz, apparently thinking the same thing, made a slight smile as he said,

Berstetz: "I never thought I would be protected by General First-Class Cecilus Segmunt. If not the Yang Sword, I would have thought his blade to be the one to decapitate me."

Otto: "And yet it did not. It is an imperial situation, so an outsider cannot comment on it, however I consider it to have been a wise decision. A military officer in an emergency and a civilian officer before and after an emergency, such a person is irreplaceable."

Anastasia: "I agree. If even Berstetz-san was removed 'n the Emperor was the only one who could do the thinkin', wouldn't he die, even with the support of his lovely Wife-san?"

Berstetz: "Indeed, it is so. I, for one, am glad to see His Excellency receive a new Empress Consort. —If it were not for this celebration, His Excellency would be facing too many hardships."

Otto & Anastasia: "…"

Berstetz shook his head loosely, silence falling over the room as he spilled those words.

In the midst of the silence, Otto turned his attention toward Anastasia. She, too, was feeling the weight of the same silence, though likely from a different perspective than Otto.

The reason for this silence, needless to say, was the tragic events that had befallen Vincent—the deaths of his trusted confidant and of his sister, the princess with whom he shared the same blood.

The impact of the latter was something neither Otto nor Anastasia could ignore.

Anastasia: "She really was a selfish princess."

A quiet murmur escaped Anastasia's lips, causing Otto to close his eyes.

The subtle sentiment was a rare crack in Anastasia, who usually had a bravery that remained unfazed in the face of any event.

This vulnerability, Otto had always wished to find it in Anastasia in order to surpass her. —Yet, he felt no urge to exploit that long-awaited vulnerability.

Why, if one were to ask such a thing.

Otto: "Because it is not reproducible."

The vulnerability revealed at this moment was not a convenient tool that could be used in the future. It would be difficult to create the same opportunity again, and even if it could be, it should not be.

After all, a larger and deeper rift would open within his own circle than the one that had opened up within Anastasia.

Frankly speaking, that was also undesirable from Otto's perspective. Over the past few months, the distance between the Emilia Camp and Anastasia Camp had narrowed too much.

???: "Maybe you do not need to consciously try to play the villain."

Otto: "—. Are you perhaps talking to me?"

Suddenly, Otto reacted to a third voice, one belonging to neither Anastasia nor Berstetz. His gaze was directed towards Anastasia's neck, where the voice came from—the Spirit in the guise of a fox scarf, Echidna, looking back at him with her black eyes.

In response to Otto's words, Echidna's eyes slightly narrowed.

Echidna: "The fact that you took it as a remark directed at yourself is a testament to what is in your heart, is it not?"

Otto: "That argument is not very convincing, since you said it while looking at me."

Echidna: "Quite stubborn, you. A good match with Ana in that regard."

Echidna, who replied with a sulky tone, had her head curbed by Anastasia's slender finger as she said "Hey". Looking at her scarf, who was giving Otto a hard time,

Anastasia: "Don't pester Otto-kun like that. The moment ya were allowed to talk to anyone, ya turned into a chatterbox."

Echidna: "Mhm, do not talk like I am just opening my mouth out of personal desire. Certainly, from my current position, I have to acknowledge that my previous circumstances were restrictive."

Anastasia: "Jeez. I'm sorry, Otto-kun, for my child botherin' ya."

Anastasia’s apology was met with a “No” and a dismissive wave from Otto.

Echidna’s remark was meant to assert her own presence rather than to show genuine concern for Otto. Of course, Echidna, being closest to Anastasia, was also aware of the rift in Anastasia that Otto had noticed.

A deterrent to prevent him from attacking. It was necessary as long as she could not see Otto’s inner thoughts, and that he did not intend to take advantage of that rift.

Nonetheless—

Otto: “I do not consider myself a villain… If it is a role, then it would merely be acting, after all.”

In that sense, Echidna’s remark was completely off the mark.

The news of Priscilla’s death, which shook even Anastasia, and even more so the camp—Otto’s heart had remained unfazed such, he thought himself heartless because of it.

He had a few chances to exchange words with Priscilla, and even recognized that she was certainly a remarkable figure as a Royal Candidate. With that in mind, he felt so.

Otto: “It was entirely possible for a candidate to drop out in the midst of the Royal Selection.”

Naturally, he had not expected that she would lose her life in a battle for the survival of a neighboring country, but even when it came to the political strife involving one of the nation’s most important affairs, there was more than enough possibility for an assassin to be sent to kill a Royal Candidate, and for them to fall victim to that assassin’s blade.

In the case of the Emilia Camp, there was a pattern where the person who sent the assassin was, to much surprise, one of their own, but even without such exceptions, this would hold true.

He did not believe that the Council of Wise Men, the current governing body of the Kingdom of Lugunica, would not have considered these circumstances in advance.

If a Royal Candidate went absent, would someone else fill the seat anew, or would the Royal Selection proceed with one of the five seats remaining vacant?

It was Otto's honest opinion that the latter was of higher likelihood, and the option he would personally prefer.

Given that such a situation would be of great importance to the Kingdom—

Otto: "The plan is for us to return to the Kingdom within the next few days. The Empire would not want people from other countries knowing any more about their internal condition following the Great Disaster, now would they?"

Anastasia: "Same goes for us. Since it'd also be strange for us to have our steps in sync, dependin' on if we've gotten all our preparations in order, we might be leavin' for Kararagi as soon as tomorrow. Otto-kun, as for the report to the castle…"

Otto: "Please leave it to us. This is not a matter that can be communicated by letter after all."

Anastasia nodded and entrusted the role of reporting to the Royal Castle to his side.

Frankly, it was a daunting role, but also a critical duty at the same time. Of course, Otto would accompany Emilia in this, but it would likely be an exceedingly difficult role for her.

In times like these, it was supposed to be the duty of Emilia's one and only Knight to support her the most.

Otto: "…With Natsuki-san's current state, it would likely have the opposite effect on Emilia-sama."

Anastasia: "…From the sound of it, Natsuki-kun's situation hasn't changed then?"

Otto: “Indeed. Knight Julius has also turned up a few times, but it has been difficult. I hate to say this, but there was the impression that Priscilla-sama only ever gave him a hard time…”

Anastasia: “As far as Natsuki-kun was concerned, that was unimportant. —How worryin’.”

Anastasia’s fingertips tickled Echidna’s neck as she spoke in a quiet voice. Echidna’s dark eyes also seemed to be worried about Subaru as she quivered at the touch.

There was an unalloyed sense of mutual affection between Anastasia and Echidna.

Berstetz: “I understand the opinion of the envoys of both the Kingdom and the City-States. His Excellency the Emperor has instructed that both nations be granted every courtesy, and has granted me permission to make decisions on the matter. If there is anything I can do…”

Anastasia: “Can’t say that I’ll be takin’ this lightly. There’s nothing more tense than bein’ presented with a blank promissory note.”

Anastasia gave a wry smile at Berstetz, who hid his emotions behind his thread-like eyes. Otto, who shared the same frame of mind, was eager to make the most of the words that had been drawn out.

This was his place in the Emilia Camp, not as a villain, but rather as one who undertook the “necessary evil”.

Because his nature was such, even if Priscilla had not died, he would have planned to use her origins in the Imperial Family as a basis to have her withdraw as an ineligible Royal Candidate, and he would have chosen to enact it.

Yes, he could have made that choice.

That was why—

Otto: “—Even had you not died, you would not have become our enemy. As much as Natsuki-san and Emilia-sama are hurt by it, your death has… delivered me quite the hard blow.”

As someone from a different camp, with no reason to mourn and grieve her death, that was the least bit of condolence Otto Suwen could offer to the woman who had passed on.

Chapter 3: To Each Their Mourning of You

1

???: “And so, my little sister will become His Excellency the Emperor-kun’s wife. Certainly, the goal that we siblings have been striving towards has drawn near!”

???: “Goal… that, you mentioned it before, revenge… was it?”

???: “That’s right! Revenge against the world!”

He clapped his hands together, and towards the gentle man with blond hair and glimmering eyes—towards Flop O’Connell’s answer, who stood opposite the Shudraqian woman, Taritta’s eyes opened wide.

Rather than the answer itself, she was seemingly surprised by the vigor of his response, but her lips soon curled into a smile. Revenge, it was a dangerous thing to hear and to laugh about. As expected of the Vollachian Empire’s pride, a woman of the People of Shudraq, one could say.

It was Flop who dyed the mood of this brave woman, which was quite the feat.

Looking at the two people below and their exchange within the passageway of the fortress, Ram rested her chin on a banister as she appraised Flop and Taritta.

It was a scene that she had come across by happenstance, but it was an interesting twist of fate to witness.

—Since joining forces at the Battle of the Imperial Capital, Ram held a favorable impression of the Shudraq.

In general, the only people in the Vollachian Empire that Ram found it regrettable to part from were these women and Serena, who was in a complicated position due to her relationship with Roswaal.

Later, she would also like to show her gratitude to Rem's friend, Katya—

???: "Ram, what are you doing here?"

Ram: "Ara, Mizelda. Simply watching your sister's love affairs from afar."

Mizelda: "Ho, that's a nice hobby. Let me see."

With that, the strong-eyed Mizelda saddled up next to Ram and leaned on the railing.

Being Taritta's actual older sister, she watched below, squinting as she spoke with Flop. A slight glint of anxiety could be seen in her profile, causing Ram's light-crimson eyes to also narrow.

Ram: "This isn't like you. Are you worried about your sister?"

Mizelda: "Don't say that it's not like me. Firstly, how long have you and I known each other? Only a few days."

Ram: "Time is needed? For Ram and you?"

Mizelda: "Hahaha, you're right."

At Ram's question, the corners of Mizelda's mouth loosened, opening with laughter. Laughing, Mizelda slowly began to shake her head,

Mizelda: "The word "worried" feels weak. So, let's say concerned."

Ram: "Yes. But of course. You are the elder sister of Taritta. Ram, too, is always worried about Rem. If it had to be said like you would, there's always concern for Rem."

Mizelda: "But, there is no question that Subaru is a good man. Although his eyes are unfortunate."

Ram: "—. In regards to that, you and Ram will have to agree to disagree."

Ram's voice dropped a little, and hearing this, Mizelda laughed. Looking sideways at this smile, Ram said "Well then" as she once again lowered her gaze to the scene below,

Ram: "You, you doubt the humanity of that gentle man?"

Mizelda: "No, Flop is also a good man. His looks are slightly too soft, but he is a sight for sore eyes. Surely, Taritta, too, knows this."

Her answer was both about his nature as a person and his looks, her phrasing subtly losing sight of the matter. In any case, it seemed like Ram could understand Mizelda's troubles.

And, it was not something that Ram could talk on as an outsider. Even if she was a blood sister, she would not be able to dictate what to do to the others involved.

It was quite a situation, as if the younger sister did not know her older sister's heart.

Ram: "More and more, there is much to like about you, Mizelda."

Mizelda: "Is that so? If you were a man, I think I would have made you my husband."

As older sisters, both of them had much to say about their younger sisters' love lives.

And so, they sat next to each other, both physically and emotionally, Ram and Mizelda, looking down at the continued exchange between Flop and Taritta.

Flop: "Listen, Miss Taritta! I may have said this before, but I'll dare to say it again!"

Flop held his hand out towards the sky, and as if to grasp those distant white clouds, or even the incessant falling rays of the sun, he opened and closed his hand.

Flop: “If you have a goal, a dream, and you talk big about achieving it, you have to seize the opportunities that come your way without hesitation. This unexpected connection with His Excellency the Emperor was exactly the kind of chance worth risking one’s life for!”

Taritta: “So, regarding that marriage between His Excellency the Emperor and Medium… is Medium really okay with it?”

Flop: “Of course…! Is what I would like to say, however, as you can imagine, there was quite a heated argument when it came to the marriage! I would say it was the biggest argument my sister and I have ever had! But…”

Taritta: “But?”

Flop: “If I prioritized revenge on the world over the happiness of my immediate family, I’d really have my priorities all wrong. Which is why I didn’t make a proposal that Medium would earnestly reject.”

Taritta: “…”

As Flop’s expression gently softened, Taritta lowered her almond-shaped eyes.

The much-talked-about marriage between Vincent Vollachia and Medium O’Connell, proposed by Flop and accepted by the Emperor, was a well-known fact among the concerned parties.

If anything, rumors had spread widely even among the common people.

Spreading the news about Vincent taking an Empress Consort was most likely Berstetz or Serena’s strategy. Despite the lingering afterglow of victory over the Great Disaster, reports of misfortunes continued to pour in from all over the Empire. Now, more than ever, people needed hope.

A celebratory event—one that concerned all the citizens of the Empire, would be ideal for that.

Ram: “A shrewd man in a shrewd country.”

Ram could not tell how much Flop had considered when he had proposed this.

However, since he had made the decisive move at the right moment, he must have had some calculations. And this was true for Vincent, who had accepted, and for the senior officials, who had agreed after the fact.

The saving grace, as Flop said, was that Medium, who had been used as a political pawn, did not hate Vincent.

Considering all that, Flop’s proposal was a cunning one. —It would serve as a good example for a certain internal affairs officer who hid behind a façade of villainy, trying to fool himself as if applying a bitter medicine.

As Ram watched the exchange, glancing at the profile beside her,

Ram: “Speaking of which, do you have any feelings for Emperor Vincent?”

Mizelda: “That’s a foolish question, Ram. Abel’s good looks go without saying. But, as per the People of Shudraq’s customs, it’s our tradition to bring the groom back to the forest. Since I can’t bring Abel back, he’s nothing more than eye candy to me.”

Ram: “I see…”

Mizelda: “No, that’s not right. —Abel is both eye candy and a comrade-in-arms to me.”

Ram: “I see.”

Ram nodded quietly to Mizelda, who crossed her arms and declared so.

With all doubts cleared, the two spectators refocused on the conversation between the two below.

Both were frustrated, and Flop assured Taritta that he was not forcing Medium to do anything. Taritta kept her eyes downcast and remarked, “Flop, you’re amazing,”

Taritta: “You’re able to consider both your goals and the people around you and take action accordingly. When you need to make a decision, you don’t hesitate… Truly, you’re admirable.”

Flop: “—? That’s a very funny thing to say, Miss Taritta.”

Taritta: “Huh… did I say something funny?”

Flop: “Yes, you did. Because the reason I could muster up the courage to make such decisions was that I followed your example, Miss Taritta!”

Taritta: “…”

Taritta was blindsided by Flop, who pointed a finger at her with a snap. She was so shocked that she stopped thinking.

As proof of that, she reflexively twisted Flop’s outstretched finger and pinned him against the wall.

Flop: “Ouch, ouch, ouch!”

Taritta: “Ah, ahhh, I’m sorry! I was so startled that I just… reacted reflexively!”

Flop: “N-no, no, no, it was my fault for being careless. As expected, a Shudraq Chieftain has a different level of training. I need to learn more from you, not just your mindset.”

Taritta: “Mindset…”

Flop: “Yes, mindset. That’s what I admire most about you.”

Waving his twisted arm, Flop smiled at Taritta. However, she looked bewildered, not understanding what he was smiling about.

Flop, seeing her reaction, gave her a wry, endearing smile,

Flop: “When something bad happened to Miss Mizelda’s leg, you unexpectedly had to take over as Chieftain. You must have been worried. I'm sure it was painful! But, you made your decision and took on the challenge with determination. Seeing you like that taught me the importance of not shying away from important decisions."

Taritta: "Flop…"

Flop: "So, I wanted to give you my thanks. That's one of the two reasons I called you here! —As for the second reason…"

Flop held up one finger on his left hand, then another on his right. Taritta's eyes widened at his words and she haltingly muttered, "The second reason…"

At Taritta's murmur, Flop theatrically lowered both of his hands which had their fingers raised,

Flop: "Today will never come again. Tomorrow is not guaranteed. This war made me realize once again what I thought I already knew. I'm grateful to the kind person who brought that flame into these eyes, to the kind person who made this moment possible. And —"

Taritta: "…"

Flop: "Miss Taritta, I like your way of being and thinking very much. To put it more plainly, I would love to be with you! So, how about becoming Taritta O'Connell?"

Taritta: "—Ah."

Flop: "Never let a chance go by to get what you want. I'll fully put into practice everything I've learned from you."

Smiling and winking, Flop's words were unmistakably a marriage proposal.

For Taritta, it must have been as shocking as the sky falling. Yet, at the same time, it was probably as joyful as flowers blooming on the ground.

As a woman herself, Ram felt the need to applaud the blessing that had been bestowed upon her.

However—

Taritta: “—But, I am…”

Ram’s light-crimson eyes narrowed at the sight of Taritta’s anguished expression.

The root of Taritta’s reaction had, oddly enough, become clear during her earlier conversation with Medium.

As per Shudraqian custom, the groom must be taken back to the forest village.

However, as the brother of the future Empress Consort, Medium, Flop would likely have many more responsibilities and tasks to fulfill in the Imperial Capital. To give them all up, and leave Medium at the Imperial Capital—that would be truly irresponsible.

Taritta could see this too, so her hesitation crushed her joy.

It was her succession to the position of Shudraqian Chieftain that gave Flop the courage to propose; it was the spark that brought their hearts together, but it also became the obstacle that prevented them from being together.

Taritta tried to confront this absurdity with a strong, strong sense of responsibility—but then.

Mizelda: “Don’t hesitate, Taritta!”

Taritta: “—. Ah, sister?”

Frozen in shock, Taritta’s eyes widened at the sudden voice that came like a surprise attack.

Until then, she had not noticed that Ram and Mizelda were on the walkway above them. She exchanged glances with her sister, who was gripping the banister tightly.

Seeing her sister's behavior, Mizelda let out a small sigh, then swung up her right leg—which from the knee down was a wooden prosthetic, and slammed it onto the banister.

And then—

Mizelda: "A Chieftain who has to choose between her duties and a man isn't fit to be one! In all the battles I've fought, I've learned how to fight on one leg! If you're in such a sorry state, you should give up the position of Chieftain!"

Taritta: "Wha…! W-wait a second, sister! That's…"

Mizelda: "No way, I won't wait! The Shudraq have no need for a pathetic-looking sister like you!"

Saying this firmly, Mizelda took her leg down from the banister, and turned her back. Walking heavily, the differing sounds between her left and right steps were heard as she departed along the walkway.

Ram sighed as she watched Mizelda's back as she left.

Ram: "Is that your way of encouraging her as her big sister?"

Mizelda: "She's not the kind of woman who would understand unless I told her. Ram, soon you will find yourself in the same position."

Ram: "Disgusting."

Ram replied with a grimace to the statement she did not want to hear.

And so, thinking it would be rude of her to stay behind, Ram was about to follow Mizelda when,

Flop: "Miss Mizelda! I am deeply grateful! Is there anything I can do to repay you?"

In place of the stunned Taritta, Flop called out to Mizelda, who had just made a big decision. Without turning around or stopping, Mizelda waved her hand.

Mizelda: “It has been decided. A strong, robust man with a handsome face will be sent as an envoy to the Shudraq village. This way, the Covenant between the Imperial Capital and our people will be maintained.”

Flop: “—. Haha! I understand, Miss Mizelda! No, Sister-in-law-kun!”

A resolution was reached between Mizelda and Flop, without first consulting the parties involved.

Ram also understood that the ignored party would make a decision soon.

Taritta: “—Hk.”

—That was because Ram, who was trailing behind Mizelda, could clearly hear Taritta’s footsteps hit the ground as she ran towards Flop.

Flop: “Are you sure that it’s okay to on your own decide on returning to being the Chieftain?”

Mizelda: “Ha. If there’s something one disagrees with, all they have to do is take it away from me. But…”

Mizelda cut off her words and turned her piercing gaze straight ahead. Following her gaze, Ram realized the reason why.

At the end of the corridor, two women from the Shudraq tribe were waving their hands—Kuna and Holly. They greeted Mizelda, and then, with a wave of their hands, pointing down the corridor with their chins,

Kuna: “How is it going? Has Taritta finally started behaving?”

Mizelda: “Yes, my younger sister is a handful.”

Holly: “But, well, there’s nothing to be done about it. After all, she’s the Chieftain’s sister.”

Kuna: “Well, until we all talk about it, the Chieftain is Taritta… well, it doesn’t really matter. I also have no objection to Mizelda returning as Chieftain. I think the others would probably agree, too.”

When Kuna and Holly each gave a knowing smile, Ram got a glimpse of the love between Taritta and her people.

With that understanding, Ram clasped her arms around her elbows and,

Ram: “Though unexpected, Ram’s peeping efforts were well worth it.”

Holly: “Just hearing that makes it sound pretty bad.”

Kuna: “Without the Chieftain here, it would have left a terrible impression, wouldn’t it? What an absurd thing to say.”

Holly and Kuna launched a volley of criticism at Ram’s words. Ram shrugged her shoulders as Mizelda, who was right by her side, softened her gaze slightly and looked up at the sky with gentle eyes.

While gazing up at the clear blue sky, so clear it was almost revolting,

Mizelda: “Her soul sister… ever since Mariuli died, Taritta has been depressed. You guys probably understand how much that hurts, right?”

Holly: “…Yes.”

Kuna: “I guess.”

Mizelda: “The time has come for that to change. —I consider it a blessing that Taritta has earned this victory.”

Those were words that Ram did not understand, reserved for the three Shudraqians.

It might have been a relationship unrelated by blood, but that Kuna and Holly’s relationship also fell into that category could be presumed. Given the strong bond between these two, it was not difficult to imagine how significant the bond that Taritta was said to have lost.

Besides, Ram also knew very well that the things one lost could never be replaced.

Ram: “…”

The Empire was victorious, but in exchange, so much had been lost. Even close to Ram, the wounds suffered by Rem, Emilia, and Subaru, were significant.

However, simply staying by their side and continuing to talk to them was not a guaranteed cure for such wounds. Such an undeniable notion could only be cruel and unjust—.

Mizelda: “—To the vow of our forebearers, and the pride of their ancestral spirits, gratitude.”

Kuna & Holly: “—Gratitude.”

To Taritta, who had found the only method to overcome these circumstances, Mizelda, Kuna, and Holly give their blessings in the way of the Shudraqian People.

Following the girls’ example, Ram closed her eyes and joined in the prayer.

And then she thought.

—That there was no means of saving the hearts of all those who mourned the lost, such absurdity.

Ram: “Gratitude.”

So she declared her own vow and pride, one different from that of the Shudraqians.

2

The wheels of the wheelchair turned with a rattling sound.

It was a sound they had grown accustomed to, but there were occasional clunking noises mixed in, caused by remnants of the mayhem, fragments of crumbled debris and cracks in the corridor that had yet to be fully repaired.

Feeling uneasy about letting Katya go to such places alone, Rem had taken it upon herself to push her wheelchair.

Katya: “So, it seems that his work protecting His Excellency the Emperor was highly appreciated. He said that as an independent General, he will be given the role of protecting the Emperor at his side.”

Rem: “Is that so? That brother of yours…”

Katya: “You look like you have something to say… No, never mind. You don’t have to say it. What you’re thinking, I’m probably thinking the same thing.”

Without turning around, Katya grasped her own pigtail hanging over her shoulder, her voice trembling as she spoke.

Rem had not said much, but Katya’s guess was probably correct. Thus, she decided to keep her thoughts about Jamal to herself, as requested.

Whatever the case, Katya had sent off her blood-brother despite her anxieties. His safe return must have been a great relief, even to the stubborn Katya.

Indeed, having him return safely was what mattered most.

Rem: “Priscilla-san…”

Suddenly, as her mind was left wandering, Rem was struck by a wave of sentiment that tightened around her chest, causing her to utter those words.

As Rem cast her pale blue eyes downward, her mind was filled with the image of a beautiful woman wrapped in vivid red flames—the Sun Princess who had kept Rem by her side for only a brief period of time.

Priscilla, with her unwavering presence, radiated the heat she wore and incinerated everything, drawing the curtain on herself with a grace that was unmistakably her own while keeping others at bay.

The words exchanged in what she did not expect to be their final conversation were ones she could never forget.

However—

Rem: “You said I have a “heart of diamond”, but I don’t understand.”

After seeing each other for the first time in days, during what would also turn out to be their final conversation, Priscilla had praised Rem for who she was now. Rem, too, had been able to take it in stride at that time.

But now, she was no longer sure. Because Priscilla was gone.

Katya: “Hey, Rem, is it alright for you to stay with me?”

Rem: “Eh?”

Suddenly, Rem was startled as the movement of the wheelchair she was pushing came to a halt. Looking down, she saw that Katya had grabbed the wheels, forcibly stopping its movement.

Doing such a thing must have hurt Katya’s slender hands.

Rem: “Katy—”

Katya: “It’s fine. Right now, my hands don’t matter. Rather, what matters is you.”

Rem: “Me…”

Katya: “Even if you’re not here with me, you would still have your sister, people who know who you were before, and even that noisy guy…”

Rem: “—You mustn’t.”

Staring at Rem, Katya's words grew gradually faster until she fell silent with an "Mhm". Rem interrupted her and shook her head, grateful for the thoughtfulness.

Certainly, the presence of Ram, as well as Frederica and Petra, would be a source of support for Rem. But, not even they could fill the void left by Priscilla's absence. The days and moments Rem had spent with Priscilla were never known to them.

And, as for the last person Katya mentioned, Subaru—

Rem: "I don't want to rely on that person now."

Katya: "…You mean he's unreliable?"

Rem: "No… I don't want to rely on him. I don't like it. To be just another one of his many goals."

Katya: "…"

Rem's response surprised even herself as she spoke over Katya's question. Katya's eyes, too, widened at Rem's answer, which was understandable.

Even Rem herself had not fully grasped her own feelings until she spoke them aloud.

Once she voiced them, they became clear to her.

Rem: "It seems like you only see my shortcomings, Katya-san."

Katya: "I don't think that's the case, and if we're talking about shame, I have my fair share too… actually, don't make me think about that, and don't remind me! Just thinking about the trouble I cause others by merely being alive makes me want to d… to suffer!"

Considering Rem's feelings, she likely refrained from saying "want to die".

At Katya's imperfect yet considerate compassion, Rem's lips curled slightly. She felt supported by Katya's mere presence, as Katya would say things like that without being overly concerned or excessively comforting.

That was precisely why she had asked if Rem could stay with her.

Rem: “Being by your side is calming, Katya-san. You always screech loudly and catch my attention right away.”

Katya: “Is that a compliment? Are you trying to compliment me? If so, you have no talent for praising others, you know?”

Rem, intending to express her sincere gratitude, was a bit taken aback by Katya’s glare. And, just like that, Rem and Katya found themselves walking through the fortress.

Hearing someone say “Ohhh~,” Rem looked up. There, she saw a young man with gray hair, smiling broadly and waving at them.

Rem was clueless as to who this person was, but Katya let out an “Ah” of recognition,

Rem: “Do you know him?”

Katya: “I wouldn’t say that, but I know he’s a slacker.”

Rem: “A slacker?”

Young Man: “Waaait~ wait, that’s not a very nice way to remember me. Well, at that point in time, it wasn’t entirely inaccurate, though, was it?”

The young man, not particularly hurried, leisurely corrected Katya’s impression of him. As he approached, Rem tightened her grip on the handles of the wheelchair, wary of him.

Upon seeing Rem’s reaction, the young man raised his hands and stopped in his tracks.

Young Man: “Don’t worry. I’m not the kind of person who would harm aaanyone~. I’m just a pathetic man who’s lost his only talent and is now slinking away in looow~ spirits.”

Katya: “Slinking away in low spirits… where are you going?

Slacking off again? At a time when everyone is struggling and supporting each other in every way possible?”

Young Man: “I tooold~ you, that’s not it. Thooough~, I do agree with you about the current situation.”

With a wry smile, the young man looked behind him—at the Fortified City that was still in the early stages of reconstruction, and spread his thin arms wide to either side,

Young Man: “Up until now, I’ve had my sights set too high. From now on, I plan to keep my feet firmly on the ground, and live my life by fooocusing~ on what’s right in front of me.”

Katya: “…I don’t get it. What kind of declaration is that?”

Young Man: “It’s me being respectful, miss. I wasn’t suuure~ if I’d get the chance to meet with you, but perhaps it’s a final, stylish gesture from the stars.”

Katya did not drop her puzzled expression at the young man’s vague expressions. On the other hand, while Rem remained cautious, it was clear that this young man had no malice or hostility toward Katya.

On the contrary, just as he had said, there seemed to be a genuine sense of respect toward Katya.

It was unclear if this had anything to do with Katya calling him a slacker, though.

Young Man: “Miss, you have saved the Vollachian Empire. The brightness of the rising sun and the activities of the people you see from here are all things you snatched from my Commandment.”

Katya: “…Are you making fun of me?”

Young Man: “No no nooo~, it’s really not that at all. I’ve been doing many things according to my Commandment, but nothing His Excellency the Emperor or General First-Class Chisha did ever surprised me. What I meeean~ is that you are the only one who did.”

Katya: “I really don’t get what you mean. It just feels like you’re holding a grudge because I called you out for slacking off. But…”

As the young man gave a wry smile in response to Katya’s answer, she paused. Then she mumbled a bit, pointed at Rem behind her, and continued,

Katya: “The reason I was there was because I was dragged along by Rem. And besides, it was at the Prime Minister’s mansion that I met this girl in the first place, and then Todd… ah~, anyway!”

Katya, who had been pointing at Rem, now pointed sharply at the young man.

Then—

Katya: “I don’t get all big-headed when I get compliments, regardless of whether or not I understand the logic or reasoning behind them. In the first place, it’s suspicious to call a woman with bad legs amazing or special! I can’t do anything on my own! Everything, it’s all thanks to other people!”

Rem: “K-Katya-san, isn’t that a bit too much…?”

Katya: “Huh? I’m still having you push my wheelchair right now, aren’t I? If the wheels get stuck in a hole in the floor even once, I’d end up a pile of bones right there and then!”

Rem was overwhelmed by Katya’s loud and brazen declaration.

As she recognized that this exquisite mix of self-deprecation and trust in others was what made Katya’s way of thinking so appealing —

Young Man: “Heh, haha, haaahahahaha~!”

As Rem was in thought, the young man started to laugh hysterically, holding his stomach. Katya’s shoulders jumped as she responded with a “Wh-what?” in a fluster, but Rem somehow understood why the young man was laughing.

Sandwiched between Rem’s vague understanding and Katya’s lack thereof, the young man used his finger to wipe away the tears that had welled up in his eyes,

Young Man: “Haaa~, it’s been so nice talking with you. If you had told me that something like that could have cast aside my Commandment, I wouldn’t know what to say.”

Katya: “I don’t understand why you’re so satisfied on your own…”

Young Man: “I’m sorry, buuut~ you’ll have to ask someone else to help you with that. —This is goodbye.”

Rem: “Where will you be going?”

Rem could not help but ask the young man who had shouldered the small bundle at his feet.

Even though she did not know his name, nor did she have any reason to stop him, she did not want the young man who had praised Katya to be unhappy.

In response to Rem’s question, the young man pointed towards Mount Gildray, where the fortress stood,

Young Man: “For now, I’m leaving the Empire. Weeell~ then, take care.”

Neither Rem nor Katya could find the words to stop the young man who had answered only that and turned his back to walk away. They could only wish him good fortune as he cheerfully began his journey.

The reason he could walk so confidently with his back straight was thanks to Rem, Katya, and many other people, but most of all, it was thanks to her for paving the way for the future with her dazzling way of life.

Rem: “It’s all, thanks to other people…”

Katya: “Wh-what’s the matter, do you have a problem with something? I know I probably went a little over the top with what I said…!”

Rem: “No. I thought it was very good, and very much like you, Katya-san. I don’t want to make the mistake of thinking that I can stand all on my own, either.”

In response to Katya’s intermittent glances, Rem rubbed her legs. As she watched this gesture, Katya, with downcast eyes,

Katya: “At some point, you started walking normally again.”

Rem: “It seems to be because the Mana that should have been flowing through my body wasn’t flowing properly… it might also be effective on your legs, Katya-san.”

Katya: “…I’ll be fine. My brother, or someone else, will push my wheelchair for me. Besides…”

Rem: “Besides?”

Katya: “—You’ll still be the one pushing me for a little while longer, won’t you?”

Rem’s eyes widened slightly when Katya timidly said this, but then she softened her gaze and nodded with a gentle “Yes.”

Both Rem and Katya knew well that “for a little while longer” would not be very long at all, and their exchange was built upon that understanding.

She was sure that her separation from Katya would come soon—when Rem would have to return to the place she came from with Subaru, Ram, and the others who had come to retrieve her. It would be a painful experience.

But, parting ways with Katya and the people of this land, was a parting that left hope for a reunion. Teaching her the pain and bitterness of farewells that were not of that kind, it was her last act of—

Rem: “Consideration? Or, was it maliciousness, Priscilla-san?”

Priscilla: “Rem, follow thy own heart. For although your heart may ripple, those ripples shall never be unseemly.”

As Rem muttered to herself, the last words Priscilla had spoken to her flashed through her mind.

The ripples of her heart likely referred to the weakness within Rem that would always, and forever, rise to the surface like bubbles, trying to disturb her peace.

But, still, she did not want to be the kind of person who desperately wished to reject and distance herself from them.

Because Priscilla, the woman who illuminated Rem's life like a flame for a short while, who never mistook the truth, had said that Rem's "ripples" were not unseemly.

—So please, forgive this heart for rippling at the reality of your disappearance. Until the day those ripples subside, and I can remember you without tears.

Chapter 4:
Dunderhead

???: "—Madelyn?"

Upon finding Madelyn Eschart walking brazenly through the fortress, Emilia called out her name as her eyes widened in surprise.

Then, halting her gait upon hearing that call, the young girl turned her head of black horns, and contorted her lovely face as if she had eaten something bitter.

At that reaction, as Emilia gestured with her hand to show that there was nobody else around them,

Emilia: "You don't need to make such a face. After all, I'm the only one here."

Madelyn: "…That isn't friggin' encouraging or anything. This dragon is making this friggin' face because it's you."

Emilia: "Eh, is that so? But why?"

Madelyn: "Did you friggin' forget that you're the one who made it snow a ton and fought a bunch against this dragon and Mezoreia?! How the frig' could I be left with a good impression!"

As her golden irises sharpened, Madelyn raised her voice. As Madelyn snapped at her like that, Emilia nodded with an "I see…" as she reflected on their relationship.

Indeed, across both the Fortress City and the decisive battle for the Imperial Capital, Emilia had clashed against Madelyn twice. They were both present in the Imperial Capital during the battle against the Great Disaster, but they did not meet again there. Come to think of it, this was the first time they were exchanging words in a calm manner like this.

Emilia: "Then, the last time I saw Madelyn was when I froze her into a block of solid ice.”

Madelyn: “—! So, it really was you after friggin’ all! I couldn’t move my body in the slightest; it was so, so freezing cold and dangerous… you’re friggin’ outrageous!”

Emilia: “Uh, I’m sorry. I was going to unfreeze you properly afterwards, but Madelyn escaped with Mezoreia, so…”

Madelyn: “Don’t friggin’ blame it on this dragon, human!”

Madelyn bore her sharp fangs, and had such vigor that it seemed like she might suddenly try to bite her. Emilia was a bit surprised at her liveliness, but at the same time, she felt relief.

After all, she had heard that Madelyn and Mezoreia had become allies of the Great Disaster at one point.

Emilia: “But, you properly supported our side in the end. Garfiel told me.”

Madelyn: “…That friggin’ tigerperson half-beast, huh?”

Emilia: “Yes, he’s my reliable ally, and sort of like a little brother. He’s reaaally strong, after all.”

Madelyn: “…”

As Emilia puffed out her chest with an ahem, Madelyn fell silent with a complex expression. It was not as though she doubted Emilia’s words; rather, her silence held a different significance.

For example, it gave off a sense of something close to frustration or embarrassment.

Emilia: “—Madelyn, you’re going to continue on as a General of the Empire, right?”

Madelyn: “—Hk, you got a friggin’ problem with that?”

Emilia: “No, not at all, that’s not what I mean. It’s just, I heard that Mezoreia had gone home, so I was thinking about how Madelyn didn’t do the same.”

Shifting her gaze away from Madelyn as they spoke, Emilia looked to the sky outside the fortress.

An exceedingly rare dragonkin, Madelyn, and the Cloud Dragon, Mezoreia—Emilia did not know of the relationship between the two in detail. But, if they loved each other dearly, then their relationship could be viewed as something close to that of the one between a Spirit and a Spiritual Arts User.

If that was the case, Mezoreia was to Madelyn as Puck was to Emilia. To make the decision to separate from such a companion, could not have been an easy feat.

Emilia: “I’ve also experienced similar feelings. For me, I wasn’t given the choice to go together or not… that’s why, I think Madelyn is reaaally brave for making her own choice.”

Madelyn: “Of friggin’ course. —Don’t friggin’ lump this dragon in with you, human.”

Emilia: “You might be right. Or, maybe not? You’re a dragonkin, but does that make you strong enough to endure the painful feelings of parting with a precious companion? Is that how it is?”

Madelyn: “Friggin’ unpleasant woman…!”

Being told so by a bitter face, Emilia clutched her chest with a soft grunt.

An unpleasant woman, she had never been verbally abused with such words, so she had a fresh feeling of bitterness. Recently, she had not been referred to as a “half-devil” as frequently, and to begin with, it no longer hurt her feelings to be called so. —Only, the woman who would so boldly call Emilia a “half-devil”, was no longer anywhere to be found.

Emilia: “…”

Madelyn: “Don’t go friggin’ silent all of a sudden. It’s a friggin’ disrespect before this dragon, you know.”

Emilia: “Mhm, yeah. I’m sorry for making you feel lonely.”

Madelyn: “~~!!”

With her indulgence in reveries being halted, Emilia apologized, to which Madelyn’s face went red.

With her face reddened, she tried to say something for a moment, and after taking a deep breath, she stared straight at Emilia, and then,

Madelyn: “Talking with humans is friggin’ exhausting, but that’s especially friggin’ true for you.”

Emilia: “Well, I think that’s definitely because you’re nervous about talking to me. Subaru said that before.”

Though it was frustrating that there was nothing she could do about it, from what Subaru had told her, it seemed that Emilia caused tension in the people she faced. Subaru was always playing it off as various reasons, such as “EMT”, but it was probably because of the fact that she was a Royal Candidate, or because she was a half-elf.

Emilia: “That’s why, I’m relaxing my cheeks as much as I can so that doesn’t happen.”

Since she could not change her position as a Royal Candidate, her half-elf lineage, or her silver hair and amethyst eyes which resembled the Witch of Envy, she wanted to at least keep a gentle facial expression.

Trying her best with those thoughts, Emilia inquired of Madelyn with a “Well?”. Then, Madelyn took yet another deep breath, and,

Madelyn: “When talking to you, this dragon gets the feeling that staying here might have been the wrong friggin’ choice.”

Emilia: “Umm, that’s alright? We’ll be leaving the Empire in a few days, so…”

Madelyn: “It doesn’t! Friggin’ have anything to do! With whether you’re here or not!”

Being yelled at in short bursts, Emilia's eyes widened. Before her, Madelyn placed her hand on her hip, and as if in return for earlier, looked towards the outside of the fortress,

Madelyn: "This country, it's the land for which this dragon's darling… Balleroy, staked his life to protect."

Emilia: "—. Indeed."

At Madelyn's whispered words, Emilia briefly nodded.

She had heard that the undead by the name of Balleroy had done a great job. That when the sky was enveloped in a tremendous light, he was amidst the clouds that blanketed the sky of the Imperial Capital.

Emilia was fighting against Sphinx, who had turned into the spitting image of Echidna, so she had been unable to avert her attention there. Therefore, she had no clue whatsoever about what sort of person Balleroy was.

Emilia: "It's reaaally unfortunate that I couldn't say thank you to him."

Madelyn: "Don't friggin' make eyes at this dragon's darling!"

Emilia: "Make eyes…?"

Madelyn: "Even if he didn't receive any thanks for it, this dragon's darling friggin' accomplished his duties… Until the very end of the end, he didn't let this dragon tag along in the things he wanted to do."

Hearing Madelyn's fragile, somewhat lonely tone of voice, Emilia narrowed her amethyst eyes.

The feelings that Madelyn kept bottled up in that tiny body of hers, Emilia felt like they were ones she was familiar with. Or rather, she was indeed familiar with them.

After all, Subaru would also sometimes decide things all on his own without consulting Emilia.

Emilia: "But, that isn't because he doesn't think he can count on me or because he doesn't like me, but because he treasures me, so it's a reaaally bad quality to have."

Madelyn: "You…"

Emilia: "It's a matter of being valued dearly. That makes it hard to get mad at, it's a little unfair."

If one was not valued, and was instead thought of as undependable and unpleasant, they would want to try their best to improve that impression. But, since Emilia was already viewed in a good light, it was challenging to want to do anything more about it.

Emilia: "That's why, it's unfair. Really, just what are girls like us to do?"

Madelyn: "…Unfair."

Receiving Emilia's words, Madelyn cast her eyes down as if pondering something.

Though she did not know Balleroy well, Emilia more or less felt that the irritation that Madelyn harbored towards him was close to what she herself felt towards Subaru.

Alas, even if their troubles were similar, the answer that Madelyn had arrived at was something distant to Emilia.

After all—

Emilia: "—I can't stay behind in this country, the land that Priscilla protected."

Staking one's life, if it were to be put that way, then Priscilla was undoubtedly one of the people who had accomplished that—Emilia's "friend", whose passing still did not feel real despite several days having elapsed.

Madelyn: "…"

It would have been nice if their relationship could have developed enough for them to call each other friends. Priscilla had passed away before such a thing could come to fruition, so, right now, Emilia just one-sidedly wanted to call her as such.

However, just before she faded away, she appeared before Emilia and Anastasia as they were conversing, and they all had a pleasant chat for a short while—Emilia would look back on that with regret for a long, long time.

That peaceful, gentle time they shared, they ought to have been able to continue on with it from here on out many more times, for much more time, in much more depth; Emilia would end up dreaming of such unattainable hopes.

And then, as Emilia pictured what lay beyond the faded dream—

Emilia: "—Eh?"

Suddenly, Emilia received a tug at her arm and, unable to hold her ground in the slightest, was pulled down. As Emilia almost tumbled over, her head was gently caught by Madelyn's shoulder.

There was a noticeable height difference between the two, and yet Emilia's head was leaning upon Madelyn's shoulder. If their positioning had been just slightly off, Emilia's head would have been pierced by one of Madelyn's horns.

Emilia: "Um, Madelyn? People will get startled by these kinds of things…"

So you shouldn't do them all of a sudden; Emilia made such an attempt to scold Madelyn.

However—

Madelyn: "Don't friggin' cry."

Emilia: "…"

At that comment, Emilia blinked, and then, upon Madelyn's shoulder where her head was leaned, she noticed that droplets of water were trickling down and staining it. For a moment, she did not realize what those were, but from Madelyn’s words, she came to an understanding. —They were tears.

For what, and for whom those tears flowed, was abundantly clear.

Emilia: “I had thought, we could become friends.”

Madelyn: “…”

Emilia: “I ended up getting along with Anastasia-san… and could also make proper conversation with Felt-chan and Crusch-san, so I thought that Priscilla must be the most stubborn… I finally got to a point where I could chat with her, with Priscilla, so I thought that from here on, even more…”

Madelyn: “…”

Emilia: “I thought that, I could come to like Priscilla. I wanted to like her.”

As if catching up to her falling tears, her words began to well up with emotion.

While she had always been bold, sometimes quite mean, and for a reason Emilia did not understand had worn an expression that seemed to know everything, she was the owner of a truly kind heart.

Priscilla, who displayed many faces of such good and bad aspects, Emilia wanted to have thought of her more dearly. Spanning a long time, she had wanted to nurture such feelings.

As such feelings of regret and lament spilled out of Emilia—

Madelyn: “This dragon will—”

Emilia: “Eh?”

Madelyn: “This dragon, will friggin’ protect it for you.”

Suddenly, Madelyn caressed the head of Emilia, who was shedding tears upon her shoulder, and spoke thus. At those words, Emilia was taken aback, her eyes still moist.

As the sides of their faces were touching, they could not see the other's faces. Emilia's face was a teary one, but what sort of expression was Madelyn making?

Without her expression being seen, Madelyn continued.

Madelyn: "The Empire, is the friggin' country that Balleroy protected. This dragon, has a friggin' reason to protect this land. — The reason for your tears, also lived and died for the sake of this country. Then…"

Emilia: "…Then?"

Madelyn: "This dragon, will friggin' protect it with them. Unlike humans, that should be no friggin' challenge whatsoever for this dragon."

Emilia had come to believe that it was always crucial to look each other in the eye when having important conversations. That was the absolutely fundamental rule when having an important conversation.

However, at this time, Emilia thought that it was for the best that she, with her teary face, and Madelyn, who was boldly declaring those words, were in a situation where they could not see the face of the other.

There were definitely valuable, important words that could not be said if one was looking into another's face.

There were definitely words that could only be conveyed because one was not looking into the recipient's face, and that seemed to be precisely why Madelyn was able to say the words she had just said.

Emilia: "—Mm. Reaaally, thank you."

Madelyn: "Things just happened to friggin' align. I didn't do it to friggin' be told thanks."

Emilia: "Yes. But, I still want to say it. Thank you, Madelyn."

At Emilia’s repeated declaration of gratitude, Madelyn could be heard snorting her nose.

Whether that was because she truly found it irritating, or if it was to hide her abashment, was something Emilia could not tell due to not seeing her face. Such joy could also be found in conversations where the other party’s face could not be seen.

The opportunity to cherish such childish things, resided with herself.

And then—

Emilia: “—Oh, look over there, Madelyn!”

Madelyn: “Ugh?!”

Then, a deep and important emotion welled up in her heart.

When Emilia saw a small figure walking along the path directly opposite the fortress, she was so surprised that she grabbed Madelyn by the horns and turned her head in the same direction.

Ignoring Madelyn’s cries, Emilia’s consciousness was drawn towards the figure. —It was a small boy with pink hair, Priscilla’s servant, Schult.

Emilia: “Schult-kun…”

When she caught sight of him, Emilia felt a tight, painful knot in her chest.

Priscilla’s death had devastated Emilia, as she had been envisioning a future with her. However, the grief of those who had loved Priscilla dearly would be beyond compare.

Even though she knew that comparing one’s sorrows and misfortunes with those of another would only make her feel lonelier.

Emilia: “—Hk.”

Madelyn: “Hey! You!”

As soon as she realized this, Emilia kicked off the floor and started running towards the corridor, where she could see Schult. Madelyn’s panicked voice called out to her from behind, but Emilia did not stop.

Without a moment’s hesitation, Emilia ran through the fortress and turned down the opposite corridor,

Emilia: “Schult-kun!”

Schult: “—Emily-sama, is that you?”

Schult turned around, his small, thin shoulders trembling at Emilia’s powerful voice.

Emilia could not help but gasp as she faced the young boy directly. He had neat, clean-cut clothes, and his fluffy pink hair was well-groomed. However, even so, the redness of his eyes and the fatigue in his tired, pale expression could not be hidden.

However, instead of crying in his room, he decided to go outside.

Emilia: “You came outside. That’s reaaally…”

Emilia wondered whether she should continue the sentence with the words “amazing” or “great” after that.

She rushed over, unable to sit still, but struggled to choose the right words to say. What was it that Schult needed right now: sympathy, encouragement, or—

Schult: “There is no need for you to apologize to me, Emily-sama.”

Emilia: “—Ah.”

Schult: “Emily-sama, you have fulfilled your promise.”

When Schult, having lowered the corners of his eyes, murmured as he hung his head, Emilia began regretting her attitude.

Schult saw through Emilia’s indecision and hesitation to apologize. —Before the battle against the Great Disaster, Emilia promised Schult that she would definitely bring Priscilla back and let him be reunited with her.

Emilia was not able to do that. It was Priscilla herself who had fulfilled that promise.

But for that, she must not apologize. If she did, everything that Schult had worked hard for and the words that Priscilla had said to him would all be a lie.

???: “Em, don’t be so down.”

Emilia: “…So Utakata-chan was together with Schult-kun.”

Suddenly, Emilia noticed the presence of a girl peering up from below—Utakata, who had appeared beside the two of them.

She was the same age as Schult and a close friend, and it seemed that she did not stay with the other Shudraqians, but stayed with Schult.

Utakata nodded slightly in response to Emilia’s words.

Utakata: “Mii and Taa are busy. Suu and Ah look like they’re in trouble. The only one who can stay with Shuu is Uu.”

Emilia: “Yes, I see. Thank you for not leaving Schult-kun alone.”

Utakata: “You’re welcome, Em.”

When Utakata thrust her fist out at Emilia, she noticed that her gesture reminded her of one Subaru had made, so Emilia made sure to match her fist with the one that was being held out to her.

Then, Emilia turned to face Schult again and,

Emilia: “Aren’t you supposed to be resting in your room?”

Schult: “…I have already had enough rest. By nature, I am small and weak, so I have hardly done any work at all… so now, I want to do lots of things.”

Utakata: “Shuu is working very hard. Puu’s soul will surely be at peace.”

Schult: “Yes.”

Emilia: “…”

Emilia was surprised that Utakata had said that so naturally, and that Schult had nodded in agreement.

Utakata then tilted her head and asked, “What’s wrong?” to the surprised Emilia,

Utakata: “Life goes in circles, whether it’s prey, people, enemies or allies. That’s how Uu and the others think. Uu’s mother, and Shuu’s Puu, too, go in circles. I’m sure they do.”

Emilia: “…What happens after going around in circles like that?”

Utakata: “They will be reborn. In a different form, as prey, as a person, as an enemy, as an ally, or as something else entirely. But that’s how it is.”

The souls of the dead were said to cycle through the world and then return again.

Emilia found this way of thinking hard to understand. However, it felt better than the idea that once someone died, everything simply ended.

When a person died, the Od that was in their body left it and dissolved into the Mana of the world. Even if that was the case in reality, if there were to still be a form or a trace of that person left while the Od dissolved, then.

Emilia: “—Is that, the Books of the Dead?”

As she thought back, Emilia remembered that she had experienced for herself the proof of what Utakata had told her.

Inside the Pleiades Watchtower, in the library housing the Books of the Dead, which recorded the memories of the dead, the traces of many people from this world were firmly preserved. The fact that these could be preserved was proof that time was set aside by someone to transcribe them into books from the souls of those who had departed.

Emilia: “…”

For the first time, Emilia felt a strong fixation towards the Books of the Dead.

Unlike the time when Subaru’s memories had disappeared inside that tower, this was a fixation towards the Books of the Dead themselves, in the truest sense of the word.

Emilia also had people who had parted ways with her that she would never forget. —People like Fortuna, Juice, and others she would never be able to see again, even if the ice melted in the Great Elior Forest.

Although it was sad to say goodbye to Fortuna and the others, it was a definite ending.

That was what made Emilia harbor such fixation, the sorrow of not being able to overcome that grief.

If possible, she would like to know what she was thinking in her final moments, and whether she was hoping to see the same things as Emilia in the future beyond that lighthearted chat—if she had not spoken to Madelyn.

The parting with Priscilla, the proper way to deal with that hard to swallow reality, if they were not given time to worry over those things, she would have surely thought so.

Schult: “I was found by Priscilla-sama. Priscilla-sama chose me.”

Emilia: “Schult-kun…”

As he faced the silent Emilia, Schult tensed his cheeks and slowly lifted his bowed face, while speaking haltingly, but with a certain passion.

The boy continued, his round eyes welling up with tears.

Schult: “Priscilla-sama, truly loved beautiful and marvelous things. That, Priscilla-sama, chose me… if I were to be worthless, I would disgrace Priscilla-sama’s name…!”

Emilia: “…”

Schult: “I cannot allow that.”

Indeed, Emilia’s eyes widened at how Schult answered with all the strength he could muster.

Perhaps it was an illusion, or a mistake in perception. For just a brief moment, she felt as if a dazzling light had appeared in Schult’s eyes.

It was the same as what Priscilla, who lived like a flame, made her feel.

—That was the moment Emilia felt that Schult had defined his own life.

From this point on, Schult would probably face many hardships in life. But, Schult would not give up, or be discouraged or intimidated.

His reason for that not to happen, that flame he kept close, he decided to nurture in his heart and use it as fuel so that his energy might never wane.

Emilia: “There are still so many things I can’t do by myself, and even though I’m studying as hard as I can, there are still so many things I don’t know.”

Schult: “Emily-sama?”

Emilia: “I know it’s reaaally selfish of me to say this, because even now and into the future, I’m the kind of person who will always rely on everyone around me to make up for my shortcomings, to support me, and to help me. But, let me say it anyway."

Schult: "…"

Emilia: "I will continue to lend my support to you, Schult-kun. I, will definitely stand by you."

Emilia placed her hand on her chest and told the little boy directly.

Whether or not she kept her promise to bring Priscilla back, pitying him who lost someone so important, this was Emilia's resolution after discarding all such reasons.

It was a sign that she wanted to support Schult's attitude and way of being.

Schult: "…Thank you, Emily-sama."

For a moment, Schult took some time to consider Emilia's words, before slightly relaxing his lips and replying.

Despite the fact that Emilia had made a self-serving promise, she was glad that she had said it, even if that response made her feel like she had to apologize to Roswaal and Otto later.

Emilia: "Thank goodness you said that. I have to tell the others about this… are Al and Reinhard's father around?"

In reality, now that Priscilla was gone, the immediate issue was what would happen to the Barielle Domain in the Kingdom of Lugunica. However, it would be difficult to fully discuss this while in the Vollachian Empire.

Especially Al, who, like Subaru, had been in a position to witness Priscilla disappear.

Emilia: "—Subaru."

Uttering Subaru's name, Emilia found it very frustrating that she had her hands full.

Before Emilia and the others reunited in the Empire, Subaru and

Rem had already made contact with Priscilla, and as they had spent time together that Emilia and the others did not know about, they must have been hurt more than Emilia.

In truth, she wanted to stay by their side, even if it meant enduring her own pain and sadness.

Emilia: “But, now that I’m finally ready, after talking about this…”

Subaru and Rem, two people who had also suffered heartache; she could talk things over with them.

As Emilia made up her mind, Schult continued, “Well”,

Schult: “Al-sama is still in his room. Heinkel-sama has just gone to get some water…”

Saying that, Schult looked over to Utakata who stood by his side, as she held an empty water jug. After filling it up, it seemed like they were planning to head straight to Heinkel.

They had come to quite a long pause by having this conversation, so Emilia was about to go back to attending to her original plans, and just when she was about to open her mouth to declare so—

???: “—Oh, ah.”

Suddenly, hearing a low groan from within the passage, Emilia lifted her head. Then, meeting the eyes of an unthinkable person, she blinked in surprise.

Present there, was someone who had just come up as the topic of conversation a moment prior—

Schult: “Heinkel-sama! Have you decided to come outside?!”

Schult called out in a loud voice, and the one to whom he called out was Heinkel, whose red hair was disheveled, with an unkempt stubble on his face. In all likelihood, he had not been keeping himself well-groomed ever since that, and had been in a state of exhaustion since the battle against the Great Disaster had ended.

He had horrible dark circles around his eyes, and it was apparent that he had not been sleeping. Only, those sunken blue irises housed an odd glint as he looked towards them—nay, towards Emilia.

Schult: “I will bring you some water immediately, so…”

Heinkel: “E… Emilia-sama…!”

While he said that, Schult admirably attempted to support Heinkel’s staggering body. But, without even looking at Schult, Heinkel had called out Emilia’s name.

Frowning at his attitude, Emilia nodded with a “Yes”,

Emilia: “Hey, you look quite pale. As Schult said, you should drink some water and rest. If you aren’t eating either, I can go bring you some food…”

Heinkel: “No, no, none of that stuff matters… no, it really doesn’t matter. More importantly, Emilia-sama, there’s something I’d like to discuss!”

Emilia: “—Hk.”

In an attempt to have him calm down, Emilia tried to touch Heinkel’s shoulder, but as she did so, Heinkel grabbed her hand. She was startled by the strength of his grip, and Heinkel brought his face close to Emilia as her throat clogged up.

Then, as his eyes, the same blue hue as Reinhard’s, greatly wavered,

Heinkel: “Won’t you let me… would you not allow me to humbly serve you, Emilia-sama? No matter what! No matter what, I will be of great use to you in the Royal Selection…!”

Emilia: “Wh-What are you saying? Saying that so suddenly… aren’t you a servant of Priscilla?”

Heinkel: “I will be useful! I can become a force of deterrence! In order to win the Royal Selection, there’s a competitor that you need to have withdraw no matter what, now isn’t there? As long as they remain, nobody else has a winning chance. But, if you have me, then Reinhard won't be a problem—"

Emilia: "—Hk."

Seeing Heinkel's bloodcurdling state, Emilia was at a loss for words.

Emilia, who had recently begun to think that moving to solve problems before she could think about them was her strong suit, was silenced by Heinkel's attitude of deluded conviction.

It was a terrible sales pitch for his own horribly inconsistent self—but, if that was Heinkel's way of facing the fact that Priscilla had passed away.

Emilia: "I think, it's reaaally sad…"

Heinkel: "I understand, but it's the truth! You can't win against Reinhard if you don't have me. That's why Miss Priscilla welcomed me. Yes indeed, the fact that Miss Priscilla did so is a guarantee. Emilia-sama! Let us work together to clear away Miss Priscilla's regrets!"

Emilia: "…"

If there was even a sliver of lamentation for Priscilla in those words, Emilia would have listened to him.

But, she felt no such feelings towards Priscilla within Heinkel's appeal. If they had been present, Schult would have been seen making a sad expression.

Therefore, Emilia bit her lip before Heinkel, and—

Emilia: "That's eno—"

Madelyn: "Shut the frig' up."

The very next moment, a powerful punch was thrown in front of Emilia, furiously striking the jaw of Heinkel from below, who had been just in front of her. Crying out with a momentary "Koh", Heinkel fainted and collapsed onto the floor spread-eagled.

The force of that blow was enough to separate the head from the body of an average person.

Emilia: “M-Madelyn?!”

Madelyn: “It’s just that there was a friggin’ despicable guy here. You shouldn’t friggin’ sympathize with a guy like this.”

Shaking out the hand that she had punched Heinkel with, Madelyn spit those words out with displeasure.

After Emilia had hastened to Schult’s side, Madelyn slowly followed and had silently been watching the situation unfold, but it seemed that this was where she had run out of patience.

Schult: “Heinkel-sama! Heinkel-sama! Are you alright?!”

Madelyn: “Don’t friggin’ wail like that. It’s aggravating, but this is a friggin’ human who won’t die even if this dragon hits him at full strength. I just friggin’ knocked him out.”

As Schult leaped at the passed-out Heinkel and worried over him, Madelyn spoke. But, even if she said that, it was natural to worry over that level of force.

However, it was not as though Emilia did not understand why Madelyn had done such a thing.

Emilia: “Madelyn, I’m…”

Madelyn: “This dragon will friggin’ protect the Empire. However, I don’t intend to friggin’ protect things outside of that. Hurry up and take that friggin’ good-for-nothing human back home with you. There won’t be a friggin’ next time.”

Emilia: “…Mm, got it.”

Emilia understood that Madelyn’s words, spoken with her anger stifled, were her way of coming to a compromise. Thus, Emilia crouched down beside Schult, and looked at the fallen Heinkel.

His jaw had been struck with such vigor, and he had completely lost consciousness, so Emilia softly put her hand on his head.

Emilia: “I’m not very skilled at this, but I’ll provide a little treatment before you go to the healing room…”

Activating her healing magic, she took care to make sure that there would not be any after-effects from Madelyn’s blow. Next to Emilia as she did that, as Schult worried over Heinkel,

Schult: “Um, Emily-sama… Heinkel-sama, um, he worked very hard indeed.”

Emilia: “Schult-kun…”

Schult: “Heinkel-sama, he is also mourning what happened to Priscilla-sama. It seems he had some sort of agreement with Priscilla-sama, and, well, he was always trying his absolute hardest…”

Emilia: “Mm, don’t worry. It’s alright.”

Schult: “…And, indeed.”

As Schult bowed and cast his gaze downward, Emilia did her best to smile. Even if just a little bit, it would be good if that could serve as some consolation or encouragement for Schult.

Then, as Utakata, carrying the water jug atop her head, looked with wide eyes at Emilia as she healed Heinkel,

Utakata: “Em, you’re so admirable.”

At the calm words uttered by Utakata, Emilia slightly gasped. They were just the impressions spoken by a young girl without any conjecture—and they caused Emilia to realize.

She was no longer just another person mourning Priscilla’s death, but she had gained the qualifications to be there for others who were also mourning Priscilla’s death.

And, even though that was something she had wanted so desperately when considering Subaru and Rem—

Emilia: “—Priscilla, you dunderhead.”

The time of Emilia merely looking back on her extremely mean-spirited friend had come to an end, and to the extent that it made her body tremble from the inside, it was a lonely, fleeting moment.

Chapter 5:
Nine Hundred and Thirty-One Hits

1

—An unusual atmosphere enveloped the rooftop of the great fortress, which stood out with a noticeably strong presence within the Fortified City of Garkla where the aftereffects of the fierce battle with the Great Disaster lingered.

The rooftop was designed to accommodate a significant number of soldiers for archery in times of emergency, but having such a large number of people—having over a hundred present at once was beyond any initial expectations.

The sight of these robust men huddling together suggested that they might be subjects of some kind of punishment, potentially imposing a gloomy atmosphere both inside and out. However, there was no such sense of despair in their actual expressions; their faces carried a serious and earnest light.

And beyond the gazes of the men numbering over a hundred, there was a vast, open space.

And, in that space—

???: "—Pthu!"

There was a black-haired boy who spat out the blood that had collected in his mouth onto the floor with a wet sound.

His face was smeared with blood from his nose, his eyelids were swollen, his head was swaying unsteadily back and forth, and his body was in such a battered state that one could tell at a glance the severity of his injuries. It was a wonder that he could even stand, but the boy put his hands on his knees, stepped hard on the ground once more, and looked up.

—A blow smashed squarely into his face, right across the nose, sending the boy flying backward in the most spectacular manner yet.

He flew, he flew, and he rolled, ending up sprawled out on the ground.

Exhausted, with his arms and legs flung out, it was clear that he could not stand up due to the accumulated damage—

Boy: “Not… Yet…”

However, what overturned that perception was none other than the boy sprawled out on the floor.

Slowly sitting up and further dirtying his mouth with the fresh nosebleed that flowed out, the boy still managed to rise to his feet and exhale deeply.

And then—

Boy: “—hk!”

The boy was once again violently struck by his opponent’s raised fist.

2

Subaru: “—This is my way of making amends. So please, don’t interfere.”

If she hadn’t been told that beforehand, she would have rushed out immediately.

However, she suppressed that urge, bit her lip, and respected his feelings. That was what Beatrice could do for her partner, Natsuki Subaru, at this moment.

Subaru: “—Hk.”

The sound of a hard impact echoed, and Subaru’s face was knocked to the side, causing him to groan. He steadied his swaying body and, gritting his teeth, faced forward.

The next punch landed on his nose, making him arch backward. Though he reeled back—

Subaru: “Not… yet…”

With blood dripping from his nose and his eyes bloodshot, Subaru forced these words out.

Hearing this, the man with a skeleton tattoo who had been punching Subaru for more than twenty blows—Weitz contorted his fierce face and raised his fist again.

And again, blood splattered from Subaru’s nose as he was hit, staining the rooftop of the Great Fortress.

This had happened multiple times over the past few days and had been going on for over an hour just today.

Beatrice: “Subaru…”

At first glance, it seemed like a duel between Subaru and Weitz, but such a one-sided beating could not be called a duel. Standing there, Subaru continued to take Weitz’s punches head-on.

And Beatrice was—nay, Beatrice was not the only one watching.

???: “…”

Over a hundred people had gathered around the rooftop of the Great Fortress.

They were all members of the Pleiades Battalion that Natsuki Subaru had allied with in this Empire, and they were also the witnesses of this duel.

Yes, this ritual where Subaru was taking such a one sided beating was—

Tanza: “—Sparka.”

The deer-girl, Tanza, muttered beside Beatrice, who was gripping the hem of her skirt.

As they watched the same scene, Beatrice felt a terrible sense of irritation looking at Tanza's profile and her emotionless, dark eyes.

Because it felt like she was being implicitly told that Tanza understood the feelings of Subaru, who had taken on the ritual called Sparka, better than Beatrice did.

Because, after all,

Beatrice: "…Betty doesn't understand why Subaru has to do this, in fact."

Subaru had voluntarily imposed this ritual of one-sided beatings on himself.

Being asked to witness it as his way of making amends, Beatrice could only stand there, enduring the pain in her chest, wanting to at least fulfill his wish.

—The death of Priscilla Barielle had become a wound for many who knew her.

Those for whom the wound turned out to be shallow suffered because of the very shallowness of their wound, while conversely, those who were deeply and painfully gouged were preoccupied with tending to their bleeding and painful wounds.

And sadly, Beatrice was the former, while Subaru was undoubtedly the latter.

Beatrice: "…"

When starting this Sparka, Subaru said that this was to make amends.

Subaru, who met the gladiators with a shrunken body due to "infantilization", had lied about his true identity and deceived them by hiding his true identity, using the course of events and the calculation of gathering allies as reasons, and had dragged them into the center of this conflict.

Considering the fierceness of that battle and the significant role the Battalion played, without it, the damage might have been greater, or the Fortified City might have fallen.

So Subaru's judgment and choices were correct for saving the Empire.

It was just that Subaru himself could not forgive it, and thus sought punishment for it—

Spica: "Eao…"

A small hand was placed on Beatrice's, which was gripping her skirt.

When Beatrice looked, she saw that the one reaching out her hand was Spica, peering at her with concern. Her large eyes filled with sadness, she anxiously looked at Beatrice, whose hands were painfully clenched.

Beatrice felt pathetic for making even Spica worry about her.

Beatrice and Spica were the only ones here unrelated to the Pleiades Battalion. Beatrice earnestly wished that all of Spica's concern and worry could be directed toward Subaru instead.

Beatrice: "I'm sorry, I suppose. Spica, your—"

Cecilus: "—Oh my. I stopped by because I was wondering why there were so many figures on the rooftop, and it turns out it's Boss's Sparka? Despite appearances, he's quite diligent, isn't he? To get beaten up every single day."

Beatrice: "…"

Just as Beatrice squeezed Spica's hand back, a person with a nonchalant voice and demeanor casually put a foot on the rooftop fence, showing his face at the Sparka scene.

He made it seem as if it were as easy as skipping most of a staircase with a jump, but hopping up to the rooftop of a near hundred meter tall fortress was no easy feat. But then again, for the kimono-clad swordsman—for the Blue Lightning, Cecilus Segmunt, such common sense did not seem to apply.

Tanza: “Cecilus-sama.”

Balancing himself on one leg atop the fence, Cecilus made a visor with his hand as he gazed over the Sparka, and hearing Tanza’s call, he gave a gentle smile,

Cecilus: “Hello hello, Tanza-san. It’s a somewhat fresh and odd feeling for the line of my gaze to differ from Tanza-san’s like this, isn’t it? This current form of mine is the original standard and the child form that I’d had until now was just a temporary state; but since my acquaintance with Tanza-san was longer in that form so it feels quite strange now don’t you think?”

Tanza: “Indeed. Even if the height of your body’s line of sight has changed, the height of your mind’s gaze remains the same, so to be quite frank, my impression of you is quite unchanged.”

Cecilus: “Hahahaha, nice joke!”

Clapping his hands and smiling at Tanza’s blunt response, Cecilus proceeded to shift his gaze towards Beatrice. Receiving those blue eyes, Beatrice frowned, and then,

Cecilus: “Boss’s partner looks to be quite discontent.”

Beatrice: “…A matter of course, in fact. There is no need for Subaru to do this sort of thing, I suppose.”

Cecilus: “Let’s stop talking about whether it’s necessary or not. If we were to switch over to an extreme conversation regarding the value of life or lack thereof, it’s quite possible it could become a conversation that’s not the slightest bit tasteful. Even if this may not be necessary, there is a reason behind it. Even if it can’t be found within yourself, it is certainly within Boss.”

Beatrice: “…”

Cecilus: “Well in reality I do think he’s taking it far too seriously. All this to whole-heartedly apologize and gain the forgiveness of all the members of the Battalion who he continued to deceive all the way from the Gladiator Island. That said, the members of the Battalion are all hot-headed gladiators, so this ended up being a suitable method."

Yapping away fluently at full speed, Cecilus ultimately pointed at the worn-out Subaru.

It was odious, but there was nothing incorrect in what Cecilus had pointed out. —As he said, Subaru making amends by being punched repeatedly by Weitz was atonement towards the Pleiades Battalion.

The members of the Pleiades Battalion, nine hundred and thirty-one people—in total, a purification via nine hundred and thirty-one punches.

By undertaking that from Weitz, who was serving as the representative of the Battalion, this was the rite Subaru had levied upon himself to satisfy the members of the Battalion; it was Sparka.

Cecilus: "Regardless of being split over several days, it's still nine hundred hits, isn't it? If struck that many times, even I would die. Though, to begin with, I've never even considered a situation in which I would be punched in a defenseless state, so it feels a bit like the premise would never come to fruition… How far along is he now?"

Tanza: "The total over all the days so far is two hundred and fifty-six hits."

Cecilus: "I see I see… It's so far that I might faint!"

Hearing the total count thus far from Tanza, Cecilus declared so without malice.

One might have wanted to speak out against his flippance, but doing so would result in a meaningless competition. Giving up on rebutting him, Beatrice gripped Spica's hand, and focused her worry on Subaru.

For the duration of this Sparka, Subaru had forbidden Beatrice from using healing magic on him.

Therefore, she had been heightening her Mana so that as soon as today's Sparka was over, she could rush over to him as fast as possible and heal his wounds.

???: "Cecilus."

In Beatrice's stead as she thought so, a weighty, stern voice called Cecilus's name.

Folding his four burly arms, as the large man who wore a frightening expression—as Gustav, looked towards Cecilus, who was standing atop the fence, and the scenery behind him,

Gustav: "I do not know if I have the jurisdiction to ask about this in my capacity, but what of General First-Class Arakiya?"

Cecilus: "It's not really something that I need to keep a secret from you, Gustav-san. The seat of the governor of the Gladiator Island will soon be entrusted to somebody else while you'll be taking up an important post in the Imperial Capital, isn't that so? So that should mean you'll have the chance to meet me every once in a while, since I also generally live in the Imperial Capital. Well, right now the Imperial Capital is in that condition so it's a bit of a problem to say whether I live there or not, but…"

Gustav: "…"

Cecilus: "Oya, how rude of me, we were talking about Anya, right? —As before, she's still having difficulty maintaining the balance between her mind and body. Even at the best of times, she's taken in an enormous Spirit that puts her slender body on the verge of bursting. A steady heart is absolutely essential in order to exorcize that, but since the princess sister who propped her up passed away, she's been quite unmanageable."

Gustav: "I can only imagine the heartache and pains. However, the duty which only you are capable of fulfilling is tied to the survival of the Empire. Not only the hopes of me, in my capacity, but the hopes of all citizens of the Empire are being placed upon you."

Cecilus: "What are you saying, Gustav-san? It's a tad unpleasant."

Gustav: “Mh…”

Cecilus: “I’m the leading actor of this world, y’know? Bearing the hopes of somebody, as well as of the entire Empire, is an everyday occurrence for me. —It’s a matter involving Anya, I’m not gonna cut corners.”

Cecilus was composed as he responded so, but the difficulty of what he had just so casually described was exemplified in a visible format.

—Behind Cecilus, the vast wasteland beyond the western rampart visible from the roof of the fortress, engraved there were vestiges of a natural disaster that had just occurred.

It was evidence of Cecilus, who had come here wearing a nonchalant expression, suppressing the emission of power from Arakiya to prevent her from exploding, since she had taken in the extraordinary power of a Great Spirit enlisted among the Four Greats.

If left unattended, the swell of power was capable of becoming a second Great Disaster. Having said that, it was difficult for those shallow of heart to remain near Arakiya in her current state.

Therefore, even if the Empire was searched far and wide for that great duty, none but Cecilus would be capable of performing it.

Cecilus: “Regardless of whether it’s desired of them or not, people won’t stop in their tracks. The only people allowed to come to a stop are those who are dead, and the living have no choice but to keep moving forward. At their roots, Anya’s hardship and the struggle of Boss’s purification are the same. They may be painful to witness, but they ought to be welcomed.”

Beatrice: “You’re speaking like it’s somebody else’s problem, in fact.”

Cecilus: “Somebody else’s problem is quite the boorish way of putting it. It’s a matter of this being Boss’s duty, and his climax. Having said that… I guess this is as far as he goes for today.”

Closing one eye, Cecilus muttered in response to Beatrice.

At his words, Beatrice gasped an “Eh”, and as she snapped back around, Weitz’s fist simultaneously knocked Subaru down to the ground.

Weitz: “Haa… Haa… it’s over… hk”

While breathing heavily, Weitz lowered the blood-stained fist that had punched Subaru. To those words, the unconscious Subaru gave no response.

Exclaiming “Subaru!”, Beatrice rushed to Subaru’s side, and began to activate healing magic with great haste. Once Weitz made sure of that, he began to turn around, but,

Beatrice: “Wait, I suppose. I will treat your hand as well, in fact.”

Weitz: “Ain’t no need… Prioritize Schwartz over me…”

Beatrice: “I cannot do that, I suppose. Spica.”

Hearing the call, Spica cut around in front of Weitz, and spread her arms open with an “Uu”.

As Weitz could not push Spica out of his way, Beatrice activated healing magic without a moment’s delay; at the sensation of his wounds gradually being healed, Weitz turned around and glared at her.

But, even if he was a man whose skeleton tattoos gave off a fiendish impression, the pained contortions of his face were of no intimidation to the Great Spirit Beatrice.

???: “O-oi, Tanza, how many hits is he at now?”

Tanza: “Two hundred and fifty-eight hits, Hiain-sama.”

???: “So… six hundred and seventy-three remaining…? Still a long way to go, huh.”

Beside Beatrice and the others, the lizardman enquiring to Tanza with a quavering voice was Hiain. At his question, Tanza informed him of the count, and the bearded Idra shook his head in gloom.

Then, Hiain looked over the surroundings with a “Hey”,

Hiain: “I mean, ain’t it enough already? He’s taken this damn much, and we’ve all fully understood his feelings.”

Weitz: “Go off ‘n mumble that nonsense in yer sleep, lizard bastard…! If I was just gonna quit halfway, then why the fuck do ya think I undertook this duty…!”

Hiain: “Whad’ya mean “why”, ain’t ya the one who’s most worn out over all this? I, I haven’t gone that far!”

Extending his long tongue, Hiain’s voice quavered, and a vein began to bulge out on Weitz’s forehead. However, as he tried to press Hiain, Tanza stopped him, saying “You are undergoing treatment.”

Instead, Idra took a deep breath and looked towards Hiain.

Idra: “To be frank, I agree with your point. Certainly, I was shocked by the reveal of Schwartz’s identity, and I did feel somewhat deceived, but…”

Weitz: “Schwartz rescued all of us from the island… What else do ya fucking need…!”

Hiain: “Th-Then, then nobody wants to do it! So then why…”

Gustav: “That is because it is something called for by Natsuki Schwartz—nay, by Natsuki Subaru himself. So long as Tanza or the contracted spirit do not put a stop to it, I approve of this conduct, as the official.”

As Gustav interjected into the conversation between Idra, Weitz, and Hiain, his words weighty and stern; the gladiators in the surroundings each responded with gestures and words that were close in their sense of heat.

Of course, among them were likely people who were enraged and unable to forgive Subaru’s conduct, but—

Spica: “Uau…”

Crouched down opposite Beatrice, Spica was worriedly looking at Subaru with his swollen face and languid demeanor.

If one could look at the state of those girls, and at the figure of Subaru pitifully throwing himself into atonement, without thinking anything of it, they would not have even been able to enlist in the Pleiades Battalion to begin with.

Tanza: “Right now, it is necessary for Schwartz-sama. He needs to prove to himself that he has not come to a standstill. Even if that happens to be through pain.”

At Tanza’s comment, a conclusion was given to the problem initially raised by Hiain.

Receiving that, Weitz clenched the fist that had been healed by Beatrice, and,

Weitz: “I’m gonna continue… Even if it breaks my fist, I’ll follow him for the remaining six hundred punches…!”

Cecilus: “Wonderful, how truly wonderful. That is precisely how you’re supposed to use your time in the spotlight, Weitz-san.”

Weitz: “…”

Cecilus: “Huh? What’s with this odd atmosphere?”

For a moment, everybody present widened their eyes at Cecilus’s interjection. Weitz, who had been especially caught off guard, stared at Cecilus, and,

Weitz: “I never woulda thought that ya’d remember my name…”

Cecilus: “It certainly is true that I’m quite forgetful! But, I do at least remember the names of actors who are worth remembering.”

Weitz: “Hmph…”

Weitz snorted at Cecilus as the latter shrugged his shoulders, and then, once again, looked down at the fallen Subaru. He looked at the face that, while likely overlapping with the impression of the young Subaru seared into his memories, would still take some time to clearly fully merge together.

And then—

Weitz: “I leave the rest to ya…”

With those words, Weitz departed from the rooftop with large strides. Following him, the other men, as well as Idra, who was dragging the reluctant Hiain along with him, also exited from the rooftop.

Finally, Gustav nodded at Beatrice and the rest who still remained there, and,

Gustav: “In my capacity, I shall also be on my way. Natsuki Subaru… as expected, the name Schwartz feels more fitting. I entrust him to you.”

Beatrice: “That goes without saying, in fact. Only, you ought to remember, I suppose.”

Gustav: “And what might that be?”

Beatrice: “If Subaru is Schwartz to you, then he won’t be upset if you keep calling him that, in fact. There is no need for the special nickname between you all to be lost out of unnecessary concern, I suppose.”

Gustav: “—You have my thanks.”

Giving a deep nod, Gustav slowly departed.

With that, the gladiators who had been ascertaining the Sparka simultaneously took their leave, and Beatrice breathed a sigh upon the rooftop that had instantly become deserted. Then, glancing up at the kimono-clad girl to her side,

Beatrice: “It’s fine for you to also go along with that bunch, in fact.”

Tanza: “Even without your concern, I am quite fine as is. Unlike everybody else, it is no strange matter for me to remain here.”

Beatrice: “—. You also have the worry regarding your master, I suppose. She is also suffering, in fact.”

Tanza: “…”

That comment was not made in the vein of sarcasm or harassment, but for a moment, Beatrice regretted that it ultimately ended up coming across that way.

The comment had caused Tanza’s cheeks to slightly stiffen; her master, Yorna Mishigure, was one of the people who had sustained a grave wound at the death of Priscilla—through an absurd binding on her soul, among many reincarnations, a past version of herself had been the mother of the deceased Priscilla.

In other words, the parent-child duo of Yorna and Priscilla, had each experienced complex bereavement.

Tanza: “Thank you for your concern, Beatrice-sama… However, Yorna-sama is fine on her own, that is…”

Beatrice: “…”

Tanza: “That is, what she said, so—”

As Tanza cast her eyes down, Beatrice realized that she had misjudged her.

Tanza was not satisfied with Yorna’s words. Even so, just like how Beatrice had decided to watch over Subaru’s act of making amends, she had decided to respect Yorna’s wishes.

It would have been difficult for outsiders to surmise Yorna’s emotions while insisting that she would be alright by herself. —However, Beatrice felt like she understood at least a part of it.

Though different from reincarnation, amidst the long time Beatrice had lived, she had seen many lives pass on. Before Subaru had taken her out of the forbidden library, it was something she had come to instinctively avoid.

Because of that, Beatrice had responded with a very insincere attitude to those who had attempted to face her, something that she had now regretted. Unlike Beatrice, who never learned from that, Yorna might have come to know and learn that through her own experiences.

Even so—

Subaru: "…Ugh."

Spica: "Uau!"

Subaru: "Spi… ca…? Ah, huh, I'm…"

Suddenly, Subaru's eyelids quivered, and his black eyes slowly opened. Spica's eyes lit up when she saw this and pounced on him, causing Subaru to blink several times in response.

Seeing this, Beatrice sighed, noting that his memories before he fainted seemed to be missing,

Beatrice: "Those guys aren't here anymore, I suppose. I'm in the middle of casting healing magic, in fact."

Subaru: "Ah, ahhh, right! I see, yeah, I'm so~ sorry! My bad, Beako, I always end up making you worry! I really am useless without you!"

Finally understanding Beatrice's explanation, Subaru slapped his face with both hands. As the sound echoed, Subaru sprang up to his feet.

However, his momentum caused him to nearly stumble forward—

Spica: "Uuuh!"

Subaru: "Oops, sorry, Spica… Thanks for being a witness. You did a good job of not rushing in. I thought you would punch Weitz without thinking. Now that I think about it, it was quite a tightrope walk."

Spica: “Auuu, uau.”

Subaru: “The real danger was Tanza? Now that you mention it, that’s true! Tanza cares a lot about me. From that perspective, Weitz could’ve been in real trouble.”

As he spoke, Subaru took Spica’s hand, who had supported him when he nearly fell, and began to dance with her on the spot.

Although the swelling on his face had considerably reduced thanks to the healing magic, his lips were still cut, and his slightly swollen eyes were still a concern for Beatrice, who would have liked to continue treating him a little longer.

Tanza: “My honor is at stake, so please do not make such arbitrary comments, Natsuki Subaru-sama.”

With a sigh, Tanza prodded Subaru, who was dancing with Spica. Subaru made a sour face and replied,

Subaru: “Haven’t your words become thornier since I returned to my original size? And it actually stings quite a bit when you call me something other than Schwartz-sama, so please stop.”

Tanza: “I apologize, Natsuki Subaru-sama. Natsuki Subaru-sama is a guest from the Kingdom, so I cannot afford to be disrespectful, Natsuki Subaru-sama.”

Subaru: “Tanzaaa~”

Subaru, holding Spica, looked saddened by Tanza’s distant response. —Beatrice found it hard to watch his overly cheerful demeanor, which was meant to hide his true feelings.

Subaru sought to make amends to the Pleiades Battalion and acted cheerfully in front of Beatrice and his close companions. It was likely all to avoid worrying those around him, but—

Beatrice: “…It might be counterproductive, I suppose.”

Trying to be cheerful when he wanted to cry and making everyone laugh when he was hurting.

Beatrice loved that aspect of Subaru, but only when his sadness and pain didn't exceed his tolerance.

No one should bottle up their need to cry or their pain like this.

Subaru: "Beako? Why the cute face?"

Beatrice: "—. Betty is always cute, in fact. More importantly, since the treatment is still ongoing, why don't you sit still, I suppose?"

Subaru: "I'd like to say I don't want to trouble you… but I need to be in tip-top shape, and I haven't even climbed half the mountain yet. Alright, bring it on!"

Nodding, Subaru sat down cross-legged with Spica on his lap, his face full of determination.

Beatrice resumed her healing magic on Subaru, glancing at Tanza, who only shook her head silently.

She too was unsure of what to say to Subaru.

Then—

Cecilus: "Boss, Boss, can I have a moment?"

Cecilus, who had been watching the proceedings, called out to Subaru without any regard for the tension among those concerned about him.

Hearing him, Subaru looked up at Cecilus perched on the fence,

Subaru: "Oh, if it isn't big Ceci. You've seriously just grown bigger without looking awkward at all."

Cecilus: "I could say the same for you, Boss, but your growth has only made your fierce eyes look more prominent. It was cute when you were looking young, but now it's simply a deadly weapon."

Subaru: "You say whatever you want… You're alone? She's not with you?"

Cecilus: “If you mean Anya, she’s lying in a crater. Thanks to the Stone’s power, she became incredibly tough, so I had to suppress her a hundred times or so. She won’t be getting up anytime soon. But more importantly…”

As he spoke, Cecilus jumped off the fence and landed in front of Subaru. Greeting him, Subaru and Spica tilted their heads at the same angle.

Seeing their reactions, Cecilus grinned—

Cecilus: “You’re heading back to the Kingdom soon, right? Before that, how about showing us a good punch to His Excellency’s face?”

3

???: “So I took Boss to see His Excellency! Boss was so excited about wanting to beat up His Excellency all the way back at Gladiator Island so I wanted to be present to witness it!”

???: “Be gone at once.”

Cecilus raised his hand and smiled as he entered, but Vincent, busy with his affairs, dismissed him while looking down at his paperwork.

It was a natural response for the busy Emperor, but Cecilus, perhaps the most stubborn man in the Empire, would not back down regardless.

He pouted his lips in dissatisfaction with a “Eh~”, proudly sitting his behind on the Emperor’s desk while he was working,

Cecilus: “Don’t you think you’re working too much? Of course I understand that the work of military officers is to be done in emergencies whereas the work of civilian officers is to be done in emergencies and non-emergencies alike with no breaks!”

Vincent: “So you intend to persuade me? If I were to take you up on your sweet talk, what would you expect me to do as I excuse myself from my work?”

Cecilus: “Please let Boss beat you up!”

Vincent: “Be gone at once.”

Cecilus: “Boo~! His Excellency is a workaholic! Don’t you think so, Most Honorable Empress Consort?”

Medium: “Meee?”

At Vincent’s curt answer, Cecilus, leaning back on the desk, called for reinforcements. The one who responded to his call was Medium, who was playing with Spica on the office’s couch.

She brushed Spica’s long, blonde hair as she groaned, “Mmmm”,

Medium: “I also think that Abel-chin is working too much, but I know that the work he’s doing is important, so I can’t say much. Also, I don’t want to see Abel-chin and Subaru-chin fighting.”

Cecilus: “It wouldn’t be a fight so much as a one-sided beating of His Excellency… isn’t that Sparka in a sense?!”

Vincent: “Remove your rear at once.”

Cecilus clenched his fists, his excitement brimming over. Vincent closed one eye, sighing as he tried to pull out the papers that were lying under Cecilus’s bottom.

Then, turning his black eyes towards the entrance of the room,

Vincent: “You, how long do you intend to stand there? You are an eyesore.”

???: “Geh… that’s, well…”

Medium: “Subaru-chin, bring Beatrice-chan and come sit in front of me!”

Subaru, invited by Vincent’s cold voice and Medium’s contrasting warm voice, awkwardly sat down on a couch in front of Medium in the middle of the room. Beatrice, holding Subaru’s hand, sat down with him, and Medium gently placed a cup of tea on the table.

Medium: “Heeere you go, coarse tea.”

Vincent: “While it is temporary, this still is my office. You, are you serving coarse tea to the Emperor?”

Medium: “Big bro taught me that it’s all about courtesy! I don’t know anything about etiquette myself, so I’m just trying my best to be polite~!”

Saying this, Medium poured another cup of tea for Vincent, who had one on his desk as well. Vincent did not particularly complain about the rising steam, and Beatrice was able to confirm by her own taste that there was nothing wrong with the tea she had brewed.

Next to Beatrice, Subaru frowned as he began,

Subaru: “Man how should I put it, Abel and Medium-san are really going to be a married couple.”

Medium: “Eek!”

Subaru: “What was that squeal just now?”

Medium: “Umm, umm~, I’m still a little embarrassed by how that sounds.”

Medium’s face flushed and she gave a small whine, but Beatrice could see that although she was confused about the situation she found herself in, she did not reject it wholeheartedly.

In all honesty, Beatrice was not very familiar with Vincent’s personality.

However, since Subaru had been lambasting him so often, paradoxically, he was likely someone like Otto or Julius, both of whom had many commendable aspects.

Beatrice: “Otherwise, I wouldn’t feel comfortable leaving Medium in your care, in fact.”

Subaru: “That’s true. Flop-san being tempted by money and status is so unlike him.”

Cecilus: “Oh dear, they’re really dissing you, Your Excellency. It sounds like Boss is saying there’s nothing good about you besides your position, honor, and wealth as the Emperor of Vollachia.”

Vincent: “Are you all trying to anger me and stop my work, thereby destroying the Empire?”

If so, it must be said that their efforts were succeeding.

With so many interruptions and physical hindrances to his paperwork, Vincent had no choice but to halt progress on his tasks.

Then, giving up on retrieving the documents from under Cecilus’s rear end, Vincent instead fixed his dark eyes sharply on Subaru,

Vincent: “I have heard of your repeated eccentric behavior with the escaped prisoners from the Gladiator Island under the pretext of making amends.”

Subaru: “…I thought you’d say it was pointless. But calling them escaped prisoners doesn’t sit right with me. All of them are…”

Vincent: “They were sent to Ginunhive for a reason. They are considered escaped prisoners, and rightfully so. They took advantage of the Empire’s chaos to break out and wield their military power to wreak havoc.”

Subaru: “So, what do you plan to do with them?”

Subaru stiffened his cheeks at Vincent’s threatening words and glared back at him. For a moment, a sharp tension filled the space between them.

However, Medium cut through their stares with a hand chop, telling them to stop,

Medium: “Abel-chin, if you say something mean like that, Subaru-chin will misunderstand.”

Vincent: “—. The escaped prisoners from the island shall be granted amnesty for their hard work regarding this incident. This was also petitioned by Gustav Morello, governor of the Gladiator Island.”

Prompted by Medium, Vincent quietly announced the fate of the Pleiades Battalion.

The sudden crisis of the Battalion—initially brought up by Vincent, was directly handled by the latter, leading to intense emotional fluctuations.

Subaru, trembling with anger, glared at Vincent,

Subaru: "Y-you sure enjoy toying with people over already resolved issues…!"

Cecilus: "Ah, I feel you, I feel you deeply! His Excellency has that tendency. Now that I think about it, Chisha also used to do such mean things often. Is this just something that intelligent people commonly do?"

Beatrice: "Speaking of resolved issues, you spoke of getting back at the Emperor, Cecilus, but Subaru has already handled that on his own a while ago, I suppose."

Cecilus: "Whaaat?!"

Cecilus's voice cracked, and Beatrice stuck out her tongue in response. It felt refreshing to finally break his arrogant pace.

However, Cecilus then pondered,

Cecilus: "I'll have to hear the details later to soothe my shock at missing such an interesting event, but now I'm curious. If that's the case, why did you let me bring you to His Excellency, Boss? You could have just brushed me off like Tanza-san did, so why?"

Subaru: "Well…"

In response to Cecilus's question, Subaru hesitated to answer, glancing at Vincent.

Even without seeing his reaction, Beatrice could tell what Subaru was thinking. Over the past few days, Subaru had been actively interacting with Beatrice and the Pleiades Battalion, but there were a few people he could not bring himself to face.

—Vincent, Yorna, and the members of Priscilla's camp.

Given Subaru's excessive sense of responsibility, it was only natural that he would feel this way about them. However, Subaru did not think it was acceptable to leave things as they were.

Therefore, it was convenient for him to be brought here by Cecilus under the pretense of being forced to.

Because this way—

Vincent: "You've finally shown yourself before me… no, before me."

Subaru: "Abel…"

Subaru's dilemma, his hesitation, and his various emotions.

They were apparently all too clear to Vincent Vollachia, known as the Wise Emperor. Subaru was certainly overwhelmed by his sharp gaze.

However, funneling strength into the hand he had linked with Beatrice's, Subaru resolved himself to clash directly against that pressure, and opened his mouth.

Subaru: "Abel, I'm sor—"

Vincent: "—A moment ago, you had chastised me over bringing up a resolved issue."

Subaru: "Eh…"

Vincent: "But, if you were to ask me, it is you who continues to touch upon resolved issues."

After having the wind knocked out of his sails, Subaru blinked upon being told thus.

For a moment, he struggled to comprehend the meaning behind those words. However, the instant he understood them, Subaru's expression underwent a sudden upheaval.

It became a jumble of anger and sorrow; to be precise, it was fury.

Subaru: “A resolved issue… what, what the hell do you think you’re saying?!”

Vincent: “Currently, that is the bulk of the problem that weighs upon you. If such is the case for your atonement towards the gladiators, then the same applies to your attitude concerning myself and Yorna Mishigure. More than anything—”

Subaru: “STOP!!”

As Vincent attempted to continue, Subaru stood up from the sofa, and tried to fiercely approach him to make him cease his words.

But, in front of Subaru as he tried to do so, a third party intervened. —It was Cecilus.

Having removed his buttocks from the desk, he stepped in front of Subaru as the latter tried to approach the Vollachian Emperor, and hindered his advance.

Subaru: “Don’t get in my way, Ceci! Didn’t you want to see me punch Abel?!”

Cecilus: “Indeed yes, that’s right. But that was a matter of wanting to see a Sparka between Boss and His Excellency, I’m not interested in seeing a dull, impulsive match.”

Subaru: “—Hk.”

Both had returned to their original heights, and they confronted each other in positions that were no longer that of children.

But, in this standoff between Subaru and Cecilus, Beatrice did not experience her usual feeling of wanting to take Subaru’s side. Rather, she supported Cecilus—no, she supported Vincent, who met Subaru head-on with words that he needed to hear.

His phrasing was nothing but harsh, and even though there were plenty of other ways to put it, deliberately choosing words that went along with blood and pain was loathsome, but—

Vincent: "—Priscilla's death, is already a matter of the past."

Subaru: "ABEL—!!"

At that assertion, Subaru's voice became potent with rage, and he glared at Vincent. But, receiving the gaze from beyond Cecilus, Vincent made not even the slightest of movements.

The ones to stiffen their expressions at Subaru's pitifulness, were those of the female faction, Beatrice, Spica, and Medium.

Subaru: "Priscilla was your… she was your sister, wasn't she? And yet, you're…"

Vincent: "Indeed. She was my sister. Clever and impudent since our younger years, she ultimately lost her life without ever having remedied those aspects of her personality… Just like with Chisha, Priscilla's loss has certainly borne a wound within myself. I shan't hide it."

Slowly shaking his head, Vincent placed his hand over his chest as he spilled those words.

Thereupon, behind his pride as Emperor, it was clear that Vincent had concealed his own worry towards his sister, and anguish regarding her passing.

Subaru lamented the fact that he had yielded such things within Vincent, and that was exactly why he had not shown his face until now, not knowing what he ought to say.

However—

Vincent: "—This is something that belongs to me. There is no room for your involvement."

Subaru: "…"

Vincent: "They are the things between me and Priscilla. Do you seek the right to place your fingers upon even that?"

Subaru: "N-no… that's, that's wrong. That isn't the case. It isn't the case, but…”

At Vincent’s eloquence, Subaru’s anger was doused as if with water, and, unable to find the right words to say, his gaze began to wander.

As Subaru did so, Vincent still did not halt his speech.

Likely, that was a questioning that could not have taken form without the time cultivated between Subaru and Vincent within the Empire, unbeknownst to Beatrice and the others.

Vincent quietly continued with the following. That was—

Vincent: “Natsuki Subaru. —In the end, what words did Priscilla speak to you?”

Subaru: “…”

Vincent: “If they were words of malediction, then I shall undertake that which was left within you. However, if that is not so… then, they are the fruits of the relationship between you and Priscilla.”

Subaru: “…”

Vincent: “Take the parting gift bestowed onto you by my sister, and make it into your very flesh and blood. —That, is the resolution to the issue.”

What words ought he to say? What ought he do to atone?

Such various questions and misgivings, the impatience of being unable to remain at a standstill, and the self-punishing thoughts of needing to suffer were the foundation of Subaru’s actions over these past few days.

And, Vincent declared that the very genesis of that foundation was conflicting.

Subaru: “Priscilla, said…”

Vincent: “She said?”

Subaru: “…She said, that I was a true Knight.”

Vincent: “In that case, that is the entirety of what Priscilla has bestowed upon you. —It was a great service, Natsuki Subaru.”

Subaru: “…”

At that phrase, Subaru’s expression crumbled.

The expression dominated by indignation and sorrow was washed away, and sprouting out from behind were emotions of vigor akin to water ceaselessly overflowing from a boiling pot.

Emotions that he had deliberately not been facing ever since the morning when he witnessed Priscilla’s death.

Beatrice: “Subaru…”

Subaru: “Bea… trice… I’m, I’m…”

Beatrice: “It’s alright, in fact. Betty fully… Betty and Emilia, and everybody else fully understand, I suppose.”

Nestling close to Subaru’s side as he stood stock still, Beatrice grabbed him by the hand and nodded. At Beatrice’s words, Subaru could not bear the overflowing tears as his face contorted.

And then at last, for the first time since that morning, Beatrice was confident that her voice had finally reached Subaru.

Beatrice: “I’m sorry, in fact.”

Suddenly, immediately after witnessing Subaru fall to his knees.

The kneeling Subaru embraced Beatrice from the front. At the frail strength of that clinging embrace, Beatrice gently hugged Subaru in return.

Cecilus: “—Now it may be different than punching His Excellency but with this I got to see a fine climax.”

Beatrice: “Some things are better left unsaid, I suppose.”

Cecilus: “Apologies.”

After speaking that unnecessary comment, Cecilus made a gesture of shutting his mouth with his finger, and winked. In the back, Medium, who was hugging Spica, was moved by Subaru’s tears and also began to cry.

Then, as Subaru buried his face into Beatrice’s chest as he sobbed, he was unable to see something that Beatrice witnessed.

Vincent: “…”

The figure of the Vollachian Emperor, who had caused Subaru to collapse, wearing a slightly pleased look on his face.

Beatrice, who had only been acquainted with him for a short while, also understood. —This was a face that Vincent Vollachia, known as the Wise Emperor, seldom showed to anybody.

Esteeming the person who shed tears in his stead during his dearest sister’s final moments, such was the kind of expression it was.

Chapter 6:
Departure

1

—With those blue eyes, they came to witness numerous choices.

Born from an empty, barren space, that ego was drawn towards a splendent light. Basking in that warmth, it slowly began to outline the shape of its own form.

Initially pushed aside, an innate tenderness prevented them from staying away, and gradually, their presence came to be tolerated.

Before long, rather than being merely tolerated, a hand was proactively extended to them. Now recognized as a new being, they were bestowed with a new name.

Rejection and compromise, conflict and acceptance, trust and reliance, then permission and forgiveness—.

He came to make numerous choices.

Countless choices, innumerable choices, limitless choices, each were a product of his own very will. And sometimes from up close, sometimes from far away, sometimes transcending all physical and spiritual distances, they bore witness to it all.

Not all of those choices, however, led him to the place of his longing.

Even then, he did everything in his power in order to continue choosing.

With nothing and no one to rely on, they looked at that figure as their example. Even if the culmination of their strenuous efforts were to lead them to a sorrowful outcome, they would continue moving forward.

What was so strange about admiring that likeness and way of being?

—They, too, must make their own choices.

His rejection and compromise, his conflict and acceptance, his trust and reliance, as well as his permission and forgiveness, as someone fortunate enough to have experienced those things, they wanted to walk the same path.

Be it errors or grave mistakes, this body had committed far too many of them.

Not to mask, cover, forget, or overlook these everlasting scars, but to ensure that they would remember them.

Not for the purpose of being right, but trusting in that desire to be righteous, the very same way he chose his path.

In order to ensure that his—Natsuki Subaru's decision to choose them might not become a mistake.

???: "—Never did I expect you to be the one who had requested a conversation with me."

Not a physical, but an emotional strain was required to push that door open. On the other side, a man with raven-black hair sat at an imposing desk, sifting through a large stack of papers, and spoke those words.

With those sharp, black eyes, he too had made many choices, and it was by choosing the one path he could amongst many that he now held his current position.

All of it was the result of the man's own choices.

And thus—

Black-haired man: "As you can see, I am busy. That… Medium O'Connell spoke on your behalf, which is why I have taken some time, but I cannot spare much more. If there is something you desire, I shall provide it if it is commensurate with your efforts. However—"

Cutting off his words there, the man looked up from the stack of papers towards them. Many thoughts and ideas ran through the pitch-black eyes of the wise Monarch.

And so, fixedly staring through the one who stood at the door, he opened his thin lips, and,

Black-haired man: “I have no words to offer regarding his current state. I cannot make any effort to visit him, nor should I. —That is, unless it is what you wish for.”

Being asked that, they shook their head.

There was something they wanted to ask of the man in front of them, but it did not concern the one he spoke of directly.

There was most likely nothing they could do for him at that moment. The same went for the others around him. Therefore, their reason for having come here lay somewhere else.

Certainly, he would have chosen to stand up once again.

That they came here was in preparation for when he would stand up again.

So that when he chose to rise up, they too would be in a position to make a proper choice—

Black-haired man: “Then, what is it that you desire?”

Being stared at by the man’s black eyes, they met that gaze with their own blue eyes, and paused for a moment.

Most likely, within this vast Empire, those who witnessed the most of his choices were their own blue eyes, that kind girl’s pale blue eyes, and the black eyes of the man before them.

Hence, they spoke to him, who understood the weight of choice.

And—

???: “—Uu!”

Thus, that life born from an empty ego, set forth to make a choice of her own.

2

—On the day that Subaru and the rest of the Emilia Camp were to depart from the Vollachian Empire, it had been raining since the morning in Vollachia, which usually had endlessly long stretches of sunny days.

Subaru: “Really, I hate the Vollachian Empire…”

Seeing the climate of the Empire, which could not even send them off in high spirits, Subaru’s lips spilled that out, unable to grow accustomed to this country from start to end.

But then again, though he hated the Vollachian Empire, the people he had encountered in this country had not been so bad.

Rather, that could have been called the worst aspect of the time he had spent in this country, but—.

???: “Husband-kun, I truly am indebted to you! Please, be well in the Kingdom too!”

Subaru: “What are you saying, Flop-san? I’m the one who’s indebted to you, and even now that debt continues to increase. I haven’t even done a single thing to return the favor…”

Flop: “Hahaha, you mustn’t say such foolish things. Just how much fortune do you think my sister and I shared thanks to the things you did for us, Husband-kun? Both Medium and I have found spouses. It’s a matter of great celebration!”

Saying that, Flop firmly struck his own slim chest.

While Subaru was busy losing heart, Flop had displayed his manliness by magnificently succeeding in courting Taritta, so Subaru found himself feeling a mix of surprise and respect.

Since Taritta, who originally was only attracted to good looks like her older sister, Mizelda, seemed to have been charmed by Flop’s humanity, Subaru was glad to hear that everything came together quite well.

Towards both Flop and Taritta, Subaru was naught but thankful.

Flop: “Husband-kun, you have my gratitude.”

Subaru: “…”

Even so, being embraced by Flop from the front, Subaru’s breath was taken away. As Subaru unconsciously tensed his body, Flop spoke in his usual tone—no, in a voice filled with more emotion than usual,

Flop: “That day, when you appeared before me and Medium, carrying Wife-san as she was seated, I thought it was an unbelievably fateful encounter. And, it appears I wasn’t mistaken. Under a distant sky, I’ll be wishing happiness upon you and the people who are precious to you.”

Subaru: “Ah…”

Flop: “If you ever come to the Empire again, I want you to contact me whenever. Conversely, if I ever happen to go to the Kingdom, I’ll definitely be counting on you! I’d absolutely love to get your help!”

After letting go of Subaru’s body, Flop O’Connell smiled as he always did, radiating as brightly as the rays of the midday sun.

From their very first encounter to this farewell, his presence, which had not once lost its cheerfulness, caused Subaru’s heart to tremble greatly.

In the Vollachian Empire, the first person he had met was the veiled Emperor, followed by the People of Shudraq, who had continued to fight alongside them across the whole journey. —However, the people that Natsuki Subaru had been most blessed to encounter within the Vollachian Empire were undoubtedly the O’Connell siblings, Flop and Medium.

He now truly felt that once again, very, very strongly—

Subaru: “—Yeah, I’m thankful to you as well, Flop-san! I love you!”

Including his highest tier of gratitude within the Vollachian Empire, Subaru responded with a smile.

3

???: “…I think you should stop saying “I love you” to everyone so lightly. It makes everything you say seem frivolous.”

Subaru: “No, I don’t say it to just anyone. Only to those I truly love.”

???: “Is that so? To Emilia-san and Beatrice-chan too?”

Subaru: “I tell Beako morning, noon, and night, but it’s a little harder to say to Emilia-tan… ah, but I might’ve said it to Nee-sama.”

???: “Hah?”

Subaru: “Sorry, that was in the heat of the moment, but I meant it.”

With her light blue eyes glaring sharply at him, Subaru shrank back, apologizing profusely.

Despite having just shared a tearful farewell with Flop, the sudden shift was jarring. Nonetheless, Subaru managed to keep his eyes dry, even after the emotional goodbye to his friend.

Subaru: “A man can’t cry that easily… a man can only cry in front of others three times in his life.”

???: “Is that so?”

Subaru: “Yeah, that’s right… Hmm? Shouldn’t you be asking what those three times are?”

???: “Your expression seemed like you were begging to be asked, which was unpleasant…”

Subaru: “Isn’t that a bit too harsh?!”

Subaru raised his voice in protest at the extreme statement, prompting Rem to sigh. Yet, despite this casual banter with Rem, Subaru felt a sense of relief.

For the past few days, the tension between Subaru, Rem, and their companions had been palpable, largely due to Subaru's issues. He had probably, most likely, undoubtedly caused them considerable worry, so he was determined to change his attitude and make amends through his actions moving forward.

Subaru: "How about you, Rem? Did you have a proper conversation with Katya-san?"

Rem: "I can't say it went perfectly… but yes. She said she'll send letters. I'd like to send one as well, but I'm not sure what to write."

Subaru: "It's a letter to a friend, right? I guess maybe something along the lines of updating each other on your current situations, asking "How are you doing?" and stuff like that. But I've never exchanged letters with friends myself, so I'm not sure."

Rem: "Would something so trivial be okay?"

Subaru: "I think so, yeah."

Subaru answered Rem's uncertainty, brazenly imagining Katya's thoughts.

She was Todd's fiancée, and as someone who had witnessed his final moments, Subaru had not had the chance to properly sit down and talk with Katya. Even so, Katya had stayed with Rem after her kidnapping and became her friend, and for that, Subaru felt nothing but gratitude and goodwill toward her.

Subaru believed that what Katya expected from her correspondence with Rem was not for some exciting dramatic stories to be shared.

Subaru: "What's important is the proof that you're connected, that you care about each other. I think what's crucial is conveying that even if you're not within arm's reach, you still have a place in a corner of each other's minds."

Rem: "…"

Subaru: "D-did that sound weird or creepy?"

Rem: "—No. For once, I actually agree with you."

Rem slowly shook her head in response to Subaru's hesitant question. Then, with a soft smile, she continued,

Rem: "As you said, it's not something to be anxious about. If I were in Katya-san's position, I wouldn't expect anything special from her letters. Just knowing that her letter reached me would be enough."

Subaru: "Exactly."

Rem's reply and nod made Subaru smile back at her and give her a thumbs-up. Although Rem ignored that gesture, she walked beside Subaru without any sign of discomfort.

Considering how their new relationship in the Empire had started, this dramatic change was nothing short of miraculous.

Subaru: "…"

And so, having said their respective goodbyes, Subaru and Rem walked side by side toward their destination—there too, someone awaited with whom they had to exchange farewells.

The one with whom Subaru and Rem both needed to talk was—

Subaru: "—Spica."

Spica: "Uau! Eu!"

Spica turned around at the call, her face lighting up as she saw them. Her golden hair, tied up behind her head to look like a tail, swayed as she fiercely sprinted toward Subaru and Rem.

Subaru spread his arms wide to catch her, ready to embrace her—

Rem: "Whoa."

Subaru: "…Huh, you went to her?!"

Next to Subaru, who had struck out, Rem caught Spica as she leapt into her arms.

“Eu,” Spica cooed, rubbing her cheek against Rem. At first, Rem was surprised, but she then smiled warmly, stroking Spica’s head in response to the affectionate gesture.

Watching the two, Subaru sighed and clasped his hands behind his head.

Subaru: “You’re still clinging to Rem, huh? If I did the same thing, I’m sure I’d get a really nasty look from Rem.”

Rem: “Hah? Why are you suddenly stating the obvious?”

Subaru: “See? This is what I’m talking about! Spica, help me out here!”

Spica: “Uu, uu! Au, aau!”

Subaru: “See, even Spica is giving me that look… wait, is she angry at me? Spica, are you siding with Rem? I’m all alone here!”

Still clinging to Rem’s waist, Spica glared sharply at Subaru. Seeing this, Subaru slumped his shoulders, and Rem was astonished, wondering what he was doing.

Subaru could not help but scratch his head and feel oddly reassured by the interaction between Rem and Spica.

Subaru: “…”

Thinking back, the tumultuous days in the Vollachian Empire had begun with Subaru, Rem, and Spica.

Up to this point, they had walked alongside one another with a rock-paper-scissors-like power balance where Subaru was weak to Rem, Rem was weak to Spica, and Spica was weak to Subaru.

The relationship between the three of them had changed shape before they knew it, and today would mark yet another change.

After all—

Subaru: “You don’t want to be separated from Rem, do you? Why don’t you forget about staying in the Empire and come back to the Kingdom with us?”

Spica: “Uu!”

Subaru: “Oh, so you’ve finally come around! Yeah, I agree! The Empire sucks!”

Rem: “She’s shaking her head. Please don’t try to twist Spica-chan’s will.”

Rem glared at Subaru with narrowed eyes, making him stiffen his cheeks and go silent. Spica, resting her back against Rem, nodded vigorously with a serious look on her face.

Her expression made it clear that she had no intention of changing her mind.

It was a decision that Subaru found incredibly difficult to accept.

—Spica had decided to stay in the Vollachian Empire.

She would part ways with Subaru and the others returning to the Kingdom, remaining in the Empire to fulfill a certain duty.

This was the plan that Spica had discussed with those around her and ultimately chose as her path moving forward, during the time when Subaru had been engrossed in the Pleiades Battalion’s Sparka.

Subaru: “You want to stay in Vollachia and send all the undead revived by the Great Disaster back to Od Lagna through Star Eating… the idea itself is something I want to support, really.”

Countless undead had been resurrected by the Witch, Sphinx, and utilized as the spearhead of the Great Disaster.

Even after the Great Disaster had ended, those who had not been destroyed had fled and still remained within the Empire. Spica had decided that it was her duty to completely devour every last one of those undead.

However—

Subaru: “Unlike before, the undead can’t revive infinitely anymore. Even without Star Eating, defeating them should be enough to get rid of them. You don’t have to do this, Spica.”

Spica: “Aa, au. Uu! Uu, uu!”

Subaru: “Then the souls used to resurrect the dead won’t return to where they belong, you say? Well… I suppose you intuitively understand that better than I do, but are you sure about this?”

Spica: “Uu!”

Subaru tried to persuade her, but Spica firmly nodded, her face showing her unshakable resolve.

They had gone through this exchange nearly ten times already, with Subaru trying every possible approach to change Spica’s mind, but he had yet to achieve the result he desired.

What frustrated Subaru was that Abel, who had been consulted about Spica’s decision, took advantage of the fact that Subaru had his hands full with the Sparka and had managed to completely convince her.

Of course, even if Subaru had been consulted during his narrow-minded state, he doubted he could have engaged in a positive and constructive discussion for Spica’s sake.

But still—

Subaru: “I can’t stand it… I can’t stand how he always gets everything to go his way behind the scenes.”

Rem: “I don’t think it’s fair to make it sound like everything is Abel-san’s fault. This is Spica-chan’s decision, and she first consulted Medium-san about it.”

Subaru: “I know! I know, but still, it’s hard not to feel frustrated…!”

Rem slowly shook her head at Subaru, who could only speak from an emotional standpoint.

However, Rem's expression also could not hide the loneliness she felt, as she too, just like Subaru, had been one of those deeply involved in discussing Spica's future with her.

It might have sounded presumptuous to say this, but Spica had become a significant part of the current Rem, whose Memories had not yet returned. In truth, separating from Spica was likely much harder for her than for him.

And yet—

Rem: "Why is it okay for you and me to act on our own thoughts and desires, but not for Spica-chan…? She's been worrying about us all this time."

Subaru: "Rem…"

Gently stroking Spica's head, Rem showed respect for the girl's significant decision.

Unlike Subaru, who could not accept it, she had already made up her mind to see Spica off properly. He admired her resolve, and he understood Rem's point of view, of course.

Subaru: "But, it's still painful…"

Even if he was told he was a poor sport, a sore loser, overprotective, meddlesome, or creepy, it would not change the fact that it hurt.

Spica's decision was undeniably impressive, but if Subaru were to be honest, while he wanted the souls of the dead used in the Great Disaster to find peace, he was more concerned about not wanting Spica to do something dangerous.

In his currently heartbroken state of mind, Subaru wished he could put all his loved ones in a box and carry them with him everywhere.

Subaru: "But, neither Spica nor Rem would fit in my box…"

Rem: “…Why are you talking about boxes all of a sudden?”

Subaru: “Boxes don’t matter! What’s important right now is Spica, not some boxes. Right?”

Rem: “But you’re the one who talked about boxes… Abel-san is taking this matter seriously too. That’s why he’s going to assign the two strongest people in this country to accompany Spica-chan.”

Subaru: “But Ceci is just strong and nothing else! He’ll have a bad influence on Spica’s education!”

Subaru loudly insisted that Rem’s rebuttal was not a valid one.

When Spica had decided to embark on a journey to hunt down the undead, Abel had suggested that she be accompanied by Cecilus Segmunt and Arakiya.

Certainly, having such powerful companions would alleviate any concerns about Spica’s safety in situations where combat power would be needed.

Subaru: “But, that’s all. The demerits of their personalities outweigh their strengths, and it feels like Abel just pawned off a problem onto Spica.”

Rem: “You’re overthinking it. Arakiya-san… the Spirit she absorbed was the source of the power to resurrect the dead. According to Abel-san, that gave her the ability to sense where the fleeing undead are hiding…”

Subaru: “I have trauma from Arakiya too! She got me so many times with her water! Ceci, who seems like he can communicate but actually can’t, and Arakiya, who looks like she can’t communicate and really can’t… Now I’m really starting to get anxious! Spica! I can’t let you become a beast tamer—”

Subaru’s words were abruptly cut off.

It was because Spica, who had separated from Rem, suddenly jumped into Subaru’s chest. Caught off guard, Subaru reflexively caught her light body, and as he looked down, he saw Spica gazing up at him.

And then—

Spica: “Uau.”

With that single word and Spica’s smile, Subaru found himself unable to continue speaking.

Subaru: “…Abel, that fucking bastard. He went and talked things over with Spica while I was busy. He really is a sneaky, dirty scumbag.”

Rem: “That’s going too far. Let’s just say he’s underhanded, cunning, and has some flaws in his personality.”

Subaru: “Hey, isn’t it pretty much what I just said?”

Rem: “…It’s not like I want to be separated from Spica-chan, either.”

Subaru complained in a weak, rasping voice filled with resentment, and Rem, hiding the tremble in her own voice, responded.

Realizing that Rem’s feelings of loneliness were being transmitted to him, Subaru swallowed his own weakness. Then, he pulled Spica closer in his arms and, hugging her tightly,

Subaru: “Listen, don’t rely on Abel or Ceci. If you run into trouble, turn to Medium-san and Flop-san. Let them help you write letters, too.”

Spica: “Uu.”

Subaru: “It’s important to have a purpose and a goal, but don’t push yourself too hard. Take it slow, at your own pace. Rushing and doing something reckless is the most dangerous thing. That’s my golden rule.”

Spica: “Aa, uu!”

Subaru: “There’s no strict deadline or fixed date for this. So, neither you nor I can say exactly when, but even so… I'll be waiting."

Spica: "Uu uu, eau, aua, aau."

Subaru: "…You've decided how to use your power properly. I'm proud of you, Spica. —I have to learn from you, too."

He truly, sincerely thought so.

Spica had chosen to use the terrifying Authority of Gluttony correctly, according to her own will. Using that power, she would help heal the deep wounds inflicted upon the Empire.

This was Spica's way of breaking away from her abhorrent past, from Louis Arneb.

Spica: "—Uau!"

Subaru was not sure if his heartfelt admiration had reached her.

But, Spica quickly spun around, slipped out of Subaru's arms, and grabbing his hand, started to pull him along. Dragged by her momentum, Subaru was forced to walk.

As she pulled Subaru along, Spica extended her free hand to Rem,

Spica: "Eu!"

Rem: "…Yes, Spica-chan."

Called with a smile, Rem took Spica's outstretched hand.

With Spica in the middle, holding both Subaru and Rem's hands, the three of them started walking together. —Despite all the time they had spent together, they had never walked like this before, side by side.

Honestly, Subaru had not thought such a thing would ever be possible. But, on this last day in the Empire, they were doing it.

Spica: "Uu!"

In high spirits, Spica swayed her body as she leaned on Subaru and Rem’s hands. Over Spica’s head, the gazes of Subaru and Rem met.

And then, out of nowhere, they both burst into laughter.

Subaru: “Pfft.”

Rem: “Hehe.”

Spica: “Aau, uau!”

The three of them, including Spica, laughed as they walked toward the meeting place.

This, was the end of their story in the Vollachia Empire, that the three of them had started together.

4

???: "—The girl in question shall part with the troublesome title of Sin Archbishop. It ought to be an adequate weight off your shoulders, too."

Subaru: "You…"

As Subaru patted the neck of Patrasche, who had been loading the dragon carriage with the luggage, of which there was far too little when considering the number of events that had happened since laboriously rushing all the way to the Empire, His Excellency the Vollachian Emperor declared so with a self-important expression.

After taking the trouble to come out and bid him farewell, the undiminished snideness in his attitude was awe-inspiring.

Subaru: "I'm begging you now, don't immediately get decapitated by a rebellion and let the government change. I'm tired of running about everywhere in order to save your ass."

Vincent: "Fool, your efforts are no longer required. You had better return to the Kingdom at once."

Subaru: "This bastard…"

Vincent: "There ought to be a duty you ought to fulfill. In that, you absolutely must not err."

Subaru: "…"

It was a snide remark that Abel spoke as naturally as he breathed, but his words were also pregnant with nuance that was not so terribly meager.

He was a bit worried about whether an Emperor who required such difficult-to-understand subtleties to be picked up on would be able to manage the Empire properly from here on out or not, but—

Subaru: “Well, I guess you’ll be fine if you have Medium-san and the others.”

Having heard the prophecy of the forthcoming Great Disaster and the would-be lost Emperor, Abel had devoted his official and personal days to that purpose without sparing time for personal affairs.

That warning had come undone, and from here on, Abel would spend his days as Vincent Vollachia, who, for the first time, would be acting as an Emperor who was not tied down by anything, no longer spending his time preparing for the Great Disaster.

At the outset, he might have been at a bit of a loss, but, surely, he would grow to be able to take those in his surroundings into consideration.

As proof of that—

Vincent: “Regarding the peril on this occasion, that girl shouldered a great duty. In addition, she has promised to endeavor to clear away anguish in the Empire hereafter. —She shall be bestowed with prestige that rivals her ill repute.”

Subaru: “…”

Having backed Spica’s decision to remain the Empire, those were Abel’s true intentions.

Their story in the Empire had begun with the trio of Subaru, Rem, and Spica. —As the first one to have intervened in that story, this was quite a characteristic way for Abel to pay Subaru back.

No matter how many words he exhausted, the fact that Spica’s past self was the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony would not change, and for that fact, there were many people who would reproach and reject her.

They could not deny people who harbored such negative emotions regarding the matter, nor was it something they should do.

Even so, if the individual girl known as Spica wanted to affirm her existence, to affirm that she lived, if she wanted that to take form, she had no choice but to build it up.

—No choice but to build up a great renown that exceeded her ill repute, such that Spica would be allowed to live as Spica.

Vincent: “Remember this, Natsuki Subaru. The Sword Wolves of the Sacred Vollachian Empire never forget the wounds they bear. Whether those are wounds of abhorrence, or of friendship, this remains true.”

Subaru: “Abel…”

Vincent: “If you have anything to say, have at it. You, and those who share in your path, are equal to the pack of Sword Wolves.”

Through that comment, Subaru felt that Abel—that Vincent Vollachia, a man who would absolutely never bow to others, nor permit the act of playing up to him, had revealed his heart of hearts.

As Subaru experienced a quiver from the very foundation of his heart at that sensation, Abel nodded,

Vincent: “It was a great service. —Along your journey, and then from tomorrow onwards, stride forth with firm steps upon the ground.”

Subaru: “…You too. Geez, I’m not gonna lend you a hand even if you fall over.”

Vincent: “Fool.”

Upon his mouth, as he spoke ill of Subaru, was present a smile that was certainly distinct from that of ridicule.

Witnessing that—

Subaru: “…”

Turning his back, Subaru faced the dragon carriage, and began to tread forth.

As Subaru walked with the gaze of the Emperor upon his back, Emilia and the others awaited him beside the dragon carriage. Gazing at the faces who had shown up to see them off, standing upon the path towards it, at the figures of the Pleiades Battalion who were naturally among them, Subaru slightly gulped down his breath.

Subaru: "…"

The Sparka that had begun with Subaru's entreaty, his act of making amends to nine hundred and thirty-one people; despite Subaru pleading that it had yet to be completed with the six hundred and seventy-three hits that still remained, none of them had lent him an ear.

All of them were now lined up here, meeting the gaze of Subaru, who was all bark and no bite—

Subaru: "—Ah."

—The lined-up Pleiades Battalion all raised up their arms in succession, and their brusque hands decorated Subaru's path like a hanamichi.

Understanding the intention behind that, Subaru lifted his face. So as to not let the things welling up in his eyes start to spill out, he endured, endured, endured, endured, and then—

Subaru: "I love you, all of you!"

That which had caused Rem to get mad at him before, Subaru shouted out again as he broke out into a sprint.

With the many hands reaching out from left and right, Subaru moved to overlap his own hands. With a clap, the sound of hand striking hand rang out, and persisted ceaselessly in quick succession like the sound of rainfall.

It was not just hands clapping against hands; there were also some hands that struck Subaru's body. Being pushed and jostled and knocked about by those, those who knew Natsuki Schwartz, while likely forgetting about the six hundred and seventy-three hits that remained, assisted in Subaru's Sparka.

???: "In my capacity, I have enjoyed myself quite a bit."

Four large, bulky hands clapped him on the back.

???: "Thanks to you, the mere son of a miller got to live the dream!"

With a man who was far more stout and supple than his appearance might suggest, he struck hands.

???: "Goddammit goddammit! Thank ya, Schwartz!"

Against the tail of the lizardman who cried out with trembling tongue and tears in his eyes, he bumped his fist.

???: "Never forget… we're… we're your comrades…! "

While passing each other, receiving a powerful fist to the side of his face, he clutched his jaw and nodded with a "Got it!".

And then—

???: "—Schwartz-sama."

Making it through after being jostled about by everybody, he proceeded to the kimono-clad girl who awaited him at the end of it all. Together with Yorna, who was likewise clad in a kimono, they had been waiting for Subaru.

Coming to a halt before those two, Subaru first locked eyes with Yorna.

Subaru: "Yorna-san, thanks for everything. Also…"

Yorna: "You do not need to give any sort of apology. The matter of that girl, is a matter between her and myself."

Subaru: "…"

Yorna: "Additionally, you may come visit us at any time. For you, we shall give a warm welcome.”

Seeing the mistress of the Demon City give a gentle smile, Subaru nodded deeply with a “Yeah”.

Then, he once again turned to face the girl standing along with Yorna, Tanza—

Subaru: “You called me Schwartz-sama again, now didn’t you?”

Tanza: “—. For me, that is the name I am most accustomed to calling you by.”

Subaru: “For me, too, it just doesn’t feel right unless you call me that.”

A smile emerging on his face, Subaru crouched down before her.

Before, their gazes were at the same height, but now their heights would not align unless he bent his knees like this. Now that they had returned to this height difference, he had wanted to speak to her with the same line of sight.

After all, in the Empire, Tanza was Subaru’s unwavering, indispensable benefactor.

Subaru: “—Next time, without a doubt, we will not lose.”

Tanza: “—? What?”

Subaru: “That’s the magic spell you cast on me. Because I had that, I didn’t give up.”

Blinking her large, round eyes, Tanza searched her own memories for those same words. However, no matter how hard she searched, she would not be able to find them.

After all, the humongous debt of gratitude that Subaru would never be able to repay, no longer existed anywhere outside of Subaru.

That was fine. Whether that had occurred in this reality or not, it was fine.

That unfading gratitude and joy was certainly present within Subaru, therefore—.

Subaru: “I love you, Tanza.”

Tanza: “…If you keep going in such a manner, you will most certainly regret it, Schwartz-sama.”

Subaru: “Rem told me something similar. If there had been more time, you two probably would’ve gotten along well… in exchange for that, would I die from your cold stares?!”

Tanza: “Could you not get so fired up like that, and could you not die all on your own…? Besides, I believe that your attitude of treating this like a lifetime farewell will end up strangling you later, Schwartz-sama.”

Subaru: “Hm? What’s that supposed to mean?”

Tanza: “You will find out before long.”

As Subaru tilted his head, Tanza would not tell him the answer.

Only, she lightly clapped her hand against Subaru’s proffered one, and after contributing to the Sparka like her other comrades in the Battalion, tenderly clutching his hand with both of her own,

Tanza: “Thank you for allowing me to stay in your care for a period longer than initially anticipated. Please, be of good health.”

Subaru: “That long valediction, there’s a shorter way to phrase it, you know.”

Tanza: “I will not say it. Please return to your home.”

Parting hands with the cold Tanza, Subaru wryly smiled, and used his hand to give her a pat on the head.

Subaru took the fact that she did not shake him off, and her attitude which left a bit of a mystery, as parting gifts from her.

And then—

???: “Uu!”

Before him as he turned around, Spica was waiting for him alongside Rem in front of the dragon carriage.

He had already spoken at length about being unable to let her go. Even so, once more, he was about to try to convey his feelings of wanting to take her home with him, but at Spica’s embrace, all of that was obstructed.

Tightly hugging Spica as she pounced on him, Subaru patted her on the head, and then looking up,

Subaru: “I’m really counting on you to take care of Spica, Ceci.”

Cecilus: “Alright, Boss!”

Hearing this response from the guarantor who, though reliable, caused inexhaustible worry, Subaru ultimately performed the final high-five with him.

After doing so, he turned around.

The faces lined up there, looking over all of them, Subaru took in a large breath.

And then—

Subaru: “May we someday meet again, everyone! —VICTORYYY!!”

Pleiades: “—VICTORYYY!!”

As Subaru thrust both of his arms to the sky and shouted that aloud, the voices of the Pleiades Battalion resounded.

At that vigor, those who did not know of the Battalion’s customs were greatly perturbed, and conversely, the members of the Battalion laughed and cried very much; that ridiculously noisy scene unfolded.

Vincent: “—To the very end, you remain an enormous fool whose irreverence knows no bounds.”

Indeed, to the extent that the Vollachian Emperor would make a comment, the scene of a ridiculously boisterous farewell, unfolded.

5

Subaru: “…I wonder if Spica will be okay. Can she manage without us?”

???: “You’ve been worrying nonstop, I suppose! There’s no need to be so concerned, in fact! That girl is thinking much more clearly than Subaru is right now, I suppose!”

In the dragon carriage on their way back, Subaru rested his chin on his hand and stared out the window, while Beatrice, sitting on his lap, tugged at his cheek and scolded him.

Subaru pursed his lips at Beatrice’s reprimand, but he could not argue back.

In fact, she was right. As Beatrice said, Spica had a more realistic outlook.

Taking her past as a Sin Archbishop seriously, Spica had taken action to shake off that infamous title. Even though it was the sin of another “her” she did not remember.

???: “You treated Spica-chan very coldly for a long time, so she had the chance to understand her position.”

???: “Oh, I see. Although the circumstances were what they were, Barusu is still as narrow-minded as ever, even toward a girl who is so attached to him.”

Subaru: “Ugh…”

Across from them, the Oni sisters were holding hands side by side and delivering scathing remarks with their sharp tongues.

These remarks pointed out Subaru’s past actions, leaving him with no room to argue. While it was heartwarming to see the sisters so in sync, it was hard for him to smile.

???: “Personally, I am reassured by her decision. In the first place, if we were to bring her with us, she would need to be locked in a box for crisis management…”

Subaru: “Is it just me, or does your box seem to serve a different purpose and feel much less comfortable than mine?”

???: “Who knows? Either way, the Empire and Anastasia’s camp are in collusion on this matter… I think this was the best possible outcome.”

???: “I don’t really get the complicated stuff, but if she finishes dealin’ with all the zombies, she’ll be able to come back from the Empire, right? If so, let’s hope she gets it done quickly.”

Garfiel’s straightforward attitude about looking forward to Spica’s return was something Subaru appreciated, especially compared to Otto’s strict realism.

Garfiel probably had his own feelings of dislike toward the Sin Archbishops, but—

Garfiel: “My amazin’ self also fought Captain ‘n the rest of y’all ‘n tried to kill ya. Like “double-dipping the Vinuere”, it can be a good thing to get a second chance, right?”

Subaru: “You’ve got a big heart. Unlike a certain someone…”

Otto: “Let me tell you, Natsuki-san and Garfiel’s so-called big hearts are more like irresponsibly wide open, if you ask me!”

Subaru and Garfiel bumped fists as Otto yelled in a loud voice.

It had been a while since Subaru had heard Otto’s voice with such energy. Finally free from the heavy responsibility of saving the Empire, Subaru was starting to feel like his old self again.

Of course, that did not mean his worries about his companions, or about being separated from Spica, had lessened in any way, but—

???: “—We’re in this together, after all.”

Emilia spoke softly to Subaru, who had narrowed his eyes in thought.

When Subaru turned toward the gentle touch of her hand, he found her soft amethyst eyes looking at him with such tenderness that his chest tightened.

No one had asked Subaru.

If he was alright now, if the depression had passed, or any of the usual questions.

He was feeling down, he was hurt, and he did not know if he would ever be okay again. They understood Subaru's feelings without needing to ask.

Subaru: "Thank you, Emilia. —For coming to save me."

Emilia: "Mhm."

Subaru: "Thank you, everyone. —For coming to save us."

Subaru expressed his gratitude to Emilia and everyone else, who had crossed the border and entered the land of carnage that was the Vollachia Empire to help him and the others.

Everyone responded to Subaru's thanks in their own way—

Subaru: "…"

There were some things he had lost.

Things that had slipped through his fingers, disappearing into a place beyond his reach.

It was her way of life, true to herself. Never once did she, or anything else, go as Subaru or anyone else wished. Until the very end, in every possible way.

Maybe that was why, even though he had so many regrets—

Subaru: "—Right now, I can't remember anything but your smiling face."

He mourned her, she who had etched her fearless and prideful self into Subaru's memories.

That was Natsuki Subaru's way of mourning her; a mix of heartfelt gratitude and appreciation for the one who had spent her final moments in conversation with him.

And—

Subaru: "…"

While blessed with companions who stood by his side, Subaru was concerned about the other dragon carriage heading towards the Kingdom—the camp of the late Priscilla and those who were left behind.

While Roswaal, who was riding in that carriage, was likely providing consultation regarding the future of Priscilla's Barielle Domain, Subaru's mind was focused on another issue.

That was—

Subaru: "—Al."

Al, who had been there during Priscilla's final moments, holding her until the very end.

While Subaru was engaged in Sparka and Abel was throwing himself into his work to honor his sister's memory, many tried to fill the void left by Priscilla's absence. But Al had continuously secluded himself in his room.

He had been so devastated by his loss that it seemed he might simply vanish. Now, he was on his way back to the Kingdom.

The reason Al was returning to the Kingdom was—

Al: "—Bro, I have a request. I heard a rumor about the Sage's Tower. Some say you can read the records of the dead inside the Tower. There's a Book I wanna read."

Subaru: “…Priscilla’s Book of the Dead.”

Subaru felt conflicted. Would obtaining that Book trample upon the wishes of Priscilla, who had departed so nobly?

Yet, having witnessed Al and Priscilla’s farewell and knowing the despair that followed for Al, Subaru wanted to help him.

And so—

Subaru: “Is it okay if I ask for your help again, Shaula?”

To once again make the pilgrimage to that Tower at the edge of the sea of sand, was the only way Subaru felt he could support Al without relying on Return by Death.

Interlude: Katya Aurélie

1

—The defeat of the Witch, Sphinx, at the Imperial Capital of Lupugana spelled the ultimate downfall of the Great Disaster.

The large-scale implementation of forbidden arts devised by the Witch was interrupted, and the dead who had been brought back to life by that twisted magic were all forced to remain in the land with a limited lifespan.

Those who had been resurrected against their will and forced to submit to the Witch's plans took the opportunity to turn themselves to dust and return to the whereabouts of the soul, but naturally, there were many who did not choose to do so.

Even if they had lost their lives and had become undead, they were still people of the Empire who knew the law of iron and blood.

Even if they had been revived through means beyond reason, so long as they could once again wield their swords, there would be many determined to uphold their will, regardless of whether they had life or not; indeed, the same fighting spirit was present among the forces surrounding the Fortified City.

However, in reality, the battle surrounding the Fortified City of Garkla was settled almost simultaneously with the conclusion of the Great Disaster, and the undead who had narrowly escaped being destroyed were forced to scatter and flee.

Just why had the hosts of undead abandoned the fight and chosen to flee? —It was due to the collapse of the front line caused by the absence of their commander, which led to the abandonment of the battle.

The people of the Empire, who did not fear death, would not deem it acceptable to squander their lives in a battle that was sure to be lost, even if they were members of an undead army.

As for why such a situation as the absence of a commander occurred—

???: “How, how could such a ridiculous turn of events ever come to fruition…?!”

Palladio spat out as he pulled at his own green hair, turning his gaze away from the crumbling formation.

This should have never happened. It should have never happened, but it did. It was all due to the absurdity that was at work in everything surrounding Palladio.

Given the role of commander of the great army of undead that had been sent to the Fortified City, Palladio sought to fulfill his duties as a respected member of the Vollachian Imperial Family.

However, Palladio’s strategies were constantly thwarted by the common people of the city, and the incompetence of the undead who did not follow orders properly compounded the difficulties, leading to a dire situation.

Of course, he had no intention of giving up. However, the liabilities accumulated through absurdity began to distort, and eventually, Palladio found himself in the unfortunate situation of having to flee.

—Nay, this was no matter of fleeing.

This was an honorable withdrawal and a strategic preparation in order to achieve victory. Otherwise, it would not have made sense for someone of the Vollachian Imperial Family, who had borne the blood of the esteemed Evil Eye Tribe, to have been subjected to such a fate.

Palladio: “What the hell is the “Witch of Greed”…?! Is this the ultimate result of all the grandiloquence meant to impress me…?!”

What flashed through Palladio’s mind was the loathsome entity who had first collapsed amidst the accumulated liabilities. It was the anger towards the white-haired Witch who, having joined under Palladio's command and nearly turning the tide of battle, irresponsibly abandoned her role and then vanished.

Everything up until her unleashing a decisive move to annihilate the Fortified City by casting a spell to cause a star to fall from the sky had been fine.

However, that was nullified by interference from the Imperial Capital, and to make matters worse, it was followed by a fierce counterattack from those harboring flames in their eyes.

As far as Palladio's Evil Eye could see, all the living who had been holed up in the Fortified City—even the helpless refugees were imbued with flames, carrying weapons, and pushing back the undead.

It had occurred immediately after that. The Witch of Greed vanished into dust without even attempting to resolve the situation.

Witch: "—Ah, yes, that is right. I, am Sphinx…"

In the end, it was infuriating that the Witch, who disappeared without even glancing back, left those words behind. Why did the Witch leave with such a satisfied expression?

He could not understand a single thing. On top of that, Palladio was then left at a disadvantage.

Palladio: "Damn it, damn it, damnitdamnitdamnitdamnitdamniiit…!"

While spewing out curses as if he were vomiting blood, Palladio fled the plain and took refuge in the forest.

Around the time the Witch of Greed disappeared, Palladio understood that something unusual had happened to the undead—they who ought to have been able to resurrect ad nauseum had lost their ability to resurrect, rendering the immortal army non-functional.

Battles had a certain flow to them.

This was true of any battle. Even more so for a major war that would determine the future of the Empire.

Therefore, Palladio, sensing the change in the flow of the battle, immediately abandoned his position, taking only a few attendants with him in order to withdraw from the battlefield and make the best decision to prepare for a second attack.

Therefore, this was not an escape; it was a strategic preparation in order to secure victory.

Palladio: “Today, you can go ahead and think you’ve won. Vincent, Prisca…!”

However, that was naught more than a temporary, conceded victory.

In this manner, Palladio would make his getaway, make his comeback, and if he achieved an undeniable victory with his next move, one that could not be overturned by any means, without the help of the Witch, then this fleeting moment would be over.

Next time, next time for sure, he would place the Vollachian Empire under the rule of a rightful Emperor.

For that purpose, Palladio had his Evil Eye.

He, having been bestowed with this eye of the heavens, would definitely assume the seat of Emperor—

Palladio: “…”

With that conviction in his heart, Palladio attempted to use the power of his Evil Eye to ascertain the road he ought to take, and then he realized. —Before he could notice, not even a single member of the entourage that ought to have been accompanying him could be found.

Palladio: “What? Oi, oi?! Where did you all go?! You bastards, did you leave me behind and—”

Disappear somewhere? That rage of Palladio’s was immediately painted over by a sensation akin to being doused with cold water.

For a moment, Palladio had suspected that his entourage might have irreverently abandoned him and ran away, but in that case, there was no explanation as to why Palladio's Evil Eye had not perceived their fleeing backs. In that case, the reason why they had disappeared was plain and simple—they had died.

Palladio: "—Hk."

Feeling the sensation of goosebumps on his bloodless, undead body, Palladio promptly drew his Yang Sword. Serving as proof of the Vollachian Imperial Family, it was the destiny of those who possessed the qualifications to become Emperor, manifested in the form of a sword—.

Palladio: "—Ah."

—The arm that had grasped it was chopped off at the elbow, and Palladio collapsed onto the ground.

Palladio: "Wh-Wh-Wha…"

Unable to grasp just what had occurred, all three of his eyes widened.

Immediately after, a shock ran through his remaining arm, causing him to lose both arms that were necessary for holding a sword in an instant. That this was the result of a surprise attack brought about by an axe, Palladio understood.

But, that was the extent of his comprehension; that alone, and naught more.

Palladio: "Why…"

The Evil Eye that made Palladio special, the eye of the heavens, why had it not perceived that surprise attack?

He did not understand, did not understand, did not understand. —That moment, a possibility suddenly flashed through his mind.

In the past, Palladio had once heard a story.

A story about a foolish race, one that had committed an irredeemable sin, provoking the wrath of the most fearsome Emperor of the Vollachian Empire, causing them to be engraved as beings treated as abhorrent within the law of iron and blood, their existence no longer acknowledged.

Within the Empire, the mere act of living was regarded as a crime warranting death for these repulsive beastpeople—

Palladio: “—Wai…”

???: “I won’t wait.”

That cold, ruthless impact removed Palladio Manesque from the stage for the rest of eternity.

—That was the decisive blow that caused the hosts of undead surrounding the Fortified City to lose their commander, beckoning the collapse of the war front that resulted in the complete and utter defeat of the Great Disaster, hidden on the underside of history.

2

Making the wheels of her wheelchair creak, Katya was overwhelmed by the vastness of the room she had been allotted.

Katya: “Nii-san did say that because he became a special General, even I, as his relative, would receive special treatment, but… this is just too much…”

Looking around the spacious room, Katya’s shoulders slumped at the thought of what was to come.

She had heard that, due to the effects of the Great Disaster and whatnot, it would take a long time for the Imperial Capital, where she had originally resided, to be restored; so, for the time being, the refugees from the Imperial Capital were required to disperse and reside within the Fortified City and the surrounding towns and villages.

Among them, being treated much better than the others, was Katya, her own brother being Jamal who had, through various coincidences, gained a position at the side of the Emperor, Vincent.

However, Katya was not of a disposition that sought a luxurious lifestyle, and although all sorts of luxuries had been prepared for her, she was nothing more than a girl with weak legs and poor sociability, and thus did not possess the confidence to fully revel in them.

That was why, she altogether relinquished most of these privileges.

Katya: "That lot who keep creeping closer bit by bit are really annoying…"

To sum it up, the Aurélie family was more or less on the fringes of the Imperial Nobility, and Katya did hold the position of being the daughter of an aristocrat. Their household employed servants, and she was not reluctant towards being cared for by them; however, unlike before when they were just a declining noble family, Jamal's current position was quite different.

Perhaps, because of this, many were trying to curry favor with Katya in order to get into Jamal's good graces.

Because she did not care in the slightest about such trivial assumptions or external factors, the sense of distance between her and Rem was indeed quite comfortable for Katya.

Katya: "…Well, there's no point in talking about a girl who's no longer here."

For Katya, who was aware of her own difficult and troublesome personality, Rem, who was surprisingly sharp-tongued and unhesitant to plainly state what people did not want spoken, was a good match. To put it bluntly, she was Katya's first friend.

Even so, Rem, along with the man and elder sister who had come to retrieve her, had ended up having to return to the Kingdom of Lugunica.

As the day of their parting drew near, unable to bear the sight of her looking so lonely, she had ended up promising to exchange letters with her, but she had not the slightest inkling of what to write in a letter.

Katya: “But, even so, my days don’t have any prospects of changing for the better…”

Only recently had there been turbulence, but otherwise, Katya’s day-to-day was fundamentally flat and monotonous, with nothing special taking place, just time that felt like a slow crawl towards death.

Even if she were to write a letter to Rem in such a situation, she felt like she would not be able to write anything worthwhile. Then, before she could pen down something appropriate, their affection would deplete, the frequency of the letters would diminish, and sooner or later they would completely stop.

Such a pessimistic future, this picture was vividly emergent within Katya’s mind.

Katya: “I can’t, take it anymore… really, I just want to die already…”

As soon as she was by herself, being tormented by an overwhelming feeling of loneliness, Katya’s mood continued to sink.

By nature, Katya was pessimistic about everything, and had a strong tendency to blame herself. Only, she had had someone by her side to hold her back from dwelling upon such things.

Until yesterday, that was Rem, and before that—

Katya: “…Idiot. Truly a stupid, stupid, stupid idiot.”

Gripping the wheels of her wheelchair firmly, Katya softly muttered in detest.

He had rudely stepped into Katya’s world against her wishes, and though she refused to draw near to him, he had overbearingly pulled her close, and after whispering all sorts of intimacies she had not wanted to hear, had selfishly disappeared.

Being reminded of that complete and utter fool, had become extremely, extremely painful.

Katya: “Ah, no, no, I don’t want to cry…”

Feeling the sensation of something hot slowly welling up behind her eyelids, Katya groaned.

Rather than having to experience such misery, she should have died protecting Rem in the midst of the turmoil of that Great Disaster. If that had happened, although Rem would surely have called her an idiot, she would have remained as a thorn deep within her heart, kept unforgotten.

She would have also averted being disliked even more through clumsily written letters.

Dead people were unfair. For, after death, there was nothing more that could be said against them.

Therefore, Katya refused to tolerate such unfairness, and spoke ill of the dead.

Katya: “Idiot, stupid idiot, stupid, stupid idiot, idiooot…!”

Such attempts at seeking revenge, or venting anger upon them, would only backfire.

To continue speaking ill of someone who had died, so long as one continued speaking ill of them, it would mean none other than the fact that they were continuing to think about that person.

As a result, not only did those tears well up, but even her nose had begun to feel irritated and sting.

Surely, if she were to look into the mirror, an unbelievably clumsy woman with a bad attitude sitting in a wheelchair would be visible.

Katya: “No more… I don’t want to see anyone…”

Blurting that out, Katya spun her wheelchair around and steered it towards the bed.

Although it might have been bad manners, she wanted to collapse onto the bed without undoing the braids in her hair, or changing her clothes, and just lie there until she starved to death. Of course, she was not capable of starving to death. After all, once hungry, she would surely give up on starvation, and eat something while sniffing her runny nose the same as ever.

Even so, being in this kind of mood, the idea of wanting to sob while thinking about someone—

Katya: "—? Who is it?"

Just as she was about to move her wheelchair towards the bed, there was a knock at the door from outside.

Although she felt like it was bad timing, she was hesitant to ignore it and head for the bed. Presently, everyone was in a difficult situation with delays in communication and problems arising in various places. Katya throwing a trivial tantrum here, might have prevented someone from getting something done on time.

Manifesting the earnestness that was at her core, Katya headed toward the door.

For a moment, she was unsure of what ought to be done, knowing that she must have had a terrible look on her face, but it was truly for just a moment. Not caring about what anyone might think, Katya reached for the door.

And then—

Katya: "Yes, who is it…?"

Having said this, Katya slowly opened the door, and—

Katya: "—Ah"

From her slender throat, a weak, raspy breath escaped.

3

???: "—Thank you for your hard work, Escort General Jamal."

Jamal: “Yeah, you too.”

The Imperial Soldier gave way with a firm salute, and Jamal’s mouth twisted into a smile as he returned the gesture.

The title of “Escort General” that he had been addressed by referred to a special rank of General specifically created for Jamal, who had been recognized for his contributions fighting by the side of Emperor Vincent during the recent great battle.

The role was a prestigious one, serving as Vincent’s personal bodyguard. —To Jamal, who originally aspired to be a General in pursuit of the Aurélie family’s prosperity, this was a desired position.

Now, Jamal could prove himself superior to those who laughed at him for not knowing his place, and most importantly, he could provide a good life for Katya, who could not survive without the support of those around her.

Katya, who was passive about everything and did not recognize her own worth, would dislike such arrangements by Jamal, but she was still precious family to him, them being a lone brother and sister.

Despite what she might have said, he knew Katya would not be able to refuse.

Jamal: “Damn it, even though she said this kinda meddling from her older brother really wasn’t needed.”

Expressing his frustration, which he had no outlet for, Jamal’s footsteps moved towards Katya.

Ever since Jamal’s promotion to Escort General, Katya, as his relative, had also received treatment that was different from that of ordinary Imperial citizens.

For the time being, it was just a temporary residence until the reconstruction of the Imperial Capital progressed, but given the hardships they had been through, he wanted to make sure that Katya lived comfortably without any inconveniences.

The girl who was Katya's friend, who had been staying with her for a while, had ended up returning to the Kingdom.

Right about now would be a reasonable time for Katya to grieve.

Jamal: "And once she's done with that, I'll bring out the booze and meat I've been saving."

With that said, Jamal shook the bottle of liquor and the bag of high grade meat he had retrieved from the stockpile with his authority as a General, and thought about how to comfort Katya.

Slurping down first-rate alcohol while sinking his teeth into a perfectly grilled thick cut of meat.

That was Jamal's way of dealing with grief.

Jamal: "Katya, you there? It's me."

Knocking on the door, Jamal called out to Katya, who should have been in her room.

Katya had a hard time going out on her own and thus spent most of her time holed up in her room unless she had something going on. So, she should have been doing the same at that moment.

However, there was no response from inside the room, and Jamal furrowed his brows in suspicion.

Jamal: "You sleeping or something? Oi, I'm coming in."

Since it was not unusual for Katya to sulk and sleep like she was dead, Jamal opened the door without worrying and stepped into her room.

In the bedroom, which was still bare without much of a lived-in impression since she had just moved in, Jamal looked around, suspicious of the fact that there was no sign of anyone around.

Jamal: "Katya?"

Sure enough, there were no figures present in the bedroom as he peeked in.

As a matter of fact, Katya could not be found anywhere in the room. And, the moment that Jamal wondered if he might have missed her going out, which was unusual, —That was when he noticed a letter that had been placed on the desk in the bedroom.

Jamal: "…"

The letter, which had initially been outside of his awareness, intensely captured Jamal's attention. There was nothing strange about the letter itself. What was peculiar was what had been placed next to it.

Present there, still vivid in Jamal's memories, was a bandana worn by a certain man—.

Jamal: "—Hk."

He eagerly reached for the letter, tore open the seal messily, and glanced over the contents.

Written there, was the fine handwriting of the weak Katya, accompanied by a strong, contrasting handwriting; it was a marriage registration.

Jamal: "—That, fucking bastard!"

The moment Jamal realized the intent of the marriage registration, such a curse escaped from his mouth.

Contrary to his harsh words, he could not hide the relief and joy he felt, as well as the complicated feelings of a brother who had his cherished younger sister taken away by an odious friend.

Jamal: "Ha, hahaha, HAAAHAHAHAHA!!"

To top it all off, Jamal put his palm to his face and started laughing hysterically in front of the letter. He laughed, and laughed, and laughed so much that tears streamed from the eye covered by his eye patch.

That it was one of the few times tears of blessing were shed in an Empire that had seen so many tears of farewell would not be recorded anywhere in the Imperial history books.

However, it was a fact that here on this very day, a marriage took place between a vanished noblewoman and the scoundrel who had taken her away, and to that, a lone General gave his blessing.

—After this, the whereabouts of Katya Aurélie became unknown.

However, the fact that this was not something to be pessimistic about was evidenced by the unceasing arrival of letters to her only friend, and that there was not a single hint of sadness or unhappiness in the words that were written.

V!c.1120

Chapter 7:
Reunion at Sand Wind

1

—It had been nearly three months since Subaru had last stopped in Mirula, the nearest town to the Augria Sand Dunes.

Originally, they were supposed to stop by on their way back from the Pleiades Watchtower, but due to the incident at the Tower, Subaru was transported all the way to Vollachia, and their itinerary was blown away with it.

That said, this would have been the second time in three months that he had visited this dilapidated roadside town.

???: "…Welcome to Sand Wind."

When Subaru and the others went through the entrance, they were greeted by the owner, who looked displeased as he polished glasses.

As Subaru recalled being greeted the same way last time, he brushed off as much sand as he could at the entrance. Even so, he could not get it all off, so he decided to accept the shopkeeper's bad mood as unavoidable and sat down at the counter.

Shopkeeper: "What would you like to order?"

Subaru: "Milk, cold."

???: "Milk, warm, I suppose."

???: "Milk, I would also like it warm."

At the bar, the owner's face became increasingly grim as one customer after another ordered milk. Even so, he did not complain or swear but simply started heating the milk, showing that he was a customer service professional, no matter how much he hated it.

While the shopkeeper worked, Subaru removed the cloth from around his mouth with a “puha” sound,

Subaru: “Phew, even though we avoided the Sand Time because of what happened last time, the sand-laden wind is still blowing around. I underestimated it a bit.”

While he said this, Subaru used his fingers to dislodge the sand from his mouth. Next to Subaru, the girl who had also lowered her sand-proof cloth nodded and said, “That’s right.”

???: “Even though you told me in advance, Subaru, my hair is already completely caked in sand… I’ll have to brush it properly later. I’ll do your hair too, Beatrice-chan.”

Beatrice: “You have been told many times before, in fact. Betty’s appearance can be reset with a snap, I suppose. Forget about Betty and concentrate on yourself, in fact.”

???: “Well, I know that, but you have such luxurious hair, Beatrice-chan, that it’s worth taking care of, so I just wanted to do it.”

Subaru: “I totally get it. Playing with Beako’s hair is a bit of an adventure.”

When it came to the topic of Beatrice’s hair, Subaru was the one who maintained her signature drill twin-tails by combing and tying them up every morning, and so he was quite opinionated on it. As Beatrice said, it did not really need any maintenance, but it was more of a feel-good thing.

In reality, Beatrice, with her hair being treated as an attraction, puffed out her cheeks.

Beatrice: “Betty’s fashionable hair and adorable cheeks aren’t playthings, I suppose.”

Subaru: “We didn’t say anything about cheeks, but they are a land of squishiness too, Beako.”

???: “They feel really good to touch, don’t they?”

Upon the appearance of an enthusiastic supporter, Subaru laughed heartily and said “That’s right!” before he casually lifted Beatrice, who was sitting next to him, and sat her on his lap.

Beatrice stiffened in surprise with a “Myu”, but it was too late.

Being too slow to escape, Beatrice’s cheeks were pinched by two different sets of fingers from both sides.

Beatrice: “Hey, come on, stop it, in fact! We are in public, I suppose! Show some self-control, in fact!”

Subaru: “Oh, Beako used to be so shy in public, but now she’s grown up. She used to be so shy… she even tried to follow me into the toilet.”

Beatrice: “That was at the very beginning of our Contract, I suppose! It was a year and a half ago, In fact!”

???: “The way you two are so close hasn’t changed much since then, but I can understand why Beatrice-chan is so clingy with Subaru now.”

She had put her head on Subaru’s left shoulder as she said this. Subaru was surprised by the light touch, and the girl, who had met his eyes, giggled with a “Hehe”.

She was a girl at the peak of her need for affection, yet always trying to act grown-up, making it difficult to spoil her. Subaru thought her unusual attitude was endearing, and while caressing Beatrice’s cheek with one hand, he used his other hand to pat the girl’s head—

Shopkeeper: “Hey, your milk is ready… What’s with this scene?”

Subaru: “Oh, it’s here. Alright, Beako, get back to your seat~.”

Beatrice: “Saying to get back or whatever, when Subaru was the one who dragged Betty in the first place, I suppose! It’s so maddening, in fact!”

With a cup of steaming milk in the shopkeeper’s hand, Subaru smiled wryly at the man’s dumbfounded expression, and returned

Beatrice to her seat as she accepted the cup of warm milk.

And, when Subaru was finally served the glass of cold milk he had ordered—

Shopkeeper: “Oh, now I remember. You’re that guy who went into the Sand Sea with that pretty girl before, right?”

Subaru: “Oh, you remembered? That’s right, I was the guy who got the milk that time.”

Shopkeeper: “…I heard that someone reached the Sage’s Tower. It seems that many people from the Royal Capital will soon be heading there.”

Subaru: “…”

Shopkeeper: “Did you manage to reach it?”

The shopkeeper’s quiet voice was tinged with a hint of expectation and excitement.

Subaru, having just taken a sip from his glass of milk, glanced down at the shopkeeper’s leg—he had one prosthetic leg, and he was probably one of the people who had tried to conquer the Sand Sea in the past.

At that time, the shopkeeper gave Subaru and the others, who were heading for the Tower, some friendly advice. In response to the experienced person’s question, Subaru grinned and gave a thumbs-up.

And then—

Subaru: “Yep, I went to the Tower and met the Sage. —The noisy, overly familiar, and cute Sage. I’ve got a bit of personal business to take care of, so I’m going to make a second attack.”

And, that was his reply.

2

—A journey to the Augria Sand Dunes, or rather, a return to the Pleiades Watchtower.

It was a journey that began at the request of Al, who had lost his beloved master, Priscilla Barielle, in the Vollachian Empire.

Al's goal was to view a Book of the Dead at the Pleiades Watchtower—to read the Book of the deceased Priscilla and connect with her thoughts.

Subaru could not bring himself to refuse Al's heartfelt plea to do so.

Subaru: "Priscilla would be totally pissed, though."

When he closed his eyes, he could only remember Priscilla's smiling face; that, and her prideful demeanor.

Subaru understood that doing so was contrary to Priscilla's beliefs, to the extent that her angry and contemptuous gaze naturally came to mind.

However, he could not help but think about it from the opposite perspective.

If Subaru did not have Return by Death, or if Return by Death was not even possible, and he had found himself in the same situation of losing someone important, much like what had happened to Priscilla.

In such a situation, would Subaru be able to refrain from wanting to know the final thoughts of that "someone"? —In the face of that question, he felt that reason and idealism would be meaningless.

Of course, Subaru had no intention of reading Priscilla's Book of the Dead.

He did not feel that he was qualified to do so, nor did he think it was something he could bear to read. Therefore, he could not assert with certainty whether Al had it in him or not to read it.

That said, if anyone were qualified to do so, it would have been either Abel, Yorna, or Al.

That was why—

Subaru: “I want to respect Al’s feelings of wanting to read the Book of the Dead. I’m going to accompany him to the Pleiades Watchtower… That’s all I can do, for Al, and for Priscilla.”

It was easy to imagine that Priscilla would not want her Book of the Dead to be read.

But, at the same time, if Priscilla knew how badly her death would have shattered Al’s heart, leaving him in such despair that he could not stand up, she might not have objected to him reading her Book of the Dead if she understood that it would be the means to overcome it.

Subaru, who had witnessed Priscilla’s final moments and saw her vanish into the morning light, felt that there was significance in the exchange between Al and Priscilla.

That being said—

???: “Just so you know, Ram isn’t coming along. Rem needs to rest properly after having finally returned. If you want to work yourself to death, do it alone.”

Apart from Ram, who immediately declared this upon hearing Subaru’s opinion, there were naturally many who opposed Subaru going to the Pleiades Watchtower with Al.

Among those who objected particularly strongly were Otto and, surprisingly, Emilia.

Otto: “I agree with Ram-san’s opinion. It is not just Rem-san; you must have also been drained by your time in the Empire, Natsuki-san. I can only imagine the physical strain and constant tension. Why not take it easy for a while?”

Emilia: “You know, I reaaally understand Subaru’s concern for Al. I also know that Al is hurting… But, even though the Tower isn’t to blame, Subaru was sent all the way to Vollachia last time, right? If Subaru goes there again, I’m worried he might get sent to a place like Gusteko or somewhere else next time…”

Otto's opinion was pragmatic, while Emilia's came from a place of anxiety.

Both opinions were based on concern for Subaru, and it did not feel right to dismiss them. However, the fact that it was crucial to reach out to Al at this very moment was the decisive factor, and so, Subaru resolved to head to the Tower.

In reality, all he could have done was bow his head in deep apology for that matter—

Otto: "—Garfiel, could I ask you for a favor?"

Garfiel: "Oh, sure thing, Ottobro. Just like ya said, I'll stick close 'n keep my eyes on the Captain."

Emilia: "Beatrice, hold Subaru's hand tight. Make sure you never let go."

Beatrice: "No need to be told, in fact. Betty also wants to avoid feeling regret like she did when Subaru and the others were sent to the Empire, I suppose."

While Subaru struggled to find the words to persuade them, Otto and Emilia, who were supposed to be standing in his way, entrusted the matter to Garfiel and Beatrice, respectively.

When Subaru looked at them in surprise, the two of them shrugged their shoulders and,

Otto: "After hearing about Al-san, I expected it would come to this… However, Emilia-sama and I have to go to the Royal Capital to report on Priscilla-sama's situation. So…"

Emilia: "I was telling Beatrice and Garfiel that I wanted to go too. I reaaally want to go with you, but…"

Weighing her position and emotions on the scale of her mind, Emilia firmly decided to play her role.

As a candidate for the Royal Selection, she had to report her decision to accept Abel's request to intervene in the battle against the Great Disaster in the Vollachian Empire, and that in that battle, Priscilla had lost her life.

The Kingdom of Lugunica would surely be greatly stirred upon hearing that. The Royal Selection might also experience significant developments due to the loss of a Royal Candidate.

Nevertheless—

Emilia: “What I think you want to do for Al, Subaru, is something only you can do, as the last person Priscilla talked to. —To look after Al.”

Upon seeing Emilia’s sincere amethyst eyes, Subaru felt a dryness in his mouth.

He was very, very sorry that the kind Emilia and Otto had taken up his burden in order for things to turn out how Subaru had wanted. Truly, Subaru should have gone to the Royal Capital with Emilia, both as her Knight, and as someone directly involved in the events of the Vollachian Empire.

And yet, he was spoiled by everyone’s kindness.

???: “—Excuse me! I am coming with you this time.”

While Subaru, moved by the warmth of the situation, was on the verge of tears, Petra raised her hand and spoke up.

Of course, the journey to the Pleiades Watchtower would be long. During the trip and at the Tower, someone would have to look over everyone.

Volunteering for that role, Petra flushed red in her cheeks and spoke energetically,

Petra: “This time, I will be useful! Frederica-neesama and Ram-neesama, please take care of the mansion and Emilia-neesama!”

Frederica: “Y-yes… You are really fired up.”

Petra: “Yes! Since I am always left behind, I decided this time I would go without any hesitation!”

Even though Frederica was surprised by Petra’s brave and explosive display, she still accepted it.

From Subaru’s standpoint as well, if Petra was going with them, then he had no complaints. With this, the members going to the Watchtower were decided, and so, Subaru turned to Rem for the last time.

At last, having returned from Vollachia to Lugunica, he wanted to slowly attempt to regain the old memories of the past at Roswaal Manor—though it was different from the previous manor, filled with Memories of Rem.

Subaru: “Again, the fact that you’re gonna make progress without me is crushing, but…”

Rem: “That was the case when I reunited with Nee-sama as well, but please don’t be disappointed over that… So, are you really going?”

Subaru: “Yeah, I’m going. I can’t leave Al alone. You understand?”

Rem: “I understand. —That’s why you’re a coward.”

Subaru’s eyes shot wide open upon hearing that.

“I went too far,” Rem said, as she bowed her head in response to Subaru’s reaction,

Rem: “Please return safely. Until then, I’ll try to remember as little as possible so you won’t be disappointed.”

Subaru: “No, that’s… I don’t want to selfishly get in the way of what you want to do, Rem.”

Rem: “Well then, that’s impossible. —Because, I’m sure there’s nothing you do that doesn’t affect me.”

She pressed on his chest while saying so, and Subaru was unable to say anything.

Staring at the silent Subaru, Rem stuck out her tongue slightly. With a mischievous expression, as if to say she had got him, Subaru was even more unable to say anything.

—This was Rem's, and everyone else's, encouragement to push Subaru forward, and no matter how much time passed, Subaru, still unable to grow up, understood that.

3

—And thus, on this day they arrived once again at the town closest to the Augria Sand Dunes.

Subaru's chest ached as if sobbing as he thought of everyone who had sent him off, and of the Tower's watchman with whom he had parted ways after he first challenged the Tower.

In front of that Subaru, the shopkeeper cast his eyes downward upon hearing the report of their arrival at the Tower.

Subaru: "Unc?"

Shopkeeper: "…"

Apprehensive about the shopkeeper's reaction, Subaru called out to him, but it was to no avail. Subaru then glanced at Beatrice, seeking to confirm whether he had made a careless remark.

However, Beatrice shook her head sideways at Subaru.

Beatrice: "It's nothing major, I suppose. You've just got a milk mustache below your nose, in fact."

Subaru: "Ah! You should've said that sooner! I was showing off over here, y'know!"

Petra: "It was very cool. Also, pretty cute as well."

Subaru: "Emilia-tan is the only one I think fits that image…"

Cute and cool, that was a fitting description for Emilia when she was in elegant spirits. Ordinary people could only ever embody cuteness or coolness, but she was a beauty beyond miracle who combined both.

Be that as it may—

Shopkeeper: “Is that so. Is that, so…”

Setting aside Subaru, who frantically wiped his upper lip, the shopkeeper, overcome by emotion, mumbled those words under his breath. Staying that way, he wiped the area around his eyes with his fingers, and then vigorously slammed his fist on the counter,

Shopkeeper: “Very well, you did great. Today is my treat!”

Subaru: “For real?! Then, I was looking to buy provisions for crossing the Sand Sea again anyway, so just give me all of the food in the bar!”

Shopkeeper: “Don’t get carried away!”

Subaru: “Thought so!”

Saying such, Subaru joyously laughed together with the shopkeeper who got into a truly great mood. However, the smiling shopkeeper, upon examining the girls Subaru brought together with him, gave a puzzled look.

Seeing that the one who must have left an even stronger impression than Subaru himself, Emilia, was not there, the shopkeeper must have had his doubts. That was understandable, but—

Subaru: “Unfortunately, that girl isn’t together with us today. She did return safely, though.”

Shopkeeper: “Is that so. If she’s safe, then all’s fine, but… this seems like an even more unreliable party than last time.”

Beatrice: “Betty will have you know that she was a party member last time as well, I suppose. Due to being busy with caring for the ill, there was no way to show up, in fact.”

Petra: “I am an actual first-timer, but I’m not going to fall behind Emilia-neesama.”

Subaru: “Ooh, that’s some self-confidence. How reliable.”

Subaru, who had not managed to pat her head earlier, reached his hand out to the girl who proudly puffed out her chest—only for his outstretched hand to be suddenly caught by hers from below.

Then the girl—Petra, looked straight into the eyes of a surprised Subaru.

Petra: “Subaru, did you just try to pat me?”

Subaru: “Eh? I did, but… did you not like that?”

Petra: “…I don’t mind, but can I ask you something? Subaru, do you pat the heads of Emilia-neesama and Rem-neesama as well?”

Being asked such by her serious voice, Subaru repeatedly blinked his eyes, and he pondered.

On whether he patted Emilia and Rem, come to think of it, there were occasions where he had patted Rem’s head before, but if he were to try to do so with the current Rem, he risked having his arm twisted.

Furthermore, even just thinking about patting Emilia’s head was difficult.

Subaru: “No, for various reasons, I don’t really pat the head of those two.”

Petra: “Then you can’t pat mine either.”

Subaru: “Is that so?!”

Petra: “That’s right.”

His hand flung off, her head abruptly turned away, Subaru was left in shock. To think that Petra of all people would go through such a rebellious phase was, to Subaru, completely out of the blue.

Then, seeing Subaru in that disheartened state, Beatrice said “Good grief, I suppose”, and while shrugging her shoulders,

Beatrice: “In that case, you may pat Betty’s head, in fact. Just for now, you may pat as much as you please, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Ugh~, please let me pat Beako’s head as much as I want forever.”

Beatrice: “Hehe, that will depend on Subaru’s manners hereafter, in fact. Make sure to pat more carefully from now on, so that Betty won’t mind letting him, I suppose.”

Subaru: “That’s quite the high bar! But I’ll overcome it…!”

To Beatrice’s grandstanding attitude, Subaru focused his attention on his fingertips, then moved his hand towards her. At Subaru’s soft touch, Beatrice let out a gasp with a “Woah”.

Beatrice: “N-now this, is quite… it’s not bad… rather, it’s good? It’s good, I suppose? To think you hid so much potential, in fact!”

Subaru: “How naive, Beako. Time apart fosters love, y’know.”

Petra: “I truly feel the same way. Time apart really does that, doesn’t it.”

Subaru: “Petra-san? Isn’t there some, like, pressure going on here…?”

While Subaru patted Beatrice’s head with his godlike touch, Petra’s sharp gaze pierced through him as she moved her chair half a step closer.

However, Petra feigned ignorance with a “Is there~?” towards Subaru’s question. Seeing Petra’s attitude, Subaru flinched nervously.

Shopkeeper: “Well, I get that this is quite the pleasant group you’ve got there. But is this really fine? Just because you succeeded the first time, doesn’t mean you get to treat the second like it’s a walk in the park.”

Subaru: “Yeah, I know. The biggest threat, the scantily clad sniper, isn’t there anymore, but even then, the Sand Wind and Witchbeasts are still well and strong. Come to think of it, that advice that Unc gave us last time, about the birds who fly towards the Tower! It was really helpful.”

Shopkeeper: “That’s great… you understand the obstacles then. So, what are you gonna do?”

Subaru: “I’ll be meeting with the countermeasure.”

If a challenger were to conquest the Augria Sand Dunes, three obstacles would stand in their way—one was the Sand Wind, which grew terrifically stronger during the Sand Time; another was the Sand Sea, which was inhabited by ferocious Witchbeasts; and the last was Shaula, though sadly that worry had ceased to be.

Thus, as for the Witchbeasts, which were the most likely to become the main obstacle in the challenge against the Sand Time that they had no choice but to take on—

???: “Geez, this place is jam-packed with sand as alwa~ys.”

Hearing a dissatisfied voice accompanied by the sound of sand getting brushed off coming from the entrance, Subaru and the rest of the group turned towards the one they had been waiting for, so as to have her in their field of view.

The one standing there, was a young girl in a black dress with her hair braided into three strands.

Upon noticing the gazes of Subaru and the others sitting together at the counter, she widened her eyes for a moment, before giving a mischievous smile,

???: “Heyo, Onii-san, you managed to get here safely. Petra-chan and Beatrice-chan too, nice to see the both of you we~ll.”

Saying such, the girl—Meili Portroute, waved her hand, as a small scorpion suddenly jumped out of her hair, wiggling its tail in sync with the movement of her hand.

In that manner, Meili and the small crimson scorpion welcomed their long-awaited reunion with Subaru and the others, as well as their return to the Kingdom of Lugunica.

Seeing Meili's entrance, Subaru smiled to the shopkeeper on the other side of the counter behind him and said,

Subaru: "That girl right there, is our greatest ally in conquering the Augria Sand Dunes."

Shopkeeper: "A young man with a few screws loose and three little girls… perhaps the Sage's Tower wasn't as far away as I thought after all?"

Scratching his cheek with one hand, and patting Beatrice's head with the other, Subaru pondered on the dumbfounded shopkeeper's remarks as being only natural towards a group like his.

Chapter 8:
How to Regret

1

???: “I hea~rd. That blue-haired Onee-san woke up, didn’t she~? Onii-san, you were rea~lly, rea~lly worried, so aren’t you relieved no~w?”

???: “Yeah, I can still remember the fresh feeling I had the moment Rem woke up. Even the part where I had my fingers broken afterwards is now a good memory.”

???: “…He~y, Petra-chan. Has Onii-san gotten a little weirder since he got sent flying o~ff?”

Petra: “Well, a lot of things happened. It’s a long story, but there was a time when he was cross-dressing and even a time when he shrunk to about the same size as Beatrice-chan…”

???: “Hu~h?”

Meili, who had just joined them, leaned on the counter with her chin in her hand, wearing a puzzled look.

Subaru wanted to complain about being treated like a deviant, but given that Meili had only heard a brief summary of what had happened to him in the Empire, her reaction was perfectly understandable. The connection between the presented circumstances and the events that followed seemed a bit unclear, which made Subaru feel like scratching his head in confusion as well.

Subaru: “Well, if I explain it from the beginning, I can tell a story that actually makes sense.”

Beatrice: “…Is that so, I suppose? Betty heard the whole story from the beginning too, but it started to become a bit difficult to follow when Subaru mentioned he had cross-dressed again, in fact.”

Subaru: “Why that though, it was the most logical thing to do…”

For some reason, the operation to capture the Fortress City was not fully understood, even though the results clearly proved that having Subaru, Abel, and Flop dress up as women was the best strategy.

However, Subaru’s sincere appeal did not seem to resonate at all with Beatrice, Petra, or Meili, who was drinking the cold milk she ordered.

In any case—

Meili: “But sti~ll, to go back to the Tower right after returning… Onii-san, you’re not going to get blasted off somewhere again and make Petra-chan lonely, are you~?”

Subaru: “We’ve had that scary discussion plenty of times already… Well, not plenty, but we’ve talked about it. At least, I think the cause of the teleportation issue won’t happen again.”

Petra: “S-somehow, that way of saying it makes me feel even more uneasy…”

Noticing Meili and Petra’s worried looks, Subaru adjusted his hold on Beatrice—Meili had taken the seat Beatrice was originally sitting in. With Petra on one side, Meili on the other, and Beatrice on his lap, Subaru took a moment to consider his next move.

—In the first place, the event that caused Subaru to be transported to the Vollachian Empire was a highly irregular incident that occurred at the Pleiades Watchtower.

At that time, just before the incident occurred, there was an irregularity in the green room of the Tower. Spica—who was believed to be Louis at the time, appeared; amidst the confusion of handling the situation, things took a sudden turn.

That was—

Subaru: “—The penalty for invoking Return by Death was applied incorrectly.”

That was what Subaru speculated.

Previously, Subaru had attended Echidna's tea party in the Sanctuary and confided in her about Return by Death. The outcome was disastrous, not only due to Echidna's unpleasant response, but also because of the calamity in the real world upon returning from the tea party.

At that time he confessed the truth of Return by Death to Echidna, which triggered a penalty that covered the entire Sanctuary in a black shadow, leading to a state of devastation. —Subaru thought that the situations were similar.

In summary, Louis Arneb, who had encountered Subaru in the Hall of Memories and learned about Return by Death, appeared in the green room for some reason.

And that was what that black shadow—the Witch of Envy, mistakenly set out to eliminate.

And as a result of the clash between the rampaging Witch of Envy and the Divine Dragon Volcanica, who was tasked with protecting the Tower, Subaru was blasted away by the resulting force field—

Subaru: "That's what I'm thinking, but beyond that, it's just speculation."

Ultimately, the reason why Subaru was transported to the forest of the People of Shudraq in the Empire remained unknown.

It was unclear whether it was accidental or if it was an intentional result by either the Witch of Envy or the Divine Dragon. However, considering the events that followed, Subaru did not believe it was by the intention of the Witch of Envy.

The Witch of Envy had lost sight of Subaru; that was, until Subaru called out to her on the Gladiator Island.

—It was there for the first time that Subaru called out to the Witch of Envy, addressing her as Satella.

Since then, although the nature of Return by Death had not changed, Subaru's perception of the Witch of Envy, who likely brought it upon him, had shifted slightly.

That shift being—

Beatrice: "—Subaru? You have a troublesome look in your eyes, I suppose."

Beatrice, turning around in Subaru's arms, pressed her fingers against his forehead as he remained silent and deep in thought. Subaru could not help but smile wryly at the sensation and her words.

Subaru: "It's a bit late to bring up the look in my eyes. Usually, people talk about how scary my face is or something like that."

Beatrice: "Subaru, your face is full of charm once you get used to it, in fact. The impression of you having scary eyes is probably just nonsense from people who don't know you, I suppose."

Petra: "Yes, yes, Beatrice-chan, that's true. Right, Meili-chan?"

Meili: "That's ri~ght. I guess you and the Witchbeast-chans are just as cute in your own wa~ys, huh?"

Subaru: "Beako and Petra are too soft on me, so Meili's opinion is probably more in line with general sentiment. I've been dealing with these eyes for eighteen years. I don't expect anything else of them…!"

In fact, it had already been proven by over a year of experience that even the standard isekai trope of "the reversal of beauty and ugliness" was not something to expect.

According to Subaru's aesthetic sense, beautiful people were beautiful, and Subaru's eyes were the most terrifying.

Subaru: "Enough about my eyes. Anyway, it seems like there's no need to worry about me getting teleported again, so for now, there's no concern about me causing trouble for everyone by going to the Tower."

Meili: “I see. Well, I don’t really mi~nd. I’ve been fulfilling my duties properly while you were away, after a~ll.”

Petra: “Duties… Wait, does that mean…!”

Petra’s eyes sparkled as she looked at Meili, who gave a somewhat proud, smug smile.

Subaru had also heard about what Meili had been up to in the Kingdom while he was returning from the Empire.

She had been negotiating with the high-ranking officials of the Kingdom, leveraging her ability to safely guide others through the Augria Sand Dunes to the Pleiades Watchtower.

In exchange, Meili had been seeking a pardon for the crimes she had committed in the Kingdom and securing her future livelihood.

Subaru: “So, judging by your tone…”

Meili: “Ye~p, I did i~t. I made those important old men… what were they called? The Council of Wise Me~n? I made them promise me my free~dom.”

Petra: “You did it! You did it, Meili-chan!”

Meili: “Kyaaah!”

With a triumphantly smug expression that could almost be used as a model, Meili proudly reported her success, prompting Subaru to widen his eyes in surprise. Petra, even more excited than Subaru, reached across him to grab Meili’s hand.

As a result, the two girls ended up holding hands over Beatrice’s stomach,

Subaru: “I’ll take advantage of the moment and gently put my hand in there too.”

Beatrice: “It’s a bit ticklish, but Betty will join in too, in fact. You did well, I suppose.”

Subaru and Beatrice added their hands to the mix, and the four of them ended up holding hands together in a show of camaraderie.

The shopkeeper on the other side of the counter looked at Subaru and the others with a strange expression, but Subaru consciously ignored it, deciding not to worry too much about onlookers during this joyful moment.

With their hands laid on top of each other, Meili said “Th-thank you~…” in a small voice before continuing,

Meili: “A-anywa~ys, my ability to control Witchbeast-chans is highly valued by the Kingdo~m. I’m using it at your request, so make sure to show some gra~titude.”

Subaru: “Wow, that’s quite the bold attitude. But it’s fine, I don’t mind a big mouth. And of course, I won’t forget to show my gratitude. You’ve really done a lot of reflecting, haven’t you?”

Meili: “What do you mean by tha~t?! Do you want me to push you down the stairs agai~n?!”

Though Subaru understood that Meili’s words were just her way of hiding her embarrassment, the memory of his spectacular tumble down the stairs made every single one of his bones creak in recollection.

However, what caught even more attention than Meili’s slip of the tongue was—

Petra: “Meili-chan? What do you mean by that? What did you do?”

Meili: “Ah…”

Petra: “Hey, I didn’t get a chance to hear the full story, but what happened at the Tower? You apologized for not being able to stop Subaru from being teleported, but is there anything else you need to apologize for?”

Meili: “U-u~m, Petra-chan, your eyes are looking a little sca~ry…”

Petra: “Meili-chan.”

Meili: “Eeek!”

Petra’s hands, still resting on Beatrice’s stomach, gripped Meili’s hands firmly, not allowing her to escape.

Realizing this, Meili turned to Subaru with pleading eyes,

Meili: “O-Onii-san… Onii-san, he~lp…”

Subaru: “Sorry, Meili. The Council of Wise Men might overlook your mistakes because of your rare abilities, but your friends are here to properly scold you. Friends like that are precious.”

Beatrice: “Regrets don’t come first, in fact. Lessons should be learned from them, I suppose.”

Meili: “Come on~!”

With those words, Subaru picked up Beatrice and slid his chair back, distancing himself from Petra and Meili. Petra immediately closed the gap with her chair, leaving Meili with no way to escape.

Watching the two of them, Subaru and Beatrice drank their milk together—

Beatrice: “It was good that you were able to save Meili back then, in fact.”

Subaru: “…Thanks.”

Beatrice expressed Subaru’s feelings in a small voice. Subaru, filled with affection, gently stroked her head as he watched the endearing interactions between the two girls.

—Above the teary-eyed Meili’s head, a small scorpion was clicking its pincers sharply.

2

—The duty that had been entrusted to Garfiel Tinzel was a heavy one.

The faith of his comrades resting upon his shoulders, was something that Garfiel understood to a painful extent.

They were putting their trust in him. That if Garfiel was present, then the members traveling to the Pleiades Watchtower, composed of Subaru, Beatrice, and Petra, would not end up facing any danger.

Thus, he wanted to respond to that faith, Garfiel had resolved himself to respond to it.

Garfiel: "Yo, it'd be best for ya to drink a lil' water. The atmosphere here's all dry 'cuz of the sand gusts. Ya never know when yer throat might get parched up."

And, with those words, Garfiel called out to Al, who was seated within the dragon carriage.

Inside the single-wagon dragon carriage pulled by Patrasche, Al was hugging one of his knees as he sat—he was the individual who could be called the reason, or origin, of this journey towards the Pleiades Watchtower.

The man who was formerly the Knight of Royal Candidate Priscilla Barielle. He had watched as his master disappeared before his very eyes, and in order to compensate for that sense of loss, he sought a Book of the Dead within the Tower.

Whether that was a good or a bad thing, Garfiel did not know.

Garfiel: "…"

When Garfiel had first heard about the Books of the Dead of the Pleiades Watchtower, to be perfectly honest, he thought he wanted to see those books by all means necessary.

Because of the situation, they were busy with the priority of going to save Subaru since he had been sent to the Empire, so there had not been a place for him to discuss the topic in earnest, but he had certainly thought in such a manner.

By nature, Garfiel loved reading books about great figures from history. He had fond memories of reading books in the Sanctuary until they were completely worn out, including "The Legend of Reid Astrea", a book describing the life of Reid Astrea, whom Subaru and the others had met first hand.

To hear that the lifetime memories of not only Reid, but of many great figures whose names had been engraved in history, were all lined up in the library that stored the Books of the Dead, was a matter that caused his chest to throb with excitement.

The reason why Garfiel was then slightly opposed to the thought of Al wanting to read Priscilla's Book of the Dead, was a sensation stemming from some sort of logic.

Did knowing the person make it alright to read it? Or did knowing the person make it wrong to do so? —It was not just Garfiel who did not possess the correct answer to that, but also Subaru.

Therefore—

Garfiel: "Until ya do what ya gotta do at the Tower, ya can't be collapsin' on us. Hey."

Gnashing his canines, Garfiel tossed a canteen over to Al. It slowly drew an arc as it spun through the air, making its way towards Al—

Al: "—Oh, my bad, bud. My throat was just about feeling parched."

Catching the canteen with a light sound, Al skillfully raised the jaw of his helmet with his single right arm, and gently brought the mouth of it to his own lips.

Then, Al gulped down the water quite quickly, and gave a refreshed exhale of "Ahhhh~".

Al: "Eep, that really brings me back to life. Really, you guys are always taking such good care of me, I'm grateful. Even though you should be frowning upon me for causing bro's team to split up like this."

Garfiel: "Gimme a break, don't ya have any self-awareness?"

Al: "Well, it's not like I'm not looking at my surroundings. I'd say that, at least more than that old man who disappeared to who-knows-where, I'm calm, real calm."

Garfiel: "…"

Al gave his answer while waving around the canteen that had been mostly emptied, to which Garfiel flared his nostrils, feeling as if he had eaten a bitter bug.

The topic of the missing person whom Al had brought up, was about Heinkel.

As one of the members of the Priscilla Camp, after her passing, Heinkel's mind had been quite disturbed, and he had disappeared a few days before Garfiel and the others departed from the Empire.

Garfiel had participated in the search, but tracing a scent through a town where thousands of people were entering and exiting on a daily basis was a difficult feat, and so ultimately, they were unable to find him.

Garfiel: "Emilia-sama also seemed to be super depressed…"

When Heinkel's whereabouts became unknown, Emilia had felt a terrible sense of responsibility.

He heard that she had come into contact with Heinkel on an occasion Garfiel and the others had been unaware of, and it seemed that he clung on to her quite intensely on that instance. After that, without getting the chance to talk with him again, Heinkel disappeared.

To an extent similar to Emilia, Garfiel was also disheartened. — After all, he had inadvertently crossed paths with Heinkel many times, and they held out on the same battlefield together in the fight against the Great Disaster.

Garfiel: "Oi you, ain't ya worried 'bout pops?"

Al: "Hm? Yeah, I guess I'd say I'm worried about him, but that's because both me and the old man are at a fine age. Fellow middle aged geezers oughta worry about each other, right?"

Garfiel: “The fuck’s it gotta do with age! It’s only natural to worry ‘bout yer comrades. When ya start talking like that, then ya got Beatrice, Emilia-sama, ‘n Nanna who’re all over a hundred years old!”

Al: “Hm, I guess things get pretty confusing at bro’s place if you rank seniority by age. Ah, I do think everything that you’re saying is completely correct, bud? It’s just…”

Garfiel: “What?”

Al: “All things considered, my plate’s also pretty damn full right now.”

Saying that, he raised the hand holding the canteen and lowered his head, leaving Garfiel at a loss for words.

Following that, he also began to get a bit embarrassed for pressing Al so emotionally. Just now, Garfiel had been one-sidedly venting his feelings of powerlessness.

In addition—

Garfiel: “—Tho’, it’s still different from Captain’s.”

Narrowing his emerald-green eyes, as Garfiel checked the sharpness of his canines with the tip of his tongue, he discretely examined Al’s state, and recalled what Otto had told him.

—Having witnessed Priscilla’s death, Subaru and Al had sustained great wounds to their hearts.

Everybody had received a shock from Priscilla’s death, but the wounds received by these two had undoubtedly been the greatest, and so the way they faced those wounds was distinct when compared to others.

Trying to make amends under the guise of Sparka, Subaru had himself beat down by the many comrades he had encountered in the Empire.

That pitiful, reckless endeavor was repealed via the support and assistance of his surroundings, but whether it be equivalent, or even greater, Al was currently in need of “something”.

Garfiel did not sense any issues within his responses during the time of this conversation, but—before Subaru and the rest had proposed to accompany him, Al was initially going to force himself to head to the Tower alone.

That would have likely been an act tantamount to suicide; a fact Garfiel was sure of, having heard about the severity of the Augria Sand Dunes from his comrades. There was even the possibility that Al had fallen into such despair that he would not have minded losing his life enroute to the Tower.

Subaru: “I want to respect Al’s feelings of wanting to read the Book of the Dead. I’m going to accompany him to the Pleiades Watchtower… That’s all I can do, for Al, and for Priscilla.”

Having noticed those perilous signs within Al, nobody stopped Subaru as he spoke that out.

To not accompany Al was equivalent to leaving him to die at the sand sea. —It was the consensus of the camp that there had already been enough casualties.

Al: “But, you know ? Aren’t bro and the rest out shopping? Would’ve been best for you to follow them, since you’re the strongest, bud. If it’s just the dragon carriage, then I’d be able to watch over it alone.”

Garfiel: “—. Ya really think we can just leave a guy from another camp here by himself? My amazin’ self’s here to keep an eye on ya.”

Al: “It’s lonely to be treated as an outsider. Aren’t we buddies who saved the Empire together?”

And, that was also the reason why Al had lost everything precious to him.

How to mourn, how to despair, how to regret, such methods differed from person to person. Garfiel too had an experience of being stuck completely helpless at a dead end, only left to despair.

In order to get back on his feet, Garfiel had borrowed the strength of Subaru, Ram, Otto, and everybody else.

So now, he wanted to be there for somebody else in that same position.

Garfiel: “…I had thought my amazin’ self could be there for pops, too.”

The missing Heinkel must also have his own despair. That such a thing had cast a great shadow over his life, was something Garfiel more or less understood.

Precisely because he understood, he felt sorry for Heinkel, who had no choice but to shoulder everything on his own.

???: “—It appears that the atmosphere in the carriage is rather stagnant. Depressing.”

And, just as Garfiel had been thinking that.

The door to the dragon carriage opened, and the person who appeared from outside spoke those words.

When Garfiel turned around in surprise and saw that it was someone he knew, he let out a sigh,

Garfiel: “Don’t fuckin’ freak me out like that. Got me thinkin’ it was somethin’ like “The Sound of Woozle’s Wind”.”

???: “Excuse my rudeness in asking, but considering your duty, would it not be a problem in and of itself that you are unable to cope with sudden situations? Inquiry.”

Garfiel: “Ugh, th-that’s a bit…”

???: “Again, excuse my rudeness. I attempted to trip you up. Apology.”

Saying that, placing a finger on his lips as he winked, was a man with a slender face, meticulously trimmed navy blue hair, and a monocle over one eye—Clind.

This man who cast an unfathomable atmosphere around him, worked as a servant for Roswaal's relative Annerose Miload, and was on poor terms with Garfiel's older sister, Frederica.

Moreover, this was the person with whom they had arranged to meet in Mirula, the nearest town to the Sand Sea.

Garfiel: "Amazin', ain't yer timin' just damn perfect. —Where's that Meili girl?"

Clind: "She is accompanying me. Certainly. As for my punctuality, it is not something that deserves praise. As a butler, I have simply fulfilled my duties."

Garfiel: "Ya really think that any other butler is fuckin' able to do somethin' like takin' an entire dragon carriage from one end of the country to the other so easily?"

Garfiel was fed up with Clind, who placed his hand on his chest with great humility.

In bringing Subaru and Rem home from the Empire, Clind had fulfilled a very important role, on a level that he might even be the MVP of the camp.

It would seem that Clind could use magic similar to that of Door Crossing, which allowed one to cross through space, and through that, he had been very useful and versatile in making preparations for their journey to the Empire.

The reason they had met up here was to retrieve Meili, who was indispensable personnel for crossing the Augria Sand Dunes.

Clind: "Regarding Meili-sama, I have sent her straight to Subaru-sama and the others. I have come to the dragon carriage to report on her arrival. Praiseworthy."

Garfiel: "Thanks. By the way, did'ya not bring Emilia-sama or Ottobro with ya?"

Clind: "My apologies. The payment made by the Master was limited to the act of bringing back Subaru-sama and Rem-sama, who were sent to the Empire. Bringing Meili here was the least I could do as a favor. Sincerity."

Garfiel: "…Gotcha. If there's a reason, I won't ask ya to do the impossible."

Clind bowed deeply, and although his tone remained flat, there was a sense of consistent apology in his demeanor, and it seemed that he had reasons that were beyond his control.

In the past, Garfiel had a bad habit of losing all reason when he underwent beastification, but the reason he was able to overcome this was because he had been granted an opportunity to do so. He did not know if Clind's limitations were of the same sort or not, so Garfiel refrained from saying anything presumptuous, despite having had a similar experience.

Garfiel: "Well, not like our amazin' selves are the only ones. Yo Al-san, lemme introduce ya. This is one of our amazin' selves' allies, Clind, he's real chummy with that Roswaal bastard."

Clind: "While it is exquisitely chilly, yet quite difficult to deny, I thank you for the introduction. Having received that introduction, my name is Clind. Pleased to make your acquaintance. Bow."

Realizing that he had ignored Al while they had been speaking, Garfiel introduced Clind. Giving a slightly wry smile, Clind faced Al and greeted him.

From Garfiel's point of view, it seemed strange that Clind, who had been close with Roswaal for a long time, would now deny getting along well with him, but—

Clind: "—Al-sama? Dubious."

Aside from Garfiel's thoughts, Clind frowned with skepticism.

The reason was Al's reaction to Clind's greeting, in which he gave no response.

Al: "…"

Maintaining his silence, Al stared intently at Clind's face.

Of course, his expression was not visible with his helmet on, but the atmosphere he was exuding—something close to shock or bewilderment, could easily be felt.

However, Garfiel did not understand the meaning of that reaction in itself.

Garfiel: "Huh? Clind, do ya know Al-san?"

Clind: "—. No, forgive me, but I have no recollection of him. Al-sama, have we met somewhere before? Verification."

Clind shook his head and denied Garfiel's suspicion.

If Clind could not recall any such thing, then he was likely not mistaken.

As previously mentioned, Clind could use special magic, but he also had outstanding abilities as a butler. He was the one who trained Frederica and Ram as servants, and he was also the one who had taught Subaru how to use a whip. He might not have been stronger than Garfiel, but his mannerisms also gave the impression that he was no ordinary person, and certainly possessed great power.

If he had no memory of this, then it was probably true that, at least on Clind's side, they were not acquainted.

And, as for Al—

Al: "—Nah, never had any of that, acquaintance. Without a doubt, this is the very first meeting between you and I."

Garfiel: "…So, the hell was up with that profound silence just now?"

Al: "My bad, it's just kinda troublesome to memorize new things. —You said you were called Clind-san? The name's Al. I'm indebted to bro, and to your allies."

Clind: "I am at your service. I look forward to working with you from now on. Perpetuity.”

Al: “Perpetuity is a bit long, but yeah, looking forward to working with you.”

Waving his hand, Al readily responded to Clind’s lighthearted words.

While watching the two of them interact, Garfiel felt that Al’s behavior was somewhat unnatural, but he missed the opportunity to mention it.

Garfiel: “Whatever, I guess.”

Now that Clind had brought Meili here, the real expedition into the Augria Sand Dunes could begin.

The Witchbeasts that swarmed the Sand Sea could be driven away thanks to Meili’s power, but there were still many things to prepare for, such as the Sand Time vortex of the Sand Wind that must be passed through in order to reach the Tower.

He heard that last time, there was a scene where Emilia and Julius, who had accompanied them on their journey, had displayed their abilities.

Garfiel: “I’ll give ‘em hell! My amazin’ self’ll protect Captain ‘n everyone else no matter what!”

Garfiel roared, bringing his fists together before his chest.

The sense of purpose surging up within him was proof of the determination that was erupting from the unshakable awareness that now inspired Garfiel.

3

—Such was Garfiel’s determination, fervent with excited breaths, however.

Meili: “Very goo~d, a safe arrival. I’m relieved that nothing happened this ti~me.”

Saying those words, Meili hopped down from the driver's seat onto the sand, and with the gargantuan door that was the entrance to the Tower behind her, she spread out both her arms.

The eastern edge of the Augria Sand Dunes—the path to the Pleiades Watchtower, which even the Sword Saint had given up on traversing due to his failure to reach it, was now easily surmounted by them.

Garfiel: "Gao…"

Having firmly vowed to protect his comrades no matter the obstacle, Garfiel ought to have been pleased with the anticlimactic result, and yet he could not help but mutter that with a somewhat unsatisfied look on his face.

V!c.1120

Chapter 9:
High-Efficiency Sorcerous Induction Door

1

???: “—I am glad you have returned safely. Relief.”

With few words, Clind expressed that he was pleased to see Subaru return.

Since being made Emilia’s knight, Subaru had put in great efforts to live up to his title, and this man had taught him how to train his body and handle a whip, as well as many things that had led to his current confidence. He could be said to be Subaru’s true teacher in this world.

Despite his position, he had always maintained a certain distance with the people of the mansion he served, even with Subaru, but when he spoke of their reunion, he touched his shoulder and seemed to have a slight smile on his face, which was quite impactful.

At the same time, Subaru was also worried about Clind, who seemed unfazed by anything.

Subaru: “Of course that’s only natural. Or I guess I should say, I’m really sorry. Clind-san, I heard you were a huge help to Emilia-tan and the others when they came to get me.”

Clind: “No, I only did what was possible within my abilities. I have received a fair amount of compensation, so there were few issues. Acceptable.”

Subaru: “Clind-san…”

Clind: “Moreover, does an apology in such a situation not differ from the policy of the camp? Question.”

Subaru: “Huh?”

Clind: “If it were Emilia-sama, who you look up to as your master, who is developing with purity and bravery while still retaining her childlike nature, what would she say at a time like this? Contemplation.”

At Clind’s words, Subaru took a small breath.

His evaluation of Emilia was permeated with his partiality towards children who overflowed with infinite potential, but Subaru understood what he was trying to say.

In a situation like this, instead of apologizing for having something done for her, Emilia would say—

Subaru: “Not “sorry”, but “thank you”.”

Clind: “Indeed. Excellent answer.”

The fact that he answered with a straight face without smiling was very Clind-like.

Subaru scratched his cheek with his finger and smiled wryly at his teacher’s unreadable feelings. This elusive quality of his probably contributed to the hardships of Annerose, Clind’s lady, and the complicated feelings of Frederica, who he had known for many years.

But then again, given that Frederica talked about Clind far too often for someone who supposedly disliked him, her complex inner feelings did not seem like something for an outsider to comment on.

Clind: “Speaking of which, it was said in the preceding bird-mail that Frederica would also be accompanying you, but I have yet to locate her tall, conspicuous figure. Verification.”

Subaru: “Hm? Ah, that’s right. Frederica was supposed to come along at first, but she changed her plans at the last minute and went together with Roswaal instead.”

Subaru answered Clind’s question, keeping an eye on the distant sky.

At present, the Emilia camp, including Subaru's current party, was divided into groups to carry out different tasks throughout the Kingdom of Lugunica. Emilia and Otto headed to the Royal Capital to report on the events in the Empire, Ram was looking after Rem, who was resting at the mansion to recover her Memories, and Roswaal and Frederica had headed to the south of the Kingdom—to the Barielle Domain.

With the death of Priscilla, and with her husband Leip Barielle having passed away a while ago, the Barielle Domain was bereaved of its lord, extolled as the Sun Princess, and great disorder was to be expected.

With the aim of minimizing such tumult, Roswaal accompanied Schult, who had chosen to return straight to the Priscilla Camp, and Frederica had also gone along with them.

???: "Frederica is good with children and is liked by Schult, so she can be trusted to take care of things, I suppose. Just thinking about Roswaal going there on his own is enough to make a person shudder, in fact."

Subaru: "I get what you mean, but don't go around saying that too much. Roswaal has mellowed a lot… even this time, Emilia-tan asked for his help with Schult, and he accepted in no time."

As always, Beatrice's harsh words for Roswaal were quite endearing, but Subaru was very grateful for how he had handled the situation this time. Emilia, who had apparently spoken with Schult while Subaru engaged in Sparka, also seemed relieved that Roswaal had taken care of the situation.

To be perfectly honest, Subaru could not help but wonder if Roswaal was only willing to help out with the situation of another camp without any hesitation because he wanted to have influence over the Barielle Domain. Even if that were the case, he thought Roswaal was more trustworthy than other people who harbored ambition—that was the conclusion Subaru came to for the time being.

To begin with, if it was a matter of getting involved in the affairs of other camps, Subaru had already been sticking his nose in much more boldly than Emilia or Roswaal.

Subaru: "…"

While thinking this, Subaru expressed another complex feeling of gratitude to Roswaal—that when Subaru failed to save Priscilla, Roswaal had not followed through on his past declaration.

Subaru's Return by Death—even though Roswaal was unaware that Death was the impetus, he recognized that Subaru had the Authority to redo things, and after the battle in the Sanctuary, he clearly declared that he would not allow Natsuki Subaru to take a path of compromise when it came to the loss of those around him.

Roswaal had said that if Subaru ever failed to save someone important to him, he would incinerate everything in an inferno of his flames, forcing Subaru to reset that world.

That was no empty-threat or joke, but a genuine declaration.

However, Roswaal did not attempt to make that terrifying scene of flames a reality on this occasion, as if to add insult to injury after Subaru's failure to save Priscilla.

Whether this signified some kind of change in Roswaal, or whether he did not count Priscilla among the people for whom Subaru would reset, he did not know. Albeit, he really hoped that it was the former.

Subaru: "Well, that's why Frederica is with Roswaal. If you want to see her, Clind-san, you can just hop over there…"

Clind: "Unfortunately, my method of transportation is not all-powerful. Conditional. In addition, concerning the matter of going out of my way just because of wanting to see Frederica. Denial. However—"

Subaru: "However?"

Clind: "I was merely concerned about the fact that things are not going according to the original plan. Trivial."

Clind added this after briefly shaking his head, making Subaru raise his eyebrows.

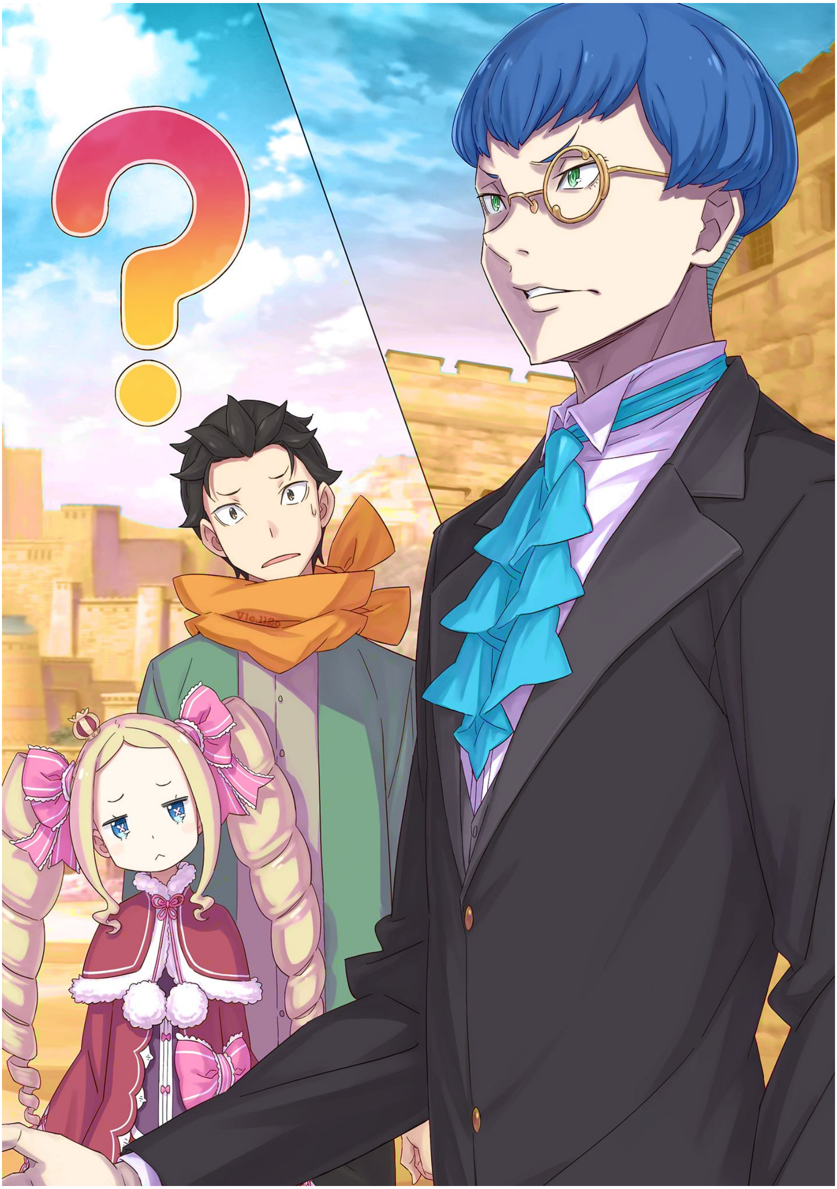
Although Clind’s point of view was understandable, things did not always go according to plan. Not to say that one should be overly flexible, but being too rigid could cause one to be unable to do anything.

First of all, if it had not been Frederica, it would have been Petra who accompanied Roswaal. Internally, within the camp, that would have been a much more concerning situation.

That was why this combination of personnel came about naturally.

Clind: “…”

Subaru: “Clind-san?”



?
Vio.1120

Clind: "—. Apologies for always beating around the bush. Acknowledgment. Considering my position, my remark was out of line. Concern."

Clind bowed his head as he said this, and Subaru thought his attitude of drawing a line between himself and others like that was lonely.

Originally, he was a person who knew how to distinguish between his own and other people's areas of responsibility, but—

Subaru: "I'm not Roswaal or Annerose, so I don't think there's anything like being out of line with me. You should know, Clind-san, that you're one of us."

There was a reason why he had thanked him earlier.

If someone went to such lengths in order to help you out, then what were they if not a comrade?

Subaru: "Clind-san, you and I are both on the side of the brave and cute Emilia-tan, yeah?"

Clind: "—. Yes, indeed. Affirmation. However, unlike you, Subaru-sama, who is expected to grow up quickly, I am in a position where I want to watch over the budding potential and growth. Cradle."

Subaru: "I feel the divide between incompatible factions who support the same idol!"

Beatrice: "Incidentally, Betty's position is that Emilia's growth would make Bubby proud, I suppose."

Even within the camp, it was clear that there were big differences in the way that Emilia was being supported, but Beatrice's opinion was the most mature.

Anyway, it was a great help that Clind could travel the long distance in one go with Meili, who was essential for surmounting the Augria Sand Dunes.

Subaru: “What will you do after this, Clind-san?”

Clind: “Although it concerns my lady’s life, I have been unable to concentrate on my duties as a butler for some time. Introspection. When the Master and Emilia-sama return, things will likely get busy again. Therefore, I intended to leave you all in Frederica’s care and turn back… Contemplation.”

Narrowing his eyes, a look of worry was visible through Clind’s monocle.

It was clear that his contemplation was centered around his lady, Annerose.

Albeit young, Annerose already possessed the spirit of a first-class noble, and while she was dependable, she was also somewhat at risk. As her closest retainer, Clind must have felt uneasy about leaving her side for long periods of time.

That was why—

Subaru: “—It’s all right, Clind-san. Garfiel’s here too. Petra’s also becoming more and more reliable. Go back and grant some peace of mind to Annerose.”

2

After that scene, Subaru and his group set out to conquer the Augria Sand Dunes with Meili in tow, and although they had succeeded splendidly—

???: “…Seriously now, my amazin’ self didn’t get any damn opportunity to shine.”

???: “Well, since we just parted from Clind-san telling him that everything would be okay, if any problem arose then it’d have been hard on him. I say it’s good that nothing happened.”

???: “I get it, ya know? I really do get it, ya know? But still, what about my amazin’ self’s feelin’s after gettin’ all fired up for this?”

Crestfallen, Garfiel stood with his head hung low before the main entrance to the Pleiades Watchtower.

Within the blowing Sand Wind, Garfiel was hunched over looking dejected, and Meili, who was the greatest contributor to overcoming the Sand Sea, crossed her arms and puffed out her cheeks.

Meili: “Wh~at~? It’s not as if it’s my fau~lt. If the fanged Onii-san wants to show off his strength so badly, how about making a round trip across the sandpit by himse~lf?”

Petra: “Meili-chan, don’t provoke him like that! Sorry, Garf-san. Meili-chan didn’t speak out of malice. She just doesn’t know when to keep her mouth shut…”

Meili: “Petra-chan is quite ha~rsh…”

Meili, who had taken offense, reluctantly withdrew due to the mediation from Petra.

The exchange at the bar in Mirula was not the only reason; rather, in the power balance between these two, Petra was for some reason overwhelmingly superior, which made for an intriguing friendship.

Subaru: “As I thought, is this because of the power dynamic between the one who feeds and the one being fed?”

Beatrice: “It is doubtful if that is the case, in fact. Finding someone who can match Petra in the mansion is rare, I suppose. Only Emilia and Ram, in fact.”

Subaru: “Emilia-tan is naturally strong, and Ram is just strong, plain and simple.”

Subaru nodded at the interjection from Beatrice, agreeing with her point.

Needless to say, neither Subaru nor Beatrice would ever be caught claiming that they could beat Petra. They knew exactly where they stood. How admirable.

Subaru: “Then again, coming back here once again, something is slowly welling up within me.”

Within the heart of Subaru who had spoken thus, a dull throbbing ache began to form at the sight of the majestic tower before him.

It was the place from which he had been sent away to the Vollachian Empire, and although so much had happened since then, it was also the place that had fortuitously brought Spica to him.

However, what made Subaru’s heart ache the most at this moment, was she whom he had lost.

Subaru: “…”

Shaula. —The first person whom Natsuki Subaru, who possessed Return by Death, was unable to save.

Priscilla had been added to that, and even though Subaru’s mind ought to have been cognizant of the fact that Return by Death was not omnipotent, he was forced to realize the same with the very depths of his soul.

That was why, such thoughts, such wounds, he wished to never have to experience them again.

Beatrice: “However, it is truly a relief, I suppose. After all, having to go through all that hassle just to get to the Tower is undesirable, in fact.”

Perhaps understanding Subaru’s innermost thoughts through their linked hands, Beatrice chose not to touch upon Subaru’s sentiments, and Subaru also nodded back with a “Yes”.

The Pleiades Watchtower itself was visible at a distance even from Mirula. Compared to before, the density of the clouds and dust plumes that enshrouded it had diminished, putting the fear of losing sight of the Tower at an almost nonexistent level.

Of course, this would no longer be the case during the Sand Time, when the Sand Wind grew stronger, but now that he had conquered it once before and knew of the warping of space within the Sand Time that led to the Tower, he had rather looked forward to its arrival.

Beatrice: “Even within that Sand Wind, he contributed greatly by keeping vigilant watch over the surroundings of the dragon carriage and avoiding the rocks and valleys, and yet, Garfiel is still far too upset, I suppose.”

Subaru: “That we could preemptively prevent a crisis, that surely was thanks to his efforts. Well, perhaps what Garfiel needs to work on in the future is him feeling like he hasn’t gotten his job done unless he uses his muscles.”

If one were to simply rank the contributors to overcoming the Sand Sea, Garfiel would surely be among the top three. Of course, one of them was Meili, and the other—

Subaru: “Sorry to make you keep taking these excursions with us, Patrasche. Time and time again, your stamina, your ability to break through, and your grace are what come to my aid.”

Patrasche: “—Dodogyuuun.”

When Subaru called out to her, Patrasche neighed as if to say that it was a matter of course.

Of course, in the Vollachian Empire, and once again on the way to the Pleiades Watchtower, she who pulled the dragon carriage, was undoubtedly an indispensable member.

The long journey was still ongoing, and there had been no time to unwind; so, once they returned to the mansion, and time could be made for some relaxation, she needed to be shown appreciation by brushing her or taking her for a picnic or whatever.

And so, while Subaru and the others congratulated each other for having made it to the Tower safely—

Al: “This is—”

Getting off the dragon carriage after Subaru and the others, Al calmly looked up at the Tower and muttered thus in a hoarse voice.

The fleeting emotions that were blended into Al's voice, by their sheer sincerity, made Subaru's cheeks nearly stiffen, so he hastily pinched them with his fingers to endure the urge.

Throughout the journey, Subaru tried his best to avoid looking too serious or worried in front of Al. The purpose of the journey was what it was. It was impossible to forget about that and act as if it was nothing special, nevertheless, he still wanted to avoid treating Al too delicately and touching on that sore spot as much as possible.

At least, that was what Subaru would have thought, had the situation been the inverse.

Subaru: "Our objective, the Pleiades Watchtower. The journey might have been a bit cramped, but I'm glad we made it."

Being conscious of that, Subaru nuzzled the cheeks he had been pinching, and called out to Al. After Subaru called out to him, Al trained his gaze upon the Tower,

Al: "…The journey wasn't cramped at all. The kids took great care of me, so despite me being a burden, it was a pretty comfortable trip for me."

Subaru: "About you being a burden; you're not."

Al: "Ah, my bad, my bad, I'm not being sarcastic or ironic. Ah, it's no good. I ended up saying something unnecessary. How pathetic for a grown man to act this way."

Slowly shaking his head, Al muttered as he placed his hand upon his helmeted forehead. Subaru, who could understand a portion of the difficult state of mind that Al was in, found it hard to say something appropriate.

Just as Subaru was concerned about Al, Al was also concerned about Subaru and everyone else.

However, even if one were to try to pretend that they were not depressed, since the reality would be that they indeed were depressed, such a pretense would be unable to produce its intended effect.

As a result, they would end up displaying a strange bravado, and a mindset of saying things that need not be spoken would come into play.

Beatrice: “Nobody thinks that you’re a pathetic man all the time, in fact. Everyone has moments when they cannot hold their head high, I suppose. What is important while doing so, is reflecting upon it, in fact.”

Al: “…Sheesh. That consolation really does touch me deeply. Thank you, Beako-chan.”

Beatrice: “—. That manner of address, only Subaru is allowed to use it, I suppose. Be careful next time, in fact.”

Beatrice replied to Al with an irritated look on her face, and Subaru, feeling affectionate, gently stroked her head.

Then, as he headed towards Garfiel and the others who were attempting to open the main gate of the Tower—

Al: “—Bro, thank you.”

Al’s appreciative voice echoed from behind, making Subaru almost stop for a moment, but in the end, he just waved over his shoulder and proceeded towards the entrance of the Tower with Beatrice.

He held various hesitations about coming to the Pleiades Watchtower. Such as, if seeking Priscilla’s Book of the Dead was truly the right thing to do or not.

However, before considering whether or not they could actually find her Book of the Dead, he was certain of one thing, that his concerns about Al had not been meaningless.

Subsequently—

Petra: “Ah, Subaru. This big door, how do we open it?”

Subaru: “Ah, it’s certainly huge, but it isn’t as heavy as it looks. If I put all my weight into it and push with all my might, it should open up just a little.”

Petra: “You used force?!”

Meili: “Oh ye~s. Because it had been opened previously by Naked Onee-san and Emilia-Onee-san… and then, by the Sword Saint, I had forgo~tten.”

Beside Petra, whose eyes had widened in surprise, Meili blurted so while hugging her elbows.

It was slightly surprising to hear her mention the existence known as the Sword Saint—Reinhard, but apparently, during Subaru’s absence, in order to gain the approval of the Council of Wise Men, Meili had visited the Tower once with Felt and Reinhard.

In other words, this was the third time that Meili had visited the Tower in a short while. Probably, across the entire world, she was the woman foremost in the number of visits to the Pleiades Watchtower, and it was likely that her count would only continue to increase in the future.

Meili: “Ye~p, when I came here the la~st time…”

Garfiel: “Ey ey, wait a minute. We’ll talk ’bout that, but let’s get inside the Tower already. If force is whatcha need to open it, then this is where my amazin’ self comes in—”

Then, interrupting Meili as she tried to talk about her previous journey, Garfiel cracked his knuckles and stepped forward. In response to the words “by force”, it was quite adorable of him to become proactive and take this as his time to shine, but in truth, Garfiel was indeed fully qualified.

Thinking that, Subaru also encouraged him with an “I’m counting on you.” —It happened at that moment.

Garfiel: “—Ahh?”

His long-awaited opportunity having finally come around, Garfiel had been about to challenge the door. Then, before his eyes, the sound of stone scraping against stone rang out as it slowly opened.

Of course, Garfiel had yet to even touch the door.

Opposite to Garfiel as he was astonished by that fact, out from the opened gap in the door—

???: "—How about that, take you by surprise? Considering that there will likely be more people coming to the Tower from here on out, as well as the cleanup of the Miasma drifting over the Augria Sand Dunes, I have constructed a brand new mechanism."

Audible was the voice of a man brimming with confidence and pride.

The figure of the person to give the statement packed with a smiling, boastful nuance, was slowly but surely exposed to the eyes of Subaru's party.

Waiting there was a person with neatly trimmed green hair, clad in a black robe.

Robed Figure: "It is a mechanism that funnels a miniscule, yet specific amount of Mana through a magic circle in order to operate the door. Through such means, I have rectified the inefficient state of the Tower starting with its cumbersome gate. I have dubbed this construction the High-Efficiency Sorcerous Induction Door—"

???: "—It's a door that opens automatically, so it's an automatic door."

Robed Figure: "Ngah??!"

As the voltage of his voice increased, right before it was about to hit its apex, a cold voice interrupted like a douse of cold water, leading his vigor to fall flat on its face.

His voice choking up, the robed man looked beside him in shock—as short as a child, the man pointed to the person standing next to him while trembling all over,

Robed Figure: "Miss Flam! You should know this by now with how many times I've said it. It may be modest with its convenience difficult to understand, but it is a brand new technology that someday ought to be used in many facilities. For this reason, an appropriate name is indispensable…"

Flam: “But, it’s hard to say and hard to remember. “Automatic door” works fine.”

Robed Figure: “Such a cheap name…!”

Next to the man frozen up with his eyes widened, a young, peach-haired girl slowly shook her head.

Greeted by two figures who were roughly the same height—the reception had seemed to leave this side a bit behind but, setting that aside, Subaru called out with a “Heyyy” to the people who had arrived here before them,

Subaru: “Sorry for interrupting while you’re in the middle of something, but you two are…”

Meili: “They’re Sensei-san and Flam-chan, Onii-san.”

As Subaru tried to ask about their identity, Meili interjected like so.

Judging the words she spoke to be “sensei” and the name of a girl, and based on Meili’s attitude of seemingly knowing these people, he was able to guess who they were.

Last time, when Meili visited the Pleiades Watchtower with Felt and the others, they had left behind people at the Tower to keep watch and serve as a means of communication, the Felt Camp’s—

Robed Figure: “Mh, might that be Garfiel-dono over there?! Long time no see, ever since Pristella, eh?! Have you been well, I wonder? It is I, Ezzo Cadner!”

Flam: “Ezzo-sama is as spirited and noisy as always today.”

Ezzo: “Calling me noisy is naught but slander, Miss Flam!”

Saying that, widening his eyes at the girl named Flam in anger, was the one who had given his name as Ezzo Cadner—the rumored intellectual magician of the Felt Camp.

Being called by Ezzo with familiarity, one might have thought that Garfiel would be delighted at this reunion with an acquaintance,

but—

Garfiel: “A-again, my amazin’ self’s time to shine… gao…”

And, helplessly lowering his extended arm, he was in a dejected state.

3

???: “—I see. I know not of the finer details, but Priscilla Bariella-sama has…”

Upon hearing the news of Priscilla’s demise, Ezzo offered a silent prayer.

His prayer, mastered to grant rest to a soul, was permeated with a hue betraying definite intellect, intellect, which could also be found in the young childlike appearance stemming from his origin as a dwarf.

As a member of the Felt Camp, he was of course aware of Priscilla, a rival Camp; not losing his composure at the news of her passing, however, he turned his gaze towards Al,

Ezzo: “Al-dono, my condolences. I never had the opportunity to meet Priscilla-sama, but I have heard from Miss Felt that she was a formidable opponent, one not to be looked down on. Her eye for character is certain. Your liege was undoubtedly an exceptional personage.”

Al: “…Yes, I am grateful, Ezzo-dono.”

Solemnly, Ezzo displayed his condolences towards Priscilla, and Al responded in a humble manner.

A stranger who hid his face behind a steel helmet, and a person who displayed maturity contrary to his young appearance; quite the unnatural exchange from the viewpoint of an outsider, but the exchange of feeling was a sincere one indeed.

Ezzo: “Well then, Natsuki-dono and Garfiel-dono, have you come directly to the Tower from the Empire?”

Subaru: “Yeah, that’s right. The distance is shorter by going straight to the Tower compared to stopping at the mansion for a bit.”

Ezzo: “I see. Be that as it may, it must have been a tough decision to part from your liege, Emilia-sama. Reinhard-dono, too, is always reluctant to part from Miss Felt, to an exasperating extent.”

Subaru: “That’s because those two have their own way of getting along, I guess… Though, I do suspect that Reinhard might actually enjoy seeing those frowns on Felt’s face.”

Felt was so apathetic to Reinhard that it was even refreshing. Those reactions of hers perhaps seemed fresh to Reinhard, who everybody would treat with politeness at all times.

If that was indeed the reason why he stayed by Felt’s side, then Reinhard also had a pretty good personality.

Subaru: “Of course, the reason’s probably because she’s his precious master, but… as you said, Ezzo-san, it does bother me that I had to part with Emilia-tan. It’s just that—”

Nearly two months had passed since the time of Emilia and everyone else’s departure from the Kingdom for the Empire.

During that period of time, nothing had progressed in regards to various issues concerned with the Royal Selection, and the changes in their relationship with the Empire had to be reported to the Royal Capital with haste. —And, that included the information of Priscilla’s passing, which would cause a veritable earthquake as far as the Royal Selection was concerned.

Therefore, they could not afford to delay the report to the Royal Capital.

At the same time, they could not neglect Al, depressed as he was, for long, constraining him despite his desire to head to the Tower. As Ezzo had stated, it had been a tough decision.

Regardless—

Subaru: “We didn’t get into any major arguments over this. To be honest, I'm aware I was asking for too much, but they knew I was going to propose such a thing, so… I feel kinda sorry."

Since Emilia and the others had already known what Subaru was going to say, it felt like they had prepared the safest means to grant Subaru's request to the utmost extent.

It was the utmost extent amidst aforementioned undelayable circumstances such as the report to the Royal Capital and the handling of the Barielle Domain, but, currently, they had allowed Subaru and this group to head to the Pleiades Watchtower.

Ezzo: "No argument over it… hmhm, is that how it went?"

Subaru: "—?"

Ezzo: "Ahh, nothing, just talking to myself. It is very much like how you appraised the master-servant relationship between Miss Felt and Reinhard-dono; to each their own. After all, I can only imagine the things that happened in the Empire."

Tracing his slim jaw with his finger, Ezzo nodded in a magnanimous fashion.

There was something relaxing about Ezzo's manner of speech and attitude while talking to him, so it was no wonder that Meili had called him "sensei".

Either way—

Subaru: "Time for a break now that we've reached the Tower… is what I'd like to do right about now, but, there's probably some people who won't be able to settle down with the objective so close at hand, so, without any further delay…"

Ezzo: "Onwards to the library on Taygeta, hm? Of course, I have no reason to stop you. Only, allow me to verify one thing. —Al-dono."

Rushing through their introductions and circumstances, Subaru looked towards the Tower's entrance—at the spiral staircase going up five floors, attempting to move the conversation forward, on towards the topic of the Third Floor, their destination. However, he was interrupted by Ezzo calling Al's name.

As Al turned around in response to that call, Ezzo raised a single finger, and,

Ezzo: "Earlier, I stated that I have never been acquainted with Priscilla-sama, but allow me to say this. From what I have heard of her personality, is it not unthinkable that Priscilla-sama would wish for you to read her Book of the Dead? Even so, do you still desire the Book of your late liege?"

Al: "…"

Subaru: "Ezzo-san, that's…"

Ezzo: "Silence, Natsuki-dono. I am asking Al-dono. It is an important matter."

Right after Ezzo told him to be silent, the tip of his raised finger began to glow faintly, and Subaru felt his own throat become unable to emit sound. Instantly, he guessed that it was some magic of Ezzo's, and was made aware that he was a user of magic proficient beyond his expectations.

And thus, with Subaru having been forbidden from speaking by force to their side, Ezzo exchanged gazes with Al,

Ezzo: "It is painful to lose somebody close to you. I, and many others, share in this experience. However, it is unthinkable that all those who experience it would then visit this Tower, seeking a Book of the Dead. Much less, if the person inscribed within the Book would not desire that either."

That which Ezzo spoke, was a sensible opinion so sharp that it could even draw blood.

Al: "…"

As Al maintained silence, his expression was hidden by his steel helmet, making it impossible to examine it.

However, it was factual that he had sustained a deep, monumental wound, that he was drowning in the blood and pain wrought by that wound. It was also a fact that Subaru, and everybody else, wanted to do something about that.

For that, the Emilia Camp had unanimously—.

Al: “It’s as you say, Ezzo-dono. As you said, there are people who, even if somebody close to them dies, will get back up on their feet by themselves. Even without borrowing the power of the Books.”

Ezzo: “Your agreement is above all else. However, it seems you have more to say.”

Al: “Yeah, I’ve got more. There’s another thing that’s just as you said. Princess—Priscilla, she wouldn’t want anybody to read her Book of the Dead.”

Ezzo: “…”

Al: “But, she died.”

With a hum, Subaru’s muted throat rang faintly.

Hearing Al speak of Priscilla’s passing for the first time, Subaru felt a sensation akin to being cut by a sharp blade.

It was beyond pain, it was a sensation moreso akin to blood shedding, causing his body temperature to fall vigorously.

Then, with Subaru and Ezzo having heard those words, Al still continued further—

Al: “Priscilla is dead. —No longer, can she tell me anything.”

Ezzo: “—. I see.”

At that low tone hailing from Al, sounding as if his heart had frozen over, Ezzo cast his eyes down.

Listening to the very same reply Ezzo did, Subaru’s heart was pierced by the everlasting glaciation that had befallen Al’s heart—at the pitiful, desolate frame of mind upon being bereaved of the flame, of the sun known as Priscilla.

His expression indicating he was experience a sensation selfsame with that of Subaru's, Ezzo gave a brief sigh, and,

Ezzo: "By saying things to test you, I have made you say something you wished not to. I apologize."

Al: "…Nah, it was necessary. For me, to put it into words."

Indeed, as Al responded in a hoarse voice, Ezzo deeply nodded.

Then, Ezzo snapped his fingers, and,

Ezzo: "Excuse me, Natsuki-dono. I wished to hear him out between just the two of us, without any interruptions."

Subaru: "Ah, ahhh~, ahhh~, my voice is back… Just now, that was…"

Ezzo: "Yin Magic… is what it may seem, but it is an application of Yang Magic. It is not that you had lost your voice, but rather that it was boosted to a pitch so high that nobody would be able to hear it normally. It is in the register emitted by the likes of bats."

Subaru: "Is that even possible… I really underestimated you. That and…"

While placing his hand upon his throat, Subaru turned his attention towards Al. Guessing the intention of Subaru's gaze, Ezzo prefaced with "I understand",

Ezzo: "Ultimately, it is a matter between the parties involved. It is no place for outsiders to interject. But then again, were doubt or hesitation present, it was within my intentions to stop him indirectly. But presuming this is the only way to move forward, then those who bear the resolve have no choice but to do so."

Subaru: "Is that… fine?"

Ezzo: "Do not say such ridiculous things. All of you have come to terms with it in your own ways, no? Besides, if I myself died, I would like for people to read my Book of the Dead if they so desired. I would want them to learn everything about my life, and use it as a foundation for the future."

Subaru: "…"

Ezzo: "Or rather, while it may not have been in the form of earnest desire, I have already diligently read quite a few Books of the Dead! They would have undoubtedly questioned how I could stoop so low!"

The orderly, mature expression Ezzo had worn until then disappeared as he raised his voice, his expression having returned to the one he had initially displayed when exhibiting the automatic door technology that opened the door of the Tower, bearing great confidence.

While astonished by the sudden change in demeanor, Subaru understood that this was a bit of ingenuity designed to distract from the tense atmosphere Ezzo had created, and thus harbored a favorable impression of Ezzo's humanity.

In all honesty, having just returned from the Empire, where everyone he met had the potential to become an enemy, Subaru was highly favorable to those he could face with peace of mind.

In any case—

Ezzo: "Sorry for keeping you. I feel bad for taking stocks away from Natsuki-dono and the rest, who are already familiar with the Tower, but likely at the current moment, I am the one who has visited the Library the most, and so I shall be guiding you myself. —Towards the main attraction of the Great Library Pleiades, Taygeta, where the Books of the Dead are stored."

With that, the time to fulfill their objective in visiting the Pleiades Watchtower, had finally come around.

Chapter 10:
Limit of Three Days

1

—The Great Library Pleiades.

That was the official name of the Tower that Shaula had spoken when first inviting Subaru and the others here.

Since she did not seem capable of coming up with such clever words on her own, it was probably something told to her by the “master” who had ordered Shaula to manage the Tower.

And thus, Shaula had remembered those words and necessary explanations that had been taught to her with tactless honesty over four hundred years, and at that moment, she was finally able to present them.

And now—

Ezzo: “—The Great Library Pleiades, and its archive of the Books of the Dead, Taygeta.”

Behind Ezzo, as he spread his arms out and declared so, rows of bookshelves were lined up. These bookshelves were arranged in a circular formation around the staircase leading to the lower Fourth Floor, with many rows, many tens of rows, extending outward from there.

Even when considering the rather large circumference of the Pleiades Watchtower, there was no way this space could have fit within, so there was likely some expansion of space taking place there.

Beatrice: “It is not something that could not be achieved through Yin Magic, in fact. However, to construct a technique that maintains its form over multiple centuries without an active caster is a skillful feat beyond the limits of human understanding, I suppose.”

And, to Subaru's misgivings, Beatrice responded with an expression of wonder.

Beatrice was a Great Spirit of the Yin Attribute. Perceiving the sophisticated magic cast upon the Tower, it might have been natural for her to become excited.

Anyway—

???: "…"

Visiting the archive for the first time, Garfiel and Petra speechlessly widened their eyes, astonished by the overwhelming amount of bookshelves—nay, by the sheer quantity of the books contained within, that was to say, the Books of the Dead.

That was only natural. When Subaru first became aware of the true nature of the books here on Taygeta, even while understanding the logic behind it, he too was left speechless by perceiving the vast number of dead individuals.

Petra: "All of these are… the Books of people who died, right?"

With a few words, Petra muttered in an astonished voice.

As she slightly averted her eyes in dumbfoundment, Subaru thought it was only natural. In this aspect, Petra had a considerable amount of guts, there were many instances where she faced situations with a level of tolerance that put grown-ups to shame. It was to the extent that when she encountered Sand Time, which tormented many of the people who challenged the Augria Sand Dunes, she had coped with the sand winds very energetically.

And even though Petra could put up with so much, there was a level of eeriness on Taygeta for which she could not maintain her calmness.

Garfiel: "—Hk."

The same applied to Garfiel as he looked all around the archive, making a slight noise with his throat.

Rather, for someone like him, one of the two in the camp, alongside Emilia, who excelled at taking things in stride, perhaps it was not the eerie austerity of the Books of the Dead that might have overwhelmed him, but rather the sheer number of them.

Having just previously seen the hosts of undead in the Vollachian Empire—the act of witnessing the resurrection and redeath of so many dead individuals, might have spurred on that sensation.

Subaru did have concerns about those reactions from Petra and Garfiel. However, the one he was most concerned about, also visiting this place for the first time, was the person whose objective lay here—

Al: "…"

Heaving a small sigh, Al looked all around the library.

His state of astonishment was more quiet than Petra's, and his head looking around the archive was more loose than Garfiel's, however, that was precisely why there was an air of tension about him.

It was to the extent that Subaru's throat dried up when trying to call out to him, creating a sense of hesitation in him.

But, while he was hesitating—

Al: "—I can't read it."

And, having calmly approached a bookshelf, Al had removed a single volume in a natural movement, and while skillfully holding it in his elbow, he had flipped its pages wide open.

There had not been even the slightest hesitation in that gesture, and since it had all been so natural, Subaru's reaction of "Bah!" had ended up being delayed.

Subaru: "W-wait wait wait! Don't do that so suddenly! You really startled me!"

Al: "Hm… ah, my bad. It's just what I saw right in front of me, so I did it subconsciously."

Subaru: “Don’t you find it scary to suddenly go for things you have no knowledge of?!”

While saying that, Subaru scrambled to take the Book from Al’s hand.

Being greatly shocked by that quick action, Subaru was simultaneously reminded of the danger Al was in. On the journey thus far, he had not made a very strong display of his attitude, but it was likely a result of the strength of his desire for the Book.

Subaru wanted to show that he understood that. But on the other hand, that did not mean he would not reproach Al’s rash behavior.

Subaru: “I told you this already. The Books here are, you know, way more powerful than you could ever imagine. At one point, I was right on the verge of becoming Meili.”

Meili: “What~ kinda joke is that~! Don’t say such scary things~!”

Her name listed as an example, Meili raised her voice in opposition, but this was no joke or anything of the sort from Subaru, but a dreadfully true sense of harm possessed by the Books of the Dead.

On the previous journey, in a loop where Meili had lost her life—back then, Subaru had read Meili’s Book of the Dead, putting a huge burden on his mind, and immersing him so much in her life that a non-existent Meili began to dwell within him.

To be honest, the affection and familiarity Subaru now felt towards Meili, to a point that she was bewildered by it, was in no small part due to the effects of her Book of the Dead. If affection was something achieved by means of empathy and understanding, then Books of the Dead were the ultimate matchmaker.

But then again, by nature, Books of the Dead would absolutely not grant an opportunity for reunion with a deceased person in a living state, so such a development was only possible for Subaru.

Subaru: “That’s why you have to handle them cautiously. It’s quite possible that you could stop being yourself.”

Al: “To stop being yourself, huh… In a way, that might be the most desirable outcome.”

Subaru: “Al…”

Al: “It’s a joke, just a joke. Just an unfunny, worthless joke.”

As Al pitifully spilled out words of self-abandonment, Subaru’s cheeks stiffened.

Hoping that it might serve as the impetus for him to get back on his feet, Subaru had listened to Al’s request, and had brought him to the Tower. However, his doubts regarding whether this was a drastic method that would help or if it would actually end up deepening his wounds grew stronger.

Ezzo: “Natsuki-dono’s admonishment a moment ago was precisely correct. With the rebuking of Al-dono’s careless action already completed, I would very much like for Garfiel-dono and Miss Petra to be sufficiently careful as well. Should you heedlessly undertake the effects of a Book, it is quite possible that your mind might sustain an everlasting wound.”

And, behind Subaru and Al’s exchange, Ezzo cautioned the first time visitors.

Like Subaru, Ezzo’s words were filled with a nuance only possible from someone who had experienced the feedback from a Book of the Dead.

Without a doubt, just like Subaru and Julius, he was one of the people who had connected with a Book of the Dead—

Ezzo: “While typically regarded without much importance, wounds upon the mind are quite the troublesome affair. There is no prospect to recover from them via healing magic, and there are many instances in which they are made light of due to the fact that they are not outwardly visible. Even aside from that, the influence of Miasma upon these lands is potent, so you may be prone to feeling low in spirits. As one of the senior folk here, if you feel anything wrong at all, please inform me immediately.”

Subaru: “Th-Thank you very much, Ezzo-san…”

Flam: “A splendid attitude to have as the eldest one here, Ezzo-sama. As expected, there is the implication that you fainted with wide eyes, frothing at the mouth and experiencing incontinence, when you first read a Book of the Dead.”

Ezzo: “Miss Flam?! You promised not to say anything about that, did you not?!”

Flam: “Seeing you convulse like that in the library made my eyes widen quite a bit as well.”

Ezzo firmly struck his chest in a reliable manner, but when Flam, his supposed ally, exposed his disgrace, he widened his eyes. Hearing that recount of Ezzo’s experience, the expression of Petra, who had once looked at him with a gaze of respect, began to cloud over as she said “Ezzo-san…?”

At the gaze from the young girl, Ezzo hurriedly gestured,

Ezzo: “Ah, no, that is incorrect! Well, it may not be incorrect, but Miss Flam’s descriptions were too effective as a cautionary tale. Certainly, at first I was unable to bear it and fainted in quite a predicament, but ever since, I have learnt the trick behind reading the Books and have thus not failed in such a manner again!”

Garfiel: “A trick behind readin’ the Books? Somethin’ like that really exists?”

Ezzo: “It does! To put it plainly, it is to clear your mind. To close off your heart. If you enter such a frame of mind and put yourself to the side, then you can treat the incoming information as nothing more than information.”

Flam: “You make it sound so easy, but no matter how many times I hear it, I still do not understand.”

As Flam slowly shook her head, Ezzo looked around at the others in search of agreement. However, neither Petra, nor Garfiel, nor Subaru, nor Bearice, and most definitely not Meili, understood.

At the lack of a favorable response, Ezzo cried out “Impossible…!” in shock.

Regardless of Ezzo’s shock, if it was truly possible to protect one’s mind through the method he had spoken of to successfully read the Books of the Dead, then this was indeed a marvelous thing.

As someone who had actually read Books of the Dead, Subaru understood just how absurd that was. To be honest, even after hearing about the trick just now, Subaru did not think he was capable of doing the same thing.

Subaru: “You’ve got it, right? It’s possible to go into an unrecoverable state by doing something careless. So, for touching any Books outside of the one you’re looking for…”

Al: “I’d better stop. —I got it. I’ll heed your warning. Even without that, it was thanks to bro and the others that I got to the Tower without any trouble. I’m not gonna complain.”

Subaru: “…Well, that’s fine I guess.”

With those words, Subaru returned the Book he had taken from Al to the bookshelf. He did not know the name of the person written on the binding, but he handled it carefully as the sensation was akin to touching a tombstone.

Indeed, the Books of the Dead felt similar to tombstones or grave markers. That was why, he felt a strange sense of resistance against making a racket here.

Anyway—

Ezzo: “Amidst this vast number of Books, finding the one you seek will be difficult. It would be ideal to really concentrate your energy on searching for it. —After all, the Books on these bookshelves may still continue to increase even at this very moment.”

The comment added by Ezzo spoke of a steep journey distinct to the one of crossing the Sand Sea, with the meaning of scaling a sea of Books with no certain means of victory.

2

???: “—I, am Volcanica. In accordance with the ancient Covenant, I ask the will of thee who hath reached the summit.”

A deep, solemn voice reverberated, shaking the very souls of those who heard it; the voice of a being of a higher existence.

With the vast, blue sky as a backdrop, a majestic dragon perched at the very top of the towering structure—The divine dragon Volcanica loomed over Garfiel, who stood there, stunned.

It was not the first time he had seen a Dragon.

On the contrary, during the recent Great Disaster in the Vollachian Empire, Garfiel had been entrusted by Subaru and the others to face off directly against the Cloud Dragon Mezoreia, engaging in a fierce battle with it.

The battle spoke for itself. Garfiel did not think he had outright defeated the Cloud Dragon.

Even so, the fact that he had not been beaten was something Garfiel took pride in.

Dragons were considered the most powerful creatures in this world. Whether human, demi-human, Witchbeast, or Spirit, they all paled in comparison to Dragons, which stood at the top of the rankings.

Though it was imperfect, having fought against one of those top-tier beings, Garfiel felt as though he had broken through a barrier.

However—

Volcanica: "—Thou, who hath reached the top of the Tower. Step forth onto the First Floor, almighty petitioner."

The majestic, blue-white shining Divine Dragon Volcanica rested its wings leisurely at the top of the Tower. His instincts clearly understood that it was on a completely different dimension from the Cloud Dragon Mezoreia.

While it was not evident from its appearance, the experience as a Dragon between Volcanica and Mezoreia was as vast as the difference between an adult and a child.

???: "…I had only heard about it because I missed the chance to see it last time, but seeing it for real is something else."

As Subaru looked up at the Dragon behind Garfiel, he expressed his awe.

Subaru was sent to the Empire before he had a chance to encounter Volcanica at the Pleiades Watchtower. Although he had seen the Cloud Dragon in the Empire, he was just as moved as Garfiel when he saw the Divine Dragon Volcanica in person.

Because Emilia and Volcanica once fought each other.

Garfiel: “Emilia-sama, ya were bein’ too damn reckless…”

???: “Honestly, Betty also felt like she was barely alive, in fact. It wasn’t just Emilia, but Subaru, Ram, Anastasia, and everyone else were all in trouble too…”

Subaru: “Yeah, back then you were worried sick about us, Beako. Thanks for everything.”

Recalling those times, Subaru had a serious expression as he patted Beatrice’s head, but from what he had heard, it had not been the kind of conclusion that could be spoken about with such a heartwarming scene.

At that time, Subaru had lost his memory, Meili had betrayed them, and they had clashed with the “Sage” and Gluttony, causing quite a commotion.

Garfiel: “If my amazin’ self had been there, the Captain wouldn’t’ve been sent flyin’ all the way to the Empire…”

Beatrice: “Hm, that’s quite the claim, I suppose. Garfiel, are you saying that you could handle problems that even we couldn’t deal with, in fact?”

Garfiel: “Ugh, no, ‘s not what I meant, but…”

Beatrice: “One of Betty’s pretty jokes, I suppose. Betty knows you didn’t mean that, in fact.”

Beatrice laughed at Garfiel, who was flustered, thinking he might have said something careless. As Garfiel breathed a sigh of relief, Subaru said, “Anyways,” before continuing, Subaru: “I caused everyone a lot of worry. I won’t say it was good that we got sent over there, but when I think about how the Empire might have been destroyed if we hadn’t been there, well…”

Beatrice: “It having turned out alright, is not something we can say, I suppose. Especially, when considering Al’s feelings, in fact.”

Garfiel: “It’s not just that guy. Schult ‘n the ol’ man were the same way.”

Beatrice and Garfiel responded to Subaru’s words, while he scratched his cheek with his finger.

In Garfiel’s mind, the image of the camp collapsing after Priscilla was gone came to mind.

With Heinkel gone and Al seeking the Book of the Dead, even the most optimistic Schult was desperately trying to pull himself together, but he was still in shambles. It was too worrying—no, too cruel—to leave everything to Roswaal alone, so he was relieved that Frederica was there to accompany him.

He wished he could help all of them, one by one, to move forward—

Garfiel: “Sorry for taggin’ along like this, Captain. I jus’ really wanted to see the Divine Dragon for once.”

Subaru: “I was curious too, so it’s not something you need to apologize for. It’s natural for fans to be interested if they find out a celebrity is staying on the upper floors of a hotel… Although, going to try to meet them might be bad manners, huh? Maybe this is overstepping?”

Beatrice: “There is no reason for anyone to blame you, I suppose. If anyone has the right to blame, it would be the Dragon itself, in fact. But…”

Volcanica: “—I, am Volcanica. In accordance with the ancient Covenant, I ask the will of thee who hath reached the summit.”

Beatrice: “It is as you see, I suppose.”

Beatrice shrugged at the vague nature of Volcanica's response.

Garfiel was also skeptical, but when he actually met Volcanica, he realized that it was true that the long, long passage of time had made the Dragon's perception of the world quite vague. Even so, the extraordinary aura it radiated was what set this exceptional Dragon apart.

In any case—

Garfiel: "I'm realizin' again that there's always someone stronger. I've gotta make sure I don't get too full of myself."

Subaru: "…You're strong, Garfiel. I'd reach you on the list of the strongest people I know quicker by counting from the top."

Garfiel: "Isn't it my amazin' self's job to get to the top, though?"

After ascertaining his own standing, he gave Subaru's chest a light poke to let him know that he was not disheartened. Subaru let out a soft grunt from the impact of his fist, and then nodded with tears in his eyes.

And, as they were talking—

???: "—Oh, so you were indeed with the Divine Dragon after all."

At that moment, Ezzo, who had come from the stairs, joined them.

Ezzo glanced at Garfiel, Subaru, then at Volcanica beyond them, and,

Ezzo: "I understand. The mysteries of this tower are sure to pique one's curiosity, but the Divine Dragon, Volcanica, a being who was indispensable in the establishment of the Kingdom of Lugunica as we know it today, is yet another subject of great interest!"

Subaru: "Haha, it's probably different from Ezzo-san's perspective, but I also admire Dragons. Volcanica's way too big for it, but the idea of being something like a Dragon Rider is a classic fantasy for boys."

Garfiel: “Dragon Rider…?! Captain, ya gotta tell me more ‘bout that later.”

Subaru: “Sure. Though having said that, it’s kinda like the flying dragon riders from the Empire.”

Garfiel’s intuition was triggered by the unfamiliar words that Subaru uttered while he nodded his head. He had a hunch that it was probably something extremely exciting and awesome.

Observing the exchange between Garfiel and Subaru, as Ezzo tilted his head and touched his chin,

Ezzo: “I see. I thought we might discuss the significance of the Divine Dragon from an historical or scholarly standpoint, but that will have to wait for another time. —Now then, Natsuki-dono, as requested, I have finished explaining the library to Al-dono. For now, I have placed Miss Flam by his side.”

Subaru: “Thank you, it’s a huge help. I haven’t really had a chance to properly speak with Flam-chan yet, but is it alright to leave her there?”

Ezzo: “Your concern is unnecessary. She is the type who will clearly say no if she is adverse to something. Though, as a servant, it is a bit concerning that she says it so often…”

Beatrice: “We are quite accustomed to maids who say no to things they are adverse to, in fact.”

Garfiel: “Ahh, that’s for sure. Ain’t that the truth.”

Garfiel and Subaru exchanged glances and nodded in response to Beatrice’s remark.

Garfiel’s beloved, both proud and self-aware, was indeed a woman who could clearly express her opinions, regardless of her position as a maid. He liked that about her.

Thinking about it, Flam was like that too, so maybe it was just that women with peach hair were strong.

Ezzo: “Incidentally, Miss Flam has a twin sister named Miss Grassis, not only are they similar in appearance, but also in personality, which is quite troubling.”

Subaru: “You guys sure have a lot of variety over at Felt’s place, with Old Man Rom, Tonchinkan and all… speaking of which, Ezzo-san, how did you end up over there with Felt?”

Ezzo: “I was once indebted to Miss Felt and Reinhard-dono. I think it would be appropriate to say that they took an interest in me and brought me in because of that connection.”

Subaru: “In that case, you were a great find. Kinda like our Otto.”

A find, such was an expression that Otto himself often used, but as for commonalities between Otto and Ezzo, it would probably be their green features. Though, Otto had it in his attire, while Ezzo’s was in his hair.

Green finds were excellent and reliable. Thinking that, Garfiel could not help but chuckle.

Ezzo: “It seems you are enjoying yourself, Garfiel-dono.”

Garfiel: “It’s nothin’, jus’ some worthless thoughts. More importantly, bein’ called “dono” like that feels a lil’ awkward. “Dono~” just sounds so over the top, if ya get what I’m sayin’.”

Ezzo: “Is that so? I do not personally think so, but… in that case, I will address you as Garfiel-kun, as I do with Rachins-kun and the others.”

Garfiel: “Sure, ain’t like it’s our first time meetin’ either. Please go ahead ‘n use that.”

As Garfiel waved his hand, Ezzo nodded with an “Understood.”

At that exchange between Garfiel and Ezzo, Subaru looked back and forth between the two, and said, “Speaking of which”,

Subaru: “You two have met each other before, right? From where?”

Ezzo: “I am sure you recall the Pristella Incident… when the Watergate City was attacked by the Witch Cult led by their Sin Archbishops. I was called by Miss Felt to help with the aftermath, and thus entered the city. That is where I became acquainted with Garfiel-kun and Otto-dono.”

Subaru: “I see, so it was during that time…”

Garfiel: “Oh, ‘n there was a bit of a quarrel that went down then, too… well, it’s kinda a long story.”

That, was during the time when Subaru and the others had departed for the Pleiades Watchtower.

While Otto stayed behind in Pristella to recover from his injuries, Garfiel aided with the city’s reconstruction, and assisted in the retrieval of the Witch’s Remains that had been sealed beneath the city. One of the members of that excavation team was Ezzo—along with Garfiel, Ricardo, and, for some reason, Liliana.

Beatrice: “Just from what has been said, it sounds like a group that would get into a great amount of wrangling, I suppose…”

Ezzo: “Albeit challenging, it was a time from which I learned a great deal. Of course, I was helped by Garfiel-kun many times. Though it feels strange to say it in front of him, he is a remarkable young man.”

Subaru: “Hehe, not at all, not at all.”

Beatrice: “That much is trivial for him, in fact.”

It was a bit embarrassing to see Subaru and Beatrice looking even happier than Garfiel at Ezzo’s unashamed and bold praise.

In truth, Garfiel also deeply understood that Ezzo had more than just a big head, and that he was an excellent magician in a battle situation. Though, it was a bit frustrating that he had underestimated Ezzo due to having an even more outstanding magician so close to him usually.

Ezzo: “—Now then, while it is not unfavorable to deepen our friendship, let us get through the issue at hand before doing so. I am having Miss Flam watch over him, but let us discuss Al-dono.”

Subaru: “—. About Al.”

Ezzo: “Indeed. There is just one thing I would like to verify, but… I suspect that Al-dono’s objective may lie in the resurrection of Priscilla Barielle-sama, but what are your thoughts?”

Subaru: “Wha…?!”

Garfiel: “Ahh?”

As Ezzo stroked his chin and spoke, Subaru and Garfiel’s voices overlapped.

At the sudden utterance of the word “resurrection”, at the very least, Garfiel’s comprehension could not keep up. Next to Garfiel’s befuddlement, Beatrice narrowed her round eyes,

Beatrice: “Just what do you mean, I suppose? The resurrection of the dead… if it is a matter of the Sacrament of the Immortal King, we’ve had more than enough of that, in fact.”

Ezzo: “I suppose you are referring to the incident in the Empire that I have only heard about in passing. The forbidden art of the Sacrament of the Immortal King captures my interest immensely, but that is not what I am referencing at the current moment. I worry about the method that Natsuki-dono jokingly spoke of earlier.”

Subaru: “I, jokingly…?”

Ezzo: “—A pseudo-resurrection of the dead, accompanied by means of reading the Book of the Dead of Priscilla Barielle-sama, and overwriting himself with her existence.”

Subaru: “…”

Without any intonation in his voice, the words void of any emotion spoken by Ezzo permeated into his brain.

A pseudo-resurrection of the dead—the contents of Ezzo's words did not make sense to Garfiel. However, he knew from Subaru's astonished expression, with sweat forming on his forehead, that it was not a nonsensical idea that could be laughed off.

Subaru was left speechless. Gazing at that state of his, Ezzo continued.

Ezzo: "As I mentioned previously, I have already read twelve Books of the Dead. The predicament I found myself in, at first, was a complete failure that I cannot bear to speak about, in accordance with Miss Flam's statements. And, following the sensation I experienced at that time… provides an argument that the overwriting of the mind is possible."

Beatrice: "…Subaru said that their Memories almost blended together, I suppose. But, it is difficult to imagine that the reader's consciousness would then completely disappear, in fact."

Ezzo: "With the sensation of blending and mixing together, that is indeed true. However, what if the reader was prepared with a state of mind to accept all of it? If they were to go in with the attitude that they would disappear from the start, would the mind of the person read from the Book not then take hold without any resistance?"

Beatrice: "…"

Ezzo: "Of course, this is just an armchair theory. It is not as though I have actually tested it. Only, when considering the motives of someone who seeks out the Book of the Dead of an important person they have lost, it is an idea that comes to mind."

As Ezzo spoke of his deductions at length, a deep, uncharacteristic frown was borne upon Beatrice's brow.

Hearing that from the side, Garfiel had no room to interject. He had been working his mind to try to get his head around it, and thought that he was beginning to understand it on a surface level.

However, even if the Books of the Dead were completely filled with the memories and feelings of the dead—

Garfiel: “Somethin’ like that, wouldn’t really be comin’ back to life.”

Ezzo: “Ho, why do you think so?”

Garfiel: “‘Cuz… hk, ‘cuz, that thing. The soul! The soul ain’t there. It ain’t somebody inside a Book.”

As his mind got all jumbled up, Garfiel gnashed his canines and responded so.

It was not something he could provide reasoning for, or properly explain. However, since it was unthinkable that people were made up of nothing more than “memories” and “information”, he answered so.

To Garfiel’s response, Ezzo narrowed his eyes,

Ezzo: “Yes, I am of the same opinion as Garfiel-kun.”

Garfiel: “…Huh?”

Ezzo: “What is with that idiotic expression and voice? It is ruining your masculinity. Maintain a dignified air.”

As Garfiel somehow managed to wring out an answer, Ezzo looked at his troubled face, raised a finger, and continued, “You see…”

Ezzo: “Garfiel-kun’s observation has hit the nail right on the head. Even if the Books of the Dead describe everything about the dead, even if the experiences and emotions accompanying those descriptions can be lived through vicariously, and even supposing the mind can be overwritten, that would not be a resurrection of the dead. It would be the birth of a distinct entity that shares the memories, experiences, and emotions of the dead.”

Subaru: “A distinct entity, that shares in memories, experiences, and emotions…”

Ezzo: “I do not consider that to be a true resurrection of the dead. I wonder if many would not also intuitively think that way? That is why, I wish to ascertain. —Does Al-dono desire to resurrect the dead? If for that purpose, he has chosen the method of a Book of the Dead, his wish shall not be granted."

Subaru: "…"

Ezzo: "But, then again, if he wishes to keep Priscilla-sama within his heart, that is yet another plan."

Slowly shaking his head, Ezzo brought his own thoughts to a close.

Being prompted to think through that manner of speaking, Garfiel's teeth had ended up clattering, and he then peeked at Subaru's state.

Subaru ought to have been the one who wanted to sympathize with Al's feelings, and do something for him, the most. Hearing what Ezzo had just said, just what would Subaru think?

Subaru: "Am I an idiot? No, I am definitely an idiot."

Beatrice: "Subaru…"

Subaru: "Until I was told about it, I hadn't even considered such a possibility… I simply thought that Al just wanted to know what Priscilla was thinking in her final moments. That, and I was also hoping that he might be able to get himself together while searching for the Book…"

Pressing his fist against his forehead, Subaru blamed himself for not having thought of it. Witnessing his pitiful state of self-reproach, Garfiel grabbed the arm pressing his fist against his forehead with a "Captain".

No relief would come from tormenting himself like that. This was something that Garfiel deeply understood through the white scar upon his own forehead.

Ezzo: "I do not think you ought to be blamed for not having thought of it. This is just something that I could think of because I have had the experience of actually reading Books of the Dead, as well as the tendency to look at things with a multi-layered approach. There remains room for doubt on whether Al-dono intends to enact such a thing. But—”

Subaru: “I know. I really do, Ezzo-san. —If by some chance, Al wants to disappear so Priscilla can return, that’s a no-go.”

Firmly clenching his molars, there was strength in Subaru’s eyes as he responded to Ezzo. Then, Subaru looked towards Garfiel, who had grabbed his hand,

Subaru: “My bad, I caused you to worry.”

Garfiel: “Ain’t somethin’ ya need to apologize for. This time, it’s my amazin’ self’s job to worry ‘bout ya, Captain. Both Ottobro ‘n Emilia-sama are really countin’ on me a ton, after all.”

Subaru: “Well, guess there’s no helping it.”

As Garfiel released his hand and shrugged his shoulders, Subaru gave a wry smile and dropped his own shoulders. Then, Subaru muttered “Alright” and,

Subaru: “Let’s all agree to not say anything about this to Al. If he hasn’t thought of it himself, then it might go to serve as unnecessary encouragement. Just make sure not to leave Al alone.”

Garfiel: “If he searches for the Book when he’s by himself ‘n ends up readin’ it, there won’t be any way to stop him.”

Ezzo: “It would be ideal to locate the Book before he does. Whether you intend to show him the Book or not, having the Book grants you the initiative.”

Subaru: “…Though, I don’t wanna think about it like a scramble for initiative.”

Garfiel: “Captain…”

Considering the possibility that Al might end up not knowing what to do, Subaru feebly muttered in the midst of the conversation.

To begin with, the reason they had brought Al to the Tower like this was to prevent him from ending up at a loss for what to do. And yet, if the act of coming here caused Al to not know what to do, then it was an act akin to putting the carriage before the ground dragon.

Garfiel: "…"

Fixing his gaze on the floor of the Tower by his feet, Garfiel cursed the Pleiades Watchtower.

For what reason did the Tower store the memories of the dead in the form of Books of the Dead, tempt the hearts of those who seek them, and torment Subaru and the rest of them?

Beatrice: "Al is currently searching for the Book he seeks in the library, I suppose?"

Ezzo: "Yes, he should be."

Beatrice: "What of the girl named Flam, who you left together with him? What sort of girl is she, in fact?"

Ezzo: "She is an attendant of Felt-sama… or rather, she is a servant of House Astrea. She is the descendent of a family that has served House Astrea for generations, so while she is young, she possesses strength that is not to be made light of. Without magic, I would not be able to do a single thing against her."

At Ezzo's explanation, Garfiel was able to understand Flam's posture from earlier.

He had not seen her moving with agility, but Flam's standing posture was by far the most beautiful one there—she kept her center of gravity prepared in a manner that rivaled Ram. That was not to say that her abilities were equal to those of Ram, but since she worked for House Astrea, it was probably fine to expect her to have strength corresponding to that role.

Ezzo: "In all likelihood, Al-dono will spare food and sleep in favor of searching for the Book. We also intend to offer help to split up the labor in the search, but… what is the timeframe of your sojourn at the Tower?"

Subaru: "—We plan to stay for three days. Al has also accepted that."

Three days, that was the predetermined period of their sojourn at the Pleaides Watchtower.

Even if Priscilla's Book of the Dead is not located in that time, they would leave the Tower after three days, and return Al to the Barielle Domain, where he would stay by Schult's side.

That was why, until then, Subaru wished to create an impetus for Al to regain his footing, and Garfiel also approved of that point.

It would be good if these three days could be used to serve a constructive purpose for Al.

And, ensuring that this time would not be used for anything else was—

Garfiel: "—The duty that my amazin' self's gotta fulfill here no matter what."

Clenching his fists so tightly that his bones began to creak, Garfiel firmly assumed his own responsibility.

In order to accomplish what had been entrusted to him by Emilia, Frederica, Otto, Ram, and Rem, who were not present here. —And, by Roswaal too.

Volcanica: "—Thou, who hath reached the top of the Tower. Step forth through the First Floor, almighty petitioner."

Indeed, as Garfiel resolved himself to paint over the disquieting possibilities, the eyes of the Divine Dragon, the target of their gaze unclear, oversaw him and his allies with their unchanged state of ambiguity.

Chapter 11:
You Are No Longer Among Us

1

???: “I know everyone is worried, but I think they’re acting a little too crude.”

While preparing dinner for everyone inside the Pleiades Watchtower, Petra expressed her thoughts on the awkward atmosphere.

It had already been half a day since they arrived at the tower, and they had a time limit of three days for their stay, so Subaru and the others had rushed to the library to search for the book they were looking for.

Petra was busy preparing dinner for the group, who would surely come back hungry, but the atmosphere in the library nearby was terrible.

Petra: “Neither Subaru nor Garf-san were able to concentrate on finding the book at all. Hey, are you listening?”

In response to Petra’s question, the one who nodded absentmindedly with a “Yeah, I hear you” was Meili. She scooped out some of the contents of the pot Petra was heating on the stove with a small spoon and tasted it,

Meili: “Yes, this is deli~cious. Petra-chan, your cooking is getting better and be~tter.”

Petra: “Thanks, but I still have a long way to go before I can reach the heights of Frederica-neesama, so I have to keep working hard. Besides that, the formidable Rem-neesama has returned…”

Meili: “Would she really be a formidable oppo~nent? Ram Onee-san’s younger sister doesn’t remember anything, ri~ght? Then, I don’t think they are any threat to you, Petra-chan, either in cooking or anything el~se."

Petra: "You don't know that. She fell in love with him once, so it wouldn't be strange at all for her to fall in love with him again… or rather, I think it's already a little strange."

Petra lowered her voice and questioned the atmosphere between Subaru and Rem.

Having been asleep for a long time, Rem's awakening made Petra happy. Subaru and Ram had always been concerned about her, and Petra had also looked after her as she slept every day. She was fully aware of how cherished Rem was.

To be honest, she also thought that if Rem had not woken up sooner, she would not have been able to assess her love rival's strength.

When Petra met Rem in person and spoke with her, she got quite a good impression from her earnest and hardworking attitude, but there was something off—something strange about her. Due to her lack of memory, she had quite a few disputes with Subaru, and even now, she seemed to be responding to him in a relatively cold and harsh manner.

Petra: "But, it's still strange."

Meili: "Hmmm, I see~. But Onii-san might have that kind of side to hi~m. No matter how much I gla~re at him, he makes it all seem kind of silly~."

Petra: "Yeah, that's right. I thought Subaru was a strange person at first too… Wait, wasn't the way you just said that strange, Meili-chan?"

Meili: "Stop i~t, you worry too mu~ch."

Meili stuck out her tongue and raised her hands with a displeased look on her face. Petra stared at her with a "mu~" expression and withdrew her suspicion for the time being.

Before departing for the Empire, Meili had said that Petra was overthinking things when she returned from the Pleiades Watchtower, but Petra thought it was not a bad idea to be this cautious when it came to Subaru.

Anyone could understand Subaru's appeal if they spent some time with him. And if they understood his appeal, the possibility of their feelings turning into something more special would increase dramatically.

Petra: "Even in the empire, he made a good impression on a lot of people while he was away from us… Subaru increased the number of people who liked him by about a thousand."

Meili: "That's got to be an exaggera~tion. A thousand people is way too much…"

Petra: "The number kept going up. It was mostly men, so that was good, but you can't let your guard down."

Meili, who had not seen the real thing, laughed it off as a joke, but Petra was not in the mood to laugh it off.

While clenching her fist vigorously, she stirred the pot with her other hand to prevent it from boiling over, but her heart was always overflowing with thoughts of Subaru.

If she did not do so he would surely wander away from her sights, unconsciously approach someone hurt, and go to great lengths for them.

—Just like how now they were at the tower to help Al move forward.

Petra: "So, about Al-san…"

Meili: "Oh, you were saying something about being crude or wha~t not. What do you mean by tha~t?"

Petra: "I'm just saying what I see. Subaru and Garf-san are too obvious in their attempts to keep an eye on Al-san…"

Meili: "True, those two don't seem like they'd be good at keeping an eye on some~one… Which person is Al-sa~n? The little guy? The guy in the helmet?”

Petra: “Meili-chan…”

After she had finished tasting the food, Meili moved away from the pot and sat down on the luggage that was lying there. As she rested her chin on her hands and gave that disinterested response, Petra pouted and said, “geez.”

As she only joined the group partway through, and had therefore only heard bits and pieces of what happened in the Empire, it was no wonder—

Petra: “Don’t act like you’re already done with your work. You’re one of us, Meili-chan, so try to take an interest in it.”

Meili: “Even if you say that, I don’t have any work until we head ho~me. Even if you tell me not to look like I’m all done, I can’t help i~t… Also, Petra-chan, I don’t think I’m cut out to be a member of your grou~p.”

Petra: “You don’t have to worry about that anymore. After all, didn’t you go to the Capital and get the Council of Wise Men’s pardon? You should be proud of yourself. Hold your head up high, with that cute face of yours.”

Meili: “Ye~s, it is a cute face.”

Petra sighed at Meili, who sat with her hands on her cheeks and a serious expression on her face, not even a smile.

Meili really was not a bad girl at heart, but she had become so used to pretending to be a bad girl that it had become a way of life for her. She herself had started to lose track of whether she was being genuine or pretending. Probably.

Petra: “Ugh… There are so many people I have to teach from square one…”

Meili: “You always seem so busy, Petra-cha~n. I wonder if you ever get ti~red.”

Petra: “You’re one of the causes! Besides…”

Meili: “Besi~des?”

Petra: “I can’t say I’m tired. If even the person I want to rest the most doesn’t rest, it makes it even harder to raise the issue, don’t you think?”

Meili: “…”

Petra: “Oh, the person I want to rest isn’t Otto-san, okay? Otto-san should himself make some time and get a good night’s sleep. At least six hours a day!”

Although Otto was used to not sleeping, it was, unlike Roswaal, not because he did not need much sleep, but because he was just overdoing it. As proof, there were times when he would sleep for more than half a day like a corpse after he had finished a big job.

Petra: “Even though I’ve told him that he shouldn’t compare himself to Master, who is cheating with his own constitution, he doesn’t listen to me at all.”

Meili: “Hehe… I’m not good at talking like that either, bu~t you really don’t like that lord, do you, Petra-cha~n? Aren’t you relieved that you’re not with hi~m?”

Petra: “That’s true. Because of that, I ended up going separately from Frederica-neesama, but it means that she trusts me.”

This was the first time that Petra had been left in charge of a long journey of ten days or more, although she had been left in charge for a day or two previously. At the meeting of the Western Margrave, and on the journey to the Empire, Frederica or Ram were always with her. This time, however, Petra was left on her own.

For that reason, her enthusiasm was different. She had to keep an eye on everyone.

Petra: “That’s why I’m worried about Al-san too… He’s the one with the helmet.”

Vic.1120

Meili: “Yeah, yeah, he’s quite a conspicuous ma~n. Isn’t he the reason we came to the To~wer?”

Petra: “That’s right. He really wanted to read a certain Book of the Dead… I think it’s a good thing, if reading it makes him feel better.”

Meili: “—? That’s a strange way of putting i~t. Does Al really worry you that mu~ch?”

Petra: “Well, no, I’m more worried about Subaru and Garf-san than I am about Al-san.”

At Petra’s answer, Meili tilted her head and asked, “About Onii-san and the othe~rs?“ It seemed that she was more interested in this than the topic of Al, and she looked at Petra with a frown.

Petra responded to Meili’s gaze with a “because” and continued,

Petra: “They both think too much about things like it’s their own problem. When your family, friends, or other important people are feeling down, you know how sometimes you get so caught up in trying to cheer them up that you end up getting depressed too?”

Meili: “…Who know~s? Is that so~?”

Petra: “Maybe I was foolish to ask you, Meili-chan…”

Petra, who was seeking sympathy, was met with a blank expression from Meili. Feeling a lack of a response, as if pushing against a strong tide, Petra’s worries were directed at Subaru and Garfiel in a six to four ratio.

Petra had also heard from Subaru and the others that there was a suspicion that Al’s purpose in searching for Priscilla’s Book of the Dead was to resurrect her.

She had no idea whether this was actually possible, but if it was, Petra could understand why Subaru and the others would want to keep a close eye on Al’s every move.

Petra: “But, even though I originally wanted Al-san to read the book, I now feel like it might be the opposite, and my head and heart are at odds with each other.”

Petra knew that when there was a discrepancy between one’s head and heart, between reason and emotion, their performance would suffer dramatically. Not just for Petra but for anyone, it went without saying that one’s results would be better when one’s sense of purpose and actual actions were in sync.

Now, could it really be said that Subaru and the others had their minds and actions in sync?

Petra: “…”

Meili: “If you ask me, Petra-chan thinks too much, too~. —Oh~?”

And, looking at Petra’s contemplative profile, Meili noticed something and spoke up. Drawn in by the voice, Petra asked “What?” as her eyes fell on someone who had appeared in the entrance to the room.

On the Fourth Floor there were many rooms, and as Petra and her friend were preparing dinner in one of the rooms, they were visited by the person they had just been talking about—

???: “Yo, I thought something smelled good, are you two girls preparing dinner?”

Saying so, Al gave a light wave and walked over. Flam was quietly following behind him, probably to make sure he was not left alone.

Petra was at a loss for words momentarily at the unexpected appearance of the pair, but,

Meili: “Ye~s, dinner is being prepared… but I’m just watch~ing, Petra-chan is the one co~oking.”

Al: “What, you’re blatantly slacking off? Is what I’d like to say, but Miss Meili has done a great job on the way here. I can’t really speak all high and mighty to you.”

Meili: “Of co~urse. As long as I’m here, no one can disobey me, you kno~w.”

Al: “No doubt, no doubt. Thank you, thank you.”

Al made a bow to the pompous Meili while using only his right hand to make a gesture of gratitude. While those two talked to each other, Flam walked over to Petra who was mixing a pot,

Flam: “Thank you for your hard work. I apologize for leaving the preparation of our meal to you.”

Petra: “Oh, it’s fine. Flam-chan, you were taking care of Ezzo-san until we got here, right? You can leave it to us for a while.”

Flam: “Thank you. Ezzo-sama has a bad habit of quickly forgetting to eat or sleep because he is so absorbed in what is in front of him; it is a problem.”

Petra: “I am familiar with that type of person as well…”

At Flam’s sincere words, Petra nodded deeply out of sympathy.

Flam was also a servant, but she was probably one or two years younger than Petra. She was born into a family that served the Astrea family, so she may have more experience as a servant than Petra, but—

Petra: “Let’s work hard together as the caretakers for everyone. You can talk to me about anything.”

Striking her own chest, Petra spoke to Flam like she was her older sister.

No matter how much her work skills improved, Petra’s position as the youngest in the camp would not change. No matter how hard she worked, age was the only thing she could not catch up to or surpass, and that was the downside of being the youngest.

Of course, with Beatrice and Emilia being over four hundred and one hundred years old respectively, she could not act like an Onee-san with them, despite their cuteness.

Therefore, the opportunity to be in contact with someone clearly younger than herself, such as Schult and Utakata in the Empire, was invaluable to Petra.

Flam: “Thank you, Petra-sama. I will do so immediately.”

Petra: “Yes, yes, what is it?”

Flam: “No matter how many times I have told him, the young master has not gotten out of the habit of treating both my sister and myself like children. What should I do?”

Petra: “You mean R-Reinhard-san~?”

With the immediate subject of the consultation suddenly being a big one, Petra was very unsure of how to respond.

Although Reinhard van Astrea and Petra did not know each other directly, everyone in the Kingdom of Lugunica has at least heard rumors of the Knight Amongst Knights.

Petra’s opinion was that Subaru was more amazing as a Knight, but it would be remiss to make such an assessment of someone she had never met in person.

In any case—

Petra: “However, I know how it feels to be treated like a child when you do not want to be treated like one. In the meantime, you should stop letting him pat you on the head.”

Flam: “The head… well, myself aside, Grassis does not seem to mind being patted on the head by the young master. Myself aside.”

Petra: “It’s not like I dislike it or anything, you know? I do not dislike it per se, but the sense of distance in a relationship like that isn’t good.”

Petra herself was in the process of trying to rectify this stalemate in a relationship. Therefore, her answers to Flam’s questions were very specific.

Hearing the response Petra gave with her fists clenched, Al cleared his throat.

Petra: “Hm, Al-san, what do you need.”

Al: “My bad my bad. But the advice you gave to Flam-chan is a little off the mark. It looks like Flam-chan and you have different feelings.”

Petra: “Eh, really? Do you not like Reinhard-san?”

Flam: “I do like the young master, but not as someone of the opposite sex.”

Petra: “Oh, um, right…”

While embarrassed for jumping to the wrong conclusion, Petra stuck out her tongue a bit. And then, she turned her attention to Al and continued with, “That’s surprising”,

Petra: “Al-san, you actually understand this sort of thing.”

Al: “Oi oi, I’m a mature old man you know? I’ve been through the sweet and the bitter, though mostly through other people.”

Petra: “If it’s other people, then you can’t boast about it right?”

Al: “It’s not boasting, y’know. It’s self depreciation, self depreciation… oops.”

Shrugging his shoulders, Al’s stomach suddenly growled. Petra loosened her lips to that,

Petra: “Please wait a little longer. I will be finished soon.”

Al: “Ah~, my bad for the rush. This one’s not on me, it’s on my growling stomach.”

Petra responded with a nod and a “Yes sir” to the talkative Al.

And then while exchanging light banter with Al, Petra feared that Subaru and Garfiel’s attitude towards him was excessive.

She understood why they worried with all of the varied, tangled assumptions. But at the very least Al could pretend to make a recovery. A truly down and depressed person was incapable of that kind of care for the people around them.

Meili: “Old man, you sure do eat.”

Although probably not reading Petra’s mind, Meili spoke to Al. Al responded with “Of course” to Meili’s words and fiddled with the seams of his helmet.

Al: “Being hungry is a problem… not eating or drinking drops your performance and doesn’t it actually take you further away from your goal?”

Meili: “That’s true. But, not drinking, eating, or sleeping is an option. You only have three days after all.”

Petra: “Meili-chan…”

Al: “No no, I don’t mind. I’m aware I have a limit, and it’s obvious to think, are you really serious when you’re taking it that easy?”

Waving his hand, Al could not rebuke Meili’s words that hit the mark too well. Then, he tapped his helmet with the nails of his waving hand and continued with a “But”,

Al: “I’m the princess’s jester. To say I’ll struggle in a desperate frenzy… I think that’s a bit off.”

Petra: “Al-san…”

Al: “Also, it’s true I promised a limit of three days but, it’s not set in stone right? Nothing is measured exactly by an hourglass. Don’t you think if I cry, cling and beg, I could pull off an extra half day or so?”

Petra: “—Pfft!”

Petra could not help but burst out laughing when he suddenly brought up such a convenient argument after speaking in such a serious tone.

Truly, if Al really did cry, cling, and beg then they would probably need to extend their stay half a day.

However—

Petra: “That would be inconvenient for us. Please make sure to properly drink, eat and make time to sleep.”

If they relied on that from the beginning, then there would be no point in a deadline. Above all, the strictness that the rest of them could not do, it was Petra’s job to properly speak that aloud.

Even if she knew that they may eventually overrule her.

Petra: “During these three days, I will be doing my best to help Al-san with Subaru and the others. —Okay, it’s ready.”

Al: “So strict. Woah.”

While he said that, Petra transferred the contents of the pan into a bowl then lightly gave a sample to Al. Al took it, raised the chin of his helmet then brought it to his lips,

Al: “Hot, hot… But, it’s tasty.”

He said in a soft mutter. Petra was satisfied with that.

2

???: “I dare say, apart from the Sage who created this library, I am perhaps the person who has read more Books of the Dead than anyone else in the world. Allow me to state my perspective: I believe that what ultimately makes this library special, is that it allows for the vicarious reliving of lost history.”

After dinner had concluded, Subaru and the others reentered the Library of Taygeta.

There, while helping Al find the book he was seeking, as well as simultaneously keeping an eye on Al’s movements, Ezzo had been giving a lecture to the preoccupied Subaru along with the others.

Ezzo’s voice, contrary to his appearance, was low-pitched and projected well in the high-ceilinged library.

Even though they were in different camps, and did not share the same goals, his kindness in getting along with them in this way was commendable. However, since Flam was uninterested in joining in on such topics, it could just be that his eagerness to speak on them had exploded.

Regardless, since it was an interesting subject, it was not boring to listen to.

Beatrice: “Even so, calling it “reliving lost history” is quite an exaggeration, in fact. I am aware that a Book of the Dead gives a glimpse into the life of the one who has died, but the scale is different, I suppose.”

Ezzo: “Strictly speaking, Miss Beatrice’s understanding is unimpeachable. However, that would only be from a perspective limited to a single book. On the other hand, when extrapolated across multiple books, the situation changes.”

Since they had split up to look through the bookshelves, they tended to speak quite loudly; it felt like talking out loud in a school library, and brought with it a trifling sense of guilty pleasure.

As they continued to talk across the bookshelves, Subaru tilted his head at Ezzo’s reply.

Subaru: “Come to think of it, Ezzo-san has read more than ten Books, right… The Books of the Dead, since you can only read the ones of people you personally knew, isn’t that a pretty high strike rate?”

Garfiel: “Even tho’ he’s spent all this time holed up in here, I’d agree with ya. I’ve been lookin’ for more than half a day now, but not a single name my amazin’ self knows has come up.”

Beatrice: “This is a really low strike rate, in fact… Names that are familiar are many, I suppose. But, the names of acquaintances are an entirely different matter, in fact.”

Holding hands with Subaru and looking at the same bookshelf as he was, Beatrice muttered so in a whisper.

In fact, having lived for four hundred years, the walking encyclopedia that was Beatrice had come across several familiar names every now and then. Perhaps out of concern, she had not made an effort to mention them, but every time she had found one, since there was a reaction from their linked hands, it was not something she could keep hidden from Subaru.

Subaru, as well, had not thought to ask about the people she did not mention.

Al: "To lie here and brag about being a lucky boy, I don't think Ezzo-san is so vain. If y'know some sorta trick to such good luck, could you please teach it to me?"

Ezzo: "I am sorry to break it to you, but the secret is not luck, Al-dono. Natsuki-dono and his companions ought to be slightly more flexible… and should start by doubting the premise."

Subaru: "The premise?"

Garfiel: "Doubt it, ya say?"

Ezzo was an eloquent speaker, and yet Subaru and Garfiel furrowed their brows at the proposition he had presented. Ezzo, on the other hand, seemed pleased with their response, saying "Yes!" with evident elation in his voice,

Ezzo: "As Natsuki-dono said, in order for a Book of the Dead to exhibit its potential to the fullest, one must be acquainted with the person in question. I can think of a few reasons why such a restriction might be imposed, but they are all merely speculation, so let us put them aside for the time being. What matters is, given that premise, to relive the lives of those who have died a long time ago… during the Era of the Witches, for example, could be deemed infeasible."

Subaru: "I really don't want to look into those, even if I could, but… that premise, you doubt it?"

Garfiel: “Ya sayin’ it can happen? That people other than acquaintances can get to look into ‘em?”

Beatrice: “If such a cheating technique existed, Ezzo would have read more than just twelve Books, I suppose.”

Ezzo: “Hahaha, it is certainly thrilling to have my inquisitiveness recognized as such!”

Although it did not seem like a compliment, Beatrice’s words had put Ezzo in a good mood.

Ezzo seemed like someone who would have been suited to a position like a teacher, and Subaru thought seriously about what he said, but an answer could not come to mind straight away.

Instead—

Al: “—Though it feels unlikely, a possibility does come to mind.”

Ezzo: “Oh, splendid! Then, perhaps you could explain the possibility that you have surmised?”

Al: “The premise is that you can only read the Books of people you know. Since that’s the case, you can’t read the Books of those who died long ago. —But, if you know someone who died a long time ago, then you can.”

Subaru: “Wait, that’s true, but weren’t we just saying that it can’t be done?”

Al: “Is that so? You can do it in this place, don’t you think?”

Stating thus, Al made a gesture of looking around the Library of Taygeta. Subaru was initially slow to comprehend what Al had said, and became lost in thought.

But, concerning the point of destroying the premise, and the way Al had just spoken, he did arrive at such a possibility.

That was—

Subaru: “If you were to read someone’s Book of the Dead, you could relive their life. Which implies that, compared to prior to reading the Book, the range of people you would know would have expanded. If that’s the case, then…”

Beatrice: “By increasingly stacking up acquaintances through this reliving, the number of lives that can be experienced, as well as the time traversed backwards, can also be increased, in fact. What Ezzo meant finally makes sense, I suppose.”

Ezzo: “Reliving lost history…!”

Taking over from Al’s speculation, Subaru and Beatrice, having found such means of utilizing the Books of the Dead, looked towards Ezzo.

Before the eyes of Subaru and the others, he slipped out from behind a bookshelf, spread his arms wide, and nodded.

Ezzo: “Brilliant. It is such a pleasure to see young people solve difficult problems by thinking through it on their own. I, too, although walking ahead of you, find my heart racing.”

Al: “Ahh, sorry, but I’m older than you, Ezzo-san.”

Beatrice: “Betty, too, finds it upsetting to be treated like a young person, in fact. You are making light of a Great Spirit who has lived for four hundred years, I suppose.”

Ezzo: “Ahem, I have been rude! However, Natsuki-dono and Garfiel-dono are young people, right? If only you had observed their faces when they arrived at the realization…”

Garfiel: “Gao…”

The words of the exultant Ezzo came to a stop at the displeasure evident in Garfiel’s expression.

Garfiel, who had been counting something with both of his hands, his emerald-green eyes filled with confusion, tried his best to digest what Subaru and the others had just discussed, and ended up short-circuiting.

Garfiel: “By readin’ the Books, the guys ya know’ll increase? That’ll increase, but the Books left to read’ll decrease? Increase? I don’t get what y’all are sayin’…”

Subaru: “…It’s okay, Garfiel. What we were discussing just now, it isn’t relevant to what we are trying to do right now, and it’s something that you can get by without knowing.”

Subaru gave a wry smile as he comforted Garfiel, who seemed to have many question marks floating above his head.

At any rate, they now knew the reason why Ezzo had been able to read twelve Books of the Dead. He had not hit the lottery by being endowed with the absurd luck needed to read Twelve Books of the Dead; rather, he dealt with the situation by taking a drastic measure to increase the number of Books that he could read—by his vicarious experience with the Books of the Dead, he became acquainted with more of the dead in them.

And, just as Ezzo had surmised, by doing so repeatedly, it should have allowed for going back in history a century or two, and it might have even been feasible to look into the time of the Witches from four hundred years ago, which he had given as an example.

Unfortunately, Subaru was not interested in that era, but—

Subaru: “—Satella.”

For but a moment, a name flashed across Subaru’s mind, and he closed his eyes to shake off the wicked thought.

Although he had said he held no interest in what had transpired four hundred years ago, there was one name in particular that did intrigue him. However, the person with that name had not died, but was rather sealed, or so it was said.

Consequently, her Book would not exist within this library, but even if her Book was here, Subaru was unsure if he would be able to read it. —To be precise, there really were no means of ensuring it, and honestly, he did not want to find out.

Subaru: “But, even if you know how to get it done, I think reading twelve Books would be suicidal. Impressive work.”

Ezzo: “Of course, even if I had used techniques to empty my mind, it was by no means an easy feat. Each time I read through a Book, it was necessary to separate the original me from the information that flowed in. Concerning safety, about two days of rest would be needed in between.”

Ezzo continued to be quite reckless, but realizing that it was a well-thought-out kind of recklessness, Subaru felt slightly more at ease. However, if he had started a Book every two days, given the present state of having completed twelve Books, it seemed slightly doubtful if that pacing matched.

In any case—

Al: “I’m not sure I should use the term enjoyable here, but this conversation has certainly been interesting. Thank you.”

Ezzo: “There is a fine line between interest and enjoyment. So long as you are careful about the manner in which it is expressed, there is no need to blame yourself for how you feel. Likewise, for listening to my lecture, you have my gratitude.”

Al: “Thank you.”

Watching as Al politely said so in response to Ezzo’s lecture, Subaru felt like he was beginning to regain his composure.

It did feel dangerous the first time he had so suddenly and carelessly reached for a Book of the Dead; but, even though Priscilla’s Book had not yet been found, the sense of danger that seemed to be emanating from Al’s entire body seemed to have faded considerably.

Although there were still times when he made somewhat self-deprecating remarks, he was honestly relieved to hear a little bit more of the frivolity that was typical of Al.

Subaru: “As expected, it’s hard on the psyche to be in a situation where you’re constantly doubting someone.”

As Subaru said this, he recalled his early days in the Vollachian Empire.

In a situation where he did not know anyone around him, unaware of whom to trust and whom not to, the time he had spent in constant fear of such things had been quite taxing upon his psyche. In the end, the Pleiades Battalion from the Gladiator Island, and eventually Emilia and the others had joined together with him, thereby alleviating such fears.

And so, with the weight on his shoulders lightened, it was when Subaru pulled himself together and looked at the bookshelf.

—He had discovered a Book of the Dead with the name 菜月Natsuki□昴Subaru inscribed upon it.

Subaru: “…”

With bated breath, Subaru motionlessly stared at that Book of the Dead.

It was the same thing that had happened last time. Taking Subaru’s Book of the Dead being present in the library as par for the course, the act of reading it had served as the key for the “Natsuki Subaru” bereft of his memories to return to being Natsuki Subaru.

Nonetheless, being faced with it once again caused his stomach to sink. Without any further delay, he decided to avert his eyes from that Book of the Dead and leave the area,

Subaru: “No…”

Wait; Subaru put the brakes on himself.

Subaru’s Book of the Dead being here, was fine. However, would it not be dangerous to avert his gaze and leave it there as it was? —Present here was Al, who, like Subaru, had been summoned from their original world to this parallel one.

The title of the Book was 菜月Natsuki□昴Subaru written in kanji, but Al might be able to read it. Then, if Al were to find the Book of 菜月Natsuki□昴Subaru and heedlessly open it, then was it not quite likely to give rise to some tremendously complicated developments?

For Al to learn of the outrageous things that had occurred in the life Subaru had started in this other world from zero until now, was fine. —The problem was, if that overlapped with the penalty of learning about Return by Death, Subaru did not know what sort of inconveniences it might bring about.

Subaru: “…”

The one who seemed to bestow the power of Return by Death upon him, the Witch of Envy—Satella, Subaru had no choice but to recognize that she did not bear any malice towards him. But on the other hand, it was the truth that he did not believe in the Witch enough to think she would ease up on the penalty.

So, in order to ensure that such a thing did not inadvertently occur, should he not then hide the Book?

Beatrice: “Subaru? You have been quite fidgety for a while now, in fact? Do you need to use the toilet, I suppose?”

Subaru: “No, that’s not it… umm, to tell you the truth, I found quite an inconvenient Book of the Dead, so if possible I want to move it to a place that’s harder to find.”

Beatrice: “Inconvenient… don’t tell me, have you located Priscilla’s Book, in fact?”

Subaru: “I guess it’s only natural you’d think so. But no, it’s not that.”

At Beatrice’s suspicion, Subaru shook his head from side-to-side.

He could not reveal Return by Death to Beatrice either, and he had avoided explaining it until now through the power of their bond, but this was a bit of a difficult situation.

Of course, Beatrice could not read kanji, so she could not read the title of 菜月Natsuki□昴Subaru. Having said that, it would be in bad faith to irresponsibly deceive her and hide the Book.

That was why—

Subaru: “Beako, this is a Book that absolutely must not be read. If someone were to mess up and read it, it’s possible that the Witch of Envy will reach her hands out of her shrine again.”

Beatrice: “Y-you’re speaking of outrageous things all of a sudden, I suppose…! Out of her shrine again, does that mean Subaru will be sent away to the Empire all over again, in fact? Such a thing must not be allowed to happen, I suppose!”

Subaru: “I think the same, and in reality, it might end up coming true. That’s why…”

Saying those words, Subaru pulled the Book in question of 菜月 Natsuki□昴Subaru out from the bookshelf. While being careful not to open it and inadvertently live through his own experiences again, he softly whispered into Beatrice’s ear.

Hearing that, Beatrice knit her eyebrows as she nodded seriously,

Beatrice: “Murak.”

Then, Beatrice activated her Yin Magic, making Subaru’s body as light as a feather. Liberated from the yoke of gravity, Subaru hopped on top of a bookshelf and stealthily hid the withdrawn Book there.

Subaru: “It’s like I’m a naughty brat who’s up to some serious mischief in the library…”

It was an act that would trouble the librarian, since a Book had not been returned to its original location. In front of Beatrice, who had worked as the librarian of the Forbidden Library for many years, it was an act that lacked the fear of God, but there was no other choice.

After three days, right before they would leave the Tower with Al, he would need to make sure to remember to return it to its original place.

Subaru: “Though, there’s the concern that Ezzo-san finds it with his curious mind and then reads it… I mean, it would be really bad if anybody reads it, so maybe it would be better to just dispose of it right away?”

???: “Dispose of what, bro?”

Subaru: “UOOOOWAHHH?!”

Having returned to Beatrice after hiding the Book, he had been racking his brains to think of how to handle the Book of 菜月 Natsuki□昴Subaru, and that was when a voice suddenly called to his back, causing him to shriek.

Causing that extreme shriek to reverberate throughout the archive, Subaru turned around; standing there was Al, taken aback by Subaru’s exaggerated reaction.

Al: “Oioi, you’re getting way too startled. I was just trying to make small talk.”

Subaru: “Ah, yeah, sorry for frightening you. I let out a way louder scream than I meant to.”

Al: “Nahh, wasn’t that big a deal for me, if anything, wasn’t it a bigger issue for her?”

Subaru: “Her?”

Then, looking to where Al was pointing, Subaru let out an “Ah” as he looked at Beatrice. Crouching down, Beatrice covered both her ears with her hands, tears welling in her eyes,

Beatrice: “Wh-Wh-Wha-What kind of loud voice was that, in fact…?! My ears, Betty’s ears are ringing, they’ve begun to ring, I suppose!”

Subaru: “I’m sorry! It wasn’t on purpose! I love you!”

Beatrice: “I cannot hear you, in fact! Say it in a louder voice, I suppose!”

Subaru: “Beako lovely! Beako pretty!”

As Beatrice drew ever closer to crying, Subaru earnestly appealed to her through love. Puffing up her cheeks, Beatrice kept silent after hearing Subaru's words, and then gave a deep sigh.

And then,

Beatrice: "Well, considering your feelings of love towards Betty, it will be pardoned, in fact. Display your gratitude to my generosity, I suppose."

Subaru: "I'm grateful, I'm grateful, many thanks, I love you forever. —Well then, umm."

Stroking Beatrice's head as she withdrew her tears, Subaru turned to face Al once again. Al, who had been watching over his lovey-dovey time with Beatrice, prefaced with "Ah, you done?" as he fiddled with the fixtures on his helmet,

Al: "Whenever I look at it, you really are deeply in love with that Spirit of yours, aren't you bro? Sorry for getting in the way of your honeymoon."

Subaru: "Don't worry about that at this point. If anything, delaying my time with Emilia-tan and the others after returning from the Empire is way more… wait no, I'm sorry!"

When Al lightheartedly made banter, Subaru had tried to respond in his usual tone, but realizing that he was making an exceedingly careless comment, he covered his mouth with his hand.

However, while Subaru was regretting that comment, Al put on a wry smile,

Al: "Welp, you aren't wrong. You're completely right, bro. Rather, lemme thank you again. Even if it's just three days, it must have been troublesome to set aside this time for me."

Al conveyed his gratitude, to which Subaru could not easily come up with a reply.

In their journey to the Pleiades Watchtower to search for a Book of the Dead, it was none other than Al himself who had proposed a sojourn of three days at the Tower. Of course, that may have also just been to increase his chances of being accompanied by Subaru and the others in order to arrive at the Tower safely.

However, Subaru also took this as proof that Al could not be that selfish.

Al: “Beako-chan, I’m sorry for bringing bro along with me. Thanks for coming with us.”

Beatrice: “—. It is a matter of course that Betty is together with Subaru, in fact. Also, Betty is not so benevolent as to repeat the same warning many times, I suppose. Correct it by yourself, in fact.”

Al: “Gotcha, gotcha. —She’s very kind, your kid.”

Subaru: “Yeah, that’s right. With a light body that’s just like fluffy cotton-candy, filled to maximum capacity with kindness and loveliness, that’s Beako.”

Replying to Al’s whisper, Subaru relinked his hand with Beatrice’s. Seeing the exchange between Subaru and Al, Beatrice seemed to hide her embarrassment with a, “Hmph, I suppose”, as she turned her face away.

Loosening his lips at Beatrice’s charming reaction, Subaru heaved a sigh, and,

Subaru: “Al, how’s the library?”

Al: “—. As you can see, no results just yet. I thought that it might be possible if I had three days, but man I’m really at a loss with this number of books. It’s really on the level of finding a single needle dropped in a desert, isn’t it?”

Subaru: “…”

As Al gestured toward the rest of the archive with his single hand, his words were not entirely mistaken.

In this world—nay, since this Great Library Pleiades was created, just how many people had lost their lives? The idea of ascertaining that, one book at a time, was overwhelming.

Much less, when just like Ezzo said, the books were increasing every second, let alone every day.

Subaru: “But, don’t give up man. We’re all here to lend you a hand.”

Al: “Bro…”

Beatrice: “That’s right, in fact. To end things with a broken heart due to not finding it despite making this much of a detour before returning to the mansion, will not be permitted, I suppose. That’s why you mustn’t give up, in fact.”

Al: “…”

At the sequence of words from Subaru and Beatrice, Al silently cast his eyes down. Seeing him opening and closing his lowered right hand, Subaru felt an air of hesitation about him.

That was what Subaru had hoped—putting it like that was far too cold-hearted, but having done something similar, it was a reaction he had wanted to elicit from Al.

With the objective of reading Priscilla’s Book of the Dead, Al had come to the Pleiades Watchtower.

However, by actually laying eyes upon the library, and still focusing on the act of processing Priscilla’s death, Subaru hoped that Al would be able to recover even if he was unable to read the Book.

As proof of that, Al’s depreciating statements of clear self-abandonment had decreased, and his attitude had softened.

The fact that he would then also begin to feel guilt because of that, Subaru understood.

Therefore, he added on.

Subaru: “Al, when Beako and I say to not give up, we aren’t talking about finding the Book. We're telling you to not give up on the things you can be satisfied with."

Al: "Satisfied…?"

Subaru: "Yeah. Not stuff like "I got fed up with it" or "I didn't have enough time", but to draw a conclusion through your own thoughts. That's what I think it means, to find satisfaction."

If he was unable to communicate it well, then Subaru thought this might come off as a terribly insensitive comment.

Depending on how it was interpreted, it might have sounded like he was trying to persuade him to be satisfied with Priscilla's death. But that was not what Subaru wished to say. It was not that, it was not a matter of whether Priscilla was dead or alive, but rather, to face the matter of Priscilla's death, and truly believe that he had confronted it enough, was to be satisfied.

Mourning her, remembering her, and finding closure somewhere. — That, was necessary.

For that purpose—

Subaru: "For three days, see through to it with all you've got until you're satisfied. I'll also, we'll also accompany you with everything we've got."

Beatrice: "I told you before, you mustn't have such unhealthy practices like depriving yourself of sleep and rest, I suppose. You'll become Otto, in fact."

As Subaru made a reassuring appeal, Beatrice winked as she added that on.

Hearing the words of the pair, Al slightly inhaled, and then slowly raising his helmet, he sighed. That was a long, long, so long that it seemed like a large mass of something was slipping out of him, sigh.

Al: "Three days, huh?"

Subaru: “Yeah. No extensions… Well, if you seriously beg for it I may end up thinking about it, but don’t count on it from the start?!”

Beatrice: “If we return later than expected, we’ll get a severe scolding from Emilia, I suppose.”

Subaru: “A severe scolding from Emilia-tan…! Though, that would still be an adorable sight in and of itself.”

No matter what emotions, what expression, or what angle, Emilia was so cute that his eyes would cease all functionality, but he had already worried her enough.

If possible, he only wanted to see positive faces such as smiles and bashful expressions from here on out.

Subaru: “Well, no matter the expression, the truth of EMT shall never waver, but…”

As Subaru said that, he shrugged his shoulders at Beatrice’s dumbfounded expression, and looked back at Al.

Then, meeting Subaru’s gaze head-on, Al nodded, and—

Al: “—Ol Shamak.”

—The next instant, the world of Natsuki Subaru cut to black.

3

Al: “Three days. With three days, there’d be some caution that something might happen on the third day.”

That which fell onto the Library of Taygeta’s floor with a high-pitched clunk, about to roll away, he pinned down with his toes to keep it from escaping.

Al: “The corollary of that, is that a person would let their guard down the most right after a nice chat on the evening of the first day.”

Squatting in place, he picked up the black orb that his toes had halted.

Cold and hard to the touch, it felt somewhat like a glass ball, but it was no object so fragile. It would be troubling if it were. —This, was a gaol capable of capturing even a Witch.

Al: “I understand, bro… no, Natsuki Subaru. —I won’t kill you.”

It seemed that there were some who would become desperate in their attempts to murder Natsuki Subaru no matter the cost, doing so with reckless abandon, but none of them understood. Even if that were indeed done, there would be zero meaning to it.

If that were to be done, it would be Natsuki Subaru’s battlefield.

One must never fight against Natsuki Subaru on his battlefield.

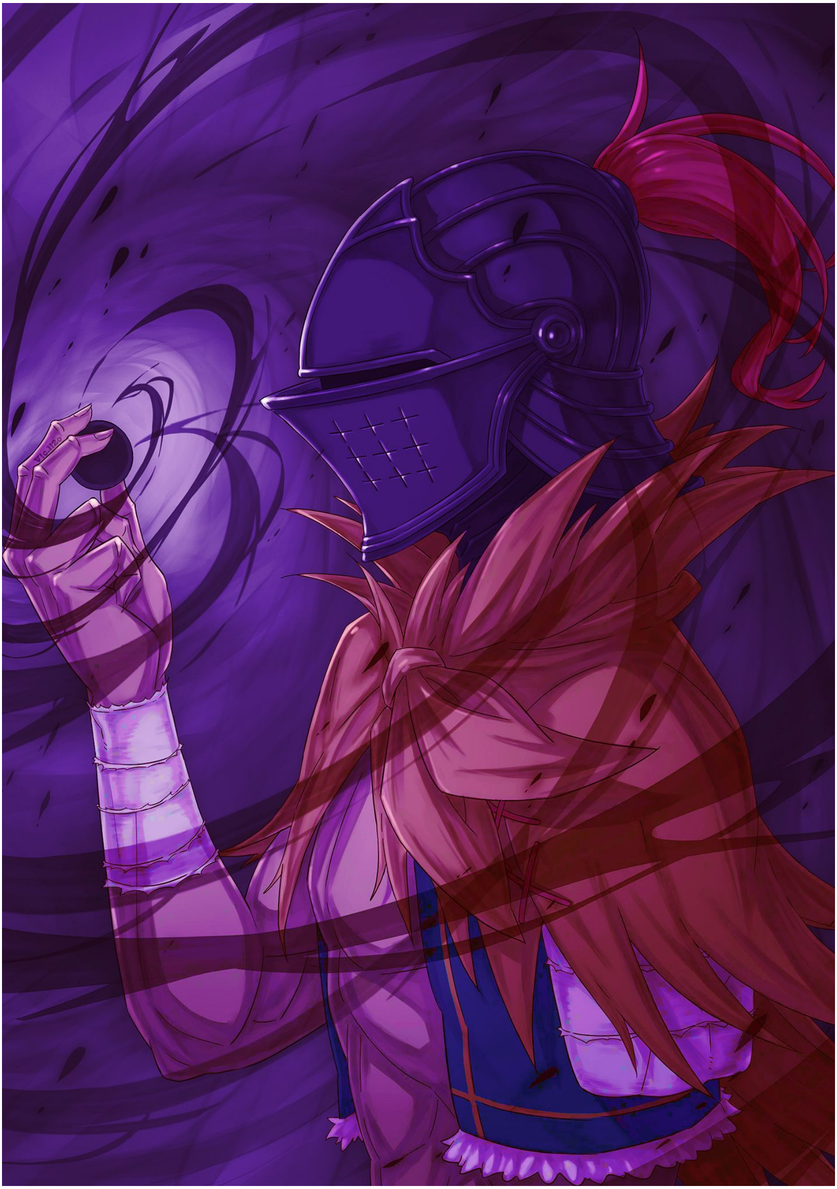
That was to say—

Al: “It’s starting, Teacher. —So that I may be myself.”

Priscilla Barielle, was no longer among them.

Ergo, Al—Aldebaran, in order to accomplish the original objective he had once abandoned, began to act.

—The battle to remove Natsuki Subaru from this world, commenced.



Vic.1120

Chapter 12:
Starlight Beyond the Realm of a Billion

1

???: "—Expand territory, matrix redefinition."

A fixed catchphrase was a declaration of war against the world; so had once spoken a Witch.

Magic, was a technique that reflected one's will into reality, defying the laws of nature by means of incantation. A sophisticated, delicate act of barbarism tantamount to forcibly rewriting the script, altering the ending.

That was to say, the incantations of magic spells were none other than a polite greeting that declared, "Now I shall destroy the world".

Of course, since it was a greeting, there were times it would be ignored, or rejected.

If the formulation of the technique was not fully fleshed out, if the activation was messed up due to a lack of Mana, or if it spontaneously fired bringing about a result unlike the one desired; there were various things that could happen.

To begin with, this parable itself was naught more than a digression.

That which he was attempting to perform was not magic.

Only, if saying a catchphrase was a declaration of war against the world, then its essence was merely the same.

That was exactly why—

???: "—Expand territory, matrix redefinition."

That was a forewarning of murder towards a world that wished not to be destroyed, from one who wished to destroy it nonetheless.

Kill. Destroy. Rip. Trample. Flatten. Desecrate. Tear. Mangle. Incinerate. Crush. Smash. Liquify. Saturate.

Any word was fine. It was the same as magic. —What mattered, was for the essence to be the same.

As long as the concluding words remained unchanged, he would use any method necessary.

No matter what happened, no matter how things went, no matter what it took—Natsuki Subaru would be removed.

That conclusion, was the only thing he absolutely would not change.

For that purpose—

???: “—Expand territory, matrix redefinition.”

Even if that starlight laid beyond the realm of a billion, he would definitely reach it.

2

—Four-thousand and sixty-one.

The one most laborious to remove from the board had been the Margrave, with his unexpectedly jestful antics.

The Margrave, highly perceptive and veteran of the battlefields as he was, would not be emotionally swayed by any sob stories whatsoever, especially when considering the severity of his attitude towards the Camp—no, towards all that would not stand to benefit him.

Considering the circumstances, seeing that he was unable to present anything that was in the Margrave’s benefit, he’d had no choice but to conclude that obtaining the latter’s agreement by dangling a carrot in front of him was a lost cause. But, having a keen sense for profits and losses often meant that one would sniff out any drawbacks more successfully than the average person.

Therefore, the optimal path would be to give the impression that losses would be had, were the Margrave to not follow his lead. —Once this direction was realized, it became easier to then undo the tangled threads.

Although ultimately taking advantage of the situation Schult had been placed into was nothing that did not bring him feelings of guilt, for the sake of avoiding discord in the Barielle Domain from here-on after, someone else's hand would need to be borrowed.

By all means, lay down your claim as you please, it's fine. After all, she's no longer among us.

—Nine-hundred and seventy-two.

The ones second most difficult to handle had been the Oni sisters, with the eldest in particular having been a formidable adversary.

From the onset, he had already known in advance that vigilance was indispensable against her.

Averting her intuition, keen to the point of abnormality, had been no trivial feat. However, a clear compromise had existed in her case—the little sister, dispossessed of Memories, with whom she had finally been reunited, being the biggest weak point of someone with nary an opening to be found.

She had wished to return with her precious younger sister back to their base as quickly as possible. —As awareness of this had always been present, possessing a method with which to nudge that forth would be a positive. But, being that the balancing act between blatantness and nonchalantness had been of truly fiendish difficulty, unceasingly heading towards a goal he could not at all reach had been troublesome.

And finally, though her caution had been lower compared to the eldest, the young sister, having built herself up on top of her lost Memories through many twists and turns in the Empire, and having forged a bond that she would not display openly, remained a daunting enemy as well.

Making use of their sisterly love brings pain to my heart but, it’s fine. After all, she’s no longer among us.

—Six-hundred and thirty-three.

The one most challenging to extract emotional understanding from, had been the Internal Affairs Minister, unsparing to outsiders as he was.

Contrary to his soft looks, he was the owner of a tough personality, and misinterpreting him as a pushover could lead to one getting burnt. He was an opponent that forced one to feel apprehension akin to going up against a horned bull.

The way to put him on the ropes had been similar to what had been employed with the Margrave, but because he was much more humane compared to the latter, by bringing up a pragmatic common ground, conditions were worked out, forcing him to give a yes.

No weapons, an interval of three days, and their trusted military officer accompanying them—all were restrictions that, due to being only natural, hurted not. Desiring even more than that from him would be perilous; he had been made aware of this a hundred times. After all, this was an opponent that, once dialogue was shut off, all hopes of reopening it would be gone.

For him, too, the clincher had been selfsame. —Making him consider the person who would feel morally responsible for his unstable self’s departure.

Exploiting his kindness makes me bitter but, it’s fine. After all, she’s no longer among us.

—Ninety-four.

Though the number of attempts was small, omitting the one with Rare Blood from the traveling companions headed for the Sand Sea had been an absolute necessity.

The possessor of flawlessly refined Rare Blood would have offered to be a companion as soon as possible if left unattended. He had no doubts or averse feelings towards her humanity and abilities, but the blood flowing through her veins would have served to hinder his objectives.

But, the quickest and most reliable method to nudge someone deeply compassionate in the desired direction was to make use of their compassion. Once knowing their sense of belonging to a group, and knowing of their considerable dislike for going against the flow, it had not been difficult to pull them along a path that was easy to follow.

At this point, he could say that he had a good idea of the majority of the relationships within the Camp, those whom he had never met included. Were she made to believe that a bad pairing would be left behind as a result of her accompanying the party, and that that would become a burden to the young child feeling forlorn, she would take the initiative and strive to resolve that issue.

The idea was not to make the impossible possible. It was to actualize those non-zero possibilities.

I don’t have comforting words to offer but, it’s fine. After all, she’s no longer among us.

—Five.

Given that he was deeply familiar with how to manipulate “her” heart, quite honestly, it had been a piece of cake.

Compassionate and benevolent, and likewise overflowing with thoughtfulness, “she” was quite easy to deceive, and not knowing how to doubt the words coming from him, “her” nature was that of taking things as frank and veracious. By all measures, “her” magnanimity was such that he should not have messed up even one time —ergo, the reason for his failures had not been any problem regarding “her”, but a problem regarding himself.

It was a matter of him having been hesitant to deceive “her”, to twist “her” thoughts to suit his preferences.

Were he to disregard that creaking of his heart, filling ”her” amethyst eyes with grief would be easy. To begin with, “she” was someone who had been attempting to empathize with his wounds. If he were to appeal to “her” in regards to the best thing “she” could do for the sake of her, “she” would naturally settle on that resolve.

More and more am I becoming unable to save myself but, it’s fine. After all, she’s no longer among us.

—Zero.

And, in regards to Natsuki Subaru, he did not fail even once.

He knew Natsuki Subaru through and through, and thus not a single shred of hesitation had existed within him.

It was merely, that he had only needed to assess the timing correctly.

After all—

???: “—Ol Shamak.”

When it came to requirements, dragging Beatrice into this trump card had been a matter of the utmost priority.

???: “…”

Due to the unfamiliar incantation and the formulation of a never-before-seen technique, Beatrice’s reaction had been delayed by a beat, and since she was what had been protecting Natsuki Subaru, a fatal opening had arisen.

Instantaneously pulling his arm closer to her, and moving to attempt a response, could be called a paragon of Contract Spirits—and, that had been Aldebaran’s true aim.

Aldebaran: “Three days. With three days, there’d be some caution that something might happen on the third day.”

—Ol Shamak, something of an anti-Witch trump card, was a forbidden technique that aimed to forcibly seal shut its target’s

Gate, preventing even their movements through restraints and a spell-seal.

In the sense that it was a technique whose existence had been prohibited from being revealed, even the Witch who had created it herself had avoided writing it down, passing it on only orally—and that too, had been limited to only Aldebaran.

Perhaps the reason why the inventor, why the Witch had bequeathed this forbidden art, which was capable of killing even her, to Aldebaran exclusively had not been because of any affection or trust in her student. Rather, she had done so due to nothing more than holding the logical belief that Aldebaran would not err in his usage of the technique, and that he would not employ it in any other way but to fulfill its purpose.

Aldebaran: “The corollary of that, is that a person would let their guard down the most right after a nice chat on the evening of the first day.”

In truth, Aldebaran had never harbored the thought of directing this forbidden technique against the Witch, or against any other Witch, and had never done so in actual fact. —Or, to be more precise, neither had he ever directed it towards the person he ought to have employed it on.

In other words, the forbidden technique she had devised and imparted unto him had at last seen the light of day.

Aldebaran: “I understand, bro… no, Natsuki Subaru. —I won’t kill you.”

In the midst of the battle against the Great Disaster, he had tried to use it as a trump card against Sphinx, who had proclaimed herself a Witch, but there had been an issue stemming from Sphinx’s end—due to the absence of a Witch Factor, it had been unable to display its true speciality.

Therefore, this moment marked the very first time that the forbidden technique of Ol Shamak had been activated properly.

Aldebaran: “…”

He used his fingers to pick up what had fallen to the ground, something that appeared to be a glass sphere of sable hue.

Within the orb that did not allow its interior to be seen, Natsuki Subaru and Beatrice had been confined together. —As she was a Great Spirit of the Yin attribute, it would have been problematic for Beatrice to analyze the forbidden technique.

At the time he had enclosed her within the range of the magic, it had been a gamble whether or not she would also be included as a target of the forbidden art.

But, he had won the gamble. Contracted with Natsuki Subaru, and sharing in his Gate, Beatrice became a target of the technique, and her existence was now sealed within the orb.

It had been troublesome to build the situation up to this point. But, troublesome was all that it had been.

She’s no longer among us. That’s why—

Aldebaran: “It’s starting, Teacher. —So that I may be myself.”

Indeed, it happened just after Aldebaran declared so with resolve.

???: “OHRAHHHHHHH—!!!”

Raising a tremendous battle cry, kicking off and splitting apart the floor of the library, a golden beast leaped at him with speed akin to an arrow.

His upraised arm, stout and flexible, was charged with so much strength that it would pulverize Aldebaran in a single blow were it to connect, completely dispossessing him of his ability to take action in less than a second.

It was likely that even in the case of it just grazing his shoulder instead of his head, that herculean strength would be enough to strip away more than half of his consciousness—however, that would only come to pass were a punch to be thrown.

Aldebaran: "—Hk."

???: "YA BASTARD!!"

The ferocious beast charged at extreme speed, and although Garfiel's emerald-green eyes were blazing with scintillating fury, instead of swinging at Aldebaran, he grabbed him by the arm and pinned him down to the library floor.

Being forced down by that sheer might without having taken a defensive stance, Aldebaran choked out a cry of pain as his jaw struck the floor. Ignoring that cry, Garfiel, pressing his knee against his opponent's back, bared his fangs,

Garfiel: "The fuck'd ya do to Captain 'n Beatrice?! Where are they?! That magic earlier—"

Aldebaran: "You got it wrong, Garf-chan."

Garfiel: "AHH?!"

When faced with Garfiel's attempts to interrogate him, Aldebaran responded in a low voice. That caused an angered timbre to come out of Garfiel's throat, but such a threat bore no meaning.

In the first place, this dialogue itself bore no meaning whatsoever.

Aldebaran: "Rather than pinning me down, the first thing you should've done is knock me out."

While providing a sincere response to that meaningless dialogue, Aldebaran slid his tongue around within his mouth. Then, ignoring Garfiel's perplexed reaction to his words—Aldebaran unwrapped the drug package that had been prepared behind his molar, and gulped it down.

Then, as tremendous heat caused the blood throughout Aldebaran's body to boil—

× × ×

???: "OHRAHHHHHHH—!!!"

Kicking off the floor with explosive vigor, a ferocious beast charged forth with speed akin to an arrow.

But, that ferocious beast was not aiming to strike Aldebaran, but to grab his arm and hold him down. —That moment, he dodged the incoming arm, and raised his elbow.

Garfiel: “Guoah?!”

Aldebaran: “With this—”

His opponent’s vigor would be hindered; right after Aldebaran had thought so, an impact struck his torso.

Garfiel had received a blow to his nose from his own momentum colliding with Aldebaran’s elbow, and unleashed a kick despite his nose bleeding, its singular strike demolishing Aldebaran’s hipbone, sending the latter flying backwards.

Becoming incapacitated would have been problematic.

Garfiel: “BASTARD…!!”

Aldebaran: “Next.”

Collapsing together with several bookshelves, he unwrapped the drug package while buried in a mountain of Books.

The shock perforated his entire body—

× × ×

???: “OHRAHHHHHHH—!!!”

A ferocious beast charged forth in tandem with a battle cry, and as he dodged its arm, he flicked his elbow upward in response.

Supposing he merely struck his opponent’s nose like this, then the outcome would be the same as earlier. And although he understood this, Aldebaran had no means of evading a front kick unleashed with that speed.

In that case, he just had to make sure that no front kick could be performed.

???: “Gobahkhgahh?!”

Upon the elbow that was about to collide with the charging face, he had placed a rock protector; swinging with force akin to striking a pickle stone, he slammed it into his opponent’s nose.

As his nose basked in a counter that made use of his own momentum, Garfiel was knocked back into mid-air, his nosebleed spraying everywhere as he flew past Aldebaran’s flank.

Aldebaran: “With this—”

Garfiel tumbled onto the floor, and crashed into a shelf, causing him to be buried alive by the Books falling out from therein.

While catching that in the corner of his eyes, Aldebaran took a huge leap backwards, confident he had succeeded in avoiding the first attack.

Thereupon—

???: “—El Shiha.”

Having just stepped back onto the floor, Aldebaran’s entire body grew sluggish after that short incantation was weaved—no, it had not grown sluggish. His entire body had been engulfed by a sense of immobility.

The source of Aldebaran’s immobility was a vast amount of water; something entirely out of place in a library—

???: “Excuse my poor manners in deliberately doing such a thing whilst knowing full well that moisture is the greatest enemy of books.”

Aldebaran: “—Hk.”

???: “However, producing a source of fire would have been unreasonable. Wind would have devastated the library, and earth would have soiled the books; thus, I had wanted to avoid using them. I want it to be understood that I made a bitter decision in the heat of the moment. Well then, the reasoning for why I had selected water is as I just explained, but—”

With these words, the small individual with their hand upraised towards him—Ezzo Cadner, waved his black cloak as he made a slow approach.

Rather than that being him putting on airs, the reason was tactical; a magician’s strategy to maintain vigilance on their opponent’s movements.

He was honored to be treated with such caution, but it did not seem like he would be able to meet those expectations.

After all, enveloping Aldebaran was the minimum amount of water needed to cover his body completely—as if he were being fitted with a bodysuit made of water, he was dispossessed of both his freedom to breathe and freedom to move his body.

Against that extraordinary capacity for magic, Aldebaran bore no means of contending.

However, while Ezzo maintained a fixed distance with Aldebaran,

Ezzo: “Al-dono, may I ask to hear an explanation to help me understand your side of the story? What was that earlier, that magic that is unknown to even me? More importantly, what happened to Natsuki-dono and Miss Beatrice? They were both worried that you might fall into despair and neglect your own self. To those two—”

—One-hundred and six.

Ezzo swiftly provided correct, sound reasoning that could rightly be called an adult’s perspective.

Contrary to his juvenile appearance, Ezzo Cadner was a surprisingly honest and sincere person. He would return sincerity with sincerity, and respond to respect with respect; such was the earnestness ingrained in his roots.

Therefore, when facing off against Ezzo, it was absolutely indispensable to have sincerity and respect. —As long as that was maintained, he would remain passive no matter what. His personality was that of expecting far too much from others. In that regard, his way of being fundamentally differed from that of Roswaal, despite them both being magicians.

If it were Roswaal, he would swiftly scorch Aldebaran's limbs, ravage his lungs with wind to rob him of his consciousness, and take away his freedom by imprisoning him in earth; all the while not paying mind to how he was impacting the Books of the Dead.

Ezzo would not do that. That was why.

Ezzo: "—Hk, such a foolish act!"

Cutting off his words, as Ezzo yelled with a stiff expression, Aldebaran's face within the watery membrane was clouded over by a hue of deep red.

It was evidence that he had regurgitated his roasted, melted viscera, having passed through his throat and out his mouth.

Without delay, Ezzo undid the magic restraint, and attempted to shift gears to healing magic, but it was already too late.

By the time he had thought it in his head, he was no longer able to catch up to Aldebaran—

× × ×

???: "—El Shiha."

???: "El Donaaa!"

Compared to the graceful and refined incantation, his was an unshapely incantation without a fragment of elegance.

But, activated while he was panting, the clumsy earthen armor quickly covered Aldebaran's body, and as to override the delicate film of water, it absorbed all the liquid.

???: “What?!”

The earthen armor was instantly converted to armor of mud, allowing Aldebaran to resume stepping on the floor, an action that ought to have been obstructed, before leaping backwards as his armor fell apart.

While his heels slid across the library floor, he withdrew to a farther position, gaining a clear line of sight on the two who were directing hostility toward him.

Ezzo, remaining vigilant towards him, and Garfiel, buried under the Books from a collapsed shelf—

???: “DON’T FUCK WITH ME!!”

Thrusting his arm out of the mountain of Books, Garfiel made his comeback while pushing away the collapsed bookshelf. Stepping forth with large strides so as to not tread on the fallen Books, he glared at Aldebaran.

Wiping off the blood smeared on his snout with the back of his hand, the bleeding ceased in just a few seconds. From the very roots of their existences, the combat strength of his body was fundamentally different from Aldebaran’s.

Dragging his burly, stout body forward, Garfiel was about to advance further towards him—

Ezzo: “Please wait, Garfiel-kun! It would be perilous to approach heedlessly!”

Garfiel: “AHH?! This really the time to be sayin’ that, Sensei-san?! Captain ‘n Beatrice got done in by that fuckin’ incomprehensible ball! As soon as possible, I gotta…”

Ezzo: “That is precisely why! That sort of magic, even I do not have knowledge of it! And above all else, he has just displayed that he is able to perfectly endure both of our attacks! It is abnormal!”

Garfiel: “—Hk.”

Ezzo: “Not once have I ever revealed my cards to him. And yet, he was able to perfectly deal with the water binding by soaking it up with earth. This cannot be explained as him merely being skilled in the art of war. Act with composure. You and I are the only ones here capable of restraining him.”

Keeping the hot-headed Garfiel in check, Ezzo adjusted his voice to a tone of composure.

It was clear that Ezzo’s words were persuasive, as the rage and agitation on Garfiel’s expression gradually subsided.

Above all else, it was Ezzo’s insight, perceiving and alluding to a fragment of Aldebaran’s cheat ability as a sense of unease through just a single bout of combat, that was abnormal.

As a matter of fact, Ezzo’s words were correct.

No matter how much he had attempted to come up with an ingenious solution, he did not have any way to omit Ezzo and Flam, who had already arrived at the Tower, or Garfiel, who was accompanying them as the result of a compromise reached with the Emilia Camp.

But, at the same time, it could be said that he had succeeded in suppressing the opponent’s forces down to just a combo of an extremely powerful warrior and a magician.

Aldebaran: “Even so, it’s still a hundred times more troublesome than any regular difficulty.”

Grumbling his complaints like curses, Aldebaran carefully surveyed the two.

Ezzo, who was keeping a watchful eye on his movements, and Garfiel, who had regained composure at Ezzo’s words—they had prepared an exceedingly burdensome attitude.

That was why—

Garfiel: “Y-ya bastard?!”

Ezzo: "—Hk, such a foolish act!"

Listening to the shocked voices of Garfiel and Ezzo, Aldebaran crumbled to his knees. Collapsing forward onto the floor, all strength fading from his body as he tumbled down the library steps, copious amounts of blood gushing out from the base of his helmet—

× × ×

???: "Please wait, Garfiel-kun! It would be perilous to—"

Approach heedlessly! The moment that Ezzo had called out to keep Garfiel in check, Aldebaran grabbed the bookshelf beside him and heaved it down to launch an attack on Ezzo, who was further down on the steps, with a domino effect.

Normally, the bookshelves of Taygeta would be held down by the weight of the Books of the Dead and would thus not easily fall over, but that would change altogether were there to be "stones" stealthily wedged underneath the bookshelves.

—Three-hundred and ninety-seven.

From the outset, he had intended to utilize this place as a battlefield, given the abundance of obstacles and ease of making preparations here.

He had long completed all of his preparations. Every time they got suspicious, he just had to send it forth to the next opportunity.

Ezzo: "—Shit!"

As the bookshelves collapsed towards him, Ezzo swiftly gave rise to a gale, forcibly stopping the domino effect, and attempting to cease damage from befalling the Books of the Dead falling to the floor.

That concern for the Books was quite admirable, but—

Aldebaran: "Dona."

Subsequently, the bookshelves to Ezzo's left, right, and rear were all knocked over, surrounding him on all sides.

With that wave of collapsing shelves and the avalanche of Books, Ezzo ultimately gave up on protecting the Books with a great amount of anguish, and from there rode upon the wind to jump out of the way, escaping damage.

Garfiel: “SENSEI-SAN!!”

Then, a Garfiel who had not been held back by Ezzo widened his eyes and faced Aldebaran with an expression of pure rage.

At the emerald-green eyes flaming with frenzied indignation, Aldebaran doubled down.

In his hand, between his middle, ring, and pinky fingers was grasped a black orb, and lifting his helmet with the two fingers that remained, he thrust it into the gap—

Aldebaran: “Gulp.”

—Though it was quite large and gave the absolute worst feeling as it passed through his throat, he forced it down into his stomach.

Garfiel: “Ya, BASTAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAARD—!!!”

Having witnessed that act, Garfiel surrendered himself to the eruption of fury and charged forward.

At that sensation of a powerful, troublesome gale pursuing him at speeds the eye could not keep up with, Aldebaran was sent flying by a punch while harboring the conviction that he had successfully severed the cooperation of his opponents and eliminated Garfiel’s composure.

An unrelenting fist boring into his internal organs, dinner spilled back out to the interior of his helmet as he felt like he was about to vomit up the orb that had just entered his belly, and he bit down on his molars.

And then—

Aldebaran: “—Expand territory, matrix redefinition.”

—Once again, he declared war against the world.

3

—Rage, had painted Garfiel's vision completely red.

A part of that rage was directed at Al, who had transformed Subaru and Beatrice into a black sphere, but the larger part of it was aimed at his own pathetic self.

Garfiel had had an important role entrusted to him by Otto, Emilia, and the others.

All of them were eager to be with Subaru, who had finally returned from the Vollachian Empire.

However, everyone had their own roles they had to fulfill, so they had swallowed their various emotions and entrusted everything to Garfiel. Of course, Beatrice, Petra, and Meili, who had accompanied them, also held roles they were expected to play.

Even so, Garfiel's role had been to ensure Subaru's safety.

That was why—

Garfiel: "My amazin' self's a FUCKIN' DUMBAAASS!!"

His molars, cracked from intense clenching, were repaired by the Divine Protection of Earth Spirits, only to then crack again from the continued clenching. That, truly, was the extent of Garfiel's rage.

He had been keeping a close eye on Al's actions.

Bearing in mind Ezzo's opinion, which he had heard at the top of the Tower, he was strongly aware that he needed to keep a close watch on Al to make sure he did not do anything reckless with Subaru and company.

But, at the same time, Garfiel had someone else to keep his eye on other than Al.

It was none other, than Subaru himself.

???: ”Listen, Garfiel. Please keep a close eye on Natsuki-san. While he most likely will not act recklessly because of Priscilla-sama… he might inadvertently do anything in his power for Al-san.”

Garfiel: “—Hk.”

The caution instilled in him by the one who was like his older brother had been slightly dulled by the additional caution he had received later. As a result, Garfiel’s reaction to Al’s activity had been half a step late.

Al had made the most out of that half-step, as if he had seen through it perfectly. —No, it was not only that half-step that Al had anticipated. He had seen through the entire stride beyond that as well.

Garfiel: “RUAAAH!!”

The backfist of the roaring Garfiel was narrowly dodged by his opponent, who had crouched just in time. The power of the strike was reduced to him merely grazing the enemy with the underside of his little finger, causing Garfiel to grit his teeth.

He kept missing. No matter how many punches he threw, he could not land a clean hit with a single one.

As for his opponent—

Aldebaran: “Dona.”

A brief incantation, and the sensation of magic interfering with the world, made Garfiel’s hair stand on end as his body leaned forward.

In the subsequent moment, a block of stone that had appeared airborne struck Garfiel’s face with a noticeable impact, as if to meet the angle at which he had tilted his head.

A pained groan escaped his mouth, and his lip was split. In terms of power, it was a weak blow. For Garfiel, who had fought against high-class warriors in the Empire, who had even clashed with a Dragon, it was far from enough to incapacitate him, let alone cause a significant injury.

However, he did not believe that this was the result of his opponent holding back.

Aldebaran: “Huff, huff…”

Breathing heavily, Al, who had cast the spell that had struck Garfiel’s face, remained on-guard without a hint of relaxation.

His apparent exhaustion was not a ruse to induce Garfiel’s carelessness; he was genuinely out of breath. It was only a matter of course. According to Garfiel’s assessment, the difference in ability between them was so significant that Al would be incapacitated by even a single powerful blow.

Perhaps, it would not even require a powerful blow.

If even one of Garfiel’s barrage of punches were to land, it would terminate the fight. In the span of a single breath, he could unleash dozens of such finishing blows.

Needless to say, facing such a situation would drain both one’s mental and physical strength.

Even though that ought to go without saying—

Garfiel: “It just, won’t hit… Hk!”

Bewildered, Garfiel was unable to make heads or tails of what was occurring to him.

Al’s movements and counterattacks revealed a significant gap in skill when compared to Garfiel. This was not a matter of arrogance, but rather because, as a warrior, Garfiel was far superior to Al.

And yet, attacks that should have landed, and evasions that should have been successful, were failing completely.

Garfiel’s attacks continued to miss, while Al’s attacks continued to land.

While they lacked the power necessary to critically injure Garfiel, the bothersome attacks were sufficient to halt his movement and to prevent follow-up strikes—

???: “Garfiel-kun, step aside! I will provide support!”

Once again, Garfiel’s progress was thwarted by a sinking force beneath his feet.

As if scolding Garfiel, who was unable to continue his attack, Ezzo, shouting at him and advising him to keep his distance, had come to his aid with magical cover from the rear.

For a moment, he considered following Ezzo’s words to assess Al’s perplexing strategy—

Aldebaran: “Yeah, that’s it, back off. Fall back and run crying to your Sis and Nanna, Garf-chan.”

Garfiel: “—I’LL FUCKIN’ CRUSH YA!”

Just as he was about to pull back, those taunting remarks shattered his thoughts into a thousand fragments.

Garfiel’s vision turned vermilion with rage as he swung his arms wide and charged at Al. This time, he was determined not to stop for anything, no matter the interference.

If his arms and legs were dodged, he would just ram his whole body into him and grapple him down.

Aldebaran: “Honestly, that’d be the toughest thing to deal with.”

Sensing Garfiel’s intent, Al muttered with a heavy breath.

Garfiel planted his foot firmly on the ground, fearing any earth manipulation beneath him. He then launched himself forward with a swift kick, propelling his body forward.

Garfiel’s body approached directly toward Al with tremendous force —Suddenly, his vision blurred.

Garfiel: “—Gah!”

A familiar sensation struck Garfiel's eyes, and a groan escaped his throat.

It was the same feeling he'd had upon encountering the Sand Wind in the Sand Sea on their way to the Tower. Tiny grains of sand had flown into Garfiel's eyes, mercilessly robbing him of his sight.

Yet another of Al's dirty tricks. It was enough to make him stop in surprise. —Unless he was determined that his arms and legs would not waver, no matter what.

Al had been most wary of this reckless assault.

As such, even with his sight having been snatched away, the best course of action for Garfiel was to latch onto him with some part of his body and rob him of his combat ability.

Ezzo: "—Garfiel-kun!!"

Just as he decided to continue his assault, Ezzo's desperate voice called out to him.

Hearing Ezzo's voice warning of danger, Garfiel felt something closing in straight towards his nose—he opened his mouth wide and caught it with his fangs.

A full-force punch aimed to crush Garfiel's face right after he had been blinded, meant to bait him in. But that was not enough to break Garfiel's resolve to do whatever it took.

Garfiel: "I'll fhix if lay'r, dhumbassh!"

With the sensation of his fangs sinking into the fist and stopping it, Garfiel tightened his jaw, promising to heal Al after stripping him of his ability to do battle.

It was a cold-blooded decision, but Al was one-armed. He fought with only his right arm, and were he to be robbed of the function of his one remaining arm, he would no longer be able to fight. So, Garfiel intended to rip it apart from the wrist to the elbow—

Garfiel: "—Ah?"

As he increased his bite force, he realized something.

The fist Garfiel caught in his bite was shaped like Al's left hand, which he should not have.

Garfiel: "—Bwaagh?!"

In the next instant, Al's fist in Garfiel's mouth swelled up violently, shattering his jawbone under the pressure and sending shards of his upper and lower canines flying through the air.

Furthermore, the fingers that had extended into his mouth jabbed deep into Garfiel's throat, triggering an unbearable gag reflex—a response triggered when fingers are thrust down one's throat, and paralyzing him. —Then, a calculated, hard, and heavy blow struck Garfiel's jaw diagonally.

Garfiel: "Kah… Kh!"

Blinded and thrown into blackness, Garfiel felt the sensation of his whole world flipping upside down. Having been struck on the jaw, his brain rattled, and his sense of balance vanished, making it impossible to stay on his feet as his knees buckled.

Being utterly overwhelmed so one-sidedly, Garfiel belatedly realized something.

Ezzo's desperate cry had been a deliberate warning, anticipating that if Garfiel were to take Al's attack head-on, this would be the result.

In other words, this all had been as per Al's bait—.

Aldebaran: "Remember when I said recklessness's the toughest thing to deal with? I lied. Those who don't think ain't a threat to me."

The frustration and humiliation from those taunting words continued to paint Garfiel's thoughts a deeper and deeper shade of red.

A relentless, successive onslaught like a storm or tornado; for a person at its mercy, being blown away like a leaf or a twig would be the only outcome.

To that extent, such a battle should have been one-sided, yet on the contrary, the results favored the opposite side.

???: “Garfiel-kun!!”

Witnessing such an anomaly materializing before his very eyes, Ezzo cried out from behind Garfiel.

Garfiel, swinging his arms wide, had charged forwards at Al, to prevent him from escaping. He could clearly see his field of vision being robbed by a thin veil of sand that had been spread into his path.

There had been no magical reaction. This simple blinding of sand—which hailed from outside the Tower, was the result of scattering sand taken from the stairs that rose from the Sand Sea.

Subsequently, catching sight of the attack that followed that blinding, Ezzo had screamed.

Al had employed magic to reconstruct his missing arm out of earth, and had thrown a punch with it.

Garfiel had opened his mouth wide, attempting to bite down upon the arm of earth, but that would only end poorly. Ezzo’s grim premonition proved true, for the earthen arm violently exploded within Garfiel’s mouth.

Garfiel: “—BWAAGHHK?!”

The expanding arm destroyed the inside of Garfiel’s mouth, and a spray of fangs and blood followed.

To add to that, having encased his right hand in a gauntlet of stone, Al delivered a powerful sideways punch to the jaw of the stupefied Garfiel.

Garfiel collapsed to his knees. —His successive movements were efficient, extremely so.

Ezzo: “Something of this sort should not be possible, even in pre-arranged sparring…!”

As Al brilliantly halted Garfiel’s advance with a barrage of blows, with strikes that would have been impossible to execute even if the sequence had been part of a martial arts demonstration, Ezzo’s vigilance continued to rise to its zenith.

However, were Garfiel to stop his movements, it would be rather fortuitous—

Ezzo: “Any scope for underestimating you as someone of a lesser rank no longer exists! Be prepared to lose more than just that left arm of yours, at least one leg will be going! —Ul Shiha!!”

Being unable to unleash it thus far due to his concern for Garfiel, who had been fighting in close-quarters with Al, he attempted to rob his opponent of their combat strength with powerful magic.

Conforming to Ezzo’s incantation, the Mana that was released intervened in accordance with its magic formula, and the world was rewritten. What was then unleashed, was a fierce torrent of “wind”.

Disguised as a water-manipulating Shiha-class incantation, this was a faux-incantation that, in practice, could alter the magic that had actually been invoked.

In addition, combining that faux-incantation with a voicelessly-incanted Goa, a trap in the form of a pincer attack, from both the front and the rear, had been set.

The simultaneous casting of two different spells was a highly advanced technique, to the extent that it was said to only be possible if one had two brains to think it through, and there were no more than five individuals in the entire world who could achieve it.

Compared to Roswaal, who was one among them, the presence of a momentary gap in Ezzo’s simultaneous-casting was undeniable; however, it fell within the scope of what could be compensated for through the combined use of faux-incantation and voiceless-incantation.

Ezzo: “With this—!”

Even if not decisive, it would still deliver a fatal blow.

Such was Ezzo’s assessment; but, it was completely painted over by Al’s actions thereon.

Without hesitation, Al turned his back upon the rampage of the invisible wind that approached from before him, and while taking the onrush of that wind upon his back, plunged into the blazing inferno behind him.

Of course, this firepower was not meant to incinerate, but if one were to be directly hit, serious burns would be inevitable. Within that, Al was defenseless—no, he shaped the stone gauntlet on his right arm into a thin shield, breaking through that inferno head-on.

Aldebaran: “URRRRAAAA!!”

Even if he could break through that wall of flame, he would still be caught in the wind and be blown away.

Immediately, Al would have been swept away by the wind, and his entire body would have slammed against the walls and floor, rendering him unable to move.

However—

Ezzo: “—Ludicrous.”

Muttering so in a stunned voice, Ezzo could not believe the unrealistic scene occurring right before his very eyes.

Swept up by the wind, Al was indeed helpless as his whole body slammed into multiple places within the Tower. —However, as if anticipating each of the points of collision, Al created cushions of mud, almost completely killing the force of impact, and he escaped the grip of the wind.

Ezzo: "…"

The situation had arrived at such a point where Ezzo was left with no choice but to give his most absurd speculations some actual consideration.

His skills as a warrior were clearly inferior to those of Garfiel, and he had even dodged the sure-fire attack from Ezzo, the Kingdom's finest magician, so there surely was some kind of rule-breaking technique that lay hidden beneath.

If he were to guess, what was most likely would be—

Ezzo: "Unbelievable, an extremely short-term observation into the future?"

At the fact that such a ridiculous possibility required serious examination, Ezzo could not help but feel a shiver down to his core.

It was said that, amongst outstanding warriors and martial artists, there were those who could read into the presence of their opponents and intuitively discern their next move.

Even in the world of magicians, it was theoretically possible to predict an opponent's next move by observing the form and nature of the Mana that had been intently refined just prior to the spell being cast.

However, the phenomena surrounding Al could not be fully explained by such theories alone.

This was not something as simple as intuition or experience. —He had the optimal solution for everything.

With all due respect, Ezzo, as an educator, was privileged with the opportunity to impart knowledge onto others. From that perspective, he was well-aware that unnatural explanations were accompanied by unnatural processes.

An explanation that skipped over the required processes to arrive at an answer, was often revealed to be a surreptitious peek at the right answer.

In other words, the same possibility might have been applicable to the phenomenon brought about by Al.

The problem was—

Ezzo: “The possibility of unknown magic, besides the one used to seal away Nastuki-dono and Miss Beatrice…”

Magic that even Ezzo, who had read through all available literature, and had acquired the knowledge of nearly every magic currently in existence, was unaware of. If it was a sort of forbidden technique that did not remain in records, there was a strong possibility that magic techniques that did not conform to the six basic attributes had been devised.

Ezzo: “…”

He could read any and all moves; bearing this in mind, Ezzo raised his estimation of the threat posed by Al to the maximum possible level.

A formidable foe, wielding unknown magic with unknown intentions—no longer was regarding him with such a description appropriate. The degree of danger he posed ought to have been considered equivalent to that of a Sin Archbishop or a Witch.

Hence—

Ezzo: “—While I still have the Mana to spare, I shall clinch victory!”

5

Upon hearing the thunderous roar, Petra wished not to believe it was real.

However—

Petra: “—Hk.”

She bit the inside of her cheek to wake herself up with the pain.

The desire to believe was dangerous. People tended to easily drift towards the easiest, most comfortable, and safest options. But if something bad came to pass, what would they do?

Would this mean that they would put something or someone important in danger for the sake of their own momentary selfishness?

Petra: "—Meili-chan, over here!"

With that, Petra pulled Meili, who had been helping to clean up after dinner, over to her.

As usual, Meili was only getting in the way and not helping at all, but it was good that she was there. Thanks to that, she had been able to offer her hand.

As Meili was pulled along by Petra, she looked up at the ceiling, from where the sound had been heard,

Meili: "…Petra-chan, it seems like some people are having a fi~ght."

Petra: "—Can you tell who they are?"

Meili: "I don't kno~w. But Onii-san and Fang Onii-san have no reason to fi~ght, so it must be either Sensei-san or Helmet-ojisan, ri~ght?"

Petra: "Al-san and Ezzo-san…"

Meili: "If it's Sensei-san, then we have to be careful of that Flam girl too."

In contrast to Petra's heightened tension, Meili's tone and expression remained the same as usual.

The difference between Meili, who was used to this kind of situation, and Petra, who was not, was clear. Still, Petra was lucky that she had experience from her time in the Empire, so she did not lose her composure.

Petra's life had to benefit from the events in the Empire, even if only a little.

Meili: “What should we do? Should we go up too?”

Petra: “…Well, let’s not do that. If we were present from the beginning, it would be one thing, but if we try to join in now, we’ll just get in the way.”

Meili: “We~ll, I guess that’s good enough. I could send the little Crimson Scorpion-chan to keep guard, bu~t…”

Responding to Meili’s nonsensical statement, the scorpion in question crawled out of her hair and snapped its pincers.

While it was good that they were so aggressive and motivated, it did not seem like a small scorpion like that would be of any use. It would not be much different if Petra and Meili went.

Petra shook her head and put a damper on little Crimson Scorpion’s enthusiasm.

On top of that—

Petra: “—We need to be prepared for anything that might happen.”

Based on what Meili said, it is highly likely that someone was fighting on an upper floor —in the library where the Books of the Dead were kept. There were people who had headed there to work after dinner, and naturally, the two people Meili mentioned were included.

And one of them was—Natsuki Subaru.

Petra: “Subaru…”

As if she were praying, Petra wished for his safety.

Beside him were Beatrice and Garfiel. With those two by his side, she hoped that he would be much safer than if she was there herself.

Just then—

???: “—Petraaa! Meili-!”

Petra: “—Hk, Garf-san?!”

Without warning, Petra leaped to her feet at the sound of Garfiel’s thunderous voice.

Upon hearing Petra’s reply, Garfiel rushed into the room where Petra and the others were.

Petra was delighted to see a familiar face, but she could not afford to even express such.

Petra: “You’re badly hurt…! What happened? You need to get medical treatment right away…!”

Garfiel: “Now, hurry up n’ chas sum Yang Magk on me! Righd away!”

Petra: “—Hk!”

Garfiel, his face covered in blood and several teeth missing, made his appeal, and Petra momentarily tensed up before immediately strengthening Garfiel’s body with Yang Magic.

Her unrefined Yang Magic was something rather unstable to use on someone other than herself, but Garfiel’s fierce expression left her no choice. In that case, Petra had no choice but to overcome her immaturity right here and now.

Garfiel: “RAAAAAH!”

Meili: “Kya~a?!”

While under the effect of Petra’s Yang Magic, Garfiel then forcibly thrust his hands into the floor of the room and tore up the stone flooring with brute strength.

A shriek escaped Meili’s lips at Garfiel’s incomprehensible actions, and then asked him, “Wh-What are you doi~ng?”, as he lifted the floor that he had just removed.

In response, Garfiel turned around to the entrance of the room and,

Garfiel: “DHISH!”

After roaring indistinctly, Garfiel blocked the entrance to the room with the piece of flooring he had torn up.

Petra wanted to question him about what had happened, thinking that he was trying to prevent anyone from coming in. However, she quickly realized that that had not been the issue at hand.

The reason Garfiel had blocked the entrance became clear from what could be seen through the gap beneath the sealed door.

Meili: “—Wa~ter?!”

Once again, Meili screamed, and the small red scorpion on her head also stretched its pincers and tail to the heavens in surprise.

Petra’s round eyes widened as she looked beyond the entrance blocked by Garfiel, and she could hear and feel the presence of the muddy torrent of water that flooded the hallway of the Tower’s Fourth Floor with tremendous force.

Why had it been made, for what purpose, and by whom?

Garfiel: “If ya’re readin’ aheah… then how ’bouh an attack ya can’t block even if ya know it’s comin’…?!”

As he braced his feet against the floor, continuously withstanding the force of the raging water, Garfiel’s cheeks contorted.

Petra was horrified by Garfiel’s vicious, belligerent smile mixed with anger. Who exactly was Garfiel fighting with such an expression on his face?

And why had he rushed alone to Petra and Meili?

Petra: “—Hang in there!”

Biting back the many questions that filled her chest, Petra reached out to support Garfiel’s back.

Garfiel: “—Hk.”

With Petra’s hand on his back, Garfiel’s entire body tensed up with strength.

Of course, Petra’s slender arms could never add to Garfiel’s strength. She would be far more useful were she to concentrate on her Yang Magic.

But at that moment, Petra entrusted all her worries and faith to Garfiel’s back.

And Garfiel, she believed, tried his best to respond to that trust with all his might.

Eventually, the sound of the massive torrent of water rushing through the passageway began to subside, gradually turning into a faint trickle, like the last drops of water falling from a gutter after a rainstorm.

Garfiel, who had been holding his ground, relaxed his legs and pushed the stone slab he had used to block the entrance to the side, and let out a deep breath.

He then began to turn around to face Petra, who was still touching his back—

???: “Garfiel-kun, come here! Upstairs, not to the Taygeta side!”

Perhaps this too was an application of magic, but Ezzo’s voice was so loud that it was hard to tell how far away he was, and Garfiel, who had been called, looked up as if snapped into motion.

His usual sharp fangs were broken, and for a moment, he wondered whether he should explain the situation to Petra and Meili,

Garfiel: “Meili and ya… I’ll exshplain later…!”

Petra: “—. Is it Al-san?”

Garfiel: “…Yeah.”

Without saying much, he only managed to share who had started it, and then Garfiel rushed out into the wet corridor to meet up with Ezzo.

She observed until his back disappeared, and then Petra let out a shaky breath and covered her face with her hands.

Petra: “Don’t cry, don’t cry don’t cry don’t cry don’t cry don’t cry…”

Desperately trying to dispel the rising dread within her, Petra repeated the words to herself over and over.

But even so, she couldn’t stop the feeling from welling up inside her.

Meili: “Petra-chan.”

Meili gently, and without warning, placed a hand on Petra’s head, which was still buried in her palms.

Then she ruffled up the other’s hair; Petra thought it annoying, but came to later realize that Meili was just terrible at petting people’s heads.

And while clumsily consoling Petra, Meili let out a small sigh,

Meili: “Maybe it’s my fau~lt… Not everyone can be saved by Onii-san and Onee-san’s kindne~ss.”

Petra: “That’s not…”

True, she wished to say, to deny completely. But instead, a sob came first, and she found herself unable to muster the confidence to fully reject Meili’s words.

6

Upon being assailed by the muddy stream that flooded the hallway, his opponents having discovered a truly optimal strategy, bereft of effect from any of his provocations and excuses, Aldebaran was struck with a sense of powerlessness.

Despite possessing such a cheat technique, despite possessing such an advantage, he was being pursued oh so intensely by people who had mastered the art of countering it.

In regards to that strength, he could not help but be impressed, all excuses aside.

Aldebaran: “—Ubububu.”

The torrent of water left him no escape, forbidding him from planting his legs or grabbing hold of something, so Aldebaran’s body was washed away, mercilessly robbing him of his strength and body temperature.

The more he attempted to struggle against the water, the more his strength would be taken away, relentlessly being exhausted. The water pouring in from the orifices in his entire body washed it all thoroughly, with him unable to do a thing.

Unlike wind, which had a certain degree of direction, dealing with the flow of water by way of walls and structures fashioned from earth was a deed impossible.

Henceforth, what Aldebaran could do was to get swept up by the water, to be jostled about by the water, and to be killed by the water, and nothing more beyond that. In reality, he had no idea just how much water he had ended up swallowing.

Only—

Aldebaran: “Uh… Buh… Abahh… Hk.”

While gurgling, throwing up the water he had swallowed, Aldebaran took heavy breaths.

Body void of strength, he supported and lifted himself with his single arm, doing his best to rid his body of the water that had filled him, so much so that he had been on the verge of bursting like a water balloon.

From his nose, mouth, eyes, and ears, it felt as if water was streaming out. No longer could he feel his lower body, and he was too afraid to ascertain if he had urinated or soiled himself.

And then, after expelling, expelling, vomiting as much water as he could—

???: "—Well then, you should not have any further strength with which to resist, but let us hear you explain yourself."

Having slowly ascended the staircase, the magician and warrior looked down at Aldebaran.

Powerless to stop it, Aldebaran had been knocked about while being swept up the staircase; though the two who had imposingly climbed up those stairs were fatigued, they remained with more than enough will to fight.

Conversely, Aldebaran was soaked like a ragged, drowned rat, his entire body covered in wounds.

Aldebaran: "Ehffhhh."

Languidly did Aldebaran collapse, having relaxed the arm that was supporting his body, now lying face up.

In the sky where the sun was setting, where the curtain of night was beginning to fall, the glow of stars scattered around was visible. Feeling as if the flickering stars above were looking down on him, Al loathed the heavens from the bottom of his heart.

Stars, were something he hated.

Stars, looking down upon the surface from high above, merely shining as they pleased, were something he hated.

???: "Captain 'n Beatrice, gib 'em back…!"

So declared Garfiel, who was missing a few fangs, to the upward-facing Aldebaran.

His attitude of prioritizing Natsuki Subaru and Beatrice instead of complaining about the mess that had been made of his mouth was admirable, and something that Aldebaran almost wanted to root for, but unfortunately, their views were diametrical opposites of one another.

He really did find it sorrowful. Aldebaran did not particularly hate Garfiel.

He did not hate any of them.

He hated neither Garfiel, nor Ezzo, who he had just fought against, nor did he hate Petra, nor Meili, nor Flam, who were present in this Tower, nor did he hate any of the people he would probably end up fighting against hereafter.

The only ones he hated were himself, and Natsuki Subaru.

Garfiel: “OI, BASTAHD, YA LISHNING?!”

Ezzo: “Please calm down, Garfiel-kun. Even if you consider his silence as a provocation here, Al-dono cannot help it. In addition, the provocation would be meaningless. He ought to understand by now.”

Garfiel: “…”

Ezzo: “It seems that you somehow possess the ability to utilize an unknown magic… a type of forbidden art, but that is not to say it is omnipotent. Whether it be I, or likely somebody else, it shall be countered. No matter how skilled you may be in the art of war, you cannot win all your battles.”

Keeping the emotional Garfiel in check, Ezzo spoke, rational to the bitter end.

Those words were quite persuasive to Al, with whom Ezzo had done as he pleased till the current time. Through his definite strength and perceptiveness, Ezzo had defeated Aldebaran’s Authority.

At this moment, since Aldebaran could not even lift a single finger, he could not make excuses.

It was just that—

Aldebaran: “—Ezzo-dono, it’s precisely as you say. I can’t win every battle.”

Still lying on his back, Aldebaran affirmed Ezzo’s words.

At that comment, Garfiel and Ezzo each displayed their own unique reactions. Garfiel showed frustration, and Ezzo showed increasing vigilance.

That they did not lose their focus even after he had declared such, vexed him.

It vexes me but, it’s fine. After all, she’s no longer among us.

—Seven-hundred and forty-eight.

That was the number of attempts in which he had drifted aimlessly, all while experiencing a sense of helplessness at not being able to do anything in particular.

The only variable he had been able to test, had been the place towards which the muddy current would sweep him away. After being washed away by the water, there was nothing Aldebaran could do, tiny as he was.

Instead, until he drew the winning ticket, on and on and on and on, he was washed away without end.

And then, at long last, he drew it.

Aldebaran: “I can’t win every battle. —That’s why, I just gotta win the final one.”

Ezzo: “What are you…”

Aldebaran: “I wanted to get over here. This place is my one and only victory condition.”

Ignoring Ezzo and Garfiel as question marks floated above their heads, Aldebaran continued so.

He did not have the time to wait for a reply. Even now, he was just spewing any nonsense he could think of as to keep himself from losing consciousness.

Neither was he boasting of success, nor did he intend to pester them with a declaration of victory.

Merely, he wished for them to understand. —Just a portion of all the stardust Aldebaran had piled up, he wished for them to understand.

Aldebaran: "…"

As the pair gave off signs of bewilderment, Aldebaran, still lying on the floor, raised his arm, and pointed in a certain direction.

Realizing that something had fallen at the place towards which Aldebaran was pointing, Ezzo and Garfiel's throats both choked up, that was clear.

Even if they did not comprehend the significance of that being here, they likely had gained a sense of unease.

That was—

Garfiel: "Is dat, a Book of the Dead…!"

Ezzo: "Whose?!"

Albeit having been submerged, that Book of the Dead was one which yet maintained the form of a book.

While gazing at its sodden pages, lying on the floor in an open state, the eyes of the two widened in shock, their voices, trembled.

They had yet to reach comprehension. And frankly, even supposing they heard the answer, they likely would not understand its meaning.

But, from the very start, Aldebaran had come to the Tower in order to search for that Book, and put it to use.

After all, he knew that there would be no other way to make the preparations in order to remove Natsuki Subaru.

The title of that Book of the Dead, inscribed there was—

Aldebaran: “—It’s my name.”

Ezzo & Garfiel: “…”

The correct answer revealed to them, Ezzo and Garfiel were overwhelmed by a momentary pause.

While that was a clear opening, Aldebaran unfortunately did not have the strength to reap its benefits. This once-in-a-lifetime opportunity, was not something that Aldebaran could seize.

Therefore, he would entrust the act of utilizing this once in a lifetime opportunity, to “Aldebaran”.

Looking down upon the soaked pages of the Book of the Dead lying on the floor had been eyes; those eyes slowly rose up, and faced the fore.

And then, clad in scales of pale azure, the lifeform considered to be the strongest in the entire world spread its wings, and pronounced.

???: “—Your stars were bad.”

The subsequent instant, aiming at the magician and warrior, both frozen in place, the breath of the Divine Dragon Volcanica—nay, of the Divine Dragon Aldebaran, was mercilessly unleashed.

V!c.112o

Chapter 13:
The One Most Loved and the One Most Unloved

1

—Two-hundred and eighty-nine.

In added time after surmounting the decisive bout, came an ambush by an unseen adversary, one even more ruthless than anticipated.

While Garfiel was occupied protecting the girls, it was unclear how the hidden enemy, who was not with them, had managed to avoid the great deluge. However, the hidden assailant, who had accomplished such a feat on their own, had broken his neck many times as he came down the stairs in a state of total exhaustion.

Without questions. Without hesitation. This single-minded focus on eliminating impediments was precisely the result of the awareness they held of being the last force of deterrence that remained within the Tower.

???: “You’re quite something, Lil’ Miss.”

To have mastered level of skill to this extent at such a young age, he could only imagine the amount of blood-soaked training she must have undergone, and that caused sentiments of respect to surge up within him.

He had heard she was one of two twin girls, but was her younger or older sister just as strong? —Even if he were to go without inquiring so at this place, the chance to find that out first-hand would likely call upon him soon.

After all, from here on out, the entire world would likely end up turning against Aldebaran.

???: “—Hk.”

There was a slight gasp, and the slender hand of the hidden attacker failed to break Aldebaran's neck.

Just as the girl's hand was about to reach him from behind, Aldebaran covered his neck with a layer of stone and avoided the blow that would have broken his cervical vertebrae.

However, this enemy was not so naive as to slacken their assault there. As soon as they realized their ambush had failed, they immediately slipped towards Aldebaran's left side—to attempt an assassination from his armless side, and unleashed a hand strike aimed at his flank.

A fearsome blow enhanced by the Flow Method, one that would perforate his side, slip through the gap in his ribs, and tear out his heart; a blow that contrasted with her cute hands.

It was a deadly strike that would inevitably bring about a near-instant death; however, a near-instant death was merely that. It was not instant death.

Even if brief, it would nonetheless bring about excruciating pain. That was why—

???: "U-augh!"

Before the ambushing girl's attack could land, Aldebaran reached out with an earthen prosthesis and grabbed the girl's two bundles of hair, then proceeded to forcibly push her against the wall. At that point, the earthen arm was transformed into a large strip of mud, crucifying the girl to the wall.

With both arms and legs bound, and only her head free, the hidden attacker—Flam, exchanged glares with Aldebaran,

Aldebaran: "I'm weaker than you, Lil' Miss. I'm missing one of my arms. My helmet restricts my vision. I'm exhausted from fighting battles in succession. I have no talent or ability. —That's why, it's my win."

Flam: "Al-sa—"

Aldebaran: "Just shut up."

Snapping the fingers of his right hand in front of Flam’s face, he blocked up her mouth with a stone gag. If she could use her hands and feet, she could have easily removed it, but being unable to move them, she was at his mercy.

And so, it could finally be said that the bonus track had been cleared.

Aldebaran: “…”

He heaved a long, deep sigh.

There was not a shred of relief in that sigh; instead, it conveyed a sense of depression that had nothing to do with the sense of accomplishment from actually having done it.

To begin with, using a mountain climbing analogy, this was still the base camp—no matter how much of a positive thinker one was, no one would do something so ridiculous as getting overly excited at the base camp.

Not to mention, this accomplishment of his was not something to be proud of.

Aldebaran: “Why, even if you look at me like that, I can’t give you any excuses, Lil’ Misses.”

As he said this, Aldebaran turned around and looked at the two girls standing silently, staring at Al in the corridor of the Fourth Floor.

—One had cold hostility in her almond-shaped eyes, while the other had a sense of urgency in her round eyes.

???: “This little one is angry, so could you please not come any clo~ser?”

As Aldebaran turned halfway around to face them, the girl with the braid—Meili, moved to confront him. Perched on top of her blue hair was a Witchbeast, a lively character who had appeared several times during the journey to and within the Tower.

Its tail, which emitted a faint glow, was also an unexpectedly formidable offensive organ. Of course, that was only if it struck a vital point without warning, but.

Aldebaran: “Well, I understand you don’t want me to get close. In the first place, I don’t feel like harming you Lil’ Misses.”

Meili: “You ca~me all the way down here to look for us, didn’t yo~u? So that’s absolutely ridiculo~us.”

Aldebaran: “While it’s true that I came to look for you, the reason isn’t what you think.”

At Meili’s cold attitude, Aldebaran played with the seam of his helmet with his fingers while he took care to choose his words. While they were talking, the girl who had been quietly watching them said, “Reason…” in a soft voice, and—

???: “Then, what was the reason you came down, Al-san?”

—As Petra asked the question firmly, without averting her gaze, Aldebaran fell silent.

Aldebaran: “…”

As a former assassin, it was understandable that Meili was used to the harshness of the battlefield. However, it was surprising to see how tough Petra had become, given she was originally just a simple village girl training to become a maid.

Aldebaran had timed it so that everyone would have been at their most relaxed, and carried out this plan of action without anyone realizing the signs. In other words, Petra and the others had no idea what was going on.

There must have been all kinds of questions, and a whirlwind of anxiety and confusion that wanted to burst out crying and screaming, swirling around in her little head. —She did not let any of that show.

Aldebaran: “I’ve fulfilled my objective. I’ve got no more business in this Tower. So if you ask why, it was to come say goodbye.”

Petra: “Even if, you say something like that…”

Aldebaran: “Garfiel and Ezzo are both unconscious at the top of the Tower. If you treat them quickly, they should be able to make it out alive.”

Petra: “—Ah.”

For a brief moment, Petra tensed up at Aldebaran’s selfish declaration and prepared to fight, while Meili next to her also widened her stance in preparation to join Petra’s resolve—but their resolve was thrown into confusion by Aldebaran’s words as he pointed to the uppermost floor of the Tower.

And unfortunately for them, Aldebaran had no room to show mercy, even if his opponents were young girls.

Aldebaran: “What are you gonna do? Are you gonna try and show off by fighting me here? If you try hard enough, you might be able to beat me… But if you lose, the two guys up there will die as well, yeah?”

Petra: “You… You coward…!”

Aldebaran: “Yeah, I know I am, and it makes me hate myself from the bottom of my heart.”

After being berated by Petra, with her fierce eyes, Aldebaran admonished himself for having become a detestable adult.

However, the reality was that those disgusting and cowardly adults seemed to always come out victorious. —Petra, being smart and brave, could properly calculate the risks of losing.

She could not risk letting Garfiel and Ezzo die by picking a fight with slim chances of success.

Meili: “What ha~ppened to Onii-san and Beatrice-chan, I wo~nder?”

Aldebaran: “The two of them are asleep together like babies. They’re so affectionate and close. It’d be cruel to separate them and it'd break my heart, so I just couldn't."

In response to Meili, who inquired about Subaru and Beatrice's safety on behalf of Petra, he gave that answer.

Unfortunately for them, he had no intention of giving them any more information.

Either way, in case they did save Garfiel and Ezzo, they would be able to hear the same story from their mouths. He did not want to carelessly provoke Petra and Meili, who were thinking rationally.

Even if the expansion of territory could shoulder the burden, he was exhausted.

Aldebaran: "Hey, I get that you said not to get any closer, but that's the way out. I'm gonna have to go through."

Aldebaran raised his hand to signal this, and he slowly advanced towards the girls. To show that he meant no harm, he kept his hand raised without lowering it.

Petra & Meili: "…"

Petra and Meili silently made way for the approaching Aldebaran. As he passed between the girls, who had moved out to either side, the only sound in the quiet passage was the clacking of the little crimson scorpion's pincers.

The intimidating sound of the little crimson scorpion's pincers seemed to be a manifestation of the girls' dissatisfaction—

Petra: "You know, over these three days, I really did intend to help you out, Al-san."

Aldebaran: "…"

Petra: "I absolutely loathe you."

Among all the wounds Aldebaran had sustained during his time at the Pleiades Watchtower, the girl's tearful, wrung-out voice had undoubtedly been the gravest of all.

2

At the time Aldebaran descended onto the entrance to the Tower, unfolding there was a heart-wrenching battle, one not dissimilar to the one that he had engaged in with Petra and Meili on the Fourth Floor.

Partaking in that battle was a jet-black earth dragon who had made the great contribution of delivering their group, with Aldebaran in their ranks, to this Tower, her name Patrasche.

And, going head-to-head against Patrasche was—

???: “Yo, me. Did you tie up all the loose ends?”

Indeed, with a solemn, weighty voice, an enormous lifeform spoke to him in a manner completely lacking in gravitas.

As he calmly pushed open the large gate of the Tower’s entrance with his single hand, waiting for him there, facing off against Patrasche, was a Dragon with scales shining blue—a Dragon formerly known as Volcanica, now “Aldebaran”.

Patrasche: “—DODOGYUUUN.”

Squaring off against “Aldebaran”, Patrasche neighed without relinquishing a single step.

In all honesty, all of Subaru’s female companions were mentally deranged. —No, thinking back on it, all of the women Aldebaran had encountered were more-or-less the same.

As for weak women, there was only a single person that came to mind.

Whatever the case—

Aldebaran: “Hey Dragon me, stop picking on those smaller than yourself. You already look crazy enough, doing that’ll make you look way crazier than necessary.”

“Aldebaran”: “Don’t call me crazy like that. If I’m crazy, then you’ve also gotta be just as nuts. Normally, even those who come up with this kinda thing wouldn't actually put it into practice. —Something like hijacking the Divine Dragon, I mean."

With a voice and appearance he was not yet accustomed to having, "Aldebaran" spoke so while moving his wings. At "Aldebaran's" words, Aldebaran shrugged his shoulders.

Even if he were labeled crazy or nuts by his own self, it was a desperate strategy that he had enacted because it was possible for him to do so.

To begin with, since "Aldebaran" was also Aldebaran, there was no doubt that he would have done the same thing if placed in the same situation; so forcing such labels upon him like that was quite unreasonable.

"Aldebaran": "Sorry, ground dragon-chan. But y'know, not moving's the right option. If you get taken out, ground dragon-chan, you aren't gonna be able to take any of your companions out from this sea of sand."

Aldebaran: "…"

"Aldebaran": "What?"

Aldebaran: "Nothing, just thought that you really are me. Our ways of making threats are completely the same."

In order to avoid a fight with Patrasche, "Aldebaran" had employed the same logic that Aldebaran had used to threaten Petra and Meili; this fact was something that gave him boundless mixed feelings.

Anyhow—

Aldebaran: "Can you fly?"

"Aldebaran": "I can… I think. It's one of those things you get used to little-by-little."

Aldebaran: "That phrasing's brimming with apprehension…"

At the response from “Aldebaran”, somewhat lacking in reliability, Aldebaran climbed up the former’s tail and hopped onto the Dragon’s back, though he himself could not hide the slight unease he felt. Then, clinging to one of the many protrusions on the Dragon’s scales, he called out “Here we go”.

“Aldebaran”: “—Lift off!”

The following instant, with a spirited yell and a flap of his wings, “Aldebaran” rose to the sky.

Scattering the sand with a thunderous wind, the Dragon swiftly climbed to a high altitude, all the way to the top part of the exceedingly tall Pleiades Watchtower, and from there began to part from the Tower.

As the Tower rapidly grew distant, Aldebaran looked back at those who he had left there—

“Aldebaran”: “No way, are you having regrets?”

Aldebaran: “I did have them. When it comes to regrets, I had them four-hundred years ago.”

Being made fun of by himself, who had a full grasp of his circumstances, Aldebaran clicked his tongue.

What “Aldebaran” wished to say, was the reality that he did not have the leeway to be looking back. And that was indeed correct. If this were to be likened to a mountain, then he was still only at the base camp.

From here on out, aiming for the starlight beyond the realm of a billion that he had resolved himself to reach no matter what, Aldebaran could not afford to make even a single wrong move.

“Aldebaran”: “Well, don’t get too worked up on your own. I’ll be with you from now on. That’s at least a lil’ better, yeah?”

As his wings rapidly sliced through the night sky over the Sand Sea, “Aldebaran” spoke in high spirits.

Although he'd had the Memories shared by his Book of the Dead installed within him, that optimistic point-of-view likely stemmed from a difference in the vessel being occupied. Nonetheless, it was not good to be overly negative, either.

In reality, he had acquired backup more powerful than one could ever hope for.

What remained was—

???: "—That will be as far as you go."

3

—At the moment he was about to formulate his next course of action, the light pierced him.

???: "…"

Having violently crashed upon the ocean of sand in this chilly night, the Dragon unhurriedly raised itself. Aldebaran, who had been nestled within the Dragon's wings, shook his head and dropped down onto the sand.

And then, that composedly came into the view of the lone person and Dragon, of the two distinct Aldebarans.

???: "…"

Hair red akin to a burning flame, eyes blue akin to the clear skies, clad in an outfit of immaculate white as per his convictions, the chivalry he practiced, the existence ordained by the world—

???: "Flam, who was left behind at the Tower, is one blessed with the Divine Protection of Telepathy. She and her sister, Grassis, are able to communicate without regard to distance and time, albeit only once per day."

That, was his explanation as to why he had hastened to this scene; quite the honest response, one that was considerate and sympathetic towards the confusion of someone who had found themselves in an unreasonable situation.

Aldebaran: “…Thanks for the explanation. Are you used to people lodging complaints against you, perchance?”

???: “I wish to clear the doubts I myself have first. —There are many things I wish to question you on.”

Aldebaran: “…”

???: “I advise you surrender. If possible, I would prefer to not cut you down.”

Declaring so, while touching the Dragon Sword at his waist, the youth—Reinhard van Astrea, before Aldebaran and “Aldebaran” both, magnificently asserted.

Reinhard: “…”

His aura majestic, his posture gallant, his existence dazzling even amidst a world of night—to this man bound to be a Hero, as one bearing heroic reveries long decayed, this alone, he wished to object.

It was something that had been spoken to him many a time, but—

Aldebaran: “Quit putting on airs, hero. I’ll win regardless. —Your stars were bad.”

Gazed upon by a star-studded sky amidst a great ocean of sand, Aldebaran faced off against Reinhard.

—That was a confrontation irreconcilable, between one whom the world loved, and one whom it did not.

Vic.ll20

Bonus Short Stories

The Land of Nascent Wolves: Undead Busters I

1

???: “Aa~aa~nyaa~~! Let’s play!”

???: “—Die.”

Waving his hand energetically, Cecilus called out in a cheerful tone, and, accompanying the quiet yet fiery voice from across the door, was an unbelievable shockwave.

Centered on the shack that did not really serve its function as a house, there was enough might to transform the surrounding flatlands into a plain even flatter than the name suggested. The space exploded in a manner akin to taking a full swing at a mountain of fallen leaves with a broom; pure destruction with no discretion or mercy whatsoever.

Die, it was a ruthless blow seeking a result in exact accordance with the word that had been uttered.

???: “…”

Eyes wide in amazement, Spica was left speechless by the absurd scene unfolding before her.

She had viewed herself as being quite an agile individual, but if she had been standing at the site of that explosion, she would have been blown away without any doubt. —Truly, this fight was on another level.

Cecilus: “Good grief trying to drive me away without even showing your face first is rapidly making you more of a stay-at-home gal each and every day and that’s just not good y’know? I don’t intend on telling you time and time again to get out and feel the sun and the wind but when you’re all cooped up in there like that there’s just no other way to get your spirits up after all. Though with that said I've never experienced anything like shutting myself away in a room or facing downward so I can't really say for sure!"

Spica: "Uau?!"

Then, hearing that spirited voice from behind her, Spica jumped up in surprise.

The person responsible for causing that reaction laughed "Haha" in a lighthearted tone,

Cecilus: "Sorry for surprising you. But you're glad you listened to my warning now aren't you? This rocky area is just out of the range of Anya's tantrums. That's why it shouldn't be dangerous at all for you to watch us battle from over here maybe!"

Spica: "Aau, uu?"

Cecilus: "Woah there. Do be careful not to do anything heedless. For the time being Boss has entrusted you to me so I intend to provide you as much convenience as I can but there's a limit to that. The one to decide on that limit is not me but ultimately your own actions. With that said I'll give you one serious warning."

Spica: "…"

Cecilus: "To rise to the stage that lies ahead is only possible with adequate qualifications. Since I'm the only one dancing with Anya right now it's a stage for two, but… how about you?"

As he said that, Cecilus hopped off of the rocky area that Spica was standing on. To the fore, out from the shack that was still intact despite being the site of an explosion, came the heavenly maiden clad in enough light to dazzle one's eyes—Arakiya, slowly revealed herself.

Once again today, the First and Second of the Vollachian Empire commenced an unproductive battle.

Placing her hand to her chest in light of that fact, Spica brimmed with determination as she gazed at Cecilus's back—

Spica: “Uu!”

Cecilus: “Yes, yes, thank you so very much for your cheers! Without ever averting turning or blinking your eyes, bear witness! The leading actor, the star role of this world is coming through!!”

Spica: “Aau?!”

A shrill voice resounded, and Cecilus’s winking visage disappeared out from thin air. And after a flash, the report of an impact giving the impression that the world had fractured thundered throughout the sky.

Cecilus was someone to whom words never seemed to get through, despite the impression that they might; however, Spica had not taken the one-sided layup from him in the slightest, either. That was frustrating.

With how things were going, her great determination for remaining in the Empire—the day upon which she would fulfill her promise to Subaru and Rem, seemed quite distant indeed.

2

—The Great Disaster that had assailed the Vollachian Empire, and the subjugation of all the undead who had served as its vanguard.

That was the reason why Spica had parted ways with Subaru and the others to remain in the Empire, and the condition that she needed to fulfill for herself to proudly reunite with Subaru and everyone else in the Kingdom.

The name Spica, and the title of Sin Archbishop of Gluttony—those were the blessing and curse bestowed upon Spica, who was a mere nobody, and they were things akin to the two sides of a coin.

???: “If from here on, you are to live under the name that he has bestowed upon you, then you must not forsake the accursed title that bears the opposite side of that meaning. If you consider that too heavy a burden to bear, then you would be better off establishing a wholly different name and position for yourself.”

With those words, the busy Emperor earnestly listened to Spica's appeal, and presented her with an option.

His eyes had a scary look to them, and his voice was also stern, but Spica accepted that as the Emperor showing consideration in his own way. The Emperor likely understood the "burden" that Spica would end up carrying to a degree greater than Spica herself, and thus presented her with his honest advice.

However, in order to reach the future that Spica desired, that advice was not something she could listen to.

???: "—I see."

Therefore, Spica had no choice but to shake her head sideways to that advice.

However, with a brief response to Spica's choice, the fact that the Emperor—Abel, appeared so modestly satisfied that it was difficult to tell if he actually was, did not seem to just be Spica's imagination.

With that sequence of events, Spica remained in the Empire, and would subjugate the undead who survived the Great Disaster with her Star Eating, entrusted with the cleansing of their souls. On top of that, saying that he would have trouble sleeping at night if Spica failed, the Emperor who never slept much in the first place was so courteous as to present her with escorts to assist with her work.

Granted, that was a decision made due to his newlywed wife, Medium, scolding him to "Treat her better!", but she was still very grateful.

Grateful, she had indeed felt that way, but—

Spica: "…Aa~u".

Brimming with motivation, Spica wanted to set out on their journey as soon as possible, but contrary to those feelings of hers, she was completely out of sync with the pace of her escorts, who were crucial to her purpose. Or rather, it was not even a matter of being out of sync.

Among the two escorts that the Emperor had endorsed, the owner of abilities indispensable for this work—Arakiya, was someone Spica had never met nor ever exchanged greetings with. She had asked Cecilus for advice in regards to that, but from the outset, Cecilus had not received greetings from Arakiya either.

—Ultimately, without having fulfilled the objective she had in coming here, Spica merely observed the world crumbling from a distance.

The battle that had commenced with Cecilus's salutation uttered in mischievous jest, had become a fierce battle of such immense scope that she could only recall one or two of the battles amidst the Great Disaster that could rival it.

Spica: "Eius, Aaiya."

Basking in the tremors that reached this rocky area from several kilometers away, Spica muttered the names of the two combatants.

Cecilus spoke in a brisk and cheerful manner, and Subaru had told her time and time again that while it was fine to believe in his strength, and that alone, she must not let him do as he pleased in regards to anything else. Spica was apprehensive about her future prospects with him, given he would not fully understand her words, but she wanted to do her best so that things would go well.

And, while the strength of Arakiya, who she had yet to exchange words with, was certainly being assured, Spica also feared that she would be extremely difficult to deal with, so she also wanted to do her best to get on good terms with her.

For the wish and objective Spica wanted to fulfill, her own abilities were completely insufficient. —Thus, in order to reach the high places upon which she had set her sights, she would need to mimic Subaru's methods.

For the existence who had received new life as Spica, Natsuki Subaru was the ideal role model.

And that was precisely why, she thought thus. —Could her desires really be fulfilled by standing still here on these rocks?

???: “I can’t remember ever doing anything properly, and so I don’t have any self-important things to tell you, Spica-chan. Even so, please remember this. That I… that both that person and I, have been saved countless times by you, Spica-chan, who never once gave up in trying to get close to us.”

Those were words spoken to her by Rem, who, when Spica decided to remain in the Empire, had spoken to her countless times, tried to convince her countless times, eventually admitting that Spica’s resolve would not bend.

As an empty being, Spica had been without any understanding of what she was capable of, yet she was still fervent in her desire to not part with the hands of bright warmth present in her immediate vicinity; and of that girl, Rem had given such an evaluation.

In that case, that which Spica could do was—

Spica: “—Uau.”

3

From within their body, impulses overflowed without cease.

Blowing, blowing all of that out, they would shape the world to their will. It was the same as breathing. If one continued to inhale a large, large breath, at some point it would become painful until they let it all out in an exhale.

With immense power incomparable to breathing, that same phenomenon was occurring.

What differed was that no matter how much they exhaled, that which they had inhaled would not ease in the slightest; if anything, as they continued to exhale, the absurdity of continuing to inhale simultaneously persisted.

Everything, all of that was—

???: “—Princess.”

The exceedingly important, unwavering light that they had placed at the core of their own being, had disappeared.

Now that it had departed to a place unreachable by their hands, the pitiful existence for whom that light had illuminated the world—Arakiya, had been cast down into a realm of pure darkness.

???: “Ta-Ta-ta-ta-ta-ta-ta-ta-ta-ta-ta-ta-ta—!!”

With the report of a cacophonous yet familiar voice, the familiar sight of pale blue light charged ahead whilst leaving behind clouds of dust.

No matter how many times she rejected or drove him away, the odious man would come at her with a nonchalant face. Since long ago, he had been odious. But now, he was even more odious than back then.

Arakiya: “Why, didn’t you kill me?”

In the midst of that battle, he—Cecilus, certainly had the opportunity to kill Arakiya. Arakiya, too, had wished for him to do so. She had wanted to be killed.

By being killed along with the Great Spirit she had taken in, there was a chance to bring down the enemy’s plans.

If that had come to fruition, just if, Arakiya’s light might still be—

Cecilus: “You should really stop averting your eyes from reality, Anya. But what if just maybe so on and so forth. If you continue saying such things it’ll be a denial of the future that person triumphantly secured.”

Arakiya: “—Hk.”

As Cecilus seemed to see through Arakiya’s emotions, his words were accompanied by slashes of lightning speed, and Arakiya’s body, unable to dodge, was obliquely bisected. —However, she would not die.

Arakiya’s body, having taken in the power of the Stone, Muspel, could deliberately switch her state between a physical and a Mana-based body. The standard method to kill a Mana-based body was to exhaust its Od, but since she was supplied with Muspel's inexhaustible stores of Mana, Arakiya was effectively immortal.

But, being immortal was far from making the world what she wanted it to be.

Arakiya: "Triumphantly secured…? Even though, the Princess, is no longer among us…"

Cecilus: "Yeah. But I won't revise what I said nor will I apologize for it. This is a brand new stage triumphantly orchestrated by your princess sister and the many other actors who laid down their lives in that battle. So, as a part of this new production, we ought to dance and speak with flamboyance. —So that the world does not forget her."

Arakiya: "—Hk, I wanted to! I wanted to disappear together with the Princess!"

Screaming, belts of light began to emerge from all over her body. The light belts, which would evaporate anything they made contact with, rampaged, however, the beams of light tearing the world apart could not erase that lone lightning.

For what reason, why, how, would the sun ever rise for her again—?

???: "—U~au!"

A hell in which even the tears emerging at the corners of her eyes were vaporized by the heat she herself was emitting.

An absolute domain where none could survive save for azure lightning, and she, who had fused with the vast lands of the Empire. That battlefield of certain death that rejected all who lacked the qualifications to enter, had been reached by a voice and weight that ought not have been there under any circumstances.

Arakiya: "…"

Understanding that as the weight of somebody clinging to her back, as Arakiya shed tears of blood from her lightless eyes, she attempted to forcibly shake that person off. For that purpose, she need not even exert her arms. By merely unleashing the power overflowing from within her, she was reduced to an existence that served to destroy the world.

Even so, she had been unable to save Priscilla—

Cecilus: "—Anya!"

The power to blast away the person on her back, was beaten back by an inundation from a storm of sword attacks.

No matter how much he attempted to cut her, the inexhaustible supply of Mana would just restore Arakiya's body, but if she used her reserved stores of Mana for that purpose, she would run out of Mana to use for offense. Thus, these slashes served to keep the person clinging to Arakiya's back alive for longer.

To use his power for the sake of another, was entirely not like Cecilus in the slightest.

Cecilus: "The act of experiencing something also means the act of gaining something. If you had thought that my selling point was an invariable way of being then how charming of you! You acquire things by losing and losing then gaining. All things in life are either flowery makeup or warpaint."

Arakiya: "What are you…"

Cecilus: "And that's not just limited to me but also applies to you and that girl on your back."

With a powerful flash of swordlight, Arakiya's chest was pierced, and the upturned blade assailed her in an attempt to lop off her head. Faced with that tremendous sword attack, Arakiya thought that she might as well surrender her life to it.

However, the slash that ought to have lopped off Arakiya's slender neck, did not connect.

Arakiya: "…"

For a moment, her vision blurred, and Cecilus disappeared from in front of her.

Confusion began to brew in Arakiya's head, wondering just what had occurred. Only, she was in a place where the height and angle of the scenery she saw now differed to what it had just been a moment prior—

???: "Uu!"

Then, she belatedly realized that the one who had done that, was a small child triumphing behind her.

With that sensation, Arakiya turned around to face the person behind her. The one who had spun through the air and landed on all fours, was a young girl with a strong will dwelling in her blue eyes.

With her serious gaze intact, the young girl seemed to point her finger straight at Arakiya, and—

Girl: "Aaiya."

That was, while not pronounced very well, a call towards Arakiya.

Then, the young girl directed the finger that had been pointed to Arakiya to the one standing beside her, Cecilus,

Girl: "Eius."

And finally, pointing to herself,

Girl: "Ica."

With that, she had continued so.

Arakiya: "…"

Dumbfounded, Arakiya stood stock-still at the young girl's actions. Ignoring her reaction, Cecilus returned his katana to its sheath and looked at the young girl before shrugging his shoulders,

Cecilus: “It was quite brave of you to rise to the stage and participate in the battle between me and Anya. That should be recognized without any complaints. And so, Anya, this girl has a duty that she needs and wants to fulfill with our help. Both you and I, Anya, were already ordered to cooperate by our director, His Excellency, so—”

Cecilus was already brazenly acting as if he were the young girl’s comrade. Those words of Cecilus were suddenly interrupted. The reason was simple. —Arakiya had fallen to her knees, unable to remain standing, and placing both her hands on the ground before Cecilus and the girl,

Arakiya: “Bleurghhhhhhh…”

With her eyes darting around, the upsurge of a hurling sensation drove Arakiya into a corner, rendering her incapable of action.

The inexplicable fluctuation in the world from a moment earlier—albeit Arakiya was unaware, was a teleportation in space brought about by the young girl. That had greatly perturbed the insides of her body and head, causing the immortal Arakiya to become incapable of even standing up. An unthinkable method to render her powerless.

Cecilus: “Haha I see now this is quite unexpected! I don’t think His Excellency could have foreseen this, but… it seems that Spica-san also has the qualifications to rise to the stage!”

Arakiya: “Di… e…”

As Cecilus lightly spoke with an expression indifferent to Arakiya’s anguish, she surged with murderous intent towards him. However, the ferocious hurling sensation hindered that intent, preventing it from taking shape.

That was vexing, pathetic, and Arakiya spilled out weeping groans.

Thereupon—

Girl: “Aaiya.”

The young girl crouched down beside her, and patted her on the back. —At that sensation, though still unable to lift her face, Arakiya had no choice but to continue cowering.

But, for the first time since she had lost her light, tears that found their genesis in a place outside of the domain of anger, streamed down her cheeks.

END

Kararagi Reaper Incident I

1

???: “—As I thought, are ya worried ‘bout Natsuki-kun?”

And, called out to from the side as he looked out the window, Julius felt ashamed of his uncertainty.

To cause one’s liege to feel apprehension and worry, was an act that any Knight ought to feel ashamed of. All the more when, it was not in regards to their own areas, but instead that of an opposing Camp.

Henceforth, Julius shook his head “No”, and,

Julius: “I sincerely apologize for causing you worry. Hereafter, I shall be more careful.”

Anastasia: “Nah, ya don’t gotta act so overserious. Even for us, we completed our original objective. He’ll probably keep on goin’ ‘til he dies, tho’ leavin’ Natsuki-kun in such a state is real darn terrifyin’.”

Julius: “…Though, he and those around him all seemed to accept it as “Sparka”.”

Anastasia: “Them tryna be overly positive ‘bout it’s even more pitiful… well, anything from there on out’s not our job, so Emilia-san ‘n the others really gotta help support him.”

Elegantly placing her hand to her cheek, Anastasia expressed her thoughts.

She was his master, and her words rang true. From here on, outsiders such as Julius and Anastasia had no room to interfere, neither should they.

???: “Regardless, they helped us out quite a bit to get back on our feet. Now that the positions are reversed, perhaps he’s unable to wait for things to settle… that might be a risky position to take.”

Anastasia: “Stop with that, this little one’s gonna end up bewilderin’ Julius again…”

Having wedged its way into the conversation between the pair, the statement of the white fox scarf—Echidna, caused Anastasia to grab the Spirit’s snout, and cast upon it words of scolding.

At the familiar interaction between the two, a slightly pleased look appeared on Julius’s face, then,

Julius: “You have no need to be concerned… what I mean to say is, while you may have your doubts based on my track record thus far, I assure you that these thoughts and concerns of Anastasia-sama and Echidna, are premature.”

Echidna: “Oya, is that so? We left Vollachia before Natsuki-kun could conclude his Sparka. Since you would have certainly been upset with that decision, I was afraid that maybe your trust in Ana had been greatly damaged.”

Julius: “Certainly, it would be a lie to say that my heart does not still ache. However, my utmost priority is Anastasia-sama. Subaru must get back up by his own strength… supported by those around him.”

Without deception, laying out his honest feelings, Julius responded to Anastasia and Echidna.

The battle against the Great Disaster concluded, Julius and Co had left Subaru’s party in the Fortified City, and departed from the Empire first. Until their final day, Subaru had been accumulating time in a ritual known as Sparka—that which could also be called Absolution, time spent in order to punish himself.

The fact that his words had been unable to reach that pitiful figure, was an extremely great sorrow to him.

However, the reason Subaru sought Sparka—the weighty wound he had received upon the death of Priscilla Barielle, was not something he bore alone.

Julius: “…”

Quietly, Julius shifted his gaze to Anastasia as she scratched Echidna's neck.

Already having regained her presence of mind, Anastasia appeared to have been acting normally, but Julius knew of her bottomless selfishness to desire all things—a personality such that, not wanting Julius to vanish from her memories via the Authority of Gluttony, she had even sealed her own self.

For Anastasia, losing somebody she knew was a terribly difficult affair. Even if that was somebody who opposed her in the Royal Selection, with whom she bore a mutual recognition that they could not get along.

That was why—

Echidna: "You say Ana is your utmost priority. Goodness gracious, I am relieved to hear that from your mouth. If you do your best to convince Halibel now, then supposing you fall from your seat as Knight, Julius, you may be able to garner enough prestige to still act as a substitute."

Julius: "In regards to strength, and loyalty towards Anastasia-sama… for this example, how about we refer to it as the sentiments of holding Anastaisa-sama dear? In regards to those, I may have poor prospects against Halibel-san, but unfortunately I shan't concede this title of mine. It rests upon my honor."

As his gaze clashed with Echidna's black eyes, Julius revealed where he stood.

With Anastasia as his number one, Julius and Echinda were in agreement of the same objective. It would be senseless to incur the displeasure of this Spirit, and it could easily turn into a futile conflict.

Eliminating those numerous difficulties, he would support Anastasia.

Julius: "Extolled as the Finest, that is the duty I must fulfill as a Knight."

With a sidelong glance to the quarreling exchange of gazes between Julius and Echidna, Anastasia became troubled, but maintained her smile as she felt perplexed.

The two people talking beside her, she had fully intended on understanding their intent and worries.

Having entered Vollachia as a special emissary from Kararagi, Anastasia was returning amidst feelings of loss—fearing the situation, those two were showing consideration for her.

But, had the two of them not grasped Anastasia's mental state a little too deeply?

Anastasia: "Look, with that princess dyin', I ain't tryna say that I ain't shaken."

Someone who would not die even if killed; Priscilla seemed to fit that evaluation more than anybody else.

For her to scorch her life away in order to defend her homeland, and then to leave those final words behind to Anastasia and Emilia there, there was no way that her heart would be left engraved with nothing.

But, much more susceptible to feeling hurt, likely without having prepared her heart, Emilia had also been present. —She had not told anybody about this, but Emilia's presence had largely saved her.

That was because the presence of someone who was more disturbed than her, had graced Anastasia with the ability to think in a composed manner. Thanks to that, Anastasia had nullified her inner turmoil in regards to Priscilla's death.

Thus, Julius and Echidna's concern was little overbearing, but—

Anastasia: "Well, maybe it's best for those two if I let 'em worry 'bout me for now."

If one tripped on something and scraped their knee, the blood from the wound would eventually stop, become a scab, and after enough time elapsed for it to heal, that person would take care so as to not trip again.

Right now, Julius and Echidna were in the midst of that process, waiting for it to become a scab.

For that purpose—

Anastasia: “For now, I’d like to quickly deal with the job at hand, but… seems like they’re takin’ quite a bit of time to greet us.”

Caressing Echidna’s fur at her neck, Anastasia muttered so.

—Anastasia’s group, having departed from the Vollachian Empire and crossed the border back into the Kararagi City-States, had entered the Third City, Ivada, in order to report on their results as emissaries.

They had already verified their identity, and had been ushered into the mansion of Ivada’s mayor, Orgo Hayata, but they had yet to be given permission to meet with Orgo himself. They understood that he was a busy man, but the business they were here on also ought to have been quite important.

Anastasia: “…Don’t tell me, ‘s there some sorta problem happenin’?”

???: “—As expected, ya’ve got darn fantastic intuition, lil’ Ana.”

As Anastasia pondered the reason for which the other party might not be right, the one who impolitely listened to that, and called out after, was the tall figure who had appeared in the empty room—Halibel.

Unlike Anastasia and the rest, who were being treated as guests, Halibel was treated as a Kararagi insider, and thus had already appeared before Orgo, but—

Anastasia: “What’s this, ya know it’s bad manners to eavesdrop when people’re talkin’ to themselves, right?”

Halibel: “Sorry sorry. But I ain’t eavesdroppin’ or anythin’ like that. My ears just happen ta be really darn good, thaaat’s all. They’re done gettin’ ready back there, so they told me ta “go give ‘em a hollar~”.”

Julius: “Though, I find it difficult to believe that Mayor Orgo used his jaw in the manner you just did.”

Halibel: “Well that’s ya know, words are flexible. Well now, hurry hurry. Remember lil’ Ana’s favorite phrase?”

Anastasia: ““Time is money”, the Hoshin proverb. Really now.”

Being hastened by Halibel’s unabashed attitude, Anastasia took Julius’s gently proffered hand and stood up, before turning to face Halibel with a “So then?”

Anastasia: “When ya praised my intuition, ya meant that there was actually some sorta problem, right?”

Halibel: “Yeah, tho’ I think it’s prolly best ya hear it directly from Orgo insteada from me. I ain’t got that firm of a grasp on the whole thing after all.”

Anastasia: “Don’t frighten me.”

Putting on airs, or rather, not wanting to give them superfluous preconceptions, Halibel’s manner of speech was somewhat reminiscent of the meeting with the mayors before they set out to the Empire. Back then, the topic of conversation was the cataclysm brought about by the large-scale resurrection of undead that had occurred along the border with the Vollachian Empire.

The fact that Halibel’s demeanor reminded her of that, was more than enough of a sinister omen.

Anastasia: “Even tho’ we just got back, there’s always gotta be somethin’… Really, we ain’t even got any time to get some rest.”

3

The Kararagi City-States was a country made up of ten enrolled large cities, and the mayors entrusted with each city were all distinguished individuals of brilliant talents.

Hence, the mayor of the Third City, Ivada, Orgo Hayata, was also a competent individual.

As he received the report of Anastasia and the others after they had returned from Vollachia, Orgo tightly clasped the fan in his hand while the rounded tips of his characteristic mustache quivered.

Orgo: “In other words, the incident that got its impetus in the Empire was safely resolved while those dead folk were still squirmin’ all ‘bout. Did the Empire send any gratitude the way of us City-States?”

Anastasia: “Bingo. I was talkin’ with their Prime Minister ‘n secured a definite agreement. I’ve also got a full promissory note, so ya can rest assured.”

Orgo: “I see, I see. Then, the fact that y’all made it back safely, ‘n even incurred a debt from Vollachia to Kararagi, is truly a matter for great~ celebration. My deepest gratitude.”

Anastasia: “…Considerin’ all that, Orgo-san, yer face doesn’t make it seem like it’s time for “great celebrations” in the slightest.”

Having received a report that was naught but positive, Orgo showed great delight in his words. However, as Anastasia had pointed out, that delight was not reflected in his voice or facial expression whatsoever.

Just as Halibel had prefaced earlier in the empty room, some sort of disheartening problem was occurring; Echidna also perceived as much. And so, that was likely something that Anastasia would also poke her beak into.

Echidna: “—Goodness gracious, I am beat.”

Before the atmosphere of the conversation could clearly grow weighty, Echidna sighed.

If possible, after giving her all to the job of emissary, she had wanted Anastasia to rest for a bit without needing to think about anything—in this case, she wanted to give her time for something relaxing, along the lines of working the abacus for the first time in a while as the representative of the Hoshin Trading Company.

Of course, there was also the fact that Anastasia saw this as Echidna and Julius worrying too much about her, but in Echidna's opinion, Anastasia was mistaken.

Echidna, having been the closest to Anastasia both physically and emotionally for ten years already, was proud to clearly understand that the events of the Empire were weighing on Anastasia more than she herself was aware of.

That was why, it was not her intent to get involved in yet another problem before Anastasia could get proper rest, but.

Orgo: "—. Truth be told, there's a teeny bit of a problem that's stirred up in Banan."

And, as Orgo disclosed that in a feeble voice, Echidna narrowed her black eyes.

It was not as though Orgo's attitude was actually a weak one, but instead, he was employing a method to incur the other party's sympathy. Of course, it was not something that would be effective against Anastasia, a big time merchant who had been through hundreds of battles, but—

Anastasia: "A problem in Banan… what' this about? Given that you were waitin' for our report, perhaps it's tied to those dead folk?"

However, in such a manner, Anastasia prompted Orgo to continue.

Anastasia: "Well, it'd be a quick chat if that was the case, but it's kinda troublin' that it don't seem to be the case. The origin of all the issues with dead folk were done 'n dealt with back in Vollachia. Based on the locations, too, I think it'd be rather difficult for the two to be connected."

Julius: "Banan, that is the the Second City, correct? It is located to the west of Kyou, which is right in the center of Kararagi… quite the distance from the border with the Empire."

Anastasia: "There're some zombies that remained unfinished, but based on the distance this'd be unrelated."

Julius and Anastasia conversed at length, pointing to the map they had envisioned in their heads. At that exchange referencing a mental map he could not see, Orgo gripped his fan and nodded.

In short, it was a matter of the following.

Halibel: "With the problem in Vollachia settled, here on out'd be negotiations for our reward… even tho' that'd be the ideal, someone's doin' somethin' ta stir up trouble in Kararagi so we can't for now, that about the gist of it?"

Orgo: "…Regardless of your phrasing, Halibel-han's thinking is not mistaken."

As Orgo glared at him with a bitter phase, Halibel bobbed the kiseru in his mouth up and down in a perfunctory response.

Whatever the case, if it was as Halibel had summed up, then Orgo's fears could be presumed to be unrelated to Vollachia, instead being something brought about by a third party. The only problem was the question of, why was this being regarded with such importance?

Anastasia: "I told ya to get to the point, Orgo-san. What's happenin', and what's the extent of the damage? 'N finally, why're ya bringin' it up to us?"

Julius: "Anastasia-sama? I believe it is because the information we returned with may factor into Mayor Orgo's decision making…"

Anastasia: "Nah, it ain't just that. It's 'bout Orgo-san 'n the rest. For the most part, we've generally grasped that it ain't related to the Empire. But then, the fact that he called us here means—"

Pausing her words there, the glint in Anastasia's pale-turquoise eyes grew intense.

In order to get the upper hand on her opponent in negotiations, Anastasia deemed it appropriate to prevent herself from becoming emotional; thus, this was a scarcely seen gaze of clearly defined anger.

At that demeanor of Anastasia's, the thoughts of Julius and Echidna lagged half a step behind. However, the response from Orgo that followed, clearly informed them of the reason behind that anger.

The fan held in Orgo's hand grated, and he continued with a sorrowful expression.

That was—

Orgo: "…Large-scale wind damage's broken out in Banan. The city's in a state of partial destruction, 'n as a precaution, we'd sent many people from the surrounding area inside. Among them were the Iron Fang from y'all's place."

Anastasia: "—Hk! Ricardo 'n the rest… are they alright?"

Orgo: "We can't contact them… Right now, Banan's been completely enveloped by wind, 'n ain't nobody can leave."

4

Amidst the thunderous, overpowering gusts of feral wind, Ricardo leaned against his great cleaver, and held his ground.

The surrounding area, the townscape of Kararagi he had been acquainted with for many years, was devastated and ravaged by wind; roofs and pillars, anything and everything had been blown away, things were left in a miserable state.

Ricardo: "What's this, reminds me of that time there was that darn huge fire."

In Kararagi, where most buildings were made of wood, if a fire was started by something it would immediately blaze its way through the town. When that happened, they would demolish all the houses in order to prevent the flames from spreading further, and the result was the similar empty feeling that was now present in the town.

But then again, the people of Kararagi were not so soft as to have their hearts broken at that.

In the past, when the tenement that Ricardo and Anastasia lived in burned down, a mother who had lost every last one of her household belongings laughed “I guess I shoulda prepared some yams”; and afterwards, Ricardo witnessed her and her children get back on their feet stronger than ever.

The strength to smile even in those depressing times, was certainly present in Kararagi.

Ricardo: “That’s why, we ain’t got no choice but to deal with this ‘n make it so everyone can smile again. Our employer’s gonna be comin’ home soon, after all.”

Saying that, he endured to keep his eyelids open, as the wind verged on forcing them shut, Ricardo glared to his fore.

As gusts of fierce wind danced, seeming as if they could sweep up Ricardo’s large body, towering over two meters tall, at any moment, he glared at at the silhouette approaching him with calm steps.

Captured in Ricardo’s sharp gaze, the siloutette—the slender, white-haired woman, clad in waso clothing, tilted her head,

Woman: “Hmm? Why, don’t you just talk a lot with that loud mouth of yours? That large body of yours is just that and nothing more. You weren’t blown to bits by my wind, so I will praise you… Who in their right mind would praise you?!”

Ricardo: “Well ain’t ya a vibrant young lady. If you’re gonna put on a performance, I think ya’d earn more profit by doin’ so at a playhouse.”

Woman: “Silence, impudent thief. —Do as you’re told, and return my Light Sphere.”

He had tried to ascertain if it was someone who he could converse with, however, Ricardo wrinkled his snout at the unfamiliar phrase spoken by the woman with the hostile attitude.

He could presume that the woman before him had lost something, and was now searching for it. The problem was, her method of searching was a bit over the top and grandiose, having enshrouded the entire city in one large tornado.

At the center of the incident that would later go on to be called the Shinigami Cataclysm, Ricardo grit his fangs. —All the while, thinking about how it did not seem like this would simply end with a severe scolding Anastasia once she got back.

END

No Stella No Life I

1

???: “—Aldebaran.”

And, that which had been called out in a clear voice, was something that Aldebaran hated.

He hated that name. In addition, he also hated the person who had called out to him. Furthermore, plenty of other factors that he hated could be squeezed out for argument’s sake.

Anyway, this hatred of his could not be helped.

???: “Good grief, that is quite the displeased face you have got on there. Though, I had suggested that name thinking it would be the best thing to do for you.”

Speaking in such a nonchalant manner, that upside-down face entered his field of vision.

The reason for its inversion was plain and simple, it was because he was lying down, sprawled out on the ground. And the reason that he was lying like that was also plain and simple, it was because this upside-down person had gotten the best of him.

The gaze, tinged with discontent, along with the facial features adorned with long lashes and composed beauty that did not waver in the slightest, could all be made out in his upside-down field of vision, which really pissed him off.

???: “Sorry for that. I myself am not particularly concerned with beauty. Though even with that said, I do sometimes pay undue worry to the fact that I have a rather thin figure compared to my friends. Looking at it on the whole, I wonder if I might be jealous to the extent of abandoning it.”

Whilst saying that, the upside down person lightly put on flirtatious airs.

Their demeanor and gestures made it obvious that they wanted to say “I would do no such thing”, so his feelings of absolutely not wanting to go along with that person’s whims no matter what ended up winning out.

However, in response to his silence, that person giggled “Kuku”,

???: “If we ignore your rebellious heart to the version of me inside of you, would the fact that you are aware of the words I wanted to say but did not actually utter not mean that I had imagined the exact same words as you?”

Aldebaran: “That sorta reasoning’s way too underhanded! Isn’t that a scam that’s like “the one who speaks wins”?!”

Faced with logic that was far too invincible, he jumped up as if to say not to mess with him. But, that direct and genuine protest of his did not seem to resonate with that person at all.

After all, for her, it seemed only natural to not pay mind to any verbal abuse or objections—

???: “Underhandedness, scams, and whatnot, are a bit off the mark. After all—I am an evil Witch, you know?”

Indeed, with an expression quite fitting for a Witch, one more malicious than that of cowards or conmen, she smiled.

2

???: “—Aldebaran.”

And, whenever that was called out in a clear voice, Aldebaran would no longer want to respond.

Even if he understood it as a name that referred to himself, he could not help but hate the things he hated. Having said that, even if he persistently tried to remain ignorant, it would be of no avail.

That was because—

???: “Aldebaran, Aldebaran, Aldebaran, Aldebaran, Aldebaran,

Aldebaran, Aldebaran, Aldebaran, Aldebaran, Aldebaran—”

Aldebaran: “Hey, shut the fuck up! I can hear you!”

???: “That is good to hear. I was also wondering if you could hear me as I was calling out to you. It is of utmost importance that there are no discrepancies in our mutual perception. So then, have you heard?”

At the unashamed words of the Witch, Aldebaran sat cross-legged and rested his chin in his left hand.

With his lips zipped up in a frown, he demonstrated his lack of intent to answer, but unfortunately, this was not a person so kind as to permit him the right to remain silent.

Aldebaran: “…”

Keeping his mouth shut, as he tried to compete against her in a battle of silent endurance, those black eyes trained their gaze on him silently.

Aldebaran: “~~Hk, fine! It was about magic, right?! The thing you love and are so good at with so much knowledge worthy of celebration, yeah?!”

Witch: “So you do know? But then again, there is some room for argument as to whether I like magic or not. It seems that both myself and others all recognize that I am good at it. But, as for whether being good at something immediately locks me in to liking or disliking it…”

Aldebaran: “Don’t go saying a hundred things in response to just one! I’m increasingly losing the will to talk to you!”

As the Witch immediately made him regret his careless remark, Aldebaran roughly scratched his head. Closing a single eye as she looked at him, the Witch sighed with a “Really now”, and,

Witch: “Why do you always try to shut down the flow of the conversation like that? Even though the result will be the same, you still engage in this pointless resistance. It is not efficient, so I struggle to understand.”

Aldebaran: “…If you don’t like it then just stop. Not like I’m asking you to do this.”

Witch: “Dislike? I had never even thought of the notion of disliking this. I had said I struggle to understand, but it is not as if I am rejecting that. Rather, as somebody who wishes to learn things that I do not know, I am more inclined to take interest in the things that are difficult. That said…”

Aldebaran: “That said?”

Witch: “Despite being of the same origin, I am seriously troubled as to why such a difference in results has been produced. An earlier or later birth, difference in environments, the scope of a sense of purpose; such various factors are conceivable, but… it does not seem practical to narrow them down to specifically one factor.”

Placing a finger to her lips, the Witch muttered and went into her own little world. As this showed signs of dragging on for a while, Aldebaran looked up to the sky feeling fed up.

Overhead, was a sky that went on and on and on, without any visible rifts. Far in the distance, the green plain that met the sky at the horizon was similarly spread out over a vast area with no end in sight. In reality, if one ventured out there without thinking about anything, they would most likely get lost and die; that was the sort of place it was.

This was a dream space created by the Witch. —It was always this place when he came, but each time he was invited, he was shocked at the extraordinary feat of creating an entire individual world.

The Witch was capable of this much, and yet even she harbored a grand desire that she had been unable to fulfill. To try and get such a tiny individual to fulfill it for her, made it unthinkable that she was sane—

Witch: “Unfortunately, I cannot help but say that that impression of yours is a shallow one.”

Aldebaran: “…You came back from your own world faster than I expected.”

Witch: “I was just immersed in contemplation for a bit… ah, did you refer to that as my own world? That is an interesting way to phrase it. As expected, you have ideas that I do not.”

Aldebaran: “…”

The Witch smiled in admiration, and understanding that those black eyes were projected past him onto somebody else, and praising that other person, Aldebaran spat out a “Keh” in a cursing manner.

His reaction caused the Witch to blink in surprise, and,

Witch: “Surely you do not expect me to be able to guess the emotions of others, right? Both you and I do not have the leeway to waste time in vain. That is why I deliberately ignore all of your complex feelings, but… you seem to have a misunderstanding.”

Aldebaran: “Misunderstanding? Is the Witch who can’t understand people’s hearts about to lecture me?”

Witch: “Logic and emotion are separate things. They must not be allowed to mix together. —Recall that which is entrusted to you, and cannot be entrusted to me. It is an issue divorced from one’s amount of strength or presence of ability. To put it tangibly, what is required is not one’s qualities. It is a qualification.”

Aldebaran: “Qualification?”

Witch: “Indeed, the qualification to stand before her; it is a matter of possessing that. The reasons why I talk to you about various things all coalesse around that one point. Did I answer your question?”

Stroking her own long white hair, the Witch inclined her head.

She had prefaced that she did not understand the hearts of people, but Aldebaran’s questions were all precisely cleared up by her eloquence. It was extremely difficult to believe that she could not understand people’s hearts, as she claimed.

Perhaps that too was founded in the Witch's own logic, serving as an expression to make a show of her faults.

Witch: "I'm just mimicking. And, I don't think I'm particularly good at it either."

Aldebaran: "…"

Witch: "After a certain amount of observation and verification, it becomes possible to systemize the flow of thoughts and actions to a certain degree. I am doing nothing more than adopting that from the people I have occasionally encountered. Whether it is often or not, I believe it is something that everyone can do."

As expected, the Witch had accurately processed the reason for Aldebaran's silence.

And, if what she said was true, it was nothing more than a calculated result based on a vast array of patterns. However, if one began to say such things, then one could also question if free will even existed in anyone at all.

Aldebaran: "I don't think I'm especially complex, but on the other hand, I don't think absolutely everything is so simple that it can be covered by statistical data."

Witch: "Did I hurt you? If so, then excuse me. I am not denying your humanity. I am not so supreme of a living being that I could do such a thing, you know?"

Aldebaran: "…"

Witch: "We have gone a bit off topic. Shall we return to the main focus? Time here passes slower than it does in reality, but that is not to say it is infinite. Even if you use your Authority."

It was likely not that it had become inconvenient for her. The Witch's demeanor was as if to say that she truly thought there would be no meaning in continuing, to which Aldebaran nodded "Yeah".

After all, even if it was with a person he hated, and with a name that he hated, it was necessary for him to be here.

—For both Aldebaran and the Witch, that was where the meaning of their lives laid.

Witch: “Well then, with you lying on the ground there, you have now witnessed the effects of the four fundamental attributes. There are also the two attributes of Yin and Yang on top of that, but… let us exclude them from the candidates of things for you to learn.”

Aldebaran: “And why’s that? You can’t teach them well?”

Witch: “It also depends on the attitude of the one learning, but that is not why. The attributes of Yin and Yang have a conflicting relationship, so if you advance in one it will have an impact on your acquisition of the other one. And, the talent you possess for the Yin attribute is planned to all be used for the acquisition and execution of the forbidden art you are to be taught.”

Aldebaran: “Don’t make developmental plans for people all on your own…”

Witch: “After all, that sort of duty has been entrusted to me by those guys and my friends. So, what will you do?”

At the inconsiderate question from the Witch as she tilted her head, Aldebaran furrowed his brow.

Likely, he was being asked about the four attributes other than Yin and Yang—about which of the magic attributes of Earth, Water, Fire, and Wind he wished to be professionally taught in; that is what it seemed like.

Aldebaran: “Which one, hmm…”

Until just a moment prior, in order to let Aldebaran experience the effects of those attributes, the Witch had fired off an assortment of extraordinary magic. She had probably fully intended on teaching Aldebaran at full strength with those methods, so as to allow him to narrow down his choice of magic.

In all honesty, those methods were a vivid display of how she did not have a human heart, but—

Aldebaran: "—Magic of the Earth attribute, should do fine."

Witch: "Hmm? Why did you think to want that, if may I ask?"

Aldebaran: "Earth, stone, sand, and whatnot, I thought that controlling those things would be the most versatile. Fire and wind are far too restrictive in the way you can use them. Water isn't too bad, but… I can't see myself mastering it. That's why earth magic will do fine. Plain yet crafty, the absolute best, isn't it?"

Witch: "…"

Having heard Aldebaran's choice and reasoning, the Witch fell silent. Closing a single eye amidst that silence, Aldebaran asked the Witch "What" in a stern voice.

Then, the Witch lightly shrugged her shoulder with a "Nothing",

Witch: "I was just admiring how your selection and reasoning are truly so much like Him. Whether you like it or not, you have inherited the systemized likeness of Him."

Aldebaran: "—Hk."

If she truly did not intend on irritating him, she must have been an expert at stepping on landmines.

Truly, flaring up with indignation at the statement that could only ever serve to put him in a foul mood, Aldebaran was seriously wavering as to whether he should attempt to lay his hands on the Witch, knowing full well he would lose.

Wavering, as he wavered, he suddenly thought of a way to take revenge.

Aldebaran: "—It is an honor, Teacher."

Witch: "…What?"

As her cheek stiffened with a twitch, the Witch narrowed her black eyes at Aldebaran's words.

Seeing the Witch's reaction, Aldebaran wore a huge grin on his face and shrugged his shoulders,

Aldebaran: "After all, you've taught me all these things until now, and you want to teach me about magic from here on out. So then, isn't it only natural to call you Teacher with immense respect?"

Witch: "…I shall tell you this under the assumption that you do not know, but the addressment of "Teacher" is something tied to exceedingly bitter memories for me. That is why…"

Aldebaran: "That's why, I'm calling you Teacher from now, Teacher."

Witch: "…"

Called by it repeatedly, the Witch displayed a reaction of clear displeasure for the first time. Having accomplished that, Aldebaran moistened his lips in an attempt to double down.

But, that assault did not come to fruition. —The Witch's expression had clouded over. It was accompanied by a clear atmosphere of sorrow and pitifulness.

Aldebaran: "Ugh, ghhh…"

Witch: "Ah, no, excuse me. My thoughts experienced external turmoil from your heartless conduct. As I continue to go along with you hereafter, I am also resolved for pain, so—"

Aldebaran: "My bad! It was my fault! I'll apologize, so stop making that heart wrenching face!"

Even if that face meant his revenge had been a success, he did not feel good in the slightest. Rather, it seemed like he would start having bad dreams, so Aldebaran, who was supposed to be the one attacking, ended up hoisting a white flag.

Witch: "Oya, is that so? I guess you are quite reasonable."

As Aldebaran declared defeat, the Witch instantly released her anguished expression, one that had been on the verge of tears, and spoke so in an indifferent manner.

Her unashamed fake tears—she had not gotten to the point of actually crying, so they were not even fake tears, but having been deceived by them, Aldebaran began to tremble all over, and,

Aldebaran: "—You, this fucking bitch…!"

Witch: "What a horrible comment. However, I was merely educated that if you are going to irritate others, you must have the resolve to do so. If you are going to go as far as to call me that, I would be more at ease if you would just call me Teacher, reluctant as I may be."

Aldebaran: "Mh…"

Witch: "Of course, my impression that it is an unpleasant title will not change. Only, I am in a position to force many forms of discomfort upon you from here on. And hence, we ought to make a few concessions. Right?"

With a wink, the Witch had stood dominant until the very end, and Aldebaran knew it would be unproductive to try and argue against her.

To begin with, it was something that he was fully aware of. —After all, ever since his birth, before they had formed this sort of relationship, not once had he managed to beat her in an argument.

Witch: "So then, about your choice… yes, I think it is a good one. You do not seem to have any talent for magic. There is no possibility except for an exceedingly mediocre one. In that case, by honing that mediocrity as much as possible, you can aim for the gaps in the armor of an opponent who has secured themselves with an iron helmet."

Aldebaran: "If you're gonna put on airs, Teacher, at least praise me some more. This is only the first lesson."

Witch: "You want me to flatter you with things that I have not even thought of? Well, I'm quite good at saying heartless things, but I suppose I do not wish to face you in such a way. The reason for that is… you know it even without me telling you, correct?"

Aldebaran: "That face won't work on me, you're so ill-natured."

At the black eyes that stared up at him, Aldebaran stuck out his tongue and took a stance of denial. That instant, the Witch also stuck out her tongue as if she wanted to say "Too bad", and then raised a single finger.

Then—

Witch: "Then, with your body… even if I say that, this is a spirit world and hence you have a spiritual body, but let us have you learn by enduring some attacks. Either way, you will end up experiencing Death many times over from here on. Crushed, ground up, torn apart, it would be good to prepare for the many ways you may lose your life."

Aldebaran: "Oi! Is that really the right way to be going about things?! Are you sure you're not just extremely angry with me?!"

Witch: "Hahaha, I do not understand emotions, so I have never been angry."

Aldebaran: "You filthy liar!!"

Right after he screamed that out loudly, the shape of the world slowly began to shift. —Around the Witch with her finger raised, a square section began to rise out from the ground of the plain, and that cube-shaped object floated up. That which was revolving around the Witch, akin to a beast baring its fangs, was an attack preparation.

Looking at that, as Aldebaran gulped down his saliva at the sense of danger, he simultaneously had a thought. —If he could do the same thing, in what kind of ingenious way would he use it?

Witch: "That attitude bears resolve. —You are truly Greed."

Aldebaran: "Shut the hell up, you shitty Teacher."

Verbally abusing the smiling Witch, he plunged into the lesson on which his life was staked.

All of it was in preparation for fulfilling the meaning for which Aldebaran had been born. —In order to arrive at the forthcoming day he would surpass the stars, this was the start of laying the bricks that would reach the realm of a billion.

END

Comic Alive Collection 11

Once Upon a Time in Lugunica
(CA)

1

Sons inherit their father's—or grandfather's—names. That itself was not particularly unusual—it was commonplace in noble families, and not unheard of in others. However, bloodlines that did it successively again and again were a rarity.

In the main family of that great house, the head always inherited the same name without exception. It was an absolute rule regardless of sex, and as a custom that had been done for the last four hundred years, and continued through twelve generations, it would likely continue from here onwards, too.

"Roswaal L. Mathers."

The one whose name was called was a figure with long, dark-blue hair.

He respectfully knelt on the red carpet, raised his head, and stared straight ahead at the person in front of him. His eyes were a rare two different colors—the right being blue, the left being yellow. In the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica, yellow was the normal eye color. Blue or green weren't rare, but the vast majority were an earthy yellow. So a blue eye reminiscent of water took most people's breath away with its beauty. His striking profile gave off the same impression.

"…"

He was a young man—or rather at an age where he could still be considered a boy. This fourteen-year-old youth, however, was in a situation where it would normally be too much to bear unless you had experienced it a number of times, yet he faced the ceremony with a calmness as though having been granted nerves of steel.

Ceremony. Yes, this was a ceremony.

In this world, the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica was counted as one of the four great nations. And this was an important ceremony within the kingdom, carried out to recognize those who are to be part of its nobility.

It was a momentous ceremony, done so one of Lugunican nobility might inform the person who stood at the very top of the kingdom that they had succeeded their predecessor as head of the family.

“Thank you for providing this important opportunity,” said the young boy with a sweet voice upon raising his head—a voice that was on the verge of breaking, and still very much on the border between adult and child. There wasn’t a lick of nervousness for the grand stage in the beautiful voice that tickled the listeners’ ears.

Grasping that from his tone of voice, many of the high nobles present were internally amazed. They wondered whether or not they’d have been able to do the same thing when they were his age. Asking themselves this, the majority shook their heads, while the remainder were either remarkable men, or a few insolent individuals who were too arrogant to admit their true worth.

“I repeat, I am here to report. I, Roswaal L. Mathers, am taking the place of Roswaal K. Mathers as the head of the household. From here on out, I will endeavor to not stain the name of this house, nor shame the royal family of Lugunica as I serve them.”

It was a magnificent report on the change of the head of the family.

Accepting this, the King—Randohal Lugunica—showed everyone a wide smile and nodded. “Your predecessor—Margrave Mathers—served us well. As the heir to such an outstanding man, you must be equally prepared. But listen to the words of your subjects, be intimate with the citizens of your domain, and meet their trust with trust. That way you, too, will be loved.”

The king’s words were warm and tender, and idealistic to the extent that those hearing them were embarrassed. If the one who had said those words had not been Randohal, and if those who had heard those words were not his subjects—for example, it had been the Emperor of Vollachia, known for his severity and aggression—they would not have smiled, but more likely would have roared with laughter.

But out of the subjects of the Kingdom, not a single person laughed. They understood him. This calm and pacifist way of the king was a sign above all else of the peace preserved in Lugunica, and the stability itself that their everyday lives was built upon.

“Wonderful words. I certainly will. I may still be inexperienced, but I will strive to be able to take over my great predecessor’s role as soon as possible.”

At the youth’s excellent words, who was to carry the Kingdom of Lugunica on his shoulders from now on, the king gave a deep nod. “Good. Advancing steadily is best. I expect great things from your efforts.”

Receiving Randohal’s encouragement, the boy gently rose and turned toward those present. Then, with a graceful bow, said, “I endeavor to learn a lot from all of you ladies and gentlemen, too. I am young, but I look forward to working with all of yooou.”

With his back turned to the king, he shut one eye, looking contemptuously down at those around him with just his yellow one.

2

“Dear me, my shoulders are so stiff.”

As he said this, the boy—Roswaal—rotated his shoulders in a wide arc, having changed out of his formal attire. He’d left the royal castle, and was now in his room at an inn, located on the border between the Nobles District and the Commoner District. For a commoner, it was considered fairly expensive, and for a noble, considerably cheap. Roswaal liked this ambiguity, and always made it his choice to stay there when he spent time in the royal capital.

“Being treated so nicely by the owner here a few decades ago was a deciding faaactor too, though.”

If anyone had been around to hear that murmur, they would have probably been taken aback by his mature way of speaking. Such words did not match the boy who was sliding a finger across the window frame and looking over at the stores and houses in the vicinity. However, anyone who would have been around to see the way he stood there wouldn't have been able to laugh his words off as a joke.

Roswaal L. Mathers.

The boy who had just finished his audience with the king in the royal castle had a presence that didn't match his youthfulness. The previous Roswaal had suddenly passed away, and the next Roswaal in line was this boy.

He understood it, but his body, which was steadily developing an affinity with its soul, had the grounds to be considered a masterpiece within the Mathers family line, which had continued for roughly four hundred years.

"So I'll have to take good caaaare of it then."

Gently touching his own body, Roswaal took a deep breath and turned away from the window.

Today, he was not accompanied by servants or guards. Roswaal hated going about broadcasting that he was a man of importance. Rather, it might be more accurate to say he was bad at it. He had never really lost his habit of being concerned about his public image that he had had since long ago—a really long time ago.

"Well then, time is limited. I can't dawdle."

Even if the attendees that had watched Roswaal's audience with the king considered him magnificent, he had some of the nervousness you might expect on such a grand stage. With that out of the way, he wanted to take a rest, but he unfortunately had much to do in order for a novice aristocrat like him to become popular.

For now, although the biggest task was over, there were still a number of other people and places to make a courtesy call to. In particular, the magic research institution in the capital anticipated Roswaal's visit, as Roswaal J. Mathers from two generations ago had founded it, and he would now be inheriting her knowledge.

During the previous generation, it had been a place he had visited less and less. But this generation's Roswaal would not do the same. He needed to maintain an intimate relationship with them.

"Right, shall I goooo then?" Mumbling as though attempting to persuade himself, Roswaal left his room in minimal attire.

He informed the inn owner of his approximate time of return, who saw him off as he left. As the sun was still high in the sky, he decided the order of his destinations in his head, then narrowed his eyes once more at the view of the capital, laid out before him at the bottom of the gently sloped road.

—Since the troubles approximately 25 years ago, there hadn't been any big wars in the Kingdom of Lugunica. Of course, they had dealt with the sparks of disputes, but having put them out before they became raging fires, the months and years had passed by without any large issues.

"…Hm. For me to be so deeply moved by this is rather unexpected," Roswaal said with a slight chuckle at his mild sentimentality toward the peaceful town.

That there were once people making every effort to protect this every day shone brilliantly within his memories even now. But him having been the first to leave it all behind—that was a complicated feeling. Being here made it easy to be spurred on by those thoughts.

So that he wouldn't carelessly come across people he had known in the two generations before him, he had stayed away from the capital during his previous iteration. However…

"This time, I can't dooo that. I need to be fully prepared."

At any rate, from now on he couldn't afford to make any mistakes. That had also been the case up until now, but he had to steel himself far more than before. The reason being—

“Oh, sorry!”

“Oh my.”

He’d been walking deep in thought and unexpectedly collided with a figure exiting an alleyway. It was a small boy with a hat pulled low on his head, and Roswaal had stopped at the light collision. The boy, however, repeatedly apologized without pause. “If anyone finds out I bumped into a nobleman, I could get into serious trouble. Let me go just this once, would you?”

“That’s a very shaaaameless request. If you watch where you’re going from now on, I shaaaall let this slide.”

“Oh, really? Thanks for your kindness. Well then…”

“Even so…”

After a light-hearted exchange, the youth quickly turned to leave, when Roswaal grabbed him by the wrist. The boy yelped, and he dropped something from the hand that had been seized.

It was a gold-crafted plume that the boy had pickpocketed when they collided.

“This is a valuable item. Unfortunately, I caaaan’t let you have it.”

“Tch… you’re perceptive.”

Taking the fallen plume in his empty hand, Roswaal smiled. “When you’re walking through crowds of people in the capital, it’s a necessary precaution.”

From his impressive skills, it was clear the boy was a habitual thief. However, Roswaal had no intention of handing him over to the guards. No one should ever regret making use of their abilities in order to survive. If using them went against the law, then one should learn how to get around it.

“Seeing as I got my plume back, I’ll let it slide today. Sooo next time steal from an easier target. I won’t blaaaame you.”

"…You sure are a strange noble. In fact, looking at you, you're just a kid!"

"It sure is unusual to be called a kid by someone younger than me. Aaaanyway, judging people by their looks is baaad."

"Then you shouldn't be able to tell if I'm a kid either."

"No, no. I'm certain you are. After all, there are only a handful of people older than me."

The boy looked in astonishment at Roswaal, who had the plume in one hand, one eye shut. A provocation that, naturally, would have only made him feel as if he were poking fun at him. He quickly felt a surge of anger rise and clenched his jaw. And as Roswaal remained cautious of his next move…

"Ragh!"

"…"

Contrary to Roswaal's anticipation, rather than attempting to forcibly shake free, the boy turned skillfully and grabbed his wrist, going for a joint lock. Surprised by the fluidity of his technique, he instantly released his grip. Then, in the next moment, the boy shoulder-tackled him, took a step back and, using that chance, nimbly sprinted down the alley.

"How cunning." Roswaal was surprised by the unexpected counterattack, but what had truly shocked him was the tenacity toward his loot. The plume that he had already retrieved had once again been stolen from his hand. He had high praise for that passion, but he couldn't lose the plume—it was a prestigious article.

He sprinted down the alley after the boy. His shoes were unsuitable for running, but that could not be helped. Realizing that Roswaal was behind him, the boy grimaced. As he ran, Roswaal made use of the map he had drawn in his mind and chased the youth into a dead-end with precision.

"Y…You're…per…persistent…"

"I already told you—that item is very valuable. If it were anything else, I wouldn't mind handing it over as a reward for fighting so well, but not that. So…"

Driven against a wall, the boy stiffened up as Roswaal tried to recover the plume. His curiosity had grown to such an extent that he considered treating the boy to a meal after this and asking about his circumstances. However—

"—Sorry, but that one's mine."

Immediately following those words, a towering figure dropped between them from above.

"…"

The figure had, quite literally, dropped from above the narrow alleyway. The timing of the intrusion was almost as if they had been watching the chase pan out between Roswaal and the boy. Greeting the large man in front of him, Roswaal furrowed his brows.

He was a distinctive man with an athletic build and oppressive, boulder-like facial features. Approximately in his mid-twenties, he wore dirty clothes that any old thug in the capital might wear. However, the air of power that coiled around the man was somewhat refined for a mere thug.

"Captain!"

"Stand down, Young Bel. I got a ton of stuff I want to say to you… But for now, I'm taking your ass back," the man addressed as Captain responded roughly as the boy's eyes lit up at his appearance.

Hearing this, and watching the boy he'd cornered, Roswaal shut one eye and gazed at the man with his single yellow pupil. "'Captain' is a bit of an exaggeration, isn't it? You look neither of age nor position to be leading a knighthood in such a back alley…"

"That's enough sarcasm, noble youngster. The staggering lack of a sense of danger is a common vice amongst you people. Thanks to that, it’s become easier for us to do.”

“…Hm.”

It was a surprisingly educated response, and Roswaal pondered on the unsubtle exchange. The man before his eyes brought on a wave of curiosity in the exact same way the boy behind him had. If possible, I would like to have a deeper conversation with him. “I wonder. How about we try a peaceful negotiation with each other heeere? I don’t want to hurt you. Besides, I don’t intend to go to the trouble of condemning you for stealing.”

“You scared?” the man prodded.

“Scared? Me? Exactly why and who would I be scared of? I defeated the one I was most afraid of in the world myself a long time ago.” Roswaal intimidated his opponent, extending his arms as he requested a reasonable discussion. Just as the man before him had a personality unlike that of a thug, Roswaal had also conveyed that he was not the naive fourteen-year-old boy he appeared to be.

However, despite communicating this to them clearly, the man’s attitude didn’t change in the slightest. “Despite appearances, it seems what’s in your head is way off the mark,” he said. “I’m gonna teach you a lesson.”

“…You’re going to regret that big mouth of yours,” Roswaal replied. The instant he recognized that their negotiations had broken down, he made his move.

There was about five meters between them, but Roswaal, cloaked in wind, closed the gap in a single breath. His target was his opponent’s torso, which was remarkable in terms of speed. His muscles were tough as armor, but if the impact passed through the gaps, his internal organs would be easy pickings.

A single strike that dealt a crushing blow to the internal organs behind the muscle—it was a technique called fa jin that he’d learned two generations ago. In order to deliver the blow, Roswaal placed his palm on his opponent’s stomach, and—

“Hah!” The strike made contact at the same time he stepped, and the blowback passed behind him. The wind born from it blew away the dirt in the alley, and a sensation ricocheted back through his entire body.

The power with which it tore through his internal organs easily sapped the strength from the two legs supporting his massive frame. Naturally, without any support for his body, it gave out…and yet, he remained standing.

“What?” Roswaal uttered in surprise.

“Ah, crap… That hurt, you lanky brat.” With the assumption that he’d fall having failed, the man clicked his tongue and grit his back teeth in frustration. Seeing this, Roswaal gulped. It wasn’t that he had dissipated the impact with some special technique. He simply endured it with an insane level of tenacity.

His eyes bulged at this revelation, when the man jerked his body widely, unleashing his fists. The single blow, clothed in a mighty wind, struck the petrified Roswaal in the gut with a devastating impact.

“…Gah.” Blown back, Roswaal slammed into a wall. His head spun. Before he even realized what had happened, his senses started to fade…

“…Crap, I’m not done. How pathetic…”

With those final words of self-resentment, he completely lost consciousness.

3

“…”

“Are you awake?”

Roswaal came to and opened his eyes.

In front of him, he saw the blue sky that had been so violently torn away. There was a hard sensation at his back, and he could comprehend that he was lying sprawled on the floor in an inhospitable environment.

Gradually, he checked his awareness and memory for consistency, recalling the events that had taken place just before he lost consciousness, when the pain in his abdomen reminded him that he had been beaten to a pulp.

“Ah, ow ow ow…”

Grimacing from the pain, he sat up and nervously looked at his stomach. The front of his jacket was open, and a bag of ice had been placed on his thin, exposed abdomen. Cooling down a bruise was a straightforward first-aid measure. But on top of that, a fine coat had been spread out beneath his body, indicating that someone had been tending to him. That someone was…

“…This was you, riiight?”

The young blond man shrugged. “I just hope I wasn’t being too intrusive.”

He was a distinctive character of a similar age to Roswaal with a handsome profile and clever-looking green eyes. Perched on a step in the alleyway, he held a book in one hand as he stared at Roswaal. Judging by the fact that he wasn’t wearing a jacket, there was no doubt that he had been the one who had administered the first-aid.

“Ah, if you want the particulars, it’s pretty simple. I heard a commotion in the alley… a rather loud one, too. I had a peek out of curiosity and found you collapsed there.”

“And your conscience told you to perform first-aid? Well, well, seems you have a rather honest disposition. Your parents would be proud.”

“No, even if it was the proper thing to do, my parents wouldn’t praise me. At any rate, it’d be a much bigger deal if I’d abandoned the new head of the Mathers family there.”

“…”

Having had his identity guessed correctly, Roswaal's breath caught in his throat.

This young boy doesn't have any malicious intent towards me, he thought, based on the fact that he'd helped him. He probably isn't an ally of the other two, either. So, then, his intention must be—

After giving it some thought, Roswaal concluded that the young man's aim was most likely to seek some kind of reward from him.

"Have you considered that I might have good intentions?"

"Isn't that something that you yourself juuuust denied? Since you've made it clear that you're aware the person you saved is from the Mathers family…you probably have an ulterior motive."

"You're right. I'm not denying it." Throwing up both hands, the young man affirmed Roswaal's suspicions with a chuckle.

The integrity of the interaction made it tempting to continue this conversation. However, he could not yield to that temptation. Having checked his personal belongings, he knew his wallet and jewelry were safe. However, the most important thing—that plume—was nowhere to be found. It was clear that since he'd been defeated, the spoils had been carried away by the victor.

Slowly getting to his feet, Roswaal brushed off his clothes. "I have to get that back…"

"Are you okay?" the young man asked. Having also stood up, he was a little taller than Roswaal. "I don't know the circumstances, but wouldn't it be better to rest a bit? If not, I can at least call your servant or companion—"

"Unfortunately, I'm traveling alone in the capital. I have no one I can rely on. A youngster who just inherited the seat of a great house would be, from anyone's point of view, nothing more than an eyesore. Right?"

"This could just be my imagination, but you seem to be in quite an enviable position."

"You speak frankly—I don't haaaate it."

On top of being kind, the chemistry in the pace of our conversation is giving me a rather favorable impression of him. As he assessed the other party, Roswaal turned toward the end of the alley—toward the main road. The youth who had stolen the plume, and the large man who had protected him—he had to find one or both of them and retrieve his lost item.

"If I'm not mistaken, you seem to be planning something dangerous…?"

"Yes… Wanting to meet up with the one who so mercilessly knocked me out would probably be considered dangerous according to common sense. What do you think?"

"Without a doubt, it would be dangerous. Even more so if you have no one to rely on."

"How helpful."

He didn't need to be told that it was a suicide mission, but Roswaal had good reason not to retreat. He had just vowed to himself that failure would no longer be an option. He could not afford to leave the score unsettled.

"The Mathers are a great noble family. You don't have to do everything by yourself. Don't you also have the option of enlisting the help of the capital guards?"

"Like I said. We youngsters stand at a disadvantage. One wrong move and you'll be eaten alive by the ambitious others around you. That's why you can't rely on people."

"I see. You're starting to sound more and more helpless. Then, have you already devised a plan to resolve the situation on your own?"

"Unfortunately, I'll just have to wing it."

After all, he'd only just opened his eyes after an unexpected defeat.

He needed to take action before they sold that plume or ran away somewhere else. Or, worst case scenario, before they inadvertently lost it.

As if sensing what was on Roswaal's mind, the young man nodded in agreement, letting out an enthusiastic, "I see! What do you think, Margrave Mathers. You don't seem to have anyone else to depend on given the circumstances, and the fact that we've crossed paths seems like fate… How about you let me help?"

"You? Help me? For what reason?"

"The same ulterior motive that drove me to tend to you. My family is just one of the hundred merchant families in the capital. As the second son, there's not much of a bright future awaiting me… And that's where you come in."

The young man gestured toward Roswaal, flashing a carefree, calculating smile.

With his impish grin, he continued, "I've just had the pleasure of interacting with a noble of an esteemed house, helpless and alone. Nothing wrong with a little bit of dreaming, no?"

"…I understand what you're saying, but you're considerably determined. If I were the type to dislike one for their attitude, or were repulsed by those blatantly trying to curry favor with me, it would be over for you in an instaaant."

"…Are you that kind of person?"

"…"

At the challenging tone and look in his eyes, Roswaal chuckled lightheartedly.

This was a young man willing to make a bold gamble. A necessary quality for taking hold of one's own fate. And, to Roswaal, that was a desirable human trait. As such, the young man who had triumphed in his do-or-die game needed a suitable reward.

"I am Roswaal L. Mathers, and I would like to accept your proposal."

"…Ha-Ha, that's a relief. Look—my palms are sweaty and my knees are shaking." Relaxing his tense expression, the young man let out an exaggerated sigh of relief.

Roswaal shrugged. "You're a good actor."

He went on to ask the name of this man who had dared to extend a hand to him in this cut-throat royal capital. "Your name…?"

"Russell. I'm Russell Fellow. Pleased to make your acquaintance."

As he said this, the young man—Russell—gave an awfully ambitious smile.

4

"Well then, Margrave, what you're searching for is…"

"Roswaal. If you want, please call me that, okay? If we're walking the streets together from now on, I'd like to keep a low profile."

"Okay. Then, Roswaal." He addressed him without a title, indicating he precisely grasped Roswaal's intentions.

Accompanied by Russell, who had offered his assistance, Roswaal made his way out of the alley and onto the thoroughfare. People came and went along the main street. Not surprisingly, the two figures from earlier were nowhere to be found. Even if they had wanted to pursue them, not a single trace of them remained.

"How long was I out for?" Roswaal asked.

"About ten minutes after I found you," Russell answered. "I rushed to the scene as soon as I heard the commotion, so I'm assuming that's about the same time our guys took off."

"I see. The item I am looking for is a family heirloom. I have to recover it no matter what."

"Could you give me a detailed description?"

"It's a plume made of gold—about the size that can fit in the palm of your hand—and it's decorated with my family crest."

It wasn't a terribly important item, but it was a symbol of the head of the family. To have it stolen, he wasn't sure what the other nobles, not to mention his relatives, would say. He also had a considerable attachment to it.

"If they only did it for the money, then it's strange that they didn't take any other valuables," Roswaal said.

"Are you saying their intention was the plume from the start?" Russell asked.

"Well… That's something I think we'll only learn from the men in question."

Surely they had enough time to rummage through Roswaal's pockets before anyone else arrived on the scene. Had it been under the orders of the man they called Captain that they refrained from doing so?

"At any rate, the man was called 'Captain'…" Russell mumbled thoughtfully upon hearing the description of the two suspects.

"…? Do you know of him?"

"Actually…" Russell continued. "Roswaal, have you heard about the 'Brotherhood' that has been making the rounds in the capital these days?"

"The Brotherhood?" parroted Roswaal. Having no memory of the term either in name or substance, he shook his head. "No, never heard of them."

As mentioned before, Roswaal had distanced himself from the capital for a good while. It was true that he had no connection with the recent happenings in the city.

"The capital has a number of social classes, roughly split into three groups—nobles, commoners, and the poor—as you know. The Brotherhood is a group founded by impoverished youths who collectively oppose such classist discrimination."

“A group of youths stating their dissatisfaction with the times, hm? Sooounds probable.”

“As a group, they attack nobles, steal valuables, and stage assaults in the name of punishment. And the so-called ‘Captain’ who leads them has the same description as the man who beat you up.”

“So he was the Captain of the Brotherhood, huh.”

After listening to Russell’s explanation, Roswaal understood the reason he’d been targeted. In short, an immature youth walking alone without any attendants made an easy mark. He was relieved to know it wasn’t a personal grudge against House Mathers. Nonetheless…

“But what is the capital garrison doing letting these ruffians hang around? If it’s not enough for the knights to act, then at least the guards should do something about it…”

“You of all people should know the answer to that.”

“…I see. So that captain has overwhelmed them.”

If it was that man—the captain who had knocked down even Roswaal in a single punch—then the elite troops in the capital garrison wouldn’t stand a chance.

What an incredibly terrifying man.

“But the knights aren’t naive enough to just let internal affairs play out like this. There must be something else too… right?”

“You have a discerning eye. You’re right—the garrison doesn’t know what to do with the Brotherhood. The problem is that it’s not just limited to them. The capital has another issue on top of the Brotherhood.”

“Which is…”

Just as he tried to urge the next part of the story on, they were interrupted. A middle-aged man emerging from a street stall approached them. “Russell, about the person you’re searching for…”

At present, they had both been relying on the breadth of Russell’s notoriety to trace the Brotherhood’s footsteps through eyewitness testimonies from the commoners on the streets. One of these sources, the owner of the stall, began to speak in a hushed voice. “Word on the street is that they used the alleys on the west side to slip into the slums. Public safety has been pretty bad in that area, but it seems like those Brotherhood guys have expanded their influence there now.”

“The west side, is it? Thanks. If you hear anything else, let me know,” Russell responded politely, before handing over a small bag with a reward to the shopkeeper.

Confirming its weight, he saw them off with a smile. “Thank you for your patronage.”

Once the shopkeeper was out of sight, Roswaal commented, “You seem very skilled at this. Have you been doing this a while?”

“By ‘this’, do you mean…?”

“Helping foolish nobles get their stolen heirlooms back.”

“No, no, of course not. A great adventure like this is a first for me. But I do have a lot of acquaintances among the merchants of this area. I worked hard to ensure I have some connections just in case.”

It sounded like modesty, but Roswaal could feel the definite conviction behind Russell’s words. And he liked that sort of paranoid preparedness. Every challenge in life depended on one’s degree of preparation before encountering said challenge. What to others may seem like an unnecessary precaution could save a life in the event of an emergency.

And Russell’s accumulated experiences had certainly contributed to Roswaal’s share of difficulties.

“I’ve decided. No matter how today turns out, at the very least meeting you was a stroke of rare good luck.” Roswaal said.

“Then it’s my job to put that luck to use…” Russel responded. “According to what was said earlier, the way they went is this alley. Watch your step.”

As Russell led the way, Roswaal gently brushed his abdomen. The after-affects from the earlier blow were succeeded by extreme bouts of pain even now.

House Mathers was known for its magical prowess, and if he used healing magic, then this sort of injury would be instantly healed. However, healing magic was the only thing that Roswaal had absolutely no aptitude for. This was the only skill that could not be acquired through any number of generations of flesh and blood. There was a time when blood with a superior aptitude for water mana found its way into the family, but even then, it was to no avail.

I wonder if this is a kind of cuuuurse.

It was no exaggeration to say that the power to heal people was the kindest power in this world. And Roswaal lacked the qualifications of kindness required to be blessed with that aptitude. It was a testament to the blood that the Mathers family was built upon—layers of resentment and sacrifice.

“Speaking of which, continuing our earlier conversation… You said the garrison was facing another problem besides the Brotherhood. What is it?”

Russell drew a deep breath in response to the query posed from behind. Due to them already having set foot in one section of the slums, Russell was alert of their surroundings, and double checked the area for any sign of life before answering. “The social-class problem is deeply ingrained. In a way, the Demi-Human War had such roots, too, in that lineage was the cause of the fighting. However…”

“From that preface, I assume that there is another group on top of the Brotherhood that is concerned with social class?”

“Yes, there is. The Golden Wing Faction is a group of nobles, the complete opposite of the Brotherhood and their gathering of peasants.”

“The Golden Wing Faction… Hm.” Roswaal pondered the name of this new group. Nobles concerned with the social class system, and a group that’s formed around that. In short, the nobles that participated in it were…

“Weak nobles, or the second and third sons of their respective families. They’re most likely a gathering of those who were never given the important role of family heir and have developed an inflated sense of noooobility.”

“How merciless. But you are right.”

Even among nobles, there were an unexpected number with bad ideals. However, nobles couldn’t exist by themselves. It was only with the existence of the people in their domain and those under their protection that they could be nobles. However, a number of those born into nobility were only nobles in name, raised without a sense of responsibility or duty. To maintain their self-image, they had no choice but to prove that they themselves were nobles, too.

That would have been an impressive tale had they done so through politics or good deeds. “Punishing problematic laborers or the poor in order to maintain the capital’s image… Such vigilante movements have taken things too far. Isn’t that what caused the Brotherhood to rise in the first place?”

“They were all born around the same period, but which came first is a rather unproductive discussion,” Russell explained. “Whether the Brotherhood was born from hatred of the pressure of nobility, or whether the Golden Wing Faction grew from the inability to overlook the Brotherhood’s violent actions—it’s true that both of them are causing trouble for the capital.”

As a citizen of the capital, Russell appeared rather tired of it all—the way he spoke of the two problematic groups was full of loathing.

Either way, it was obvious why the capital garrison had their hands full. On one hand, the Brotherhood continued their violent expansion without hesitation. On the other hand, the Golden Wing Faction held the position and power of nobility in name alone, while putting on a front of concern for the kingdom.

Both organizations represented the challenges faced by each and every country, not just Lugunica. Humanity was not developed enough to easily manage such things.

“We’re about to enter the area the eyewitness mentioned. If this man is the Captain of the Brotherhood, he’ll probably be surrounded by his gang. Be careful.”

“I will. His gang will only pose a small problem… Although in my opinion, he seemed like the type that doesn’t leave the fighting to other peeeople.”

Men of incredible strength are often hamstrung by their comrades. Especially that captain, who confronted me to protect the pickpocket boy. If I demand for a rematch out of fairness, there’s a good chance he might comply. Just as he pondered about such a possibility—

“…”

Feeling an unsolicited gaze on the back of his head, Roswaal slowly turned around. The stare had no malice or hostility in it. But, with Russell’s warning, he was cautious of his surroundings. Nevertheless, this gaze overcame his vigilance and found him in plain sight.

And the owner of the gaze was—

“…A child?”

Standing still on a corner of the slums was a lone boy. Around four or five years old, he was wearing a well-tailored white shirt and short pants. With a neat outward appearance unfit for the slums, one could only guess he was the child of a noble family.

He had a fiery-red head of hair and striking blue eyes that seemed to contain the sky itself. Among his well-formed childish features, his blue eyes innocently observed Roswaal and Russell.

Roswaal gasped at the mere sight of those eyes, puzzled as to why exactly he had gasped. "…You…are…"

"…Roswaal?" Hearing Roswaal's husky voice, Russell looked over his shoulder, noticing the child.

His eyes widened in surprise at the unexpected sight. Seeing the reaction of the two older boys, the child opened his mouth. "Um, please wait. My father is in the middle of working."

"…Your…father…is working?"

"Yes. He's trying to reason with his friend. So…"

The child glanced toward the end of the alley where Roswaal and Russell were headed. If they were to trust his words, that was where his father would be working. The reason he had stopped them was so they wouldn't disturb his father.

"…What should we do?" Russell asked quietly at Roswaal's side.

The person this problem affected was Roswaal. Russell was nothing more than an ally with no say in the matter. Of course, they could ignore the child's request and move forward, but…

"Okay. We'll wait until your father finishes his work." Roswaal assured. "Is that okay?"

"…! Yes, thank you!"

Hearing his reply, the child's face lit up and he bowed his head. At the same time, the somewhat dry atmosphere had softened, and Roswaal and Russell exchanged glances.

"Is it okay if I ask something?" Russell asked, bending at the waist. "We have something to do this way. Could you tell us the name of your father who works this way?"

"My father? My father is…" The child answered Russell's question fearlessly. His eyes held a proud glint in them, as though he was speaking the name of the most reliable person in the whole world. “Heinkel Astrea. That’s the name of my father.”

5

—Meanwhile, at the same time as Roswaal and Russell’s chance meeting with the child.

“…Hey, come back to the knights already. How long are you gonna sulk like this? We’re both adults.”

On a corner of the slums, lined with abandoned buildings, two men faced each other. Or rather, it wouldn’t be right to say they faced each other. Because in contrast to the one that was speaking, the other was staring up at the sky with a lousy attitude.

“Adults, huh?” The man looking listlessly at the sky lowered his gaze. “You’re pretty persistent, yourself. Why don’t you give it a rest?”

It was apparent from his demeanor that he was growing impatient at both the words being thrown and the thrower himself. From every aspect of his behavior, it was obvious at a glance that he looked down on the other. Naturally, this was also obvious to the party at whom his attitude was directed.

“I can’t back down just because you tell me to. You know the complicated position I’m in. Don’t be so difficult.”

“You know, I’ve been thinking, you’re awfully cocky in the way you address me. Since when were we such good pals, you and I?”

“That’s…”

“Surely you don’t think so just because we have the same teacher? How many students does Bordeaux have? Are all of them your friends?”

“…”

With a pained expression etched on his face, the man who had opted for softer words was rendered silent.

He was a good-looking man with flaming red hair and a gentle, well-defined face. His voice and countenance was sweet, blessed with the features that many would find attractive. Unfortunately, that alone wasn't enough to get through to the man standing before him.

From their exchange, it was obvious that the relationship between the two had never been good. Regardless, the two were facing each other here and now…

"Heinkel, it's time you stop being nice to everyone. It's because you're like this that you've been forced into a job you're not suited for."

"Forced? I'm the one who signed up for this."

"Are you sure about that? I can picture all the people around you slowly pressuring you to ensure you self-nominated yourself, as usual."

"…"

The good-looking one—the man called Heinkel—hardened his face at those words.

His response made it obvious in a single glance that the other man hit the mark, revealing a personality that was far too naive and honest at its core. Heinkel, however, exhaled as though to cover his emotions, and quickly drew his sword—his treasured sword—from his waist.

"…You've drawn it."

"Yes, I've drawn it. I've really drawn it. Regardless of what you say, I have a responsibility to fulfill the duties assigned to me. You, too, have responsibilities. Right… Marcos?!"

"I'm not denying that. I won't deny it, but… So what? What are you gonna do about it?"

“Huh?”

Staring at Heinkel, sword drawn and pointed directly at him, the large man—Marcos—scratched his cheek. As he did, he casually began to close the distance between him and Heinkel by a step or two.

“Will you bring me back by brute force? Can you? By your own hand?”

“…”

Marcos swung his thick, long legs and gave Heinkel’s sword a kick from the side. The knight’s sword left its owner’s hand with the impact, and tumbled into the dirt of the slums, making a sad sound as it did. Heinkel’s blue eyes followed it in surprise, and Marcos snorted. “What are you going to do if you can’t swing the sword you took the effort of drawing?”

“I…Ugh…”

“Pick it up and get lost, pisshead,” Marcos spat at him, to which Heinkel’s expression distinctly contorted in pain. Marcos didn’t see it, however, having already turned his back.

“Even if a witchbeast were to appear, don’t think I’d save you like last time.”

Feeling Marcos’s unwavering rejection from his turned back, Heinkel cast his eyes downward. He picked up his beloved sword from the ground and sheathed it once more. “Doing this would make your legendary father sad,” he said. “Rickert is also concerned about you…”

“You’re the one with a legendary father and mother. Worry about yourself, not me—about your son and Louanna.”

“…”

It happened immediately after Marcos’s words.

“…”

A drawn sword was placed against the neck of the sneering Marcos. The move of his sword was like a flash of light, but Marcos's back remained turned, expression unfazed. It was a face of a man that grasped the ability of his opponent and understood that he would not reach him.

"You…"

"…"

"What the hell do you know?"

"Nothing. But what I do know is that you can't cut my head off here," Marcos declared, brushing away the tip of the sword which threatened his neck with a finger.

It was a useless struggle that couldn't be stopped even with one last flash of his sword, and Heinkel's face twisted in humiliation. But neither his swordsmanship nor words reached Marcos.

"Don't come back. You make me sick." Marcos waved his hand without turning around to face him.

Heinkel turned his back, attempting to brush off the words said to him. Unable to fulfill his duty, the red-haired knight began walking in the direction of the fading sunset.

"…"

Sensing the concern and footsteps fade into the distance, Marcos scratched his head of short green hair and sighed. Just as he had told Heinkel, he felt sick to his core. A certain amount of it was self-loathing for having lashed out at a person weaker than him. Clenching his fists in frustration, Marcos quietly looked over his shoulder.

Then—

"Let me warn you, I'm in a bad mood. If you think I'll go easy on you, then you're sorely mistaken," he spat in irritation at the young man who had appeared in place of Heinkel.

Shameless ambition shook the air, and he felt as though his organs were being squeezed.

Having been hit with a fighting spirit that had increased since they happened to meet in the alleyway a short while ago, Roswaal shut one eye and composed his elevated mind. He couldn't be overwhelmed by his opponent's energy. Otherwise there would be a repeat of his previous defeat.

Roswaal, wetting his lips with his tongue, purposefully made the first move with his words. "This is a fairly disheartening situation. I wonder if it's a good thing that you drove away your friend in that waaaay, Marcos."

"…You heard that, huh."

Roswaal shrugged. "The child told us to wait, so we just happened to overheeear it."

The large man—Marcos—looked at him with annoyance. He turned his attention toward Russell, standing beside Roswaal.

Marcos had an intimidating aura not unlike that of a witchbeast. Despite being bathed in it, Russell remained undeterred. Of course, that may have only been a front, but just being able to keep up appearances like this was fairly extraordinary.

Marcos seemed to make the exact same appraisal of Russell's attitude. "You look frail, but you have more guts than the pisshead… So? You've brought along an equally-frail friend to help you get revenge?"

"I'm sorry for giving you such an unmerited impression. But please be assured, I'm just here to help him find what he's lost. Fighting isn't really my area of expertise. Look at these scrawny arms." Extending his arms out in submission, Russell denied any hostility.

Taken aback by his casual attitude, Marcos clicked his tongue. "Tch. You're just a weakling. Then what the hell did you come here for?"

“Well, as you just heard, he’s my new friend,” Roswaal explained. “It was thanks to your powerful punch that we came to know one another. So I’d like to express my graaatitude.”

“Thanks for hitting you? What will I get if I hit you again? Your exaggerated title, your privilege, and all that rich-boy crap, Young Master?”

With Russell sandwiched between them, Roswaal and Marcos exchanged a war of words. But in contrast to Marcos’s increasingly dangerous words, Roswaal’s responses stuck out like a sore thumb.

Unconsciously smiling further, Roswaal let out a laugh.

“…What’s so funny?”

“Sorry. It’s just rather novel to be called a young master… Your hatred of nobles is so full of contradictions.”

“…”

“Despite your vulgar speech and natural grit, you blend in pretty well, but my eyes can’t be fooled. I am, after all, by far the most experienced when it comes to masquerades. I can tell from your slightest gestures and behavior.”

The wrinkle in Marcos’s brow indicated a distaste for Roswaal. As he watched the crease deepen gradually, Roswaal felt a revival of the fighting spirit he tried to suppress. I can’t contain myself. —Seeing an opponent that was hiding what seemed to be a strange, unusual desire, Roswaal could not hold back his curiosity.

“You’re a knight, right, Marcos?” he declared, as the gap between them vanished.

It was a step that seemed to shake the earth, imprinting a deep footprint into the ground. Leaving behind evidence of his strong leap, Marcos closed in on Roswaal instantaneously, and struck him with a violent kick.

The overwhelming destructive force made him realize that he had been holding back with the punch in the alley. If he had taken the sole of that shoe head on, he might not have regained consciousness for another year. However…

"I showed you my pathetic side earlier. It would be embarrassing to have that mistaken as my true strength. So let me redeem my honor, would yoooou?"

"…"

The frontal kick concealed an absurd amount of power, but it didn't reach Roswaal. Before it could, ten mud walls had risen up, forcibly blocking the kick. Upon seeing such an inconceivable sight, Marcos immediately withdrew his foot, gnashing his teeth.

"A magic user, huh?"

"Does that not prove that I was not bluffing?" Roswaal asked, shutting one eye, separated by a single mud wall that was cleanly left standing,

Hearing this, Marcos grimaced, kicking the last wall to smithereens with his raised foot. Stepping back, he cracked his thick neck. "Nobody was watching that back-alley brawl. There's no need to redeem your honor."

"Well, no, there's you, and my friend here knows, too. Then there's the boy you covered for. But above all, there's one more person for whom I must redeem my honor."

"Someone else?"

"I can't reunite with my beloved teacher without first erasing this shame."

The passion-filled words were the result of a thumping in his chest—beating erratically just by thinking of his teacher.

It seemed like the seriousness of the situation had gotten across, and Marcos made no attempt to laugh. Instead, he folded his burly arms and asked, "Why?"

"Why what?"

“Why exactly do I have to go along with your revenge match? According to your logic, I won that fight. So quitting while I’m ahead should be pardonable.”

“Hm. Hard to argue with that.”

Of course he had no reason to go along with Roswaal’s vindication of honor. Much less so as Roswaal intended to take back his heirloom once he had exacted his revenge. To do that, he had to get him to fight somehow…

“Then I’ll lay out a reason for you to fight. How does that sound?” Russell, who had distanced himself from the fight, cut into the conversation from behind the pensive Roswaal.

“…You will?”

Marcos appeared disturbed by this attitude, to which Russell nodded and affirmed. “I also have a resolution to succeed in life as a merchant. As such, I can’t just balk at an opportunity to negotiate. So count me in.”

“You’re a shady bastard. What makes you think you can provide a good enough reason for me to mess around with this guy? What the hell are you scheming?”

“…If you manage to defeat Roswaal, I’ll give you information on the Golden Wing Faction. As the head of the Brotherhood, that’d be quite useful for you, yes?”

“…”

Marcos drew a sharp breath at Russell’s conditions, then clicked his tongue as if ashamed by his own reaction. “You know something about that group of spoiled pricks?”

“Merchants are blessed with opportunities to go in and out of the Nobles District. We sometimes get private requests from individuals to procure hard-to-find items that they don’t want the members of their house to know about. That said… I have a lot of cards in my hand. So how about it? Still not enough for you?”

"That group's weakness, huh?"

Flashing a friendly smile, Russell shook the scales. Then, after some conflict, Marcos jerked his chin in Roswaal's direction, "If I take him out, you'll tell me what it is. Is that the deal?"

"Yes, that's fine. As you can see, I'd hardly be able to shake you off if you came after me. Not with these legs. I'm also a big coward, so I'm a good talker."

"A coward wouldn't make that kind of gamble here," Marcos spat violently, to which Russell let out a slight laugh of surprise.

Then he looked back over at Roswaal once more, and gave a deep bow. "I apologize for my impudence, but the stage is set. Since I'm putting the trust my family cultivated with our customers as collateral, we need you to win, Roswaal."

"…That was a bold move. You're more of a find than I originally thooought."

"Considering your state in the alley, I'd say I'm the one who found something, but… Whoa."

Exchanging frivolous sentiments, Roswaal threw his coat at Russell, who rushed to catch it as he called out, "Step back."

Roswaal and Marcos faced each other, and squared up.

"There's a reward to be had, so I won't hold back. If you die, I'll dig you a deep grave."

"Ooh, how scary. Don't worry, I'll only half-kill you."

Both sides hurled provoking taunts at each other, and—without any signal—collided.

The air crackled, and on one corner of the slum, a battle that defied common sense began between the two transcendent beings.

In an alleyway just a short distance from the battleground was the figure of a single knight, shoulders slumped as he walked.

"…Crap, Marcos. I already knew that; you didn't have to say it."

Dragging melancholy behind him, various unforgiving words pierced Heinkel's heart. He could still feel the blood coursing through his veins. His steps were heavy, as he dwelled on self-hatred for his failure to fulfill his duty, his fury toward the disobedient fellow student, and the dejected looks of disappointment he was bound to receive.

"…Father."

"…H-Huh?! Reinhard?!"

Raising his lowered head, Heinkel was dumbfounded by the sight of a child standing in the alleyway. His young son, Reinhard. It was nothing short of astonishing that Reinhard, who should have been obediently waiting in their residence, had not only gone out, but to the slums of all places.

"Hey, hey, hold on. Why are you here?! It's dangerous! Where are your grandparents?! What the hell?! What is going on?!"

"S-Sorry, Father… I was worried about your work."

"N-No, it's okay. I'm sorry for yelling. Are you okay? Did anything happen?"

"I-I'm okay!"

Confirming his son's safety, Heinkel breathed a sigh of relief. From what he could see, there were no injuries or bruises on Reinhard's body, nor did he appear to be lying. It was certainly a miracle that no one had come across such a well-dressed child wandering about the slums.

"I thought my heart had stopped… Don't make me worry like that."

"Sorry. Are you angry?"

“I’m not angry… Maybe I should be? Either way, I’m more relieved than anything, really…” Gently stroking his son’s identically-red hair, Heinkel got to his feet. Lifting up Reinhard’s light body at the same time, he headed toward the exit of the slums. “Once we get back, I’ll need to have a word with those housekeepers… Reinhard, please don’t scare me like that again. Your father is fine on his own, so stay with Louanna.”

“But what about Mother’s wish?”

“…”

Heinkel exhaled at the sight of his son’s childlike desperation. The fact that his son, a mere four years in age, worried so much over him made him feel pathetic.

I need to be strong.

“If only Marcos had listened…”

“Marcos…”

“Yes, he’s a friend of your father’s… Well, something like that. It’s complicated. He’s very stubborn. If he’d just return to the knights, then…”

“If he goes back, you’d be happy?”

“Hm? Yes, I would, I would. That would be great.”

As they spoke, the father and son returned to the well-lit streets.

After listening to Heinkel’s worries, Reinhard nodded in his arms. “…Granted.”

8

In the evening slums, the fierce battle between the two transcendent beings continued.

One of them had the burly physique of a giant, whose entire body could be considered the embodiment of muscle itself. With each step the ground shook, and he approached his adversary as swift as an arrow, making him an absolute nightmare for his opponent. The force behind every punch and kick invited certain death wherever they landed. Merely committing to close combat with him would shorten one's lifespan by a few seconds.

If one was to suffer from his attacks—thread with powerful winds—no degree of training would mean anything at all, no matter how big or small.

The young man remained determined in this hand-to-hand fight, showing admirable bravery. Or perhaps, rather than admirable, it would be better to call this demonic bravery abnormal. The one exchanging blows in such close proximity with violence-incarnate could also be called superhuman.

The still youthful boy, with his long indigo hair tied back loosely, made full use of his dainty, slender body to attack and defend against this opponent who appeared to be twice his weight.

But the most surprising thing wasn't how the young boy managed to survive so long against his massive opponent, but his extraordinary ability to make the fight appear evenly matched to the untrained eye.

And indeed he made sure to put such flair on display.

"…Tch. You're pretty skilled." The giant clicked his tongue as his opponent landed on the toes of the foot he had extended after throwing a violent front kick.

When the giant lightly swung his arm, shards of frost fluttered down gently. They were the remains of sheets of ice that had taken the punches in place of the boy.

It was proof of his struggle that amidst the violent conflict, the young boy weaved magic into the hand-to-hand combat to sway the battle in his favor. Seeing this up close, the giant clicked his tongue in frustration, upon which the youth used his kicking foot as a springboard to leap backwards.

He landed in an open area away from his opponent, shrugging his shoulders and giving a bow. “Thank you, thank yooou,” he began. “It is a huge honor to receive your praise. Allow me to offer you a compliment in return. I never expected to find a man of such caliber… It seems that the Kingdom is still full of wonders.”

In contrast to the smiling boy, the giant never relaxed his annoyed countenance. “A fresh-faced noble shouldn’t speak like he knows the world.”

Considering the relationship between the two, the giant’s response was far more understandable. After all, they had both broken into a fight immediately upon their first meeting. And this fight was a rematch, not a reconciliation.

The two fighters—a young boy called Roswaal, and a hulking beast named Marcos, whose fateful encounter was due to Marcos’s underling having stolen a valuable item from Roswaal. The circumstances of their twilight duel, however, was a bit more complex than that. And it was precisely the very witness to this complicated situation who spoke. “Dear me, how incredible. From an outsider’s perspective, my eyes can’t keep up. I was right to not assist—I wouldn’t have been able to hold my ground!” said the young man, clapping and praising their fight from a short distance away.

Marcos scowled at the youth with a glare that would shake the Royal Guard. But the boy faced him head on, responding with a natural smile. “Do excuse me. If I’ve caused you any displeasure, then I do apologize.”

It was clear that this was no ordinary boy from the fact that he’d had courage and skill to orchestrate this duel between Marcos and Roswaal. Including this young boy, Russell, these were the three men involved in this evening duel in the slums.

“Don’t look away. You maaay be strong, but negligence is a powerful enemy.”

“Quit babbling,” Marcos spat. “This isn’t negligence—it’s composure.”

Extraordinary in their own ways, none of the three were inferior to the other.

9

In what could be regarded as a bad habit of his, Roswaal reveled in this twilight duel to the fullest. Marcos defended against Roswaal's barrage of attacks head-on, striking with erratic violence. His abilities were excellent—better than anyone he'd come across in the last few decades. You'd have to trace back to the Demi-Human War to find someone as powerful as he was.

Which is precisely what made Roswaal aware of his over-excitement.

Roswaal's skills made full use of a multitude of highly disciplined martial arts. Interwoven with magic to corner his opponents, they were virtually impossible to deal with on the first attempt, as only a select few could replicate such feats in modern times.

Marcos, however, overcame them with outlandish physical prowess and endurance. If he had time to do so, he would dodge or repel them. If he didn't, he'd brace himself and take the full force of the hit. He had ample resilience to continue the fight.

On the other hand, unlike Roswaal's various combat skills, Marcos's attacks were plain and simple. He approached Roswaal and threw fists. He launched kicks. That was it. However, those attacks were tremendously strong on their own.

It was a common misconception to mistake the physically large as slow. Yet while that might be the case when that size was due to excess fat, in Marcos's case, the majority of his large frame consisted of a layer of muscle, akin to armor. Contrary to the impression that came with his size, his movements were quick.

Roswaal put distance between himself and his opponent's arm as though it would burn. His heart shuddered every time Marcos threw a punch.

Of course, Roswaal was capable of playing it safe. Indeed, he possessed flying magic, an impossible feat for most humans to emulate in this day and age. He could keep his distance and carpet bomb the enemy from a safe range. That alone gave him the confidence to take on most opponents—even an entire army. But he refused to be so inelegant in a duel. Not to mention, I won't be able to wash off the shame of losing in the previous fight by plucking a win from a safe distance.

"Besides, how could I possibly tell someone I respect that I attacked my opponent from afar due to cowardice? I could never do that."

"Quit yapping…"

"Whoops, sorry."

With Roswaal engrossed in his thoughts, Marcos drew an arc with his leg in the air and drove it toward his opponent. Ducking low, Roswaal evaded the kick and leapt toward his chest. And exactly as he had done a few hours prior in the alleyway, he struck Marcos's abdomen.

"But this time, let's kick it up a notch… This time, I'm intending to kill!"

"—Ugh!"

Unlike last time, when his only aim was to incapacitate his opponent, this strike had enough power behind it to damage the internal organs of a large witchbeast. Unlike your typical fa jin, it was a new technique that incorporated Roswaal's creativity—a strike combined with fire, capable of blazing through its victim's viscera.

It was a murderous technique derived from the worst conceivable imagination that could incinerate and immobilize the innards that had been blown apart by the blast. But it was only from a certain level of confidence in his opponent that he dared to attempt it.

"…You son of a bitch!"

Marcos, whose bowels should have been baked, duly responded to Roswaal's credence. At the moment of impact, he tightened his abdominal muscles and twisted ever so slightly, allowing him to escape fatal injury with that movement alone. However, even he couldn’t come out unscathed. A fact which sparked a fire in his smoldering fighting instincts.

“…Oh.”

Before the roaring Marcos, Roswaal reflexively lowered his head. Immediately following, a sharp attack grazed his temple, and his consciousness hazed over. He couldn’t remember why he’d lowered his head.

The fact that it was to avoid Marcos’s devastating elbow strike was something he’d ultimately never recall for the rest of his life. Nonetheless, one could guess that he’d instinctively ducked his head to divert a crisis.

A knee about the size of a child’s head flew towards Roswaal’s face from below. The power behind a knee kick was several times that of a punch, and his had enough destructive force to blow a person’s head clean off their shoulders if it landed.

Roswaal managed to escape by ducking backwards even more forcefully than when he had lowered his head. He spun around as strands of indigo blue hair danced in the air around him, lopped off by the knee which they had just fallen short of escaping.

Taking his eye off his opponent at point blank range was the epitome of recklessness. But Roswaal had done so intentionally. In the opening he had deliberately exposed, he received Marcos’s attack. And in that instant, his right shoulder shattered. The impact came from nothing more than a thumb graze of his opponent’s fist. But with that single hit, Roswaal’s right arm was rendered out-of-service.

That was worth it, though, he thought. “I finally got completely within your reach.”

Shirking off the pain from his broken shoulder, Roswaal was confident in his victory. He’d lightly bumped into Marcos’s chest with his back. Although it left him in a backwards stance, the surface area that made contact with his body was far greater than that of his palm.

The force of the fa jin released from this position was roughly ten times stronger than that released from his palm—a force that even Marcos couldn't withstand.

Although interwoven with magic, it was ultimately through martial arts that he overcame his opponent. Having accomplished this difficult task, he could at last report back to his teacher with pride. However, in the moment he released the fa jin, Roswaal realized something.

"…"

With his back turned, he sensed Marcos tighten his chest muscles. It was not a defensive stance to withstand Roswaal's powerful strike—it was the initial stance done in preparation for releasing fa jin.

Occasionally, the world would give birth to a titan—a child of battle, endowed with a violent ferocity capable of overwhelming others, allowing them to readily absorb an opponent's long-cultivated martial arts and handle them at will, as if that skill were their own.

Marcos was the perfect depiction of such a titan.

Sensing his preparation to release the fa jin, Roswaal shuddered. His contact with Marcos' chest, which had given him such conviction in his victory, in that moment had become an omen of his opponent's counterattack.

The match now hinged solely on who could deliver a faster, more devastating blow. Roswaal had a slight advantage in how long he had used the ability. While not particularly reliable in the face of a titan who was a master of martial arts, he had nothing else to rely upon. He put faith into these techniques, which he had cultivated and tempered every day, to surpass the existence of this titan… It was at that instant.

"…"

“What?”

The growing awareness of the martial arts against his back dissipated. The tension eased up in an instant, leaving Roswaal at a loss for words as to what had happened. But it was too late to stop the arrow he had drawn. His full-body fa jin had been released.

The air exploded with a bang, and the ground beneath Roswaal’s feet cracked. The impact hit Marcos directly, his huge frame snapped, and he tumbled to the ground.

Marcos lay splayed out on his back. Roswaal’s eyes widened at the sight, dumbfounded.

“…What the hell?”

With his broken right arm dangling limply, the curtain fell on his spoiled fun.

10

“Such a disappointing end is unbearable! I will not accept such a victory!” Roswaal complained, glaring at Marcos, who sat cross-legged on the ground.

The victor had been decided when Marcos tumbled to the ground, having been struck with such a powerful fa jin. That much was clear from anyone’s perspective. However, it was the victor himself who stubbornly refused to accept it.

Gently rubbing his own stomach, Marcos heaved a sigh, “No matter how you look at it, you won. Unlike our last brawl in the alley, I’m the one knocked out this time. I have nothing to say. So what’s the problem?”

“What’s the problem, you say? Everything! I’m not satisfied by any of it! You were only out for two or three seconds. How about a rematch…ow, ow, ow!”

“Please calm down, Roswaal. Winners shouldn’t act so shamefully.”

The cause for the tears in Roswaal’s eyes was his broken right shoulder. Unfortunately, healing magic was the only thing he could not do, so he had no choice but to let it heal naturally. Russell applied some basic first aid. From the blow to his abdomen, to his injured right shoulder, it was Russell who tended to all his medical needs.

“Any amount of favors I can offer such an esteemed family is a welcome thing. Favors are good. They don’t require inventory, and they don’t expire. And best of all, it’s up to the buyer to set the price.”

“That’s an answer I like to heeeear…”

Composing himself from the pain, Roswaal gave Russell a wry smile. At that, his new friend shrugged, turning his intellectual eyes toward Marcos, who spat, “…What do you want, you even shadier brat?”

“What an upsetting evaluation. The way you put it makes Roswaal sound like a shady brat, and me even worse than him.”

“Am I wrong? You’re both bad-natured, but you seem even sleazier.”

“I see. I’ll keep that in mind to work on in the future.”

Becoming more and more displeased with his answer, Marcos clicked his tongue at Russell, who reacted with a smile. “Are you really okay with that?” Russell narrowed his eyes. “Even to my eyes, you seemed a little on edge in that final moment, either from hesitation or indecision… Actually, it seemed as if you were distracted.”

“…”

“Had it not been for that, the outcome may have been different. It would’ve been Roswaal lying there in defeat, most likely missing his head.”

“Probably.”

“How ruuuude…” Roswaal glared at the two men’s merciless conversation with his heterochromic eyes, but met only by their ignorance, he let out a big sigh.

Marcos scratched his head, completely oblivious. “I don’t intend to make excuses. I definitely was a little distracted… But a loss is a loss.”

“Hmm… I understand.”

“Are you fiiiinished? Then, the rematch can—ow, ow, ow, ow!” Undiscouraged and pressing for a rematch, Roswaal cried out in pain as his right arm—that had been fixed in place—was prodded.

“With an arm like that? Impossible.”

Casting a sidelong glance, Russell shook his head. “It’s no use.” Facing both Roswaal and Marcos, he continued, “Roswaal’s complaints aside, let’s fulfill our prior agreement. For his victory, you’ll return the item your subordinate stole from him… Although we didn’t clearly agree on that before the duel.”

“No need to explain. I’m not gonna argue about losing.” Letting out a snort of displeasure, Marcos turned his face to the sky. “Bel! You can come out of hiding now. And bring the goods!”

“Gah, what the hell, Captain?! You could have feigned ignorance!”

“Like hell I would. Get out here now! Or I’ll spank you till your ass swells up!”

Marcos’s angry yell reverberated through the air. The dirty figure of a young boy appeared. An oversized hat hung low on his head, the youth stood behind Marcos sullenly, glaring at Roswaal from behind his boss. “He’s a mess… If we surround him now, we could beat him to a pulp.”

“Try it. Pull something so shameless and I’ll kick your ass. I’ve told you this countless times—no acting shamelessly.”

“…Fine,” the young Bel begrudgingly accepted, receiving a palm strike to the head.

Watching the exchange between Marcos and Bel, Roswaal noticed a certain level of civility in their relationship—or in this case, in the way the Brotherhood functioned. He sensed a certain degree of decorum there.

Going by Russell's description of them, he had the strong impression that they were nothing more than a group of reckless ruffians. But after witnessing Marcos's leadership in action, it was clear they were more than that.

"Well, it's not too difficult to sway the majority by waving your fists in the air," Roswaal remarked.

"Hah? Are you insulting me to my face?"

"Of course not. I'm admiring your leadership. Even once you've unified a party, if your own ideologies are biased, that group can easily devolve into a band of outlaws."

Preserving that order, to a certain extent, was the result of Marcos's abilities, plus a measured amount of pressure. Of course, the existence of a common enemy—namely, the Golden Wing Faction—was another major factor. Such were his conclusions on the matter.

Hitting his hand as though remembering something, Bel pointed a finger at Roswaal. "O-Oh yeah, Captain! This guy is from the Golden Wing Faction! That way we have a reason for all of us to beat him up, right?"

"This guy? Golden Wing Faction?"

"Me?"

Roswaal and Marcos simultaneously twisted their faces in confusion at Bel's words. In Marcos's case, he became suspicious of whether or not this was true. But for Roswaal, he seemed unable to grasp the youth's intention.

Bel clicked his tongue at Roswaal's dismissive stance, viewing it as deception. "You can't fool us! Look, Captain! The thing I stole from him was this—a golden plume! That's their symbol, isn't it?!"

"Well…"

Bel drew the golden plume enthusiastically from his pocket, modeled after the Mathers family crest. Seeing it, Marcos furrowed his brow as if he had genuinely accepted Bel's accusation. However—

"Do excuse me."

"Huh?!"

Russell grabbed the plume from Bel's palm. Ignoring Bel's surprise, he murmured his appraisal of the plume. After a brief inspection, he declared, "Seeing as how this is indeed a real gold plume…it's definitely a fake."

"Hah?! I-It's fake because it's real?! What the hell's that even mean?" Bel lashed out at Russell's declaration.

However, without answering Bel directly, Russell requested for a confirmation over his head. "I mean exactly what I said. The Captain… Sir Marcos gets what I'm saying, yes?"

Marcos let out a low snort that sounded like rocks groaning. "…Yeah, I get it."

"Captain? What the hell? Did I say something wrong?" the unconvinced Bel asked.

"No. It's not your fault. It's those spoiled pricks of the aristocracy who are to blame. It's not your fault that you can't tell the difference."

"…?" Still confused, Bel tilted his head.

Roswaal seemed convinced, although his own prior knowledge of the matter was about the same as the youth's. "In short, although the gold plume is indeed a symbol of the Golden Wing Faction, the plumes they use are cheap—they don't use real gold."

"For some reason, it seems to closely resemble the Mathers family crest," Russell added.

The unreasonable resentment Roswaal had incurred from the Brotherhood seemed to have had another hidden side to it.

“I see… Roswaal, huh?” Marcos said. “I knew I’d heard that name somewhere. The Mathers Domain, huh?”

“Yes. Although I’ve only reeeecently inherited the household. I’m the current head of House Mathers, Roswaal L. Mathers.”

“A great house, and the head of it at that… Then you probably have nothing to do with the Golden Wing Faction.” Considering Roswaal’s lineage, Marcos understood Bel’s mistake. He grabbed the youth—unaware of the gravity of the situation—by the head, and forced him into a bow, deeply lowering his own head on the spot.

“What’s that for?” Roswaal asked.

“As you can see, he’s apologizing,” Marcos explained. “Regardless of his ignorance, stealing from a nobleman could have his head blown off at your behest. It also goes against Brotherhood protocol to steal from unrelated parties.”

“Hm.” As Marcos explained, head still lowered, Roswaal put a hand to his chin. Ignoring the sharp pain that came with carelessly moving his right arm, he gave it careful consideration.

Of course, stealing a family heirloom should have meant severe punishment for Bel. But that thought hadn’t even crossed Roswaal’s mind. Now that the heirloom had been returned, he wasn’t interested in accusations. Rather, as this event was what led to his meeting Russell and the intriguing Marcos, the rewards had been far greater.

But they likely wouldn’t understand, even if he were to explain and let them go. To them, it would surely take on the appearance of a pardon, leaving a bad aftertaste and causing them to live the remainder of their days in fear. It was important for Roswaal to find a point of compromise, and for that sake…

“Can I ask you oooone thing? Marcos, you’re a knight, right?”

“While yes, I have been knighted… The one who knighted me probably regrets it."

"That may be. So I see, you were indeed a knight. Although I suppose it depends on the person who knighted you as to whether or not he regreeeets it."

Frankly speaking, Marcos's abilities had the potential to go down in the Kingdom's history. If the one who knighted him was a respectable person, then he was probably sufficiently proud.

The question was—why was someone who had been granted the title of knight doing this?

"C-Captain may be a knight, but he's different from the likes of you nobles!"

"Bel…"

With his head still pinned down by Marcos, Bel twisted his neck as he pleaded, "Let me speak! If I don't, they're just gonna misunderstand you."

Marcos sighed, making a bitter face as he spoke. "It's nothing big," he began. "Even after I joined the order, I just ended up doing the same sorts of jobs as the guards. Do you know what kinds of scoundrels you meet patrolling the capital? Most of them are unemployed slum brats."

"…"

"Even if you toss 'em all in jail, all you'll hear are awful stories. Can you really expect punishment to lead to reform? Like hell you can. Reforms are carried out by actual villains. These brats have nothing to eat and nowhere to sleep—how can you call them villains?"

"So you're siding with them?"

"It started to feel stupid dealing with all you guys." Marcos sighed in resignation, confessing his reason for discarding his status as a knight. Hearing his story, the shame in his voice, and seeing the pain in his expression, Roswaal closed one eye. He looked at Marcos's wrinkled brow with his blue pupil.

In the Kingdom of Lugunica, there was a definite disparity between the rich and the poor. This was not something restricted to this kingdom alone—it could be found in the shadow of every country. However, Lugunica may have been the only one with such a clear division in the very heart of the nation—in the capital city.

The slums were left to themselves, considered an extraterritoriality. Its residents, in many cases, had no choice but to stain their hands with crime for the sake of survival. All the while asking—why must we suffer? All while the Kingdom that managed them offered no answer.

Wanting to bring change to that image of hell, Marcos threw away his status as a Knight and descended into the wild.

“And that’s why you command the Brotherhood,” Roswaal said, tying it all together. Marcos said nothing. But in his stead, Bel’s sharp gaze pierced through Roswaal.

“This is simply an outsider’s perspective, but it’s true that the Brotherhood’s actions are backed by the slums,” Russell added. “Even with all the radical actions making headlines, the casualties are minimal… Though I wouldn’t call it praiseworthy, giving people a sense of purpose has tremendous impact.”

“You’re saying they have breathed life back into the slums. You’re very well infooormed about this.”

“A good ear is a fundamental quality for a merchant.”

After failing to sound modest, Russell took a step back as if he had said too much.

Listening to what he’d said, Roswaal gave it some thought. He cast a glance in Russell’s direction. “What about the information on the Golden Wing Faction that you were going to hand over to Marcos if he won? About their weakness?”

“You of all people are asking me? I already said—that information rests on the credibility of the family. It’s…”

“I’ll pay whatever price you ask. I don’t believe I need to explain my family’s financial power to you, right?”

Russell’s eyes widened for the first time as he was interrupted with a proposal. Finally, I said something that exceeded his expectations, Roswaal thought, somewhat satisfied. “My intuition tells me that your information is beneficial. It may even have the potential to change multiple situations in oooone breath.”

“…” Russell sank into silence as he searched for the right words.

Marcos spoke up in his place. “Hey, what the hell are you guys talking about?” he demanded, turning a suspicious eye on Roswaal with a stiffened expression at their private exchange.

Roswaal’s mouth relaxed into a smile. “You seem bewildered. I like that. Throwing people’s expectations into disarray really is exhilarating.”

“Give me a break. I may have lost the last fight, but I have no intention of losing the next one. So watch your mouth. What are you up to?”

“Oh, how scary. As for what I’m up to, well…” His right arm dangling limply, Roswaal supported his chin with his left hand and shot Russell a sidelong glance. Russell’s shoulders drooped, clearly a wordless response to Roswaal’s question. Consequently, Roswaal’s smile deepened, giving Marcos a villainous stare. The man gulped nervously, to which he replied, “How about it, Marcos? Why don’t you become my accomplice?”

11

Fareed Impusen was a real nobleman that served the Kingdom of Lugunica.

He was the fourth son of the viscount, Adnell Impusen. The right to inherit the house was reserved to the eldest son, while the succession of the various family businesses was promised to the second and third. Fareed burned with a strong desire for the role that would be left to him. Destiny, however, was a cruel thing.

When Fareed’s turn came around, there were no roles left in which the Viscount House of Impusen could contribute to the Kingdom of Lugunica. Fareed's patriotism had nowhere to go.

Having no assigned role, Fareed was given an appropriate position that sounded good in terms of freedom. But in reality, it was nothing more than leaving him to his own devices. His brothers envied him. But to Fareed, their positions were far greater objects of envy.

He loved the Kingdom of Lugunica.

And because of that love, he knew he should take action. So Fareed called out to other young nobles who also possessed patriotism without purpose to create their own path. It was from this genuine patriotism that the opportunity manifested for the creation of the Golden Wing Faction.

Taking on the responsibility as the party's leader, Fareed grew concerned about the situation in the capital. After the civil war, the Kingdom was said to have entered an era of peace. However, the sheer reality was little more than averting one's eyes to the thin ice they tread.

Along with the discrimination between humans and demi-humans continuing to smolder and interference from other countries, including the Vollachia Empire to the south, the Brotherhood that had emerged at the same time as the Golden Wing Faction was the biggest of their problems.

How should the Kingdom proceed? What can we do? Should we plan a coup in order to take over House Impusen?

He'd started to feel like he hit a wall when…

"Oh, helloooo. Could I take some of your time, Fareed?"

The son of a merchant who frequented him had introduced him to a youth with a bewitching smile.

"I'm sorry for gathering you here for this. It may feel a little cramped, but I couldn't find a better place, you seeee. So please bear with it for now," Roswaal asked, flashing a smile at everyone assembled in the single room.

Roswaal had intended it to be more welcoming, however not a single person present looked at him with kindness. Every expression bore some level of tension and trepidation, while more than a few of them showed clear signs of hostility. So much so that if left unchecked, an explosion accompanied by bloodshed was bound to occur at any moment.

Under such circumstances, Russell broke the ice. “It’s a fine room. Is this your property?” he asked.

“Yeah, it is. My grandmother bought this shop out of her love for drinking and socializing. Before she passed, the walls were lined with her collection of liquors. But when my father took over, it was completely abandoned. Fortunately, the building itself was well preserved thanks to the family butler.”

“I see. He must have been a very talented butler. Someone I’d like to meet at least once.” Russell was far more concerned with the building they had assembled in than this volatile gathering of people. Although his mind was undoubtedly ill at ease, he was big on avoiding unnecessary anxiety. His attitude was likely attributed to the fact that he was not party to the event, nevertheless, it was still an impressive feat.

Just as explained to Russell a moment ago, they were gathered in a long-abandoned building that once served as a pub, located in one corner of the Commoner’s District of the capital. It was just one of the properties under the Mathers family name, but this was his first time using it in a few decades.

“I don’t fancy letting the rich brag about bein’ rich. Get on with it, Roswaal,” Marcos called out in an irritated voice from the center of the room, sitting with his arms folded. Nearby stood Bel and a few others from the Brotherhood. In order to preserve the integrity of the meeting, each side was limited to five attendees.

“I appreciate your concern, but I’ve heard that the captain of the Brotherhood is a force to be reckoned with, even up against all the guards together. As one who only learned swordsmanship as a matter of etiquette, I'd hardly be able to put up much of a fight."

With a clear voice, the fine man—Fareed Impusen—lightly raised his hand and gave a wry smile. Around him stood a line of his allies, just as Marcos had, and their fine dress functioned as a clear contrast between them and the Brotherhood.

With the information given so far, it was clear that Fareed was the founder of the Golden Wing Faction. So, in short, here stood both heads of the two factions that were causing trouble for the Kingdom—the Brotherhood, and the Golden Wing Faction.

Of course, Roswaal had a reason for gathering these two natural enemies together in one room. But the person who had made the biggest contribution to help make this happen was the new friend he had only just met in the capital—Russell Fellow.

"Well, Fareed isn't wrong," Roswaal stated. "If Marcos were to attack in earnest, the only ones walking out of here alive would be the Brotherhood. Even Russell and myself would be in danger."

"That sounds pretty horrific," Russell added. "Please, let's refrain from letting something like that happen."

"Are you even listening? Get to the damn point. I don't need your stinkin' theatrics," Marcos barked at Russell and Roswaal's lighthearted exchange.

With his right arm in a sling, Roswaal accepted the rebuke. "Okay, okay." He shrugged. "I gathered you all for only one thing. You should both already know what kind of people your opponents are by now. I understand that as enemies, you probably want to tear each other apart, now that you've finally met. However, for now, I'd like you to refrain from doing so."

"You're talkin' a lot of crap right now…"

"We have no objections. Please continue, Roswaal."

Marcos scowled, contrasting with Fareed's formal countenance, neither meeting the other's gaze. For the time being, both parties cooperated with Roswaal's first objective of getting them to meet face-to-face.

Despite the clash between their organizations, both leaders' dispositions allowed them to talk rationally, as one could infer to a certain extent from their actions and purpose of establishment in the first place.

In other words—

"The reason I asked you both to gather here is simple. The current hostility between the Brotherhood and the Golden Wing Faction that is causing chaos within the capital… I'd liiike to resolve it in one fell swoooop."

"Resolve it in a single swoop…" Upon hearing those words, Fareed's handsome face clouded over with doubt. "Roswaal, we are a gathering of those concerned about the future of the Kingdom. Being born into nobility allows us to see things that commoners cannot. Yet despite that perspective, we still lack the means to do anything. So—"

"So as a result, you just put a lid over it?" questioned Marcos. "Your sincere attitude toward wrestling with the country's problems is truly splendid. Your aspiration to clean up the roadside garbage brings tears to my eyes."

Marcos snorted at the end, to which Fareed's face reddened. "What?!" he cried. Sensing utmost disrespect from his opponent, his lips trembled.

"I get that you lot love to keep things clean. But the trash you've been cleaning up has a point of view too. In fact, trash like us much prefer it if you'd look the other way."

"Calling yourself trash… But your group hurts people! What's that about?!"

"We only aim for the foul punks collecting money in cruel ways. Using dirty money, living in a dirty town…it's self-purifying. Got a problem with that?"

"And exactly where do you draw the line?!"

Fareed leapt to his feet, striking the table between them. Marcos did likewise, rising to confront him. Fareed may have been a tall man, but even so he was looked down upon by Marcos's giant frame. With both leaders standing, the others had no choice but to follow suit. It was a scary situation—like a spark in a powder keg.

"…And with that, you've heard each other's opinions," Roswaal declared.

"…"

Cutting between them, Marcos and Fareed scowled at Roswaal. Taking in the sharp gazes, he glanced at the two faces in turn. "I understand Marcos's opinion. The slums are struggling, and they need help fast. On the other hand, Fareed's opinion is also understandable. The strain on the Kingdom needs to be rectified, starting with the capital. But, individually, we are fairly powerless. We can't fight against such a big imbalance."

"Then what are you saying we should do?" Russell interjected perfectly into Roswaal's theatrics.

Roswaal turned as though having waited for the question. "It's my turn noooow. Individual power is useless against big imbalances. So we need to fight against it with numbers." Divulging his plain and simple plan, Roswaal once more turned to face Marcos and Fareed. He pointed at the speechless pair with a finger each. "I just so happened to have a device left behind by my predecessor… A so-called 'magicreation tool' that I've wanted to disseminate. I just needed the manpower and the right people to manage this operation."

"H-Huh…?!"

"That's…"

The Brotherhood and the Golden Wing Faction simultaneously grew flustered at Roswaal's suggestion.

"Of course this can only be considered a stopgap. I cannot employ everyone in the capital who wants work, nor give posts to every youth burning with patriotism. But it'll work as a first-aid treatment, just as this has assisted in healing my right shoulder," Roswaal said, showing the two the sling around his right arm.

Both the Brotherhood and the Golden Wing Faction were organizations founded upon the desire to help those struggling in the capital. He could give them work and something worth doing. Not to mention, this would also help Roswaal with his future goals. He was greatly pleased with himself.

"How about it? It's not a bad idea, right? I'm the head of House Mathers, which prioritizes competency and motivation… Or so I've just decided, anyway."

Shutting one eye, his blue pupil passed over every individual in the room. Naturally, everyone was in a state of shock at Roswaal's sudden proposal—

"…Hah."

"Oh?"

"Ha… Hahaha… Hahahahahaha!"

Just as he thought that, a laugh rang out that sounded like the jaws of a snapping beast. It was one of the decision makers; the giant with a permanent scowl on his face—Marcos.

Roswaal's eyes widened. It was the first time he had seen Marcos laugh since their meeting. "So this is what it's like to see a boulder laugh," he remarked.

"Back off, shitty rich boy… What a heavy-handed move. You can't save everyone that way."

"I already said that. Of course I can't save everyone. But why should that stop me from helping the few that I can? Besides…" Roswaal held out a finger before the scowling Marcos and laughed. "Another fool like me might come along, and then another. Perhaps a hundred nobles like myself could help everyone, right?"

Marcos released another sharp exhale at the preposterous suggestion. Opening his oversized fist and looking at his palm, he mused, “I’d rather not have to beat up a hundred fools like you.”

12

It couldn’t be said that the issues between the Brotherhood and the Golden Wing Faction were settled in one fell swoop. Such a deep-rooted problem wouldn’t resolve so easily. The same issues between these groups would likely spout again in a different form. But as long as this common ground became a precedent, it was fine.

Both the Brotherhood and the Golden Wing Faction had withdrawn, leaving the shop wide and empty as Russell muttered, “The eldest son inherits the estate, and the second and third sons help out with his work. But what about the children who come after? I’m no stranger to that, either.”

Roswaal responded to his mutterings with a shrug and a question. “Really? With your competence, I think it’d be easy to take your older brother’s place.”

“I won’t do that. I don’t want to sow any futile discord. I’m a pacifist.”

“If it’s for a good reason, I don’t think it’s too much to aaaask. You might be surprised at how little resentment it’ll leave. Or rather, that you might not leave any.”

“Such meaningful words. It sounds as if you’ve experienced this yourself.”

Roswaal smiled silently at Russell’s banter. Snatching away the family estate, and driving away any blood siblings and family—in reality, Russell was entirely correct. Roswaal had experienced something similar—not in this body, but in an incident several hundred years ago.

“Still here, I see,” Roswaal said.

They both spied Marcos’s figure, looking at the two of them from the entrance. Taking long strides as he walked, he took a seat at the counter beside them.

"How did your comrades taaaake it?"

"It's been chaos, obviously… But it's not all bad. We have Leno, who I'm putting in charge. He's an honest guy of few words. He's taken an interest."

"I see," Roswaal replied. "If he's competent, then that's all fine. And if he's not, then his enthusiasm should be enough."

"Watch your mouth," Marcos cautioned Roswaal on his unnecessary comment with an exasperated look. Glancing at the empty shelves, he commented, "Not a single drink, huh? What a waste of space."

"I agree," said Russell. "It's excessively sad for such valuable real estate."

"Or so you thought. I actually hid some."

In response to the other two's requests, Roswaal leapt over the counter and slid a board at the back of the empty shelves. From inside, he took out a single bottle of alcohol. Relieved that it hadn't been stolen, he also retrieved some glasses from the same hidden compartment.

"Granhiert? You have good taste." Marcos said, noticing the drink.

"My grandmother's favorite. I imagine she regretted dying before she could drink it."

"Oh my, how terrible. Then let us drink up in her honor," Russell suggested.

Exchanging sinful looks, they opened the bottle of alcohol that had aged for so long. A rich aroma drifted from the amber liquid as it was poured into the glasses. Taking one glass each, they clinked them together before bringing them to their mouths. As a guilt-inducing flavor hit their tongues, they were each momentarily at a loss for words.

"Drinks always taste best after a hard day's work," stated Roswaal. "And that goes for anyone, regardless of birth, don't you think?"

“Is that supposed to be some sort of conclusion? Like I’d agree, idiot,” Marcos spat.

Downing his drink in one gulp, Marcos placed his glass on the counter. Then, he paused with a stony countenance and said, “…I’ll go along with your idea, Roswaal.”

“…I’m glad to heeear it.”

“You did what you said you would, and showed results. Even as just a temporary measure, it’ll give a path for those with nowhere to go. So I’ll help you out with your plan,” Marcos replied with resolution, twisting his face into a sneer.

Before attending the meeting with the Golden Wing Faction, Roswaal had made Marcos a promise. “I will propose a solution for the capital’s current situation. And if you like the proposal, you must cooperate,” he’d said.

For that sake—

“I’ll return to the guards temporarily… Though I’ll probably get a good scolding.”

“Well, resign yourself to it. It’s fine—you’ll be in great demand… But I did think that you’d put up a much bigger resiiiistance.”

“I find it odd myself. I don’t feel particularly bad about it. That might be because I feel I’ve become a ball in the palm of your hand, and have resigned myself to that,” Marcos replied, shaking his head as he got to his feet. Turning toward the entrance, he continued, “I’ll contact you periodically, but I don’t do idle chit chat. Keep the letters to a minimum.”

“But I’m so proud of being a frequent writer.”

“I figured you were, hence the warning… You should reconsider the company you keep.” That last part was directed not at Roswaal, but instead Russell, as Marcos exited the shop.

Watching him leave, Russell wet his tongue with the alcohol and chuckled. “It’s not very convincing coming from him.”

"Dear me, you are certainly right. But even so, you have done a lot for me."

"I'm just happy to be of help," Russell answered humbly before Roswaal refilled his glass.

Russell was always modest, although he'd done nothing but help Roswaal from the very start. Starting with his passing out in the alley, to the duel with Marcos, and also arranging the meeting between the Brotherhood and the Golden Wing Faction.

"A man like you will probably come in handy," Roswaal stated. "I'd like for this relationship to last as long as possible."

"If you say so, then my time spent running around has been well worth it. But still—"

"—I imagine you've had many opportunities to be asked for advice, right? For example, by Fareed, perhaps?"

"..."

The smile vanished from Russell's face. But only for a split second.

"What do you mean?" he hastily asked, smoothing over his appearance.

"Well, it's just a guess... Fareed's burning patriotism is a rare thing for a noble, but he's not very good at making use of that passion. Someone must have advised him and pointed him in the right direction. Naturally, he firmly believes he made all these choices of his own volition."

"..."

"A true tactician never lets his target know that he has been taken in by his plan. After all, his target must truly believe that the decision was all his own. So there isn't a single reason he would know," Roswaal explained, emptying his glass at the same time.

This time it was Russell's turn to pour the refill. "That's an interesting supposition," he said. "Are you an accomplished writer as well as a magic user?”

“Unfortunately, writing stories isn’t my forte. My hands are full with what’s already written out for me.”

With a slight chuckle, he downed his second drink. It was strong. Although he only had to return to his lodgings after this, it wasn’t good to drink too much. Not to mention the youthfulness of his body—he was well aware that he needed to take care of it.

“I’ll only have one more. Will you drink with me?” Roswaal asked as he shook the bottle, now with little left in it. “As my new friend.”

Russell nodded. “When you put it that way, I have no choice.”

Thus began the first of numerous drinks these two would share together, their true motives hidden behind suppressed laughter.

13

Meanwhile—

“…Belmont, you there?”

“Yes.”

That night on the streets, once everyone had gone and he confirmed he was alone, the youth called out his subordinate’s name. The figure responding to his call emerged from the alley, a boy with a hat pulled low over his head.

Without acknowledging the small shadowy figure, the young man continued. “Accompany Fareed Impusen and the Brotherhood. And stay in touch.”

“Understood… What about Lord Mathers?”

“He’s caught on to more than we bargained for. By snatching the plume that wasn’t even on display to begin with, I assumed he’d realize that he was our target from the start.”

It had all gone as planned until Roswaal realized their involvement and sought to exploit their intentions. But discovering the true identity of the founder of the Golden Wing Faction, as well as the reason for its inception was a completely unexpected turn of events. They reevaluated him as a force to be reckoned with. However, he himself appeared to have no intention of leading the country.

“At the very least, not at the moment…huh?”

“Boss?”

“Just talking to myself. Did you manage to detect the thing in question?”

“Yes. Somehow it seems that a Divine Protection is at work. The source is probably…”

At the question, his subordinate trailed off, and the youth concluded, “I see.”

Then, raising his cold eyes, he looked over the residence before him. The estate, lying on the edge of the Nobles District, had been proclaimed an impassable zone by the Kingdom of Lugunica.

“Astrea Manor.”

Heinkel Astrea woke at midnight with a feeling of unease in his gut. Roused from his sleep, he was in a single, dimly-lit room. He had been sleeping on the floor, wrapped in a blanket. Of course, there was a bed in his own room, but Heinkel preferred to sleep here:

In the bedroom, where his wife slept.

“…Did Reinhard get out of bed?” Heinkel grumbled as he made his way out of the room, stifling a yawn. His son was still young, and not as lively as other children. He hadn’t learned how to rely on people, likely due to his mother’s slumber. He felt inadequate, struggling with this unfamiliar fatherhood. For what he lacked, he depended on the elderly couple that had long served the mansion, or his parents who lived elsewhere. However, Heinkel truly wished to rely on his parents as little as possible.

"…?"

Down the moonlit corridor, he noticed the curtains fluttering in a sudden wind. He slowly moved forward to close the window, head tilted. This window should have been closed. Why is it open?

"Don't turn around."

"…"

A cold voice cut in from behind, and Heinkel froze. It was a voice devoid of emotion and as sharp as glass. Sensing this, Heinkel scolded himself for not bringing his sword with him. If only he had his sword on hand, he might not have ended up in such a predicament.

"Heinkel Astrea, you are under suspicion of criminal insurrection."

"H-Huh? Criminal? Me? Why…"

Heinkel's voice stuttered at the sudden accusation of a crime he had no memory of committing. But he couldn't turn around and explain—he could sense from behind that the person wouldn't let him.

Strictly speaking, there were more than the single individual who spoke. He sensed a large number of people, and that both himself and the mansion were surrounded. And he knew not only himself, but his wife and son were fair game as hostages.

"Wh-What must I do to ease your suspicions? And first of all, why do you think—"

"—The Divine Protection of Mind-Changing."

"…What?"

Despite his request for clarification, Heinkel was struck with a term he had never heard before, which was clear from his reaction to the other party, who had been watching him intently.

"Historically, it is a dangerous Divine Protection that has been observed a number of times…allowing one to influence people's thoughts. Depending on its usage, it could even make it possible to overthrow a country. It has been perceived to be centered around you.”

“N-Nonsense, I don’t have any Divine Protections! I… If I had a Divine Protection—”

“It is said to influence the thoughts of those involved. Do you remember Marcos Gildark?”

“M-Marcos? I…”

It was the name of the old friend he had just met today. But just as Heinkel was about to refute the claim, something occurred to him—something of an extremely small and limited possibility…

“That Marcos…the Divine Protection… Wh-What happened?”

“Although there is a possibility that external factors might have played a role, he changed his mind. He is returning to the knights.”

Which meant that Heinkel had fulfilled the duty assigned to him by the knights… and that there was a slight possibility of someone having done it for him.

“…!”

Coming to a realization, he broke into a run. There was a momentary delay in the response of the presence he sensed, which Heinkel left behind as he ran toward a certain door. Flinging it open, he entered.

“…Father?”

“Reinhard!”

The child sitting atop the bed looked at his father in surprise. Relieved to find his son safe and sound, Heinkel flew over to him and seized his tiny shoulders. “Reinhard, did you make any kind of wish for my sake? Because I said I’d be happy if Marcos returned to the knights?”

"…"

Hearing this, Reinhard's expression warped. Fear flashed across his eyes, and he hugged his red-haired head. "I-I'm sorry. I wanted…to help you, Father… A-Are you angry?"

"I'm…"

—Not angry, Heinkel hesitated to say. He was happy Reinhard felt that way. The consideration of a son who thought of his father—that itself was heartwarming. But he recalled the words of the figure a moment ago.

Reinhard held the Divine Protection of Mind-Changing, which had the potential to overthrow a country. He could not afford, then, to respond with kindness.

"Reinhard, that's not okay. You can't do that."

"Father…"

"I'm telling you, Reinhard. Don't use that power ever again! It's not okay to use it. You are not allowed to bend people's heart's to your will and change their minds! They aren't yours to play with! Understood?!"

Embracing his frightened son, Heinkel's voice transformed into a yell so his words would reach the ears of the assassins throughout the mansion, and everyone in their party—regardless of who they were.

"I've told my son! I won't let him use it ever again! So please! Reinhard will be fine! He's a good kid! This child is Louanna's son! He's our treasure!"

He wasn't quite sure if his frantic shouts would pierce through the cold-hearted group, but Heinkel screamed with all his heart, praying for Reinhard's safety.

"Please… Don't take my son… Don't take away Louanna's way home…!"

He had already lost so much. Having experienced nothing but loss, that which he had gained was few in number. Losing the one wish he had been granted was unbearable.

"…"

He clung to him, sobbing, wondering exactly how much time had passed since his unsightly complaint. Before he knew it, the numerous people he'd sensed had disappeared. Heinkel only realized that fact when his son's tiny hand touched his cheek.

"Reinhard…"

"Father, I'm sorry. I won't use it ever again… I-I've erased it," Reinhard assured him. Heinkel was taken aback by both his frantic behavior, and the disappearance of the unknown entities.

Letting out a breath, he placed a hand on his son's head. "You… erased it? Haha, okay, I understand. A Divine Protection is something that stays with you your whole life… But I get it. Do your best to live without it. Okay?"

"…Okay. I'm sorry, Father."

"It's okay. It's alright, Reinhard… As long as you understand, it's fine."

Exhausted, Heinkel accepted Reinhard's apology. Rather, there was no need for his son to apologize to begin with. Divine Protections were something you were born with. Owners of such powers had to understand that they walked a different path than everyone else. They had to be prepared to live like that.

His closest family would need to understand that—

"…Erased."

"Huh? Did…you just say something?"

"No, nothing. Father… Um, today could we…"

"Yeah, let's sleep together. With Louanna, too. Let's sleep in the same room, as a family.” Pleased with the idea, Heinkel lifted his son in his arms and carried him out of the room with his pillow. As they left, Reinhard’s gaze shifted toward the window.

“Devote yourself to the Kingdom… For your family.”

Only Reinhard’s blue eyes witnessed the shadowy figure’s lips moving as it stood outside the window. An image that would remain within the child’s mind for a long, long, long time.

14

“Right, I’ll be counting on you from now oooon, Fareed.”

“Likewise. I’m grateful to you for giving us this opportunity.”

Finished with his business in the capital, Roswaal was ready to set off to return to his own lands, accompanied by everyone from the Brotherhood, when Fareed had come to see him off.

Unlike the Brotherhood, who came with no baggage, each member of the Golden Wing Faction had much to sort out first. But the youths that comprised it were all burning with passion. They were all equally excited at the prospect of going to a new place where they could make full use of their abilities.

The previous Roswaal had the tendency to keep people at a distance. However, the magicreation tools he had developed over his reclusive lifetime indicated a sign of a bright future.

“Looks like you’ll have much to sort out once you arrive. I’m counting on you, uhh… Leno Rex, was it?”

“…Thank you. You too,” replied the unsophisticated man taking over Marcos’s role with a simple nod. Despite his reticence, his sincerity was clear. He would get along just fine.

“At any rate, we need to double the size of Costuul over the next ten years. We can’t be caaaareless.”

As Roswaal muttered to himself, Bel appeared beside him, arms behind his head. “I don’t really understand, but it sounds pretty important."

"Oh my. It's you."

This youth, who had been the catalyst of this whole situation, planned a fresh start with the Brotherhood alongside Roswaal. And he was very welcome to.

"Caaan I count on you when I want to get in touch with Russell?"

"…I don't get what you're sayin'. I'll just say, your letter might get delivered to him by mistake." The youth shrugged. The whole ordeal was obvious from his attitude, but he maintained his pretense. Roswaal didn't mind such theatrics and went along with it.

All things considered, the time I spent here bore much fruit, he thought. Obtaining a foothold in the development of Costuul, considered a difficult endeavor, plus acquiring two favorable connections in the capital, was quite a big deal.

Both the immeasurably talented Russell, and Marcos, who'd accepted his complicity, were irreplaceable friends. He looked forward to the times when he'd be able to travel to the capital and meet them.

Having something valuable stolen on purpose, and using that as an opportunity to deepen a connection… Perhaps that plan will come in handy at some point in the future. Pondering this, Roswaal—accompanied by the impatient youngsters—returned to his domain.

END

Elegant Lesson
(CA)
(Edited Machine Translation)

1

???: “Woahahhh—!!”

???: “Kyawawawawawa, I suppose—?!”

There was a ferocious scream, and two figures were thrown into the air. A large figure and a small figure were holding hands, sharing each others’ fate. Some people would see this as a friendly relationship, but that was not the right description for this situation. Because, a lapse in judgment would lead to the same end for both of them.

??? & ???: ““Ahhhphew.””

They spilled that out, turned their eyes, and rolled on the ground, knocking them out with a “Phew.” The boy and the young girl, who had no energy to fight back— were completely taken care of as a set. A shadow suddenly appeared beside them without making a sound.

???: “—Unfortunately, there is no room for talk at all. Child’s play.”

Yes, it was the calm tone of voice that mercilessly commented on the two collapsed people. The owner of the voice tone was also a person with a neutral appearance who did not betray the impression of the tone of voice.

His dark blue hair was carefully styled, and his sharp, intelligent eyes were adorned with a monocle, an intellectual item. His tall, slender body was kept in a breathtakingly beautiful posture, embodying a kind of perfection.

This impression was accentuated by his cool, sweat-free profile. This was especially true when you viewed the out-of-breath, sweaty boy and girl —Subaru, and Beatrice, at his feet. The two of them sat up weakly on their knees and looked down at each other.

Subaru: “Huff, huff, I, I can’t talk back.”

Beatrice: “Betty, is the Great Spirit Beatrice, and you call it child’s play, in fact… You’ll be howling in no time, I suppose…”

???: “Even your arguments against me are not unified. You can not possibly achieve your goal with that. Hopeless.”

Shaking their heads loosely, Subaru and Beatrice sagged at the words of the man who was the incarnation of serenity.

Subaru could not even talk back. At least, not in this state of mind.

It was Subaru and Beatrice who asked for training. But honestly speaking, they thought they could do a little better. Their hubris was shattered, and they felt bad about it.

But—

???: “Are we done here? End.”

Subaru: “—Hk. Wait, there’s more!”

Beatrice: “If you think this is where it ends, you’re wrong, in fact!”

At the question of resignation, Subaru and Beatrice shouted at the same time.

Unlike the previous exchange, the only thing they shared in common was a sense of defeat, and upon hearing this, the person with the monocle —Clind, nodded his head with a slight narrowing of his eyes.

Clind: “Splendid, So, again, please. Guidance.”

Subaru: “Your carelessness will be the death of you, Clind-san! Let’s do this, Beako!”

Beatrice: “Of course! Betty will let him have it, I suppose!”

Subaru and Beatrice, who had gotten up and laughed at their bad impressions of each other, jumped at Clind, who was relaxed and ready to give them a shot.

Clind: “—Ill-prepared.”

However, the ingenious attack was easily seen through, and the two bodies flew through the air again.

Subaru: “Ahh! We’re both down again…”

Subaru & Beatrice: “Unyaaah—?!”

Blinking her eyes at the sight of Subaru and Beatrice being blown away while screaming, Emilia, waving her hands up and down, was both happy and sad.

It had been about ten minutes since this practice started, but Emilia already lost count of the number of times Subaru and Beatrice had tasted the ground with both hands. From the looks of it, Clind was doing a good job of rolling them around, but Emilia was on the edge of her seat, watching to make sure they didn’t get hurt.

???: “Emily, the change will not come so quickly. It is all about daily accumulation… etiquette, and study, is it not?”

Emilia: “Anne…”

It was a young girl with a prim face who advised Emilia to do so in response to her reaction.

When she heard the words from a girl roughly ten years younger than herself, Emilia choked up a little and then slumped her shoulders.

Emilia couldn’t argue with that. She knew she was right.

Emilia: “But I do get worried… I think it can’t be helped when you try so hard.”

Anne: “That is Emily’s virtue. But it is a groundless fear. Do you not think so, too, Frederica?”

Frederica: “—Yes, you are right, Annerose-sama.”

The one who responded to the girl’s question was Frederica —an elegant maid with long golden hair, beautiful emerald-green eyes, and strikingly good looks.

Accompanying Emilia to serve the tea party, she prepared the tea and turned her gaze to the garden beyond the balcony. That was where the practicing Subaru and Beatrice had been dominating the conversation for a while now.

However, Emilia tilted her head at the attitude of the girl and Frederica, who seemed to understand each other.

Emilia: “Does that mean I’m worrying too much?”

Frederica: “Yes. But I think that can not be helped. Emilia-sama has only had dealings with Clind for a few days after the misunderstanding.”

Emilia: “It was a misunderstanding at that time… I made a reaaally embarrassing mistake…”

The topic of discussion was Emilia’s memories of unforgettable failures and experiences.

When Emilia was once again embarrassed by the people who were sharing it with her, the young girl replied with a pout, “What do you mean?”.

Annerose: “That incident was my family’s fault. For me, it was the beginning of my meeting you, Emily, and having this relationship. It was the very important first act of our story.”

Emilia: “Anne…”

Annerose: “I can still remember it. You gave me that beautiful snowy scene as a gift to say goodbye to me…”

The young girl closed her eyes and talked as if enraptured by her speech. In contrast to Annerose, Emilia, however, lowered her eyebrows apologetically.

Emilia: “I’m sorry, Anne. It was Puck who did it, but now he’s gone to sleep for a long time, so I can’t show you the same thing.”

Annerose: “I did not mean to pressure you!”

Emilia: “Is that right?”

Emilia’s eyes widened when it was pointed out that the apology she had felt was misplaced.

While looking at it, the young girl —Annerose Miload sighed, “Indeed…”, and gave Emilia a resolute look that was inappropriate for her appearance.

If you did not compare their appearances, it was difficult to tell which one was older than the other.

Of course, there was a difference in the way Annerose, who had survived the swirling aristocracy at the age of nine, and Emilia, who had spent her life leisurely in a forest with little change, had been polished.

In any case—

Frederica: “I am sure the Master thinks it is a good opportunity for you to learn about these things as well.”

Frederica exhaled as she looked at the two girls, sensing her Master’s intentions.

Frederica’s master, a man of many wiles, liked to use roundabout and distorted expressions and instructions. She guessed this was just another one of his mischievous tricks.

Even so, for better or worse, Frederica had such a strong trust in him that she knew he was making plans that would lead to proper results.

Subaru and Beatrice: “Unyaaah—?!”

Emilia: “Ahh! They got hit again…!”

With a flashy sound, Subaru and Beatrice shot up into the air again, and Emilia panicked as she watched.

Frederica wondered how many times she would see this scene during their training and vaguely thought about the blue sky.

2

—This was about a month after the incident at the Sanctuary was resolved.

???: "…Le-veil up?"

???: "Yeah! I think that's what we need!"

And to Emilia's wondering face, Subaru held out his hands and explained forcefully.

The location was the top floor of the building, which could have been called the new Roswaal Mansion, replacing the burned-down Roswaal Mansion. In its office, Subaru strongly emphasized the needs of the future.

Subaru: "It's been fierce battle after fierce battle…! I know it's depressing for me to say it myself, but you can feel the trouble coming and the level of enemies steadily rising."

???: "Of course, I had devised some creative adjustments to make that haaappen~."

Subaru: "You're making me feel worse than I already am! You should be sorry!"

The one who shrugged his shoulders when he was yelled at like that was Roswaal, whose remorse was hidden behind his makeup.

In fact, on the day that Subaru was summoned to this other world, Roswaal, who seemed to have been planning for the hardship that befell Emilia in the Royal Capital, admitted his mistake and apologized, but even now, Subaru could not be too careful.

If anything, Subaru even felt that the maliciousness of his antics seemed to be increasing every day.

However—

Emilia: “Roswaal, don’t tease Subaru like that. If you do, we won’t know if we can trust you, right?”

???: “Betty agrees, I suppose. It is, however, painful to see you being scolded head-on by the half-devil… Emilia like this, in fact. It serves him right, I suppose.”

Roswaal: “Grr.”

The two people who could silence Roswaal were on a roll. They were Emilia, who preached remorse with pure sincerity, and Beatrice, who put on the face of an absolute ally by Subaru’s side.

Roswaal seemed vulnerable to Emilia, who had grown up because of the Sanctuary and begun walking the path of the ultimate beautiful girl, and Beatrice, who had become active after leaving the Forbidden Library. Even now, Roswaal was able to say something back to Subaru in a relaxed manner, but he only clammed up at the two girls’ words.

Anyway—

Subaru: “Roswaal’s shenanigans aside, I’m serious about my proposal. It’s imperative that we level up to counter future threats!”

???: “Does that mean you want to hone your skills and master your craft?”

Subaru: “Yes, that! That’s what I’m talking about, Frederica!”

Subaru clapped his hands and chuckled to himself as he finally got through to someone. It was Frederica, the last person in the group gathered in the office.

Originally, Frederica was waiting where Emilia and Roswaal were talking. This was when Subaru intervened by pulling Beatrice’s hand.

Subaru felt bad for interrupting Emilia and Roswaal, but this was also an important topic for the camp— Subaru, who had been officially appointed as Emilia's knight, had raised the level of his ability.

Emilia: "But Subaru works hard every day on special training. And look, you and Garfiel always get along well…"

Subaru: "It's super lovely to see the world smiling in Emilia-tan's eyes, but the reality of that training scene is not that harmonious."

Emilia's expression was warm and soft, but the reality was very different.

She was right. Since moving to the new mansion, Subaru had sought to improve his skills and was trying to learn from Garfiel —a new fighter in the camp.

The new face in the camp had a hand-to-hand fighting style, so it was a long-awaited presence for the Emilia Camp, which had many magic users. Subaru, who was neither good at magic nor martial arts, thought they seemed to be the perfect person to ask for lessons.

Subaru: "But when we started training together, the material was so different that I couldn't handle it… he overestimates me like crazy."

Beatrice: "Betty didn't see it firsthand, but she heard that Subaru defeated him with that ground dragon, in fact. That was a big deal, I suppose."

Subaru: "We did, but it took four of us to beat him."

To be precise, it was correct to say that in addition to the continuous battle between Garfiel, Otto, and Ram, Subaru had been cut down, and Patrasche had put the finishing touches on the fight. Simply connecting this to Subaru's victory was a bad way of putting it, even before Garfiel turned out to be fourteen years old.

Subaru: "If we went head-to-head, I couldn't do anything about it. He should know that, but he's not very good at holding back…"

Roswaal: “Maybe he’s still upset about losing in the Sanctuary and wants to use this training as an excuse to kill youuu~.”

Subaru: “If that smile had any truth behind it, I’d lose faith in humanity!”

Subaru snapped at Roswaal when he said that about the straightforward Garfiel.

Subaru could not continue the conversation if he was teased every time. While Roswaal gave Beatrice a glare, Subaru looked over at Frederica.

Subaru: “That’s why I want to take care of the situation. For example, have Frederica tell Garfiel to go easy on… Frederica?”

Frederica: “…”

Subaru: “What’s wrong, Frederica? I’m not sure what it is, but your face is red all the way up to your ears.”

Frederica’s face was red as she remained silent in front of Subaru, who asked for her help. When Subaru and Emilia were worried about her face, which had turned red up to her ears, Frederica was the one who was worried. She shook her head, letting a weak “No, no…” escape.

Frederica: “You see, Garf’s poor technique is… possibly my fault.”

Subaru: “Oh, why? As a boy, did you beat his soul down from childhood to the point where he has to stand up to anyone he comes across with his full strength?”

Frederica: “Not really, but… When we were young, there were no other children in the Sanctuary other than Garf and I.”

Subaru: “Because no one else was there?”

When Subaru asked her about it, Frederica put her hand shyly over her mouth and said,

Frederica: “I am afraid that I have been… I have been playing you.”

Emilia: “Frederica’s playmate? What’s wrong with that?”

Frederica: “No, I mean…”

Unable to understand Frederica’s sense of embarrassment, Emilia innocently asked back. Subaru also roughly grasped the situation from Frederica’s rough appearance.

Although Frederica and Garfiel were siblings, there was an age difference of six or seven years between them. Whatever the case may be today, the impact of the age difference in childhood was significant.

Subaru: “It’s the difference between first and seventh graders…”

Moreover, considering the number of years Frederica had been away from the Sanctuary, she would have been younger than a first grader when she played with Garfiel.

The influence of the original experience is immeasurable. Otherwise, there would be no proverb like “A tiger can’t change his stripes.”.

Subaru: “In other words, Garfiel is in such a state because of his unrestrained sister’s influence.”

Frederica: “Th-he way you said that! The way you say that, it was malicious! Even if it is true that I am an influence, I will insist it was!”

However, even if the jury acknowledged the validity of Frederica’s claim, it would not change the troubling reality of the situation.

In any case, the balance of power was too great for Garfiel to compete with Subaru’s training. Garfiel could heal some injuries with his magic, but there was a limit.

Subaru: “I’m not going to let Otto teach me how to fight off thugs. But my pride won’t allow me to let Otto teach me how to fight off thugs the Suwen way…!”

Emilia: “Oh, you’re being so selfish. Otto-kun seems to be a good teacher.”

Subaru: “I know, but! But even if they taught me, the chance of me being able to use it would be too limited, and I wouldn’t be able to handle it!”

In addition, the Suwen style of fighting off thugs passed down in Otto’s family had already proven to be ineffective against Garfiel.

So, it was far from the technique Subaru is looking for. What Subaru needed was a way to counter the threats that would continue to stand in his way —ideally, a Reinhard-like power that could defeat any enemy.

Subaru: “I know that’s a tall order, so I’d at least like to have a little trick to buy some time to stall them until Garfiel can come running.”

Beatrice: “That’s another greed-free story, in fact.”

Roswaal: “I think it’s an appropriate idea, though, that you’re in your eleeement~.”

Beatrice and Roswaal made their own comments after hearing what Subaru wanted there. Meanwhile, during the same conversation, Emilia pondered with a, “Hmm…”,

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, what do you object to?”

Emilia: “No, it’s not like that. It’s just that if Subaru is in danger, I’ll protect him, and I want him to be able to rely on me, too.”

Subaru: “In case you were wondering, the way the situation was set up earlier, I was under the impression that I was fighting with Emilia-tan behind me, protecting her…”

In the first place, the idea for this case came from Subaru’s official appointment as Emilia’s knight. If a decision relied on Emilia’s power, it would all be for nothing.

Subaru: “Anyway! I’m a man who wants to be strong enough to protect Emilia-tan! And now that I’ve made a contract with Beako, I want new techniques or even a second form!”

Beatrice: “Subaru can’t help making so much noise, I suppose. If you really want the second form, you can carry Betty on your shoulders, in fact.”

Subaru: “It’s not that kind of extended children’s game!”

While arguing back, Subaru picked up Beatrice by the shoulders and swung the little girl around with a joyful “Kyaa!”; at the sight of Subaru and Beatrice, Roswaal clapped his hands and said, “Okay”,

Roswaal: “I understand what you want, Subaru-kun. I don’t doubt your feeeelings~.”

Subaru: “Does that mean you have a guess who I am training with?”

Roswaal: “That’s right. Why don’t you ask Ram to do it for you?”

Subaru: “It’s not for nothing, but I wonder if sey’ll teach me right…”

Ram had a great deal of trust in Subaru’s abilities, but he didn’t think Ram’s personality was well suited for a leadership role. In terms of the way she treated Subaru, it was like a picture book lesson.

Besides, this was selfish of Subaru, but—

Subaru: “I don’t want Ram to have to deal with me for a while. I want her to stay with Rem.”

Emilia: “Subaru…”

After returning from the Sanctuary, the sisters Ram and Rem were finally able to see each other, but Ram still had not regained the memory of her other precious half.

So, their relationship was still in the process of being rebuilt, with Ram coming to terms with it.

Roswaal: “I see, I see, that’s auspicious. But if that’s the case, I’m in a bit of a tight spooot~. I wonder if anyone else in our camp could teach Subaru-kun a lesson…”

Emilia: “Ah, you want me to try it? I’m a little bit strong these days, so it might be dangerous, but I’ll do my best to go easy on you.”

Subaru: “So if I’m bludgeoned to death or seriously injured by Emilia-tan’s slender arms, it’s going to look way too bad on the outside…”

Emilia made a suggestion on behalf of Roswaal, who was troubled by the idea. However, Subaru could be bludgeoned to death by her slender arms, and this was also a matter of Subaru’s pride.

As someone who wanted to become stronger for Emilia, he struggled with the dichotomy if he begged Emilia to teach him—

Frederica: “—Master, you have already made up your mind, correct? Please do not be mean and make trouble for Subaru-sama and Beatrice-sama.”

So said Frederica, her gaze sharpened, as she glared at Roswaal’s side.

“Huh?” Subaru said, and Emilia and Subaru’s eyes widened. Roswaal closed one eye and narrowed his blue eye mischievously as he muttered, “Did they figure it out?”.

Subaru: “They figured it out? Oi oi, come on, you’ve got to be kidding me. This is serious.”

Beatrice: “Subaru, there’s no point in saying it, I suppose. This man has always been able to keep himself youthful by messing with others in this way, in fact. He is such a creature, I suppose.”

Emilia: “Well, is that so? Then, the usual shenanigans…”

Subaru: “Emilia-tan believes!”

Beatrice’s point of view and Emilia’s point of view were their own honest, believable opinions. Both of them were very cute, so Subaru was determined to watch over them without scolding them.

Anyway, Roswaal interrupted with a single cough from that point of view,

Roswaal: “As for Subaru-kun’s request earlier, as Frederica said, I have an idea. I know a place like a vocational training center that can come in handy in times like this.”

Subaru: “Yo-You have such a convenient place? Maybe like a temple for job changes?”

Frederica: “—? I do not know much about this “temple for job changes,” but Subaru-sama was at this place until a few days ago.”

Subaru: “A place I had been until recently…”

It had been said that the one that reached a certain level was not a temple where jobs could be changed, but a place in recent memory, and Subaru immediately opened his mouth with an “Ah”.

It was the place where the people who escaped from the Sanctuary, Subaru, and the others who lost their mansion temporarily took refuge before moving their home base to the new Roswaal Mansion —

Emilia: “Anne’s house? Then maybe…”

Subaru: “That little girl is training with me…? You can’t simply accept that a little girl is a good training partner, no matter how much you want to… Ow, ouch, ouch.”

Emilia: “Of course not. It’s Clind-san, Clind-san.”

Subaru’s ears were tugged by Emilia, who gave him a look that meant stop.

Not so much chastisement as the expected scolding, Subaru nodded his head and said, “Ahh.”,

Subaru: “Clind-san, huh? No, I talked to him a little bit while he was taking care of me at Annerose-chan’s place, but I don’t know him that well.”

Roswaal: “Clind was originally a servant of mine for a long tiiime~. Well, Frederica knows more about the details than I do. Isn’t that right?”

Frederica: “Huh? Eh, eh, yes, I guess. Reluctantly so.”

Frederica nodded her head, slightly upset, as she was forced to talk. While wondering about this reaction, Subaru remembered the appearance of a beautiful, thin-faced man.

Subaru: “But still, a vocational training center. A setting like… where the proper servant is the one who knows all things, is really cool, like a manga or video game.”

Emilia: “I’m sorry, I don’t understand what you’re saying. But… it’s true that Clind-san is a good teacher. He has been a great help to me.”

Subaru: “Really, Emilia was taken care of by him… when? Why?”

Emilia’s words assured him of Clind’s abilities, but Subaru wondered if there had been any contact between the two of them during their recent stay that would have produced such a guarantee.

Emilia shook her head and said, “No, it’s not that”,

Emilia: “In fact, before I came to the previous mansion, I was mistaken for a maid for a few days, and during that time, Clind-san and Frederica taught me to be a maid.”

Subaru: “…Emilia-tan was a maid? In a maid’s outfit?”

Emilia: “Yes, I was. I know it was short-lived, but I did my best.”

Emilia, proudly beaming, slowly chewed on her words; Subaru understood the situation and then fell to his knees in a heap.

Subaru: “Why, why wasn’t I there, ahhh—!!”

Emilia: “Eh? What’s wrong, Subaru?! You look like you’re about to cry…”

Subaru: “I’m disqualified as a knight for missing out on Emilia-tan’s maid outfit…”

Emilia: “What does that have to do with anything?!”

Emilia’s eyes turned into a blank stare as Subaru burst into tears and sobbed.

But it was not a joke. Subaru regretted that he had not been there. Emilia’s maid’s uniform must have been as beautiful as a goddess.

Subaru: “That’s right! You can still wear it…”

Emilia: “Well, no, that’s not true. A maid’s outfit is a maid’s work uniform, so I can’t wear it since I am not a maid.”

Subaru: “Guaaah—”

There was a curt reply, and once again, Subaru slumped.

Emilia is troubled by Subaru’s overreaction, but Beatrice and the others could only sigh. This was a Royal Selection Candidate, and her knight was at the center of the camp.

Roswaal: “It’s really worth your support. Don’t you think sooo~?”

Frederica: “Unlike the… Master, I would like to realize it in a different way.”

Frederica replied with a bitter smile to Roswaal’s chuckling gaze.

Aside from these two, Beatrice crouched down next to Subaru, who was slumped over.

Beatrice: “Look, don’t dwell on it forever, I suppose. If you want to see a maid’s outfit, I suppose. I-It can’t be helped; Betty can wear it for you, in fact.”

Subaru: “Ugh, Beako… I’m glad you feel that way, but that’s not the same thing as this.”

Beatrice: “How dare you, I suppose!”

Beatrice was outraged that her attempts to comfort him had been so disrespected.

Regardless, you could say that the direction of the story had came together.

Roswaal: “Subaru-kun’s level up… was it? I’ll leave that to Clind. By the way, Emilia-sama, would you like to accompany him to the Miload family?”

Emilia: “Me too?”

Roswaal: “Yes. Subaru-kun has officially been named a knight. I think it is necessary for you to learn how to act as a nobleman as well.”

Emilia nodded, muttering the unfamiliar word “nobleman” as if ruminating on it.

Emilia: “All right. Do you want me to learn from Clind-san, too?”

Roswaal: “Of course, it would be possible to be educated by Clind, but it would be more in Emilia-sama’s nature to learn by seeing the real thing. It’s Annerose.”

Emilia: “Wow, from Anne?”

Roswaal: “I’m sure she’d love to meet you, Emilia-sama. A way to earn some poooints~… oops, for the sake of a good relationship between the two of you, surely.”

Roswaal suggested, with a deliberate rephrasing. Emilia’s eyes lit up at the thought, and she clasped her hands in front of her chest and smiled happily.

In the background, Subaru and Beatrice continued their little play, and the impression of a disorganized pair could not be shaken—

Roswaal: “I expect you can handle the reins theeere~.”

Frederica: “Me?”

Roswaal: “You are to accompany them to the Miload residence. You’re the right person for the job, aren’t you?”

Frederica’s master closed one eye and looked at her with his blue eye again. She sighed at Roswaal’s mischievous attitude, and then Frederica looked at Subaru and the three of them again.

The burden was a little too heavy for her, and she bowed, not letting her inner thoughts show.

3

—And that was how Subaru and the others came to the Miload mansion.

As it was, Garfiel was disqualified from being Subaru’s training partner and was somewhat depressed. Otto, who was forced to help Roswaal with his extremely busy paperwork, was not along for the journey to the Miload mansion.

Subaru: “I’ve heard that you’ve had a lot of training too. The next time we meet, we’ll both have leveled up so much that we won’t recognize each other. —Two years from now, in the Royal Capital of Lugunica!”

Otto: “Are you planning to train until right before the Royal Selection?”

Subaru added that there was that exchange of words before they left.

Anyway—

Subaru: “That’s why I need you to give me… no, me and Beako, some practice.”

Beatrice: “What? Betty, too, I suppose?”

Subaru: “That’s because Beako and I are one and the same. We’ll be together in sickness and health, in the rain or shine, in the wind, and in death!”

Beatrice: “That is not even funny, in fact!”

As soon as they arrived, without a moment to breathe a sigh of relief, Subaru asked Clind to practice.

Frederica, who accompanied him, was impressed by his forward attitude. At the very least, there was no lie in Subaru’s intention to become stronger.

Frederica: “I do not know what the word “le-veil up” means, but…”

Emilia: “Oh, Frederica? Hehe, don’t worry. Ram says it’s called “Subaru-speak”.”

Frederica: “Subaru-sama-speak…”

While smiling at the boastful Emilia for some reason, Frederica also admired her protegee Ram’s sense of style, thinking that Subaru-speak was a straightforward and clear expression.

Speaking of protegees, Frederica was worried that Petra, whom she left at the mansion, being annoyed with Ram.

Petra, a quick learner and a good judge of character, was on the verge of graduating from her apprenticeship as a maid after just a month or so, but this was the first time she had ever left Frederica’s care in earnest.

Frederica: “If I may say so, I agree with Subaru-sama regarding Ram’s leadership ability.”

Emilia: “—? Frederica, are you worried about Petra-chan by any chance?”

Frederica: “Yes, I am sorry. I can not help but feel uneasy, but I am not sure I am comfortable leaving her alone with Ram to take care of the mansion.”

Frederica frowned and expressed her concern. But at Frederica's words, Emilia put her finger to her lips and said,

Emilia: "I don't think you have to worry so much… Ram is mean like that because she chooses her partners like Subaru, Otto-kun, and Garfiel."

Frederica: "…That just makes it sound like the girl hates men."

But in reality, there was no such thing as Ram hating men.

Frederica and Ram had known each other for a long time, but surprisingly, Ram's attitude had not changed at all since before she turned ten. She saw them as equals, regardless of gender.

The trouble with Ram was that she kept them slightly below herself.

Frederica: "In that respect, Petra has the personality to get along with anyone… Indeed, I may have worried too much."

Emilia: "Yeah, I'm sure you're right. I've been worrying about Subaru and the others for a long time, but I wasn't sure I could convince you."

Emilia sticks out her tongue slightly, reflecting on what she said. However, Frederica had secretly bought into Emilia's high self-esteem.

There was no conceit in Emilia.

There seemed to be a lack of confidence in the past, though after returning from the Sanctuary, humility or even modesty had become a virtue.

On top of that, she was eager to grow. This would be a strong weapon for her in the future as she took on the high bar of the Royal Selection.

However, other candidates for the Royal Selection also possessed that weapon. In some cases, their natural environment allowed them to continue developing it.

It’s just that they were finally on the same stage—

???: “—That is why Uncle sent Emily to my mansion, correct?”

Frederica: “Annerose-sama…”

So said Annerose, having read Frederica’s mind and tilted her cup.

Still very young, less than ten years old, the head of the Miload family had an intelligence and judgment disproportionate to her pretty appearance. This was because her upbringing did not allow her to be a mere little girl.

To be honest, Frederica once took pity on her for that. However, now that Frederica saw her sitting around a tea party with Emilia, she thought it was a sense of profaneness.

Or maybe—

Frederica: “Did the Master know that Annerose-sama would end up like this…?”

Roswaal L. Mathers, a man of all plots and schemes.

He was a schemer who used the domain and people he was obligated to protect, and the Sanctuary and its inhabitants that he had been protecting for generations, as pawns in his plot, and he admitted his defeat to Subaru and Emilia and apologized for his past actions.

But Frederica didn’t believe that Roswaal had been so resigned that he was willing to give up everything he’d built up over the years.

Anyone who truly wanted to achieve something was unlikely to give up.

Frederica believed that insatiable persistence and a willingness to work hard to make one’s desires come true were the most important qualities needed to make it happen.

In this respect, was there really anything that could compare to Roswaal?

If Roswaal is willing to make every effort to achieve his goal, he might even incorporate the existence of the girl, Annerose, into his plan.

She was the daughter of a family member and a friend of Frederica, who has been her guardian since she was born. She thought she would be able to handle such an existence.

Subaru & Beatrice: “Unyaaah?!”

Frederica: “—Hk.”

Perhaps because she was so lost in thought, Frederica’s shoulders jumped at the renewed scream.

If you looked at it, in the garden of the Miload mansion, Subaru and Beatrice had been defeated by Clind for the twentieth time in total.

Frederica liked to say that they were doing a great job, but she did not think they were going to get much credit from Clind if they just kept plugging away in the dark. But that did not mean he would not politely explain everything. —Clind was that kind of man.

Emilia: “Oh, again! They’re both lucky they didn’t get hurt, though.”

Annerose: “Emily, it is not that. It is not because they are lucky that Subaru and Beatrice are not injured. It is because of Clind.”

Emilia: “Huh…”

Emilia, who was worried about the upturned pair, widened her eyes at Annerose’s explanation.

It must have been hard to believe. However, Clind, the all-powerful butler, was capable of doing just that.

To not let the challenger get injured, and allowing them to challenge him as many times as they could without breaking down.

He had decided that this was the role he was expected to play, and so he did that.

Frederica: “This is the kind of training partner Subaru-sama needs that Garf can not make up for.”

Emilia: “Clind-san, is such a remarkable person…”

Emilia exhaled in admiration, and Frederica narrowed her eyes at her surprise.

In terms of trust, Ram was the one that Roswaal relied on the most. Having said that, this perception recently changed, and there had been times when Roswaal faltered in the face of Ram’s aggression, but Ram’s presence was still unshakable in terms of “trust”.

However, when it came to being a right-hand man in terms of ability, that would definitely be Clind.

He had been with Roswaal for a long time and was an all-round family butler who was heavily used in all situations. In the past, Frederica had heard that he and Roswaal were not a master and servant but in a contractual relationship.

Frederica had a memory of a time when she used to ask him about every little thing to gain his attention as he worked tirelessly for Roswaal.

Frederica: “Shame… My memory of shame…”

Emilia: “What’s wrong, Frederica? Your face looks reaaally red…”

Annerose: “You can leave her alone, Emily. It happens sometimes. Frederica has a very difficult personality.”

Putting her hand on her burning cheek, Frederica confronted her shame.

While Frederica was distracted, Annerose turned to Emilia and said, “Now then”,

Annerose: “I have a letter from Uncle to teach Emily how to behave as a nobleman. So, for a few days, you will accompany me to the nobility’s meetings and soirées. How does that sound?”

Emilia: “Umm, I’m fine with that. But are you okay, Anne? I’m…”

Annerose: “—The Miload family is a branch of the Mathers family. Of course, there is no difference in policy between Uncle and me. I am also supporting Emily in the Royal Selection.”

After saying that, Annerose continued with the word “However”,

Annerose: “I would have supported Emily even without Uncle’s support…”

Emilia: “Thank you… Anne, But make sure you listen to what the other candidates have to say. It’s reaaally important, so don’t just take sides just because I’m your friend.”

Annerose: “Is this not usually the part where an emotional Emily hugs me?”

Frederica thought she should say something nice, but Annerose would be upset if she was told so directly.

She was completely knocked off the ladder. Emilia would not have such bad intentions. It was a sign of her good nature to make others think it over properly, even if it did not benefit her.

Emilia: “Hehe, sorry. But if Anne says so, I’ll take the opportunity to study properly.”

Annerose: “Hm… yes, that is better. I will tell you, I do not want you to be the fluffy, fluffy Emily you have always been in social situations. You need to look sharp.”

Emilia: “Sharp… I’ll do my best! Sharp!”

Emilia’s cheeks stiffened just a little bit, as if she was putting more effort into her facial muscles. Perhaps it was her own form of sharpness. It looked like she had a long way to go.

However, Annerose put her hand on her cheek at Emilia’s healthy appearance and said, “Emily is so hardworking and cute…”,

And with that, the policies of Emilia and Annerose were established

—

Annerose: “—It is about time there was some movement over there.”

Annerose, who had tightened her blurry expression and regained her sense of leadership, muttered. When Emilia twisted her head, she said, “Huh?”.

Subaru: “Hey, Beako! You’ve got to do better than that! We’re always getting beat up!”

Beatrice: “It’s you, Subaru, who should trust Betty’s judgment, in fact! Subaru is an amateur at fighting, so Betty’s judgment is more accurate, I suppose!”

Subaru: “Don’t be ridiculous! Don’t act like you’re a veteran after being cooped up for four hundred years!”

Beatrice: “How, how, how dare you say that, in fact…! It is unbelievable, I suppose!”

In the middle of the garden, Subaru and Beatrice, who had fallen to the ground on their butts, started arguing.

They seemed to be having a heated discussion and clashed with each other. As it was, the two of them gradually heated up and began to blame each other for their failure.

If that happened, there was only one place they would end up.

Beatrice: “Break up! Break up, in fact! Betty made a big mistake, I suppose!”

Subaru: “You…! Okay, okay! I don’t even want to understand if that’s what you’re thinking! Beako’s an idiot! You’re so stubborn! I won’t forgive you until you apologize!”

Beatrice: “That’s Betty’s line, in fact! Subaru, for your own sake, don’t think you’ll be comforted when you cry, I suppose!”

Subaru: “Right back at you!”

As their argument exploded, Subaru and Beatrice let go of each other's hands.

They turned away and started going in different directions. Leaving Clind behind In the middle of the garden to deal with the two of them.

Emilia: "Awful… The two of them got into a fight…"

Frederica: "It was bound to happen sooner or later with that partnership. It was a cute fight, though."

Emilia: "What are you saying? There's nothing cute or scary about a fight. They have to hurry up and make up…"

Frederica: "—Emilia-sama."

Emilia was flustered by the breakdown between Subaru and Beatrice, with an expression Frederica never expected. Holding Emilia by the shoulders as she tried to stand up, Frederica shook her head.

Frederica understood Emilia's feelings, but this was not her place. This was a trial that Subaru and Beatrice would need to overcome.

Emilia: "Frederica, why?"

Frederica: "Subaru-sama and Beatrice-sama have only just entered into a contractual relationship… they are still getting to know each other. Emilia-sama must not intervene in what happens in such a situation. I am sure you will be able to understand that they need to figure it out."

Emilia: "But, is that not enough?"

Annerose: "—What if they have a disagreement when Emily is not around?"

Emilia looked back at Annerose, her amethyst eyes flickering. Catching her gaze directly, Annerose gestured toward Subaru and Beatrice, who had walked off.

Annerose: “The two of them are destined to spend the rest of their lives together, yes? No matter how close two people are to each other, there are always going to be differences of opinion. But Emily can not be the one to mediate every conflict, can you?”

Emilia: “…So, I shouldn’t help them make up?”

Annerose: “At least this time, I think. Emily’s presence seems too much for Subaru. So—”

And then, Annerose cut her words short and turned her narrowed eyes to Frederica. Emilia, who followed her gaze and frowned with a, “Huh?”.

However, Frederica knew her role and quietly bowed by the waist.

Frederica: “Sorry to be so presumptuous, but I am going to take your place, Emilia-sama. Just a little help, I will gather their opinions.”

Emilia: “Yes, if Frederica says so…Then we’re in good hands.”

Frederica: “…”

Emilia: “About Subaru and Beatrice, please. They’re both reaaally great and they both love each other, but they just can’t be honest.”

Frederica was more surprised than disappointed when she was so easily entrusted. Emilia, however, did not notice Frederica’s surprise and patted her chest in relief.

Emilia seriously believed that Frederica would be fine.

Annerose: “We must live up to Emily’s expectations, correct?”

Frederica: “…You look a lot like the Master when you look like that.”

Annerose smiled wickedly at Frederica, sensing her hesitation. As a servant, Frederica was being very disrespectful to Annerose, as she had spoken to her in return.

It was on point, and Annerose made a heartfelt, sour face of disgust with a “Hm”.

Emilia: “Hehe, that’s weird. Anne and Roswaal don’t look alike at all.”

Annerose: “Em-Emily! Right, right! Yes, of course!”

Emilia: “Hmm, yes… A little bit similar in the eyes, maybe?”

Annerose: “If you are going to comfort me, please make sure you comfort me thoroughly!”

In response to Emilia’s words, which were not meant to be offensive, Annerose’s voice cracked to complain.

Watching the smiling girls interact, Frederica pinched the hem of her skirt and curtseyed.

Frederica: “Then I will fulfill my role.”

4

???: “—Frederica. Restraint.”

Frederica left Emilia and Annerose’s tea party and was about to fulfill her duties when she was stopped by a man who crept up on her without a sound.

A calm, cool, unemotional tone of voice.

Frederica closed her eyes and responded, “What is it?” without looking back.

Frederica: “Now I have to go and talk to the two of them who have gotten upset because of your unrestrained behavior.”

Clind: “I see, that would be helpful. Splendid. However, since when did the maids of the Mathers family change their customs; is it not rude not to look at the face of the person they are talking to? Inquiry.”

Frederica: “—Hk, please do not be so obstinate.”

Frederica was criticized for not turning around, so she turned around and bared her fangs. When she turned around, she saw the face of a man wearing a monocle right in front of her nose, and she recoiled.

Frederica: “Your, your distance is wrong!”

Clind: “My apologies. Unexpected. I forgot how much you had grown. Forgetfulness.”

Frederica: “Did you mean to be so sarcastic?”

Frederica’s gaze turned grim, as if she were being picked a fight with. However, when Frederica pursued Clind, he shook his head and said, “No.”.

Clind: “I am sure I do not need to tell you, watching from the sidelines, but the argument between Subaru-sama and Beatrice-sama was a spur-of-the-moment affair. Instantaneous.”

Frederica: “…I understand. To be honest, I was surprised to see how well they get along.”

Clind’s advice was a fact that Frederica had seen every day at the Roswaal Mansion.

It was hard to get used to seeing Beatrice, as someone rarely seen outside the Forbidden Library was now bonded to Subaru, no matter how many times she saw it.

Such a relationship was precious. That’s why Frederica’s responsibility was so heavy.

Clind: “The Master expects you to fulfill that role. Cherished desire.”

Frederica: “Yes, that is why you are accompanying me. It is standard procedure for training new employees.”

Frederica shrugged her shoulders and wondered who was in a worse position, him or her.

—A big fight between Subaru and Beatrice, the emergence of such problems was to be expected.

Originally, the Miload house was used to train new employees so that the demi-human talents that Roswaal would gather could be promoted as servants and taught manners and proper work habits.

Naturally, Clind would educate them, but the next highest-ranking servant after Clind, who was the head of the household, would have an equally important role to play. That was Frederica's role while he was with the Miload family, and she was probably the person Clind worked with the longest.

Clind had an unrelenting outpouring of strict educational policies for new employees. Frederica comforted them, appeased them, and made them face the tasks again with renewed spirit —That was a standard procedure for their interactions.

The fight between Subaru and Beatrice was part of that—

Frederica: "I know what I have to do. …What exactly are you trying to say?"

Frederica questioned Clind, confirming her role without needing to be told again.

He went out of his way to point out the details of her work and ridiculed Frederica's poor performance. —As expected, Clind was not a person who would be so duplicitous.

He was loyal to his work and fulfilled his duties. So, Frederica couldn't blame him.

Clind: "—. I am the one who told the Master to send you over this time. Confession."

Frederica: "…Huh?"

That was why the unexpected comment was a bolt out of the blue for Frederica.

Frederica's eyes widened, and she stared at Clind as he said this. Clind, with his usual expressionless face, narrowed his eyes behind his monocle.

Clind: "The other day, when the Master stayed at our residence, you left immediately to prepare the new mansion. Thanks to that, we were not able to talk properly. Consideration."

Frederica: "You went out of your way to talk to me…?"

With her surprise still intact, Frederica pondered over Clind's true intentions. However, she couldn't think of anything.

When Frederica's mind was troubled by this, Clind took a breath and said.

Clind: "Frederica, I am glad you were able to liberate the Sanctuary. Congratulations."

Frederica: "—Ah."

Clind: "I know why you left your home and took my teachings under the Master's protection. That is why I wanted to tell you properly. Conclusion."

As he said this, Clind lowered the corner of his eyebrows just a little, only slightly. This was a change that only those who were used to seeing his face and had closely observed the changes in his expression could notice.

It was a change so small that it was only noticed by those who had once followed Clind's back, calling him "Nii-sama, Nii-sama.".

Frederica: "—Hk, such an unpleasant man!"

As if to disguise the feelings that arose within her for a moment, Frederica raised her voice.

The softness that had been there disappeared from Clind's expression when he heard this. He sighed deliberately with a "Hmph.", Clind: “Why can you not even accept my congratulations? Your stubbornness disgusts me and makes my head ache. It makes me want to curse my lack of power to correct the situation. Incompleteness.”

Frederica: “Yeah, yeah! I know you do! I am sure you must have a lot of headaches seeing me as I am. Hmph! This serves you right!”

Clind: “Ha.”

As soon as Frederica snorted and regretted turning her face away like a child, Clind snickered at her.

Her face became hot, but she could not look back with a red face now. With the momentum of turning her face away, Frederica tried to return to her original goal.

In other words, Frederica had to persuade Subaru and Beatrice, which was her original role.

Frederica: “I-I think we are done here! I will be joining the two of them… ah.”

However, just as she was about to step away with a long stride, uncharacteristic for an elegant maid, Frederica noticed a hint of a gaze being directed at her and looked up to find,

Subaru: “Ah, ha, ha, hello…”

Beatrice: “It’s awkward to be found, in fact…”

In the corridor connecting the garden and the mansion, Frederica and Clind were being watched from a distance as they argued, and Subaru and Beatrice were leaning against each other with awkward looks on their faces.

Before Frederica knew it, the two of them, who were supposed to have been in a heated fight earlier, were now holding hands.

Frederica: “Su-Subaru-sama, and Beatrice-sama, your hands…”

Subaru: “Hands? Yeah, we made up, you know. I was just a little pissed off, and I said too much earlier… Beako.”

Beatrice: “Well, Subaru apologized to me, so he is forgiven, I suppose. Betty was just starting to think that he wasn’t listening well, in fact.”

The two of them replied, lifting their joined hands in front of the trembling Frederica.

Unlike the previous training sessions for new recruits, the two of them made up easily, and Frederica could only be stunned with an “Is, is that so.”.

Of course, it was a good thing that they had reconciled. The original goal was to improve the relationship without Emilia’s intervention, so that was no problem.

The problem was that—

Subaru: “Hey, Frederica… are you and Clind-san on bad terms?”

Beatrice: “Betty and Subaru can talk to him, I suppose. You should compromise, in fact.”

Frederica: “—Hk.”

Sure enough, the subject of their earlier argument was brought up, and Frederica choked up.

There were many things Frederica wanted to say. In the first place, she didn’t want to be told this by the two people who had been fighting just before or take it out on the people who had made this situation happen.

Clind: “Subaru-sama, Beatrice-sama, I am glad to see that you two have reunited your hands. Fortuitous.”

Frederica was at a loss for words as she struggled with her many emotions. Clind, who stepped forward to take her place, praised the two for naturally overcoming their challenges.

When he said that, Subaru and Beatrice both said, “Re-Really?”

looking at each other with no ill-will.

Clind: “If the two of you could learn to compromise, things would have been different. Then, you will be able to see the next steps ahead. An amazing rate of growth. Shook.”

Subaru: “Hey, you hear that, Beako? Clind-san is shaking at how much we’ve grown.”

Beatrice: “Hmm, of course, I suppose. With Betty and Subaru, any challenge will fall apart in a flash, in fact. The fear is yet to come, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Aww, that’s some big mouth!”

The fact that they accepted the obvious flattery without questioning it was proof that they, like Emilia, were good at heart.

Despite the unexpected commonality between master and servant, Frederica’s humiliation at being maliciously berated has not been resolved in the slightest.

Anyway—

Clind: “Then let us consider the next step. Do you know my way of overcoming obstacles? Trial and error.”

Subaru: “Oh, that’s the thing. I think it would be better if I could use some tools, too, instead of relying on Beako all the time.”

Beatrice: “Y-You don’t think he can count on Betty alone, in fact…?”

Subaru: “That’s not true! I don’t want to slow you down. I want to help you…!”

Beatrice: “Subaru…”

Beatrice’s eyes sparkled with admiration at Subaru’s determination as he clenched his fists firmly.

It was good that they’re getting along, but was it Frederica’s imagination that Beatrice, who used to look so dignified and intelligent, seemed to have lost a lot of her wisdom?

Clind: “You want a tool, Not a sword or a bow, but a tool. Novel.”

Subaru: “You can’t expect me to be able to compete with Reinhard and Julius even if I trained hard with a sword now. If that’s the case, it’s better to learn one technique… that will surprise at first sight so that I can handle different situations…”

Clind: “Well, that is an interesting idea. Creative.”

Subaru: “Ha ha… Well, the surprise at first sight is an idea I got from a guy I don’t even like to remember.”

Beatrice: “Whatever the source, it is to Subaru’s credit that he found a way to use it, I suppose. Betty is also proud to be his pa-pa-par-par-part partner, in fact.”

Despite this ongoing drama, Subaru and Beatrice were able to assemble a plan for the future.

With his serious and thoughtful attitude, Clind would probably find the most optimal answer for Subaru and Beatrice. In fact, immediately after, Clind held up a finger, and,

Clind: “I have come up with a few candidates. Let us take them out of our storehouse.”

Subaru: “Oh, really? Well, since you’re here, we’ll go with you.”

Beatrice: “Betty will see if it is worthy of Subaru with my own eyes, I suppose.”

Subaru and Beatrice appeared to be very motivated, and Clind led them as they began to walk away.

The destination was the Miload family’s storehouse, where they had a set of tools to train their servants in martial arts. The idea was to find a weapon suitable for Subaru—

Clind: “Frederica, when you have finished throwing your tantrum, go back to Annerose-sama and Emilia-sama. Hospitality.”

Frederica let out a long breath, as she watched his back disappear. Frederica hated the way he had just said that. It was a quick way to divert the attention of Subaru and the others.

Frederica let out a long breath as she watched the detestable man easily divert Subaru and Beatrice’s interest and then disappear from her sight.

The plan was to accompany Subaru, Beatrice, and Emilia to their “lessons” at the Miload’s residence for ten days.

Frederica: “So, Clind and me… for ten days. Is it the Master’s plot, too?”

Did Roswaal think this humiliation and resentment were some plot that would lead to a better future? Frederica was not sure if Roswaal was hoping that she was aware of his intentions and was trying to figure out what was best for her.

If that’s the case—

Frederica: “—Very well. If that is what the Master wants, then I will try to break out of my shell and take on the challenge. Yes, Petra and Garf are also doing their best, but it would be shameful if I were to stand with them with no growth.”

With that decision made, Frederica made up her mind.

It would be a big mistake to follow them as if they had the mindset of a bridesmaid, a servant, or even a bystander.

In the Emilia Camp, which was lagging behind the other camps, those that couldn’t move forward couldn’t keep up the fight. What they needed was growth, or—

Frederica: “—A le-veil up, was it.”

When Frederica said the words out loud forcefully, they seemed to give her some kind of energy.

Energized by these words, Frederica began to walk away from the weak, infantile tossing and turning of her mind that she had been doing until just before and to obtain a self that was unfazed by anything.

The Royal Selection had just begun —The Emilia Camp, which was participating in it, had just begun.

As a result of this ten-day lesson, Subaru began to walk the path of an unusual knight with a little girl in one hand and a whip in the other, and Emilia, who participated in many soirées and meetings with Annerose, was recognized not as a “silver-haired half-devil” but as a soirée crasher.

While Frederica, enthusiastic and determined to do her duty, was doing her best, Roswaal sneezed back at the Roswaal Mansion.

Roswaal: “She’s always had a tendency to assume things, doooesn’t~ she?”

However, the pink-haired maid who heard this did not mention it, so it never reached Frederica’s ears.

END

Short Story Collection 11

Once Upon a Time in Lugunica (Translation Pending)

Elegant Lesson
(Edited Machine Translation)

1

???: “Woahahhh—!!”

???: “Kyawawawawawa, I suppose—?!”

There was a ferocious scream, and two figures were thrown into the air. A large figure and a small figure were holding hands, sharing each others’ fate. Some people would see this as a friendly relationship, but that was not the right description for this situation. Because, a lapse in judgment would lead to the same end for both of them.

??? & ???: ““Ahhhphew.””

They spilled that out, turned their eyes, and rolled on the ground, knocking them out with a “Phew.” The boy and the young girl, who had no energy to fight back— were completely taken care of as a set. A shadow suddenly appeared beside them without making a sound.

???: “—Unfortunately, there is no room for talk at all. Child’s play.”

Yes, it was the calm tone of voice that mercilessly commented on the two collapsed people. The owner of the voice tone was also a person with a neutral appearance who did not betray the impression of the tone of voice.

His dark blue hair was carefully styled, and his sharp, intelligent eyes were adorned with a monocle, an intellectual item. His tall, slender body was kept in a breathtakingly beautiful posture, embodying a kind of perfection.

This impression was accentuated by his cool, sweat-free profile. This was especially true when you viewed the out-of-breath, sweaty boy and girl —Subaru, and Beatrice, at his feet. The two of them sat up weakly on their knees and looked down at each other.

Subaru: “Huff, huff, I, I can’t talk back.”

Beatrice: “Betty, is the Great Spirit Beatrice, and you call it child’s play, in fact… You’ll be howling in no time, I suppose…”

???: “Even your arguments against me are not unified. You can not possibly achieve your goal with that. Disappointment.”

Shaking their heads loosely, Subaru and Beatrice sagged at the words of the man who was the incarnation of serenity.

Subaru could not even talk back. At least, not in this state of mind.

It was Subaru and Beatrice who asked for training. But honestly speaking, they thought they could do a little better. Their hubris was shattered, and they felt bad about it.

But—

???: “Are we done here? Resignation.”

Subaru: “—Hk. Wait, there’s more!”

Beatrice: “If you think this is where it ends, you’re wrong, in fact!”

At the question of resignation, Subaru and Beatrice shouted at the same time.

Unlike the previous exchange, the only thing they shared in common was a sense of defeat, and upon hearing this, the person with the monocle —Clind, nodded his head with a slight narrowing of his eyes.

Clind: “Splendid, So, again, please. Guidance.”

Subaru: “Your carelessness will be the death of you, Clind-san! Let’s do this, Beako!”

Beatrice: “Of course! Betty will let him have it, I suppose!”

Subaru and Beatrice, who had gotten up and laughed at their bad impressions of each other, jumped at Clind, who was relaxed and ready to give them a shot.

Clind: “—Ill-prepared.”

Subaru & Beatrice: ““Ahhhphew.””

However, the unimaginative attack was easily seen through, and the two bodies flew through the air again.

Subaru: “Ahh! We’re both down again…”

Subaru & Beatrice: “Unyaaah—?!”

Blinking her eyes at the sight of Subaru and Beatrice being blown away while screaming, Emilia, waving her hands up and down, was both happy and sad.

It had been about ten minutes since this practice started, but Emilia already lost count of the number of times Subaru and Beatrice had tasted the ground with both hands. From the looks of it, Clind was doing a good job of rolling them around, but Emilia was on the edge of her seat, watching to make sure they didn’t get hurt.

???: “Emily, the change will not come so quickly. It is all about daily accumulation… etiquette, and study, is it not?”

Emilia: “Anne…”

It was a young girl with a prim face who advised Emilia to do so in response to her reaction.

When she heard the words from a girl roughly ten years younger than herself, Emilia choked up a little and then slumped her shoulders.

Emilia couldn’t argue with that. She knew she was right.

Emilia: “But I do get worried… I think it can’t be helped when you try so hard.”

Anne: “That is Emily’s virtue. But it is a groundless fear. Do you not think so, too, Frederica?”

Frederica: “—Yes, you are right, Annerose-sama.”

The one who responded to the girl’s question was Frederica —an elegant maid with long golden hair, beautiful emerald-green eyes, and strikingly good looks.

Accompanying Emilia to serve the tea party, she prepared the tea and turned her gaze to the garden beyond the balcony. That was where the practicing Subaru and Beatrice had been dominating the conversation for a while now.

However, Emilia tilted her head at the attitude of the girl and Frederica, who seemed to understand each other.

Emilia: “Does that mean I’m worrying too much?”

Frederica: “Yes. But I think that can not be helped. Emilia-sama has only had dealings with Clind for a few days after the misunderstanding.”

Emilia: “It was a misunderstanding at that time… I made a reaaally embarrassing mistake…”

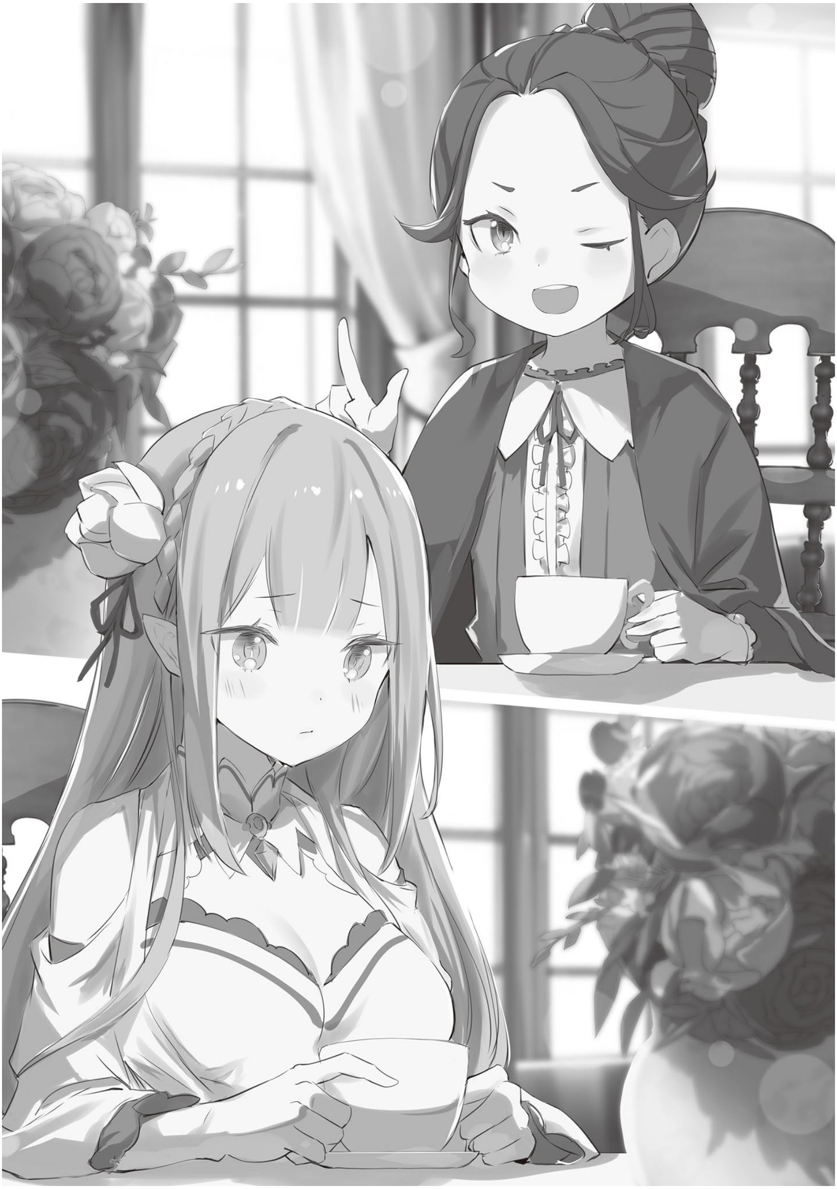
The topic of discussion was Emilia’s memories of unforgettable failures and experiences.

When she was still living with Puck in the Great Elior Forest, Roswaal arrived to tell her about the upcoming Royal Selection and that she was a candidate. After listening to him, Emilia decided to take part in the Royal Selection in order to free the people of the frozen forest and village.

Emilia left the forest with this resolve, but due to a slight misunderstanding, she ended up staying at the mansion of Roswaal’s relative Annerose for a while instead of Roswaal’s mansion.

And also—

Emilia: “I know I was being reaaally rude, even though I wasn’t a real maid, I dressed up like one and did a maid’s job.”



Frederica: “Not at all, Emilia-sama. I was not able to tell you at the time because of my position and responsibilities, but it suited you so well… that it would be wonderful to see again.”

Emilia: “Really? When you say that, I feel relieved. That’s right, the last time I talked to Subaru about it, he said he wanted to see me in a maid’s outfit…”

Annerose: “—Please refrain from showing that to Natsuki Subaru. He will take advantage of the situation.”

Frederica’s words, which would wipe away her past mistakes, were, however, interrupted by Annerose Miload, the girl who shared the memory of the incident.

Annerose smiled at the puzzled Emilia, asking, “Is that satisfactory?”.

Annerose: “It is true that you and Natsuki Subaru are Master and Knight… but that is exactly why you have to have very clear boundaries between you, Emily. You easily cause misunderstandings, so we do not want Natsuki Subaru to have any unnecessary expectations.”

Frederica: “Annerose-sama, since this is a relationship between Emilia-sama and Subaru-sama, it would be best if we did not interfere too much…”

Annerose: “Please refrain, Frederica. It is a lady’s consideration not to mislead men.”

Frederica’s eyebrows lowered in a troubled manner as Annerose gave her a sharp rebuke.

However, there was no doubt that Annerose was saying this because she was being considerate of Emilia. Everyone in the mansion also told her to think seriously about her master-servant relationship with Subaru.

For that reason, she recently had been trying to restrain herself from going around boasting “Hey, that’s my knight!” to everyone she met. In truth, she had really wanted to do so, but.

Emilia: “Besides, Anne is right. I think that I also need to reflect on the fact that I tend to mislead the people around me. I suppose that’s why I ended up becoming a maid.”

Annerose: “No, that incident was my family’s fault. For me, it was the beginning of my meeting you, Emily, and having this relationship. It was the very important first act of our story.”

Emilia: “Anne…”

Annerose: “I can still remember it. You gave me that beautiful snowy scene as a gift to say goodbye to me…”

The young girl closed her eyes and talked as if enraptured by her speech.

In contrast to Annerose, Emilia, however, lowered her eyebrows apologetically.

Emilia: “I’m sorry, Anne. It was Puck who did it, but now he’s gone to sleep for a reaaally long time, so I can’t show you the same thing.”

Annerose: “I did not mean to pressure you!”

Emilia: “Is that right?”

Emilia’s eyes widened when it was pointed out that the apology she had felt was misplaced.

Annerose, who put her hand to her forehead and said “Good grief, Emily…” but it seemed to Emilia like she was a very elegant lady, despite her young appearance.

If you did not compare their appearances, it was difficult to tell which one was older than the other.

Of course, there was a difference in the way Annerose, who had survived the swirling aristocracy at the age of nine, and Emilia, who had spent her life leisurely in a forest with little change, had been polished.

In any case—

Frederica: “I am sure the Master thinks it is a good opportunity for you to learn about these things as well.”

Frederica exhaled as she looked at the two girls, sensing her Master’s intentions.

Frederica’s master, a man of many wiles, liked to use roundabout and distorted expressions and instructions. She guessed this was just another one of his mischievous tricks.

Even so, for better or worse, Frederica had such a strong trust in him that she knew he was making plans that would lead to proper results.

Subaru & Beatrice: “Unyaaah—?!”

Emilia: “Ahh! They got hit again…!”

With a flashy sound, Subaru and Beatrice shot up into the air again, and Emilia panicked as she watched them writhe in pain.

Frederica wondered how many times she would see this scene during their “lessons away from home” and vaguely thought about the blue sky.

2

—This was about a month after the incident at the Sanctuary was resolved.

???: “—Le-veil up?”

???: “Yeah! I think that’s what we need!”

And to Emilia’s wondering face, Subaru held out his hands and explained forcefully.

The location was the office on the top floor of the new Roswaal Mansion, replacing the burned-down Roswaal Mansion. There, Subaru strongly emphasized the need for training program for the future.

Subaru: "It's been fierce battle after fierce battle…! I know it's depressing for me to say it myself, but you can feel the trouble coming and the level of enemies steadily rising."

???: "Of course, I had devised some creative adjustments to make that haaappen~."

Subaru: "You're making me feel worse than I already am! You should be sorry!"

The one who shrugged his shoulders when he was yelled at like that was Roswaal, whose remorse was hidden behind his makeup.

In fact, on the day that Subaru was summoned to this other world, Roswaal, who seemed to have been planning for the hardship that befell Emilia in the Royal Capital, admitted his mistake and apologized, but even now, Subaru could not be too careful.

If anything, Subaru even felt that the maliciousness of his antics seemed to be increasing every day.

However—

Emilia: "Roswaal, don't tease Subaru like that. If you do, we won't know if we can trust you, right?"

???: "Betty agrees, I suppose. It is, however, painful to see you being scolded head-on by the half-devil…ahem, Emilia like this, in fact. It serves him right, I suppose."

Roswaal: "Grr."

The two people who could silence Roswaal were on a roll. They were Emilia, who preached remorse with pure sincerity, and Beatrice, who put on the face of an absolute ally by Subaru's side.

Roswaal seemed vulnerable to Emilia, who had grown up because of the Sanctuary and begun walking the path of the ultimate beautiful girl, and Beatrice, who had become active after leaving the Forbidden Library. Even now, they seemed to be Roswaal's natural enemies. Roswaal was able to say something back to Subaru in a relaxed manner, but he only clammed up at the two girls' words.

Anyway—

Subaru: "Roswaal's shenanigans aside, I'm serious about my proposal. It's imperative that we level up to counter future threats!"

???: "Does that mean you want to hone your skills and master your craft?"

Subaru: "Yes, that! That's what I'm talking about, Frederica!"

When his point finally got across, Subaru motioned to Frederica, the last to gather in the office, for a high five. She raised her hand lightly and responded with a wry smile, and she was kind. The ultimate maid.

Subaru: "No, I want to give the title of Supreme maid to Rem, so, super excellent… that sounds a bit off! How about something like Finest Maid?"

Frederica: "You are too kind to give me such a kind assessment. I will humbly accept your kind offer."

Subaru was left hanging when Frederica, while putting her hand to her mouth and smiling, elegantly avoided him.

Despite the light-hearted banter that went on in the background, Subaru proposed it with serious and earnest intent. Of course, at the root of it all was the unchanging truth that boys want to be strong.

Subaru: "I've officially become Emilia-tan's knight, and I'm a Spiritual Arts User in a loving contract with Beako. It's about time I got a grip on my mind and body!"

Emilia: "But Subaru works hard every day on special training in the courtyard. And look, you and Garfiel always get along well, right?"

Subaru: “It’s super lovely to see the world is so kind in Emilia-tan’s eyes, but the reality of that training scene is not that harmonious.”

Emilia’s expression was warm and soft, but the reality was very different.

As she had said. Since moving to the new mansion, Subaru had hoped to solicit training from Garfiel —a new fighter in the camp, in order to level up his skills.

The new face in the camp was a fighter with a hand-to-hand fighting style, so it was a long-awaited presence for the Emilia Camp, which had many magic users. Subaru, who was neither good at magic nor martial arts, thought they seemed to be the perfect person to ask for lessons.

Subaru: “But when we started training together, the material was so different that I couldn’t handle it… and on top of that, he overestimates me like crazy.”

Beatrice: “Betty didn’t see it firsthand, but she heard that Subaru defeated him with that ground dragon, in fact. That was a big deal, I suppose.”

Subaru: “We did, but it took four of us to beat him…”

To be precise, it was correct to say that in addition to the continuous battle between Garfiel, Otto, and Ram, Subaru had been cut down, and Patrasche had put the finishing touches on the fight. Simply connecting this to Subaru’s victory was a bad way of putting it, even before Garfiel turned out to be fourteen years old.

Subaru: “If we went head-to-head, I couldn’t do anything about it. He should know that, but he’s not very good at holding back…”

Roswaal: “Maybe he’s still upset about losing in the Sanctuary and wants to use this training as an excuse to kill youuu~.”

Subaru: “If that smile had any truth behind it, I’d lose faith in humanity!”

Subaru could not continue the conversation if he were teased every time. While having Beatrice glare at Roswaal with a “garururu”, Subaru looked at Frederica, and,

Subaru: “That’s why I want to take care of the situation. For example, have Frederica tell Garfiel to go easy on… Frederica?”

Frederica: “…”

Subaru: “What’s wrong, Frederica? I’m not sure what it is, but your face is red all the way up to your ears.”

Frederica’s face was red as she remained silent in front of Subaru, who asked for her help.

When Subaru and Emilia were worried about her face, which had turned red up to her ears, Frederica was the one who was worried. She shook her head, letting a weak “No, no…” escape.

Frederica: “You see, Garf’s poor technique is… possibly my fault.”

Subaru: “Oh, why? As a boy, did you beat his soul down from childhood to the point where he has to stand up to anyone he comes across with his full strength?”

Frederica: “Not really, but… When we were young, there were no other children in the Sanctuary other than Garf and I.”

Subaru: “Because no one else was there?”

Frederica: “I am afraid that I have been… I have been playing around.”

Emilia: “I think it’s reaaally great that you’re good friends, so what’s the problem?”

Frederica: “No, I mean…”

Unable to understand Frederica’s sense of embarrassment, Emilia innocently asked back. Subaru also roughly grasped the situation from Frederica’s rough appearance.

Although Frederica and Garfiel were siblings, there was an age difference of six or seven years between them. Whatever the case may be today, the impact of the age difference in childhood was significant, even if they were a boy and girl.

Subaru: “It’s the difference between first and seventh graders…”

Moreover, considering the number of years Frederica had been away from the Sanctuary, she would have been younger than a first grader when she played with Garfiel.

The influence of the original experience is immeasurable. Otherwise, there would be no proverb like “A tiger can’t change his stripes.”.

Subaru: “In other words, Garfiel is in such a state because of his unrestrained sister’s influence.”

Frederica: “Th-he way you said that! The way you say that, it was malicious! Even if it is true that I am an influence, I will insist it was!”

However, even if the jury acknowledged the validity of Frederica’s claim, it would not change the troubling reality of the situation.

In any case, the balance of power was too great for Garfiel to compete with Subaru’s training. Garfiel could heal some injuries with his magic, but there was a limit.

Subaru: “I’m not going to let Otto teach me how to fight off thugs. But my pride won’t allow me to let Otto teach me how to fight off thugs the Suwen way…!”

Emilia: “Oh, you’re being so selfish. Otto-kun seems to be a good teacher.”

Subaru: “I know, but! But even if they taught me, the chance of me being able to use it would be too limited, and I wouldn’t be able to handle it!”

In addition, the Suwen style of fighting off thugs passed down in Otto’s family had already proven to be ineffective against Garfiel.

So, it was far from the technique Subaru is looking for. What Subaru needed was a way to counter the threats that would continue to stand in his way —ideally, a Reinhard-like power that could defeat any enemy.

Subaru: “I know that’s a tall order, so I’d at least like to have a little trick to buy some time to stall them until Garfiel can come running.”

Beatrice: “That’s another greed-free story, in fact.”

Roswaal: “I think it’s an appropriate idea, though, that you’re in your eleeement~.”

Beatrice and Roswaal made their own comments after hearing what Subaru wanted there. Meanwhile, during the same conversation, Emilia pondered with a, “Hmm…”,

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, what do you object to?”

Emilia: “No, it’s not like that. It’s just that if Subaru is in danger, I’ll protect him, and I want him to be able to rely on me, too.”

Subaru: “Well, basically, the way the situation was set up earlier, I was under the impression that I was fighting with Emilia-tan behind me, protecting her from a surprise enemy…”

In the first place, the idea for this case came from Subaru’s official appointment as Emilia’s knight. If a decision relied on Emilia’s power, it would all be for nothing.

Subaru: “Anyway! I’m a boy who wants to be strong enough to protect Emilia-tan! And now that I’ve made a contract with Beako, I want new techniques or even a second form!”

Beatrice: “Subaru can’t help making so much noise, I suppose. If you really want the second form, you can carry Betty on your shoulders, in fact.”

Subaru: “It’s not that kind of extended children’s game!”

While arguing back, Subaru picked up Beatrice by the shoulders and swung the little girl around with a joyful “Kyaa!”; at the sight of Subaru and Beatrice, Roswaal clapped his hands and said, “Okay”,

Roswaal: “I understand what you want, Subaru-kun. I don’t doubt your feeeelings∼.”

Subaru: “Does that mean you have a guess who I am training with?”

Roswaal: “That’s right. Why don’t you ask Ram to do it for you?”

Subaru: “It’s not for nothing, but I wonder if she’ll teach me right…”

Subaru had a great deal of trust in Ram, both in terms of ability and relationship, but at the same time, he did not feel that Ram was suited to the role of a mentor. There was even a fear that she would use her position to hurt Subaru under false pretenses.

If he was not careful, he could end up with nothing to show for it, except for aching muscles and a broken body, unlike Garfiel, where he could learn something while getting hurt.

Besides, this was just Subaru’s selfishness, but—

Subaru: “I don’t want Ram to have to deal with me for a while. I want her to stay with Rem.”

Emilia: “Subaru…”

After returning from the Sanctuary, the sisters Ram and Rem were finally able to see each other, but Ram still had not regained the memory of her other precious half.

So, their relationship was still in the process of being rebuilt, with Ram coming to terms with it.

Roswaal: “I see, I see, that’s auspicious. But if that’s the case, I’m in a bit of a tight spooot∼. I wonder if anyone else in our camp could teach Subaru-kun a lesson…”

Emilia: “Ah, you want me to try it? I’m a little bit strong these days, so it might be dangerous, but I'll do my best to go easy on you."

Subaru: "So if I'm bludgeoned to death or seriously injured by Emilia-tan's slender arms, it's going to look way too bad on the outside…"

Emilia made a suggestion on behalf of Roswaal, who was troubled by the idea. However, Subaru could be bludgeoned to death by her slender arms, and this was also a matter of Subaru's pride.

As someone who wanted to become stronger for Emilia, it felt strange to be the one asking for lessons from her.

Just as Subaru was worrying about the contradiction—

Subaru: ""Someday, become strong enough to defeat me!"— I'm definitely not against that style of heroine with a fighting student-teacher relationship, but I always want to look cool in front of Emilia-tan!"

Emilia: "Even without doing that, I always think Subaru looks cool…"

Subaru: "Gyaaaahhh! The love is killing me!"

And just when Subaru was torn between two opposing forces by Emilia, who had no ill intentions or ulterior motives.

Frederica: "—Master, you have already made up your mind, correct? Please do not be mean and make trouble for Subaru-sama and Beatrice-sama."

So said Frederica, her gaze sharpened, as she glared at Roswaal's side.

"Huh?" Subaru said, and Emilia and Subaru's eyes widened. Roswaal closed one eye and narrowed his blue eye mischievously as he muttered, "Did they figure it out?".

Subaru: "They figured it out? Oi oi, come on, you've got to be kidding me. This is serious."

Beatrice: “Subaru, there’s no point in saying it, I suppose. This man has always been able to keep himself youthful by messing with others in this way, in fact. He is such a creature, I suppose.”

Emilia: “Well, is that so? Then, the usual shenanigans…”

Subaru: “Emilia-tan believes!”

Beatrice’s point of view and Emilia’s point of view were their own honest, believable opinions. Both of them were very cute, so Subaru was determined to watch over them without scolding them.

Anyway, Roswaal interrupted with a single cough from that point of view,

Roswaal: “As for Subaru-kun’s request earlier, as Frederica said, I have an idea. I know a place like a vocational training center that can come in handy in times like this.”

Subaru: “Yo-You have such a convenient place? Maybe like a temple for job changes?”

Frederica: “—? I do not know much about this “temple for job changes,” but Subaru-sama was at this place until a few days ago.”

Subaru: “A place I had been until recently…”

It had been said that the one that reached a certain level was not a temple where jobs could be changed, but a place in recent memory, and Subaru immediately opened his mouth with an “Ah”.

It was the place where the people who escaped from the Sanctuary, Subaru, and the others who lost their mansion temporarily took refuge before moving their home base to the new Roswaal Mansion —

Emilia: “Anne’s house? Then his training partner is…”

Subaru: “That little girl is training with me…? You can’t simply accept that a little girl is a good training partner, no matter how much you want to… Ow, ouch, ouch.”

Emilia: “Of course not. It’s Clind-san, Clind-san.”

Subaru’s ears were tugged by Emilia, who gave him a look that meant stop.

Not so much chastisement as the expected scolding, Subaru nodded his head and said, “Ahh.”,

Subaru: “Clind-san, huh? No, I talked to him a little bit while he was taking care of me at Annerose-chan’s place, but I don’t know him that well.”

Roswaal: “Clind was originally a servant who has been with me for a long tiiime~. Well, Frederica knows more about the details than I do. Isn’t that right?”

Frederica: “Huh? Eh, eh, yes, I guess. Reluctantly so.”

Frederica nodded her head, slightly upset, as she was forced to talk. While wondering about this reaction, Subaru remembered the appearance of a beautiful, thin-faced man.

Subaru: “But still, a vocational training center. A setting like… where the proper servant is the one who knows all things, is really cool, like a manga or video game.”

Emilia: “I’m sorry, I don’t understand what you’re saying. But… it’s true that Clind-san is a good teacher. He has been a great help to me.”

Subaru: “Really, Emilia was taken care of by him… when? Why?”

Emilia’s words assured him of Clind’s abilities, but Subaru wondered if there had been any contact between the two of them during their recent stay that would have produced such a guarantee.

Emilia shook her head and said, “No, it’s not that”,

Emilia: “In fact, before I came to the previous mansion, I was mistaken for a maid for a few days, and during that time, Clind-san and Frederica taught me to be a maid.”

Subaru: “…Emilia-tan was a maid? In a maid’s outfit?”

Emilia: “Yes, I was. I know it was short-lived, but I did my best.”

Emilia, proudly beaming, slowly chewed on her words; Subaru understood the situation and then fell to his knees in a heap.

Subaru: “Why, why wasn’t I there, ahhh—!!”

Emilia: “Eh? What’s wrong, Subaru?! You look like you’re about to cry…”

Subaru: “I’m disqualified as a knight for missing out on Emilia-tan’s maid outfit…”

Emilia: “What does that have to do with anything?!”

Emilia’s eyes turned into a blank stare as Subaru burst into tears and sobbed.

But it was not a joke. Subaru regretted that he had not been there. Emilia’s maid’s uniform must have been as beautiful as a goddess.

Subaru: “That’s right! You can still wear it…”

Emilia: “Well, no, that’s not true. A maid’s outfit is a maid’s work uniform, so I can’t wear it since I am not a maid.”

Subaru: “Guaaah—”

There was a curt reply, and once again, Subaru slumped.

Emilia is troubled by Subaru’s overreaction, but Beatrice and the others could only sigh. This was a Royal Selection Candidate, and her knight was at the center of the camp.

Roswaal: “It’s really worth your support. Don’t you think sooo~?”

Frederica: “Unlike the… Master, I would like to realize it in a different way.”

Frederica replied with a bitter smile to Roswaal’s chuckling gaze.

Aside from these two, Beatrice crouched down next to Subaru, who was slumped over.

Beatrice: “Look, don’t dwell on it forever, I suppose. If you want to see a maid’s outfit, I suppose. I-It can’t be helped; Betty can wear it for you, in fact.”

Subaru: “Ugh, Beako… I’m glad you feel that way, but that’s not the same thing as this.”

Beatrice: “How dare you, I suppose!”

Beatrice was outraged that her attempts to comfort him had been so disrespected.

Regardless, you could say that the direction of the story had came together.

Roswaal: “Subaru-kun’s level up… was it? I’ll leave that to Clind. By the way, Emilia-sama, would you like to accompany him to the Miload family?”

Emilia: “Me too?”

Roswaal: “Yes. Subaru-kun has officially been named a knight. I think it is necessary for you to learn how to act as a nobleman as well.”

Emilia nodded, muttering the unfamiliar word “nobleman” as if ruminating on it.

Emilia: “All right. Do you want me to learn from Clind-san, too?”

Roswaal: “Of course, it would be possible to be educated by Clind, but it would be more in Emilia-sama’s nature to learn by seeing the real thing. It’s Annerose.”

Emilia: “Wow, from Anne?”

Roswaal: “I’m sure she’d love to meet you, Emilia-sama. A way to earn some poooints~… oops, for the sake of a good relationship between the two of you, surely.”

Roswaal suggested, with a deliberate rephrasing. Emilia's eyes lit up at the thought, and she clasped her hands in front of her chest and smiled happily.

In the background, Subaru and Beatrice continued their skirmish, and the impression of a disorganized pair could not be shaken—

Roswaal: "I expect you can handle the reins theeere~."

Frederica: "Me?"

Roswaal: "You are to accompany them to the Miload residence. You're the right person for the job, aren't you?"

Frederica's master closed one eye and looked at her with his blue eye again. She sighed at Roswaal's mischievous attitude, and then Frederica looked at Subaru and the three of them again.

The burden was a little too heavy for her, and she bowed, not letting her inner thoughts show.

3

—And that was how Subaru and the others came to the Miload mansion.

As it was, Garfiel was disqualified from being Subaru's training partner and was somewhat depressed. Otto, who was forced to help Roswaal with his extremely busy paperwork, was not along for the journey to the Miload mansion.

Subaru: "I've heard that you've had a lot of training too. The next time we meet, we'll both have leveled up so much that we won't recognize each other. —Two years from now, in the Royal Capital of Lugunica!"

Otto: "Are you planning to train until right before the Royal Selection is over?"

Subaru added that there was that exchange of words before they left.

Anyway—

Subaru: “That’s why I need you to give me… no, me and Beako, some practice.”

Beatrice: “What? Betty, too, I suppose?”

Subaru: “That’s because Beako and I are one and the same. We’ll be together in sickness and health, in the rain or shine, in the wind, and in death!”

Beatrice: “That is not even funny, in fact!”

As soon as they arrived, without a moment to breathe a sigh of relief, Subaru earnestly requested Clind to train him.

Frederica, who accompanied him, was impressed by his forward attitude. At the very least, there was no lie in Subaru’s intention to become stronger.

Frederica: “I do not know what the word “le-veil up” means, but…”

Emilia: “Oh, Frederica? Hehe, don’t worry. Ram says it’s called “Subaru-speak”.”

Frederica: “Subaru-sama-speak…”

While smiling at the boastful Emilia for some reason, Frederica also admired her protegee Ram’s sense of style, thinking that Subaru-speak was a straightforward and clear expression.

Speaking of protegees, Frederica was worried that Petra, whom she left at the mansion, being annoyed with Ram.

Petra, a quick learner and a good judge of character, was on the verge of graduating from her apprenticeship as a maid after just a month or so, but this was the first time she had ever left Frederica’s care in earnest.

Frederica: “If I may say so, I agree with Subaru-sama regarding Ram’s leadership ability.”

Emilia: "—? Frederica, are you worried about Petra-chan by any chance?"

Frederica: "Yes, I am sorry. I can not help but feel uneasy, but I am not sure I am comfortable leaving her alone with Ram to take care of the mansion."

Frederica frowned and expressed her concern. But at Frederica's words, Emilia put her finger to her lips and said,

Emilia: "I don't think you have to worry so much… Ram is mean like that because she chooses her partners like Subaru, Otto-kun, and Garfiel."

Frederica: "…That just makes it sound like the girl hates men."

But in reality, there was no such thing as Ram hating men.

Frederica and Ram had known each other for a long time, but surprisingly, Ram's attitude had not changed at all since before she turned ten. She saw them as equals, regardless of gender.

The trouble with Ram was that she kept them slightly below herself.

Frederica: "In that respect, Petra has the personality to get along with anyone… Indeed, I may have worried too much."

Emilia: "Yeah, I'm sure you're right. I've been worrying about Subaru and the others for a long time, but I wasn't sure I could convince you."

Emilia sticks out her tongue slightly, reflecting on what she said. However, Frederica had secretly bought into Emilia's high self-esteem.

—There was no conceit in Emilia, something that everyone else seemed to have.

There seemed to be a lack of confidence in the past, though after returning from the Sanctuary, humility or even modesty had become a virtue.

On top of that, she was eager to grow. This would be a strong weapon for her in the future as she took on the high bar of the Royal Selection.

However, other candidates for the Royal Selection also possessed that weapon. In some cases, their natural environment allowed them to continue developing it.

It’s just that they were finally on the same stage—

???: “—That is why Uncle sent Emily to my mansion, correct?”

Frederica: “Yes, that is correct, Annerose-sama.”

So said Annerose, having read Frederica’s mind and tilted her cup.

Still very young, less than ten years old, the head of the Miload family had an intelligence and judgment disproportionate to her pretty appearance. This was because her upbringing did not allow her to be a mere little girl.

To be honest, Frederica once took pity on her for that. However, now that Frederica saw her sitting around a tea party with Emilia, she thought it was a sense of profaneness.

Or maybe—

Frederica: “—Did the Master know that Annerose-sama would end up like this?”

Roswaal L. Mathers, was a man of all plots and schemes.

He was a schemer who used the domain and people he was obligated to protect, and the Sanctuary and its inhabitants that he had been protecting for generations, as pawns in his plot, and he admitted his defeat to Subaru and Emilia and apologized for his past actions and made a promise not to ever repeat them.

But Frederica didn’t believe that Roswaal had been so resigned that he was willing to give up everything he’d built up over the years.

Anyone who truly wanted to achieve something was unlikely to give up.

Frederica believed that insatiable persistence and a willingness to work hard to make one’s desires come true were the most important qualities needed to make it happen.

In this respect, was there really anything that could compare to Roswaal?

If Roswaal was willing to make every effort to achieve his goal, he might even incorporate the existence of the girl, Annerose, into his plan.

She was the daughter of a family member and a friend of Frederica, who had been her guardian since she was born. She thought she would be able to handle such an existence.

Subaru & Beatrice: “Unyaaah?!”

Frederica: “—Hk.”

Perhaps because she was so lost in thought, Frederica’s shoulders jumped at the renewed scream.

If you looked at it, in the garden of the Miload mansion, Subaru and Beatrice had been defeated by Clind for the twentieth time in total.

Frederica liked to say that they were doing a great job, but she did not think they were going to get much credit from Clind if they just kept plugging away in the dark. But that did not mean he would not politely explain everything. —Clind was that kind of man.

Emilia: “Oh, again! They’re both lucky they didn’t get hurt, though.”

Annerose: “Emily, it is not that. It is not because they are lucky that Subaru and Beatrice are not injured. It is because of Clind.”

Emilia: “Huh, Clind-san?”

Emilia, who was worried about the upturned pair, widened her eyes at Annerose’s explanation.

It must have been hard to believe. However, Clind, the versatilel butler, was capable of doing just that.

To not let the challenger get injured, and allowing them to challenge him as many times as they could without breaking down.

He had decided that this was the role he was expected to play, and so he did that.

Frederica: “He is the kind of training partner Subaru-sama and Beatrice-sama need that Garf can not make up for.”

Emilia: “Clind-san, is such a remarkable person…”

Emilia exhaled in admiration, and Frederica narrowed her eyes at her surprise.

In terms of trust, Ram was the one that Roswaal relied on the most. Having said that, this perception recently changed, and there had been times when Roswaal faltered in the face of Ram’s aggression, but Ram’s presence was still unshakable in terms of “trust”.

However, when it came to being a right-hand man in terms of ability, that would definitely be Clind.

He had been with Roswaal for a long time and was an versatile family butler who was heavily used in all situations. In the past, Frederica had heard that he and Roswaal were not a master and servant but in a contractual relationship.

Frederica had a memory of a time from her childhood when she used to ask him about every little thing to gain his attention as he worked tirelessly for Roswaal.

Frederica: “Shame… My memory of shame…”

Emilia: “What’s wrong, Frederica? Your face looks reaaally red.”

Annerose: “You can leave her alone, Emily. It happens sometimes. Frederica has a very difficult personality.”

Putting her hand on her burning cheek, Frederica confronted her shame.

While Frederica was distracted, Annerose turned to Emilia and said, “Now then”,

Annerose: “I have a letter from Uncle to teach Emily how to behave as a nobleman. So, for a few days, you will accompany me to the nobility’s meetings and soirées. How does that sound?”

Emilia: “Umm, I’m fine with that. But are you okay, Anne? I’m…”

Annerose: “—The Miload family is a branch of the Mathers family. Of course, there is no difference in policy between Uncle and me. I am also supporting Emily in the Royal Selection.”

After saying that, Annerose continued with the word “However”,

Annerose: “I would have supported Emily even without Uncle’s support…”

Emilia: “Thank you… Anne, But make sure you listen to what the other candidates have to say. It’s reaaally important, so don’t just take sides just because I’m your friend.”

Annerose: “Is this not usually the part where an emotional Emily hugs me?”

Frederica thought she should say something nice, but Annerose would be upset if she was told so directly.

She was completely knocked off the ladder. Emilia would not have such bad intentions. It was a sign of her good nature to make others think it over properly, even if it did not benefit her.

Emilia: “Hehe, sorry. But if Anne says so, I’ll take the opportunity to study properly.”

Annerose: “Hm… yes, that is better. I will tell you, I do not want you to be the fluffy, fluffy Emily you have always been in social situations. You need to look sharp.”

Emilia: “Sharp… I’ll do my best! Sharp!”

Emilia’s cheeks stiffened just a little bit, as if she was putting more effort into her facial muscles. Perhaps it was her own form of sharpness. It looked like she had a long way to go.

However, Annerose put her hand on her cheek at Emilia’s healthy appearance and said, “Emily is so hardworking and cute…”,

And with that, the policies of Emilia and Annerose were established —

Annerose: “—It is about time there was some movement over there.”

Annerose, who had tightened her blurry expression and regained her sense of leadership, muttered. When Emilia twisted her head, she said, “Huh?”.

Subaru: “Hey, Beako! You’ve got to do better than that! We’re always getting beat up!”

Beatrice: “It’s you, Subaru, who should trust Betty’s judgment, in fact! Subaru is an amateur at fighting, so Betty’s judgment is more accurate, I suppose!”

Subaru: “Don’t be ridiculous! Don’t act like you’re a veteran after being cooped up for four hundred years!”

Beatrice: “How, how, how dare you say that, in fact…! Subaru, quit messing around, I suppose!”

In the middle of the garden, Subaru and Beatrice, who had fallen to the ground on their butts, started arguing.

They seemed to be having a heated discussion and clashed with each other. As it was, the two of them gradually heated up and began to blame each other for their failure.

If that happened, there was only one place they would end up.

Beatrice: “Break up! Break up, in fact! Betty made a big mistake, I suppose!”

Subaru: “You…! Okay, okay! I don’t even want to understand if that’s what you’re thinking! Beako’s an idiot! You’re so stubborn! I won’t forgive you until you apologize!”

Beatrice: “That’s Betty’s line, in fact! Subaru, for your own sake, don’t think you’ll be comforted when you cry, I suppose!”

Subaru: “Right back at you!”

As their argument exploded, Subaru and Beatrice let go of each other’s hands.

They turned away and started going in different directions. Leaving Clind behind In the middle of the garden to deal with the two of them.

Emilia: “Awful… The two of them got into a fight…”

Frederica: “It was bound to happen sooner or later with that partnership. It was a cute fight, though.”

Emilia: “What are you saying? There’s nothing cute or scary about a fight. They have to hurry up and make up…”

Frederica: “—Emilia-sama.”

Emilia was flustered by the breakdown between Subaru and Beatrice, with an expression Frederica never expected. Gently holding Emilia by the shoulders as she tried to stand up, Frederica shook her head.

Frederica understood Emilia’s feelings, but this was not her place. This was a trial that Subaru and Beatrice would need to overcome.

Emilia: “Frederica, why?”

Frederica: “Subaru-sama and Beatrice-sama have only just entered into a contractual relationship… they are still getting to know each other. Emilia-sama must not intervene in what happens in such a situation. I am sure you will be able to understand that they need to figure it out.”

Emilia: “But, is that not enough?”

Annerose: “—What if they have a disagreement when Emily is not around?”

Emilia looked back at Annerose, her amethyst eyes flickering. Catching her gaze directly, Annerose gestured toward Subaru and Beatrice, who had walked off.

Annerose: “The two of them are destined to spend the rest of their lives together, yes? No matter how close two people are to each other, there are always going to be differences of opinion. But Emily can not be the one to mediate every conflict, can you?”

Emilia: “…So, I shouldn’t help them make up?”

Annerose: “At least this time, I think. Emily’s presence seems too much for Natsuki Subaru. So—”

And then, Annerose cut her words short and turned her narrowed eyes to Frederica. Emilia, who followed her gaze and frowned with a, “Huh?”.

However, Frederica knew her role and quietly bowed by the waist.

Frederica: “Sorry to be so presumptuous, but I am going to take your place, Emilia-sama. Just a little help, I will gather their opinions.”

Emilia: “Yes, if Frederica says so…Then we’re in good hands.”

Frederica: “…”

Emilia: “About Subaru and Beatrice, please. They’re both reaaally great and they both love each other, but they are just not on the same page.”

Frederica was more surprised than disappointed when she was so easily entrusted. Emilia, however, did not notice Frederica’s surprise and patted her chest in relief.

Emilia seriously believed that Frederica would be fine.

Annerose: “We must live up to Emily’s expectations, correct?”

Frederica: “…You look a lot like the Master when you look like that.”

Annerose smiled wickedly at Frederica, sensing her hesitation. As a servant, Frederica was being very disrespectful to Annerose, as she had spoken to her in return.

It was on point, and Annerose made a heartfelt, sour face of disgust with a “Hm”.

Emilia: “Hehe, that’s weird. Anne and Roswaal don’t look alike at all.”

Annerose: “Em-Emily! Right, right! Yes, of course!”

Emilia: “Hmm, yes… A little bit similar in the eyes, maybe?”

Annerose: “If you are going to comfort me, please make sure you comfort me thoroughly!”

In response to Emilia’s words, which were not meant to be offensive, Annerose’s voice cracked to complain.

Watching the smiling girls interact, Frederica pinched the hem of her skirt and curtseyed.

Frederica: “Then I will fulfill my role.”

4

???: “—Frederica. Restraint.”

Frederica left Emilia and Annerose’s tea party and was about to fulfill her duties when she was stopped by a man who crept up on her without a sound.

A calm, cool, unemotional tone of voice.

Frederica closed her eyes and responded, “What is it?” without looking back.

Frederica: “Now I have to go and talk to the two of them who have gotten upset because of your unrestrained behavior.”

Clind: “I see, that would be helpful. Splendid. However, since when did the maids of the Mathers family change their customs; is it not rude not to look at the face of the person they are talking to? Inquiry.”

Frederica: “—Hk, please do not be so obstinate.”

Frederica was criticized for not turning around, so she turned around and bared her fangs. When she turned around, she saw the face of a man wearing a monocle right in front of her nose, and she recoiled.

Frederica: “Your, your distance is wrong!”

Clind: “My apologies. Unexpected. I forgot how much you had grown. Forgetfulness.”

Frederica: “…Did you mean to be so sarcastic?”

Frederica glared at the man, while she placed a hand on her chest, wondering if he was trying to pick a fight with her.

To her annoyance, such a glare did not affect the composed Clind’s expression. In fact, since the time Frederica first met him, she could hardly remember a time when she had been able to break through his mask of composure.

When she was still a little girl, it seemed that Clind would sometimes smile at her. However, this was due to Clind’s bad habit of admiring little children, and nothing more, nothing less.

In fact, since Frederica has matured into a woman, her relationship with Clind continued to deteriorate. The reason why her heart skipped a beat earlier was due to shock and aversion. Probably.

In response to Frederica’s harsh question, Clind shook his head and quietly said, “No.”.

Clind: “I am sure I do not need to tell you, watching from the sidelines, but the argument between Subaru-sama and Beatrice-sama was a spur-of-the-moment affair. Instantaneous.”

Frederica: “…I understand. To be honest, I was surprised to see how well they get along.”

Clind’s advice was a fact that Frederica had seen every day at the Roswaal Mansion.

Frederica also worked with Ram at the mansion before she was transferred around the time of the Royal Selection. Having rarely seen Beatrice outside of the Forbidden Library, she only ever exchanged the most perfunctory of conversations with her, and kept her distance out of reverence.

Now that she had left the Forbidden Library, she was playing with Subaru like a little child, showing up at every meal, and chatting casually with Frederica. —It was like a miracle.

The relationship that had brought about this miracle must not come to an end.

Clind: “Accordingly, the Master expects you to fulfill the role of a buffer. Request”

Frederica: “Yes, that is why you are accompanying me. It is always the standard procedure for training new employees.”

Frederica shrugged her shoulders and wondered who was in a worse position, him or her.

—A big fight between Subaru and Beatrice, the emergence of such problems was to be expected.

Originally, the Miload household served as a training ground for displaced demi-humans, whom Roswaal would bring in and employ as servants, giving them work and teaching them the proper etiquette.

Naturally, Clind would educate them, but the next highest-ranking servant after Clind, who was the head of the household, would have an equally important role to play. That was Frederica’s role while he was with the Miload family, and she was probably the person Clind worked with the longest.

Clind had an unrelenting outpouring of strict educational policies for new employees. Frederica comforted them, appeased them, and made them face the tasks again with renewed spirit —That was a standard procedure for their interactions.

The fight between Subaru and Beatrice was part of that—

Frederica: "I know what I have to do. …What exactly are you trying to say?"

Frederica questioned Clind, confirming her role without needing to be told again.

He went out of his way to point out the details of her work and ridiculed Frederica's poor performance. —As expected, Clind was not a person who would be so duplicitous.

He was loyal to his work and fulfilled his duties. So, Frederica couldn't blame him.

Clind: "—. I am the one who told the Master to send you over this time. Confession."

Frederica: "…Huh?"

That was why the unexpected comment was a bolt out of the blue for Frederica.

Frederica's eyes widened, and she stared at Clind as he said this. Clind, with his usual expressionless face, narrowed his eyes behind his monocle.

Clind: "The other day, when the Master stayed at our residence, you left immediately to prepare the new mansion. Thanks to that, we were not able to talk properly. Consideration."

Frederica: "You went out of your way to talk to me…?"

With her surprise still intact, Frederica pondered over Clind's true intentions. However, she couldn’t think of anything.

When Frederica’s mind was troubled by this, Clind took a breath and said.

Was—

Clind: “Frederica, I am glad you were able to liberate the Sanctuary. Congratulations.”

Frederica: “—Ah.”

Clind: “I know why you left your home and took my teachings under the Master’s protection. That is why I wanted to tell you properly. Conclusion.”

It was a smile so subtle that only those who were used to seeing his unchanging expression over the years and had closely studied any changes in his expression would notice it.

Frederica: “…”

It was an expression that she had not seen for several years and thought she would never see again.

It was a smile so small that it could only be noticed by those who had once followed Clind’s back, calling him “Nii-sama, Nii-sama.”.

That smile, with her palm on her chest, she once again felt her heart pound—.

Frederica: “—Hk, such an unpleasant man!”

As if to disguise the feelings that arose within her for a moment, Frederica raised her voice.

The softness that had been there disappeared from Clind's expression when he heard this. He sighed deliberately with a "Hmph.",

Clind: "Why can you not even accept my congratulations? Your stubbornness disgusts me and makes my head ache. It makes me want to curse my lack of power to correct the situation. Incompetence."

Frederica: "Yeah, yeah! I know you do! I am sure you must have a lot of headaches seeing me as I am. Hmph! This serves you right!"

Clind: "Ha."

As soon as Frederica snorted and regretted turning her face away like a child, Clind snickered at her.

Her face became hot, but she could not look back with a red face now. With the momentum of turning her face away, Frederica tried to return to her original goal.

In other words, Frederica had to persuade Subaru and Beatrice, which was her original role.

Frederica: "I-I think we are done here! I will be joining the two of them… ah."

However, just as she was about to step away with a long stride, uncharacteristic for an elegant maid, Frederica noticed a hint of a gaze being directed at her and looked up to find,

Subaru: "Ah, ha, ha, hello…"

Beatrice: "That's why Betty said we should try not to get found, in fact…!"

In the corridor connecting the garden and the mansion, Frederica and Clind were being watched from a distance as they argued, and Subaru and Beatrice were leaning against each other with awkward looks on their faces.

Before Frederica knew it, the two of them, who were supposed to have been in a heated fight earlier, were now holding hands.

Frederica: “Su-Subaru-sama, and Beatrice-sama, your hands…”

Subaru: “Hands? Yeah, we made up, you know. I was just a little pissed off, and I said too much earlier… Beako.”

Beatrice: “Well, Subaru apologized to me, so he is forgiven, I suppose. Betty was just starting to think that he wasn’t listening well, in fact.”

The two of them replied, lifting their joined hands in front of the trembling Frederica.

Unlike the previous training sessions for new recruits, the two of them made up easily, and Frederica could only be stunned with an “Is, is that so.”.

Of course, it was a good thing that they had reconciled. The original goal was to improve the relationship without Emilia’s intervention, so that was no problem.

If there was a problem, it was that—

Subaru: “Hey, Frederica… are you and Clind-san on bad terms?”

Beatrice: “Betty and Subaru can talk to him, I suppose. You should compromise, in fact.”

Frederica: “—Hk.”

Sure enough, the subject of their earlier argument was brought up, and Frederica choked up.

There were many things Frederica wanted to say. In the first place, she didn’t want to be told this by the two people who had been fighting just before or take it out on the people who had made this situation happen.

Clind: “Subaru-sama, Beatrice-sama, I am glad to see that you two have reunited your hands. Fortuitous.”

Frederica was at a loss for words as she struggled with her many emotions. Clind, who stepped forward to take her place, praised the two for naturally overcoming their challenges.

When he said that, Subaru and Beatrice both said, “Re-Really?” looking at each other with no ill-will.

Clind: “If the two of you could learn to compromise, things would have been different. Then, you will be able to see the next steps ahead. An amazing rate of growth. Shook.”

Subaru: “Hey, you hear that, Beako? Clind-san is shaking at how much we’ve grown.”

Beatrice: “Hmm, of course, I suppose. With Betty and Subaru, any challenge will fall apart in a flash, in fact. The fear is yet to come, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Aww, that’s some big mouth for someone so tiny!”

The fact that they accepted the obvious flattery without questioning it was proof that they, like Emilia, were good at heart. Despite the unexpected commonality between master and servant, Frederica’s humiliation at being maliciously berated has not been resolved in the slightest.

Anyway—

Clind: “Then let us consider the next step. Do you know my way of overcoming obstacles? Trial and error.”

Subaru: “Oh, that’s the thing. I think it would be better if I could use some tools, too, instead of relying on Beako all the time.”

Beatrice: “Y-You don’t think he can count on Betty alone, in fact…?”

Subaru: “That’s not true! I don’t want to slow you down. I want to help you…!”

Beatrice: “Subaru…”

Beatrice’s eyes sparkled with admiration at Subaru’s determination as he clenched his fists firmly.

It was good that they were getting along, but was it Frederica’s imagination that Beatrice, who used to look so dignified and intelligent, seemed to have lost a lot of her wisdom? Or was it perhaps just her own feelings of helplessness that were making her see things in that way.

Clind: “You want a tool, Not a sword or a bow, but a tool. Novel.”

Subaru: “You can’t expect me to be able to compete with Reinhard and Julius even if I trained hard with a sword now. If that’s the case, it’s better to learn one technique… that will surprise at first sight so that I can handle different situations…”

Clind: “Well, that is an interesting idea. Creative.”

Subaru: “Ha ha… Well, the surprise at first sight is an idea I got from a guy I don’t even like to remember.”

Beatrice: “Whatever the source, it is to Subaru’s credit that he found a way to use it, I suppose. Betty is also proud to be his pa-pa-par-par-part partner, in fact.”

Despite this ongoing drama, Subaru and Beatrice were able to assemble a plan for the future.

With his serious and thoughtful attitude, Clind would probably find the most optimal answer for Subaru and Beatrice. In fact, immediately after, Clind held up a finger, and,

Clind: “I have come up with a few candidates. Let us take them out of our storehouse. Treasured items.”

Subaru: “Oh, really? Well, since you’re here, we’ll go with you.”

Beatrice: “Betty will see if it is worthy of Subaru with my own eyes, I suppose.”

Subaru and Beatrice appeared to be very motivated, and Clind led them as they began to walk away.

The destination was the Miload family’s storehouse, where they had a set of tools to train their servants in martial arts. The idea was to find a weapon suitable for Subaru—

Clind: “Frederica, when you have finished throwing your tantrum, go back to Annerose-sama and Emilia-sama. Hospitality.”

Frederica let out a sigh of annoyance as she watched the detestable man easily divert Subaru and Beatrice’s interest and then disappear from her sight.

The plan was for their “lessons away from home” at the Miload’s residence to last for ten days.

Frederica: “So, Clind and me… for ten days. Is this the Master’s plot, too?”

Did Roswaal think this humiliation and resentment were some plot that would lead to a better future? Frederica was not sure if Roswaal was hoping that she was aware of his intentions and was trying to figure out what was best for her.

If that was the case—

Frederica: “—Very well. If that is what the Master wants, then I will try to break out of my shell and take on the challenge. Yes, Petra and Garf are also doing their best, but it would be shameful if I were to stand with them with no growth.”

With that decision made, Frederica made up her mind.

It would be a big mistake to follow them as if they had the mindset of a bridesmaid, a servant, or even a bystander.

In the Emilia Camp, which was lagging behind the other camps, those that couldn’t move forward couldn’t keep up the fight. What they needed was growth, or—

Frederica: “—A le-veil up, was it.”

When Frederica said the words out loud forcefully, they seemed to give her some kind of energy.

Energized by these words, Frederica began to walk away from the weak, infantile tossing and turning of her mind that she had been doing until just before and to obtain a self that was unfazed by anything.

The Royal Selection had just begun —The Emilia Camp, which was participating in it, had just begun.

As a result of this ten-day lesson, Subaru began to walk the path of an unusual knight with a little girl in one hand and a whip in the other, and Emilia, who participated in many soirées and meetings with Annerose, was recognized not as a “silver-haired half-devil” but as a soirée crasher.

While Frederica, enthusiastic and determined to do her duty, was doing her best, Roswaal sneezed back at the Roswaal Mansion.

Roswaal: “She’s always had a tendency to assume things, doooesn’t~ she?”

However, the pink-haired maid who heard this did not mention it, so it never reached Frederica’s ears.

END

Elegant Lesson After
(Edited Machine Translation)

1

???: “Come to think of it, you’ve known Roswaal for a long time, right, Clind-san? Does that mean you and Beako are also on good terms?”

While undergoing training to level up at the Miload residence, an exhausted and sweaty Subaru casually asked this question to the calm-faced Clind.

While Subaru looked exhausted and groggy, Clind was stylish and had not even broken a sweat.

Clind, who always seemed so calm and collected, slightly raised an eyebrow at Subaru’s question.

As if to see if he had asked something he shouldn’t have, Subaru looked at Beatrice, who was holding his hand and fanning the air with her hand.

However, Beatrice shook her head slowly from side to side at Subaru’s gaze, and said,

Beatrice: “Not particularly, I suppose. Of course, it was known that Roswaal employed a servant named Clind, in fact. But Betty hardly had any contact with him, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Really? That’s surprising. After all, when it comes to how pretty Beako is, she’s straight down the middle for Clind-san.”

Clind: “In the sense that Beatrice-sama’s childlike and vibrant sensibility touches my heart, yes. Affirmation.”

Beatrice: “…Honestly, that evaluation doesn’t feel very pleasing, in fact.”

When Clind nodded as if to confirm the sweetness of a piece of candy, Beatrice, whose cheeks had stiffened, turned away from him slightly.

However, as mentioned before, it was a bit of a surprise.

Subaru: “She has lived in the Roswaal mansion for four hundred years. So, Beako’s like a zashiki-warashi or a powerful lady-in-waiting to the Mathers family. The fact that she’s had no real contact with him for so long is proof of her extremely reclusive lifestyle.”

Beatrice: “What an expression to use for someone such as Betty, I suppose! Even Betty had some of her own contacts with the people in the mansion, in fact! Meals were delivered, I suppose!”

Subaru: “That’s just the routine of a shut-in! You shouldn’t be proud of that!”

That was a comment that raised concerns about Beatrice’s lifestyle at the Roswaal mansion before Subaru and Emilia arrived. From now on, Subaru decided to never let Beatrice eat alone again—

Subaru: “Given that Beako’s personality can’t be helped… what about you, Clind-san? If you haven’t always been with Annerose at the Miload residence, is there a reason for that?”

Clind: “Yes, correct. If I had to say, I was forbidden from having any contact with her by the Master. Strict orders.”

Subaru: “As soon as you said it was Roswaal’s orders, it started to smell really fishy…”

As the dark schemes that Roswaal had been plotting involving the Sanctuary and the mansion were revealed, he inscribed an Oath on himself, saying, “I won’t commit any mischief like thaaa~t again.”.

However, the order to avoid Beatrice was given to Clind before said Oath, so it was possible that that order itself had been related to Roswaal’s plans.

So, in the same way as Beatrice, Subaru also felt like keeping his distance from Clind. Seeing this, Clind adjusted the position of his monocle, and,

Clind: “There is no need to worry. My orders have already been rescinded. I believe this recent training trip is proof that the Master has changed his mind. Self-evident.”

Subaru: “Yeah, you’re right. Mhm, sorry. I was being rude to you even though you were being so kind to me.”

Clind: “Nevertheless, even though my orders to avoid contact were lifted, I have received new instructions to minimize contact as much as possible. Mitigation.”

Beatrice: “It’s possible that he still hasn’t learned his lesson, in fact! Maybe he needs another beating, I suppose!”

When Beatrice heard Roswaal’s next instruction, her face grew angry, and she screamed. While Subaru was wondering if there was something more to his plans, he was also curious about the contents of the instructions.

For whatever reason, Roswaal’s instructions made it feel like they were intentionally keeping Clind and Beatrice apart.

Subaru: “By the way, you’re not forbidden to have contact with me, right?”

Clind: “As for you, Subaru-sama? Affirmation. The Master has graciously instructed me to train you thoroughly. Roused.”

Subaru: “I’m glad you’re excited to get working! …But, I see.”

After he heard Clind’s reply, Subaru nodded in agreement and looked at Beatrice. She wore a questioning expression at Subaru’s look, but Subaru somehow understood Roswaal’s thoughts. — Roswaal’s affection for Beatrice was probably genuine.

Subaru: “It seems to me that it’s like an uncle who can’t get his cute niece to like him and is just trying to keep the bad adults away.”

Given that, Roswaal’s affection was not being conveyed to Beatrice at all, and he seemed too clumsy and pitiful. However, considering what Roswaal had done, he had better suffer for a while, so this amount of misfortune was probably well-deserved.

Anyway—

Subaru: “Getting back on topic, how long have you been working for Roswaal, Clind-san? I heard you were in charge of Frederica’s education.”

From what he had heard, it seemed that Clind was the one who had trained Frederica as a maid when she had first left the Sanctuary and still did not know her way around. It was hard to believe that he was the head servant at the time, but he was definitely a promising young man. When Subaru asked him this, Clind put his hand to his chin and said, “That is right. Rumination.”—

Clind: “I believe it has been about four hundred years.”

Subaru: “Clind-san is another member who tremendously increases the camp’s average age?!”

With that, Subaru was greatly surprised.

2

Emilia was a hundred-year-old half-elf, Beatrice and Puck were four-hundred-year-old spirits, and here was Clind, who had just joined the ranks of the long-lived group—.

Subaru: “With this, the average age of the Emilia Camp has suddenly risen again… Even if we include the young members like Petra and Annerose, they don’t even come close…”

Beatrice: “Good grief, Subaru always gets so flustered, in fact. On the contrary, the increased reliability of having so many individuals of high age is something one should be proud of, I suppose.”

Subaru: “On the contrary, I strongly suspected that cuteness and prettiness was what increased with a person’s age, but that theory was completely put on its head with Clind-san!”

As Beatrice played with her twin drill tails with her fingers, Subaru admitted to the collapse of the “Longer-lived Cute Theory” he previously held. Both Emilia and Beatrice, as well as Puck, with his cute appearance and fluffy fur, were influential factors that supported the theory.

However, the inclusion of the out-of-place Clind changed the situation.

Subaru: “No, wait? Clind-san is a strikingly handsome man, so if you include cute in the more general definition of beauty, then you can’t say that my theory has been disproved, can you?”

Clind: “It is an honor to receive such a high evaluation; however, I apologize for the confusion this has caused. Gratitude.”

Beatrice: “This is just some stupid Subaru nonsense, in fact. It’s okay just to ignore him, I suppose.”

Subaru, in response to Beatrice’s harsh words, patted her head, and she said, “Aghh, In fact!”,

Subaru: “By the way, Beako, what you said earlier about not having any connection with Clind-san has a totally different implication when you think about it on a four-hundred-year scale! You’re too good at being a shut-in! Go get some sunlight!”

Beatrice: “Th-That’s why I’m out in the sun with you, Subaru, I suppose… Because Subaru pulled Betty outside, in fact.”

Subaru: “What a fucking cute thing to say!”

It was a reply that was overflowing with love, and Subaru energetically picked Beatrice up and placed her on his lap, sitting cross-legged, and then turned to face Clind again.

Subaru: “On that note, I’m sorry about my Beako being so rude. Also, ignoring my confusion is OK because it’s just nonsense, like Beako says. May I ask you something else?”

Clind: “Your words were quite frantic, but I will listen. Lend an ear.”

Subaru: “You don’t have long ears or anything like that, so you’re probably not an elf, but where are you from, Clind-san?”

Clind: “Hmm. Why do you wish to know? Verification.”

His eyes widened as Subaru was asked a question in reply to his own. Then, after the seed of doubt formed in his mouth, he asked, “Why?”,

Subaru: “Look, it’s not like Roswaal’s orders have been rescinded, but he’s agreed to let you be my instructor for this training, and it looks like we’re going to see each other more often from now on. So I want to get to know you. Because you’re going to be my Master, right, Clind-san?”

Clind: “—. Your Master, is it? Awestruck.”

Subaru: “Isn’t that right? I’m being taught how to use and train my body from scratch, and I’m being generously given the wisdom and techniques of my predecessors… this is what you call a master-disciple relationship.”

Subaru did not really realize it until he said it himself, but when he actually thought about his situation, it was most natural to define it as a master-disciple relationship.

Although he knew he was being selfish because he had not even asked the other person’s permission, Subaru considered Wilhelm to be his spiritual master. Subaru deeply respected the spirituality of the swordsman called the “Sword Demon”, who spent fourteen years avenging his wife’s death.

And now, Clind has emerged as his physical master.

Subaru: “It’s not just about where you’re from, of course, but surely I’m not the only one who wants to know about the people they respect.”

Clind: “What is this “respect”? Inquiry.”

Subaru: “It means I hold you in high esteem! It’s a little embarrassing when you have to explain it, though!”

Clind: “…”

Clind narrowed his eyes slightly at Subaru’s answer as he held his breath.

His unusual reaction, or at least the first time Subaru had seen such an agitated one, made him wonder if he was too unemotional in telling him straight out.

However, when Subaru reflected on this, Clind shook his head with a “No”,

Clind: “I was marginally surprised. You have a rare way of thinking, Subaru-sama. Loss for words.”

Subaru: “You say that you’re at a loss for words, but I didn’t mean to say something so crazy… what’s wrong, Beako, why the cute puffed-out cheeks?”

Beatrice: “Uh-huh, that’s why Betty is proud of Subaru, I suppose.”

Subaru scratched his cheek with his finger at the smug impression of Beatrice on his lap. In response, Clind responded with an embarrassed affirmation, “That is right,”,

Clind: “However, my apologies. I am unable to disclose my origins. I have a Contract… no, a Covenant. Humble pardons.”

Subaru: “A Contract, or rather, a Covenant… is that also with Roswaal?”

Clind: “I am also unable to answer that. If my origins were made public, I am certain that it would cause great inconvenience to the camp. Violent upheaval.”

Subaru: “Amazing. This is the second time someone has kindly explained to me that they’re a time bomb.”

Of course, the first and most memorable experience was with none other than Emilia.

It seemed ridiculous that Emilia would be treated unfairly just because she shared the appearance of the Witch of Envy from the distant past.

Subaru: "First of all, Emilia-tan's super-cute beauty can't be easily reprod—"

Subaru was about to continue, but then he remembered the tea party and became tongue-tied. The face of the Witch, whom he had met only once at the tea party in his dream, inside Echidna's tomb. Like a haze, that memory had a complex and mysterious hue in Subaru's mind.

As if his soul was refusing to think about it in detail.

Subaru: "At any rate! I understand if you can't talk about it, Clind-san. I won't ask from which field the fresh vegetable Clind-san was picked. But can I ask about other things? For example, what you like and what you don't like, or… ah, like Roswaal's weakness!"

Clind: "That would be Beatrice-sama. Informing."

Beatrice: "You made it seem like you sold your master out instantly when it's clear that you have no intention of answering seriously at all, in fact!"

Beatrice shouted at Clind for his prompt reply, but unexpectedly, Subaru thought that it might not be a lie after all, and he decided not to tell Beatrice about his thoughts.

Whatever the case, Clind's attitude seemed to have changed based on the corners of his slightly softened eyes, and he did not seem to reject the master-disciple relationship head-on, to which Subaru was relieved.

Clind: "So, is this respite over? Resume."

Subaru: "Yeah, that's right. We can't keep dragging our feet forever. We have to make the most of every second and level up. Let's go, Beako—!"

Beatrice: "Yeah, yeah, hurry up, I suppose!"

He lifted the enthusiastic Beatrice and placed her on his shoulders, completing the docking. The combination of Subaru and Beatrice, who have truly become one, proceeded to take on Clind once again.

In response to this fresh attack, Clind gracefully turned, and,

Clind: “—Ill-prepared. Discourteous.”

Subaru & Beatrice: ““Ahhhphew!””

3

Emilia: “Ahh! They got hit again…!”

???: “I know you are worried, Emilia-sama, but you should not take your eyes off me.”

With that, Frederica cautioned Emilia, whose eyes were wide with shock.

Emilia blinked her amethyst eyes and apologized with, “I’m sorry”, but her mind kept wandering to the scene of Subaru and company’s training.

Frederica could understand that feeling. After all—

???: “—Clind seems to be having a very good time.”

Annerose, sitting opposite Emilia, elegantly brought a teacup to her mouth, perfectly following the rules of etiquette as she looked at the same scene and spoke. Having had Clind by her side for so many years, she could see the same thing as Frederica.

Emilia: “Eh? Clind-san is excited? He doesn’t look like he is at all…”

Frederica: “That is not true. Toying with Subaru-sama and Beatrice-sama simultaneously like that, smirking in a truly disgusting way, is quite infuriating.”

Emilia: “Smirking…?”

Annerose: “It is unsurprising that you can not recognize it, Emily.

You are not used to seeing him. Besides, there is no need to specifically learn the skill of being able to read Clind's facial expressions."

Frederica deeply nodded inwardly in agreement with Annerose's well-reasoned opinion. However, Emilia, with a serious expression on her face, prefaced her response with a "No", and then,

Emilia: "You say that, Anne, but I don't think I should accept it like that. No matter who it is… especially Clind-san, who's helping us, right? If I disregard someone like that, I'm sure the sun will turn its back on us."

Annerose: "Oh my. Emily, how admirable of you… as expected of my Emily!"

Emilia: "Sorry. But, I'm not your property, Anne…"

Annerose: "That was just a figure of speech! Even still, it hurts when I am rejected like that…"

Annerose looked sour at Emilia's innocent reply, then cleared her throat and tried to recover her composure. She held up one of her slender fingers, and,

Annerose: "That is alright. Then, I will personally teach you how to discern Clind's faces."

Emilia: "P-Please help me out…!"

Frederica could not help but give a wry smile at Emilia, who was taking notes with such enthusiasm.

No matter who they were or what kind of person they were, she had to face them sincerely without making any distinctions. It was a very difficult thing to do, but it had been the policy Emilia had adopted for the Royal Selection.

Although it infuriated her to no end that Clind's name was being mentioned as one of these embodiments.

Frederica: "At the very least, he has to be useful for that."

As a person who was once swept away by the slightest differences in the subtle changes in his facial expressions, Frederica hoped that the difficulty in Clind's expressions would be useful for Emilia's pursuits.

On the other hand, she did not have zero feelings. —If the day ever arrived when Emilia could read Clind's facial expressions without issue, things would probably get a little awkward.

Frederica: "It really is a troublesome thing."

With that, Frederica mumbled those feelings to herself, but no one heard them—it was a matter of her own heart that ought to have been treated as a minor thing compared to the future of the Emilia Camp.

END

Otto Suwen's Internal Affairs Struggle (Translation Pending)

Joshua Juukulius's Careful Encyclopedia

1

—In the past year and few months, there had been a few particular things that Joshua Juukulius had thought.
They were things like how Mimi and her brothers would almost always come running to his room together whenever he would take food into his hand.

Joshua: "When I touch food, does it cause my room to light up or something?"

Mimi: "Joshua, why're you saying such strange things all of a sudden? Did you hit your head?"

In response to Joshua's suspicions, Mimi tilted her head, her mouth stuffed with little sweets.

Watching as her younger brother, Tivey, gladly and gallantly wiped it for her, Joshua shook his head with a "No".

Joshua: "…I ended up asking something silly. Please forget it."

Mimi: "Oh, really? In that case, no worries~!"

Forcing a smile at Mimi's open-hearted answer, Joshua massaged his brow in self-derision. As he did so, a voice called "Are you okay-okay?"

Tivey: "If you're perhaps tired, I can talk to the Miss about giving you a break."

Joshua: "—. Thank you for worrying about me, Tivey. But, I am alright."

Tivey: "You mustn't over do things, yes? In the end, it'll just lead to your overall efficiency falling-falling."

As Tivey peered at him, the big eye behind his monocle glistened to remind him.

As the youngest of three siblings, and as one who dearly loved reading, Tivey was someone with whom he had constructed an affable friendship; they were fellow younger brothers to elder brothers. Joshua's own monocle was a representation of the feelings of fellowship and respect he felt towards him, and they were matching articles.

Joshua: "…"

Adjusting the position of that monocle, Joshua glanced at the ceiling and sighed. The cause of his sigh was not Mimi's pillaging of his afternoon snack, but rather the overwhelming feeling that had come over him recently.

As a member of the Anastasia Camp in the Royal Selection, Joshua's days had been busy.

He felt fulfilled by the work being entrusted to him, but the problem was this next job—the fact that Tivey was worried about him was likely because that gloom was far too apparent through his face and demeanor.

After all, the next job Joshua was appointed to was—

Joshua: "—Acting as an emissary to one in the same position of Royal Candidate, Emilia-sama. Giving me such an important duty, Anastasia-sama is also quite ill-natured."

Indeed, as he rubbed his stomach that was gripped by pain, Joshua muttered with a deathly pale countenance.

—Due to the tragedy that befell the Royal Family, the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica persisted in the perilous absence of a monarch.

Currently, the Kingdom was in the middle of a Royal Selection to decide on the next Monarch, and amidst the five candidates gathered, the house of Joshua's birth, House Juukulius, had declared their endorsement of the Great Merchant from the neighboring Kararagi City-States, Anastasia Hoshin.

For generations, House Juukulius had produced many a Knight in service to the Kingdom. Amidst the household, opinions were divided regarding the endorsement of the Great Merchant from another nation who had established herself as an extraordinary success among her generation. Originally, House Juukulius would have taken a more conservative stance. It was because the choice was in direct opposition to that.

However, Anastasia decided to face those opposing views head on, and standing as her one and only Knight, was of course the Finest Knight, Julius Juukulius.

As a result, now that a year had passed, no longer remained there any who voiced doubt upon Anastasia's capability as a Royal Candidate. Anastasia and Julius, lord and retainer, had magnificently forced surrender upon the enemies blocking their path to the extent of their resourcefulness and track records, thereby winning support.

As the younger brother of that esteemed Julius, Joshua endeavored to live in a way as to not shame him, and also thought that he gradually had come to win a bit of trust from Anastasia.

After all, this next job was unmistakably proof of that trust, and thus ought to have fired him up, but—

Joshua: "Even if I am being entrusted with such an important task, can I really say that I had wanted to work my way up and gather experience in a more sequential manner… no, that's just an excuse. As it is, I will not be able to show my face to Nii-sama or Anastasia-sama…!"

Mimi: "Haa, you seem to be going round n' round again, Joshua! Don't you get tired of always thinking that way? Mimi thinks that's really~ weird!"

Joshua: "Ugh, even though Mimi and I are being entrusted with the same job, this difference is… OW OW!"

With Mimi violently bashing his back as she laughed, Joshua fell into low spirits with tears in his eyes.

For the duty of emissary entrusted to him, Mimi would accompany him as a guard. In a sense, even though the jobs they were entrusted with were the same, Mimi was calm and collected without being under any feeling of oppression.

Hetaro: “Joshua-san, please take good care of big sis. Tivey and me can’t go along with her, so we’ll be counting on you, Joshua-san.”

Joshua: “Counting on me? Um, is it not the other way around? After all, Mimi is my guard… Hetaro and Tivey, you each are also going to deliver official letters to Royal Candidates, correct?”

Unlike how Joshua was being given a guard, the two of them, capable of defending themselves, were each going to fulfill their duty as emissaries on their own. Duties were divided between them so that Hetaro would be going to visit the Valkyrie, Dutchess Crusch Karsten, and Tivey to Felt, the one known as the second coming of the Golden Lion.

Joshua: “But, unlike you two, I’m going together with Mimi…”

Hetaro: “Well, that’s because it was super duper worrisome to let big sis go out as an emissary alone…”

Tivey: “For the Miss’s sake as well, it is vital that we ensure the written invitation is properly delivered. If we left big sis to the task by herself, concern would start even from the point of not forgetting to bring the letter in the first place-place.”

Getting Hetaro and Tivey’s back to back opinions, Joshua looked at Mimi with an “Ah”. Meeting his gaze, Mimi made her eyes big and round as she went “Mhmhmhm~?”,

Mimi: “Something wrong, Joshua? If it’s about your share of the treats, we’re all out!”

Joshua: “…I have come to understand this a little better. I suppose I am a chaperone, truly.”

As Mimi puffed her chest out and raised two fingers, her two little brothers on Joshua’s left and right gave him pats of encouragement on his shoulders while he gained a better awareness of his role. He accepted that consideration, however, for a different reason from earlier, Joshua was at his wit's end from the source of his unchanged sense of being overwhelmed.

That was—

Joshua: "While I am chaperoning Mimi, we had to be in charge of the half-elf Emilia-sama, of all people…"

Hetaro: "Um, are you perhaps not very good with half-elves, Joshua-san?"

Joshua: "Rather than not being good around them, are they not terrifying?! After all, not only is she a half-elf, I have heard that she possesses all the same traits as the Witch of Envy, you know?"

At Hetaro's unmalicious query, Joshua preached the common proclivity.

The legend of the Witch of Envy was a primordial fear for every single person living in this world. For a person whose ancestry and characteristics embody that, just imagining it was enough to make one's blood freeze over.

Mimi: "Nghhh, Joshua you scaredy cat! Honestly, Mimi thinks that Onee-san isn't scary at all! If anything, I think she's kind? But scary? Or frightening? Or dangerous?"

Joshua: "Ah, Mimi and the rest of you are acquainted… In that case, Tivey, Hetaro, what do you make of her?"

A year prior, the Iron Fang, to which Mimi and the other two belonged, participated in both the fights against the White Whale and the Witch Cult, and there they had likely come into contact with Emilia and her people.

Dissuading the addition of Mimi's opinion, Joshua asked thus to the two brothers, and as they exchanged glances,

Tivey: "Unfortunately, we did not come into contact with Emilia-sama as part of the operation. We did once see her from afar at the ceremony, but… there was no impression of anything frightening-frightening.”

Hetaro: “Same for me. Ah, but, I kinda get it if we’re talking about Emilia-sama’s Knight.”

Joshua: “Emilia-sama’s Knight… the one with all those strange rumors about him.”

Hetaro raised a hand up as he spoke, leaving Joshua with a bitter face.

The reason why Joshua felt uneasy at his upcoming visit to the Emilia Camp, stemmed from the pressure of being entrusted with a great duty, and Emilia, who was said to share features with the Witch of Envy. And finally, there was the presence of her enigmatic Knight.

Going by the stories he had heard, this Knight seemed to be an interloper in the event of greatest importance to the Kingdom, the Royal Selection, and without any family standing or supporters, it was utterly incomprehensible how he had gotten into the position he was now in.

But, whenever one searched for information on the Emilia Camp, this black-haired Knight of unknown origin would invariably come up.

Joshua: “He even successfully contributed to the subjugation of the White Whale and a Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult… to be honest, if I had not heard it directly from Nii-sama, I would have never believed it.”

Tivey: “To be precise, you still doubted it a bit even when Julius told you, didn’t you?”

Joshua: “Is that not only natural?! Are you aware of the rumors? He participated in the subjugation of the White Whale and Sloth, and while it is unconfirmed, he might have also subdued the Great Rabbit; after becoming the Knight of a Royal Candidate despite his unknown origins, he’s always seen being accompanied by a little girl? Is he not the very personification of a bad dream?!”

As a result, he was an exceedingly mysterious figure who had come to be known as the “Lolimancer”. Emilia too, keeping that incomprehensible individual as her one and only Knight, was thereby difficult to understand and frightening.

Outside of that as well, the dreadful rumors surrounding the Emilia Camp were never ending.

Joshua: “To begin with, the Margrave Mathers endorsing Emilia-sama is widely known as a cheat and a hypocrite. He is even referred to as the “Demi-Human Lover”, and there are rumors that he keeps many demi-human maids dressed in lascivious outfits at his mansion… said to excessively misappropriate so much momentous magical research for himself, he is the problem child of the court!”

Two of the key players under his command were a savage, fiendish half-beast, and a blood-thirsty internal affairs officer. These two also seemed quite like suspicious knaves, the former had a blank history when looked into through Anastasia’s information network, but the latter seemed to be notorious as a wanted man within his own hometown for many years now.

There were plentiful circumstances surrounding terrifying ghost stories, such as: at the location of the mansion, there seemed to be several tens of girls with the same face entering and exiting simultaneously, or, it seemed that everyday there were fumes rising up from the kitchen that smelled like steamed tatoes.

Joshua: “Truly an ominous boundary beyond the human world… Once again, I wonder why Anastasia-sama would send me there as a messenger. Could it be that I was being rude unknowingly, and now to make an example out of me…?”

Hetaro: “No matter how you look at it, that might just be way too pessimistic…”

Joshua: “I mean! Is there any other logical conclusion? Uwaa, uwaaaa, what am I to do? It would be best for me to inquire to Anastasia-sama directly, would it not?! Perhaps it was some sort of slipup!”

Tivey: “But, if it wasn’t a mistake, this might be the Miss trying to silence you from leaking her secrets.”

Hetaro: “Even for you, Tivey, going that far is…”

Joshua went deathly pale, unable to hear Tivey’s voice as he apologized “That was a joke-joke”. Feeling like he had gotten caught up in a grand conspiracy, Joshua tottered towards the door.

Mimi: “Oh? Joshua, what’s wrong? Wee-Wee? Are you going to go wee-wee?”

Sprawled on the bed with her belly bulging out, Mimi looked up to Joshua with an upside down view and posed him a question. At her question, Joshua slowly shook his head, and clenched his fist.

Joshua: “M-My heart cannot bear to take on this important role whilst feeling like this. I am scared, but, I am scared, but…! I am going to go hear Anastasia-sama’s true intentions…!”

Mimi: “You going to the Miss? Tell her that Mimi wants meat for dinner!”

Joshua: “Once you deliver the letter to the Witch of Envy and the Lolimancer, you can have meat!”

With most of the information in his head getting tangled up, Joshua hastened to exit the room. Seeing Joshua, beaten down by that overwhelming feeling, the remaining triplets exchanged glances.

Then, after breathing a sigh, Hetaro poked Tivey’s forehead, and,

Hetaro: “Tivey, It’s not okay to tease him so much. After all, Joshua-san is really earnest.”

Tivey: “My apologies. But, I kind of understand how the Miss is feeling, y’know-y’know?”

As an older brother should, Hetaro admonished his younger brother, to which Tivey slightly lowered his eyebrows. And from behind, those two were hugged at their shoulders by Mimi with all her body, and then she spoke thus.

Mimi: “Really, it’s tough being an Onee-chan or an Onii-chan. Must be hard for Julius too, no?”

2

Joshua: “Hence, I wish to inquire about your true intentions, Anastasia-sama. Depending on that, I may lack the ability to carry out this duty…”

Anastasia: “Golly, quite the serious fella ya are, Joshua.”

Still in the same mindset from his exchange with Mimi and the others a moment prior, Joshua visited Anastasia’s office with a meek expression, and was met by the gentle girl’s wry smile.

Joshua’s thoughts, having plummeted further and further into a worse condition whilst thinking this and that, caused Anastasia to cease her hands from her work, and as she placed one to her forehead,

Anastasia: “Even without worryin’ ‘bout all that, Emilia-san’s place ain’t nearly anythin’ that scary. Emilia-san’s a given, but Natsuki-kun certainly won’t pick ya up and eat’cha either.”

Joshua: “But, the Margrave and his two primary subordinates, the ghost stories about the kitchen fumes…”

Anastasia: “Hmm, I was meanin’ well ‘n tryna help ya out, but it seems ya might’ve listened to a few too many rumors and gotten yer eyes all cloudy. This here’s my fault.”

Narrowing her pale turquoise eyes, Anastasia reflected.

That reflection of hers was regarding how the accuracy of the information from the intelligence network she had strewn up was of varying degrees, and how Joshua’s assistance with it had led to an increase of puzzling elements.

For Anastasia, who was a merchant of Kararagi rather than being of Lugunican birth, swift and accurate decisions would be required to stay on top of the Royal Selection, so it was preferable to have a large amount of evidence to make said decisions. For that purpose, it was important to keep the intelligence network organized, and she had grown confident in Joshua's ability to assist with that.

Joshua: "But, for the time I spent on the waterfront of information, I fell into a dilemma of drowning in the lake of information…"

Anastasia: "Mm, gotcha. My intent wasn't to torment ya, Joshua, so maybe I'll rethink the whole messenger thing."

Joshua: "…I am terribly sorry."

Anastasia: "Ain't a big issue, really. —But, ya mind if I just try one thing out here at the end?"

With a single eye closed, Anastasia smiled mischievously. When Joshua widened his eyes with an "Eh?" at that smile, a knock came from outside the door of the office.

Receiving Anastasia's brief comment, the one who showed their face at the door was—

???: "Anastasia-sama, you called for me? Just now, I have received tidings from Ia, but…"

Joshua: "N-Nii-sama?"

Politely bowing, the person who showed their face was indeed Julius Juukulius—the one to whom Joshua bore never ending love and respect, the existence of the Finest, was his absolutely flawless elder brother.

Julius: "Were you speaking with Joshua? Was there something you wished to ask me?"

Anastasia: "Yepyep, exactly. Tell ya the truth, this wouldn't end up goin' anywhere without ya here, Julius."

Perceiving Joshua, Julius enquired as to why Anastasia had called him there. Then, with her mischievous smile intact, Anastasia poked at Joshua with a "Right?".

Faced with Anastasia's mischief, Joshua was about to falter, but—

Anastasia: “Ya see, we were discussin’ entrusting Joshua to go as a messenger to Emilia-san’s place, yeah? We wouldn’t want there to be any impoliteness for that occasion, so we wanted to ask yer opinion.”

Julius: “I see. Henceforth, you have summoned me here.”

As Anastasia’s explanation broke it down for him, Julius nodded in understanding. Then, Julius directed his serene, yellow eyes towards Joshua,

Julius: “That is the correct prudence. No matter the rumors, the real Emilia-sama is of a personality that does not overlap with the public notions conceived of her before the Royal Selection began. Indeed, it would be disrespectful to cross paths with her bearing such a perception.”

Joshua: “—. I suppose… that is correct. Your consultation… is very… encouraging.”

Commended by the smiling Julius, Joshua felt that the image of himself that Anastasia had told him about was somewhat correct, and he felt a sensation as if the dark clouds had cleared from his mind.

Emilia, who he had feared most, had received such a high evaluation from Julius. There was no need to weigh the dubious rumors against Julius on a balance to know which to believe.

At a glance, Anastasia nodded in satisfaction as if to say things had gone exactly as she had planned. As expected, since Julius had discovered her, his insight was outstanding—

Julius: “Ah, in addition, if you are going to visit Emilia-sama, it would do you well to be wary of her Knight. He is… well. He is an inscrutable personage upon first meeting. However, he possesses extraordinary willpower and decisiveness, and most importantly, he bears an astonishing loyalty towards Emilia-sama.”

Joshua: “…Nii-sama?”

Julius: “Hm. Besides, he is a Spiritual Arts User. Given that he was conferred decorations at the ceremony, and has now gained the title of Knight, I suppose he could be called a Spirit Knight, as I am. Though for reasons beside that, he is a person worth taking note of —”

Having just had his doubts cleared up thanks to his elder brother, Joshua frowned quizzically at that brother’s following words.

Eloquently articulated from Julius’s lips was the second highest priority for caution following the most feared Emilia, the Lolimancer—sharing the achievement of Sloth’s subjugation alongside his elder brother, what an accursed Knight.

To begin with, Julius was sparing with his praise unto others. That was an unmistakable virtue of his, and that humanity was one of the reasons he was known as the Finest.

However, that was precisely why there was no end to the individuals trying to impose on that virtue—.

Julius: “—Joshua?”

Joshua: “Nii-sama, thank you for your kind attention. Thanks to you, I have understood who it is I ought to be careful of. —Anastasia-sama, I shall be able to perform the duty of emissary.”

Anastasia: “Mm-hmm. I’m countin’ on ya, so do yer best, won’t ya?”

Joshua: “Yes, leave it to me! I will assuredly return with good tidings!”

Firmly placing his hand over his chest, Joshua left the room with his eyes sparkling and his breathing heavy.

Seeing Joshua, hurriedly departing with a sense of duty strewn upon his face, off from behind, Julius turned back around to Anastasia, left alone with her in the room.

Resting her chin in her hands atop her work desk, Anastasia smiled in a truly pleasant manner.

Julius: “So then, has my brother enacted any discourtesy?”

Anastasia: “Hmmm? Nothin’ of the sort. Really now, Joshua’s quite the cute kid.”

Julius: “Far greater of a younger brother than I deserve. Time and again, I am always being saved by him.”

Bereft of flattery or modesty, Julius spoke thus of his relationship with Joshua.

In truth, that was the case. Joshua’s presence and gaze was always straightening Julius’s back. And that was not all. That was precisely why, even now, Julius could be as he was—

Anastasia: “—Y’all ain’t really siblings, right? To be so close despite that is quite the big deal. “

Julius: “Indeed. —Far greater of a younger brother than I deserve, and quite the big deal at that.”

—While Julius and Anastasia conversed, Joshua’s steps through the hallway were restless.

The unease and tension he had felt before visiting the office, in this moment, became a thing of the past. He had finally understood why Anastasia had entrusted him to be in charge of neither the Crusch Camp nor the Felt Camp, but the Emilia Camp.

Joshua: “I must go to firmly ascertain Nii-sama’s enemy…!”

This heavy responsibility certainly could not be entrusted to Tivey or the others. —The heavy responsibility of defending the name of the Finest Knight, was entrusted to Joshua Juukulius.

After all, that was—

Joshua: “—The one and only thing I am able to do for Nii-sama, and for House Juukulius.”

Ceasing his step, Joshua suddenly glanced towards the window of the hallway, and narrowed his yellow eyes. Unconsciously, he reached out his hand and touched the window, but the tips of his fingers never reached the scenery that laid beyond.

Among the garden trees swaying in the wind, the tree that bore bright red appas plunged Joshua's consciousness into a memory of the past—to a time he would never forget, a time utmost accursed within Joshua.

3

—The scenery outside the window always appeared as a dream his hands could never reach.

House Juukulius was an ancient and honorable lineage, having produced generations of Knights for the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica.

Through various scenes that the history of the Kingdom of Lugunica had marched through, the men of Juukulius followed as Knights, silently supporting the nation's state of existence.

Their nature was unakin to the likes of Sword Saint or Sword Demon, brilliantly flourishing in the limelight through the turning points of Lugunican history. But, just as how a king with no subjects had a warped view of reality, in the shadows of the achievements of heroes and legends there existed the efforts of many a Knight of no renown.

Likewise, House Juukulius was naught more than a single lineage contributing to those many Knights. Those who pledged allegiance to the Kingdom existed as part of a function to produce more gears to keep the Kingdom running.

So, he had never thought to question the way that his house was.

As stated previously, that was something requisite. In the shadows of the tales of heroes and legends, there needed to exist the stories of ordinary people not of such stature. It was a matter of everything resulting from the right person being in the right place, and the allocation of roles.

To put it in a different way, leading actors and minor roles—he thought that in reality, there was not a very large difference between those positions, There was only one problem—

???: “—Khofghh…”

For no reason at all, the deepest depths of his coughing body creaked, and he understood that what he was feeling was pain.

Unable to contain the urge to cough for a while, he coughed many, many times whilst harboring the pain. Once it finally settled, a cold sweat drenched his body, and his breathing grew rough.

It was nothing out of the ordinary. It was just one of the senseless fits that would befall him ten times in a day.

It was no disease. If it was a fit, a cough intendant on fighting against something gnawing at this body, then even if it was a hundred or a thousand times a day instead of ten, he would at least have a feeling of intercepting an oncoming hardship.

But, that was not the case. Only, he was hopelessly weak, and fragile.

???: “…Khofghh.”

Thus, the reality of this “weakness”, heavier than aught else in this world, was an unatonable sin.

In House Juukulius, which had produced generations of Knights, the eldest son was born too frail to grasp a sword, sinful to the point of regretting his own birth.

???: “…Khofghh.”

Ergo, Joshua Juukulius had been entwined with sin from birth, born into this world a malefactor.

4

???: “—Starting from today, Julius will be living here together with our family. He was originally your cousin but, from here on out he will be your elder brother.”

Indeed, what his father had brought together as head of the household, was his first meeting with his “elder brother”.

That day, Joshua’s condition was miraculously decent, and he could sit for dinner with his family for the first time in a while, but the identity of the unfamiliar boy who would be alongside them would be a question answered by their initial introduction.

As Joshua was bewildered by the sudden affair, his father continued whilst gesturing to his “elder brother”.

Father: “Julius is the son of my younger brother, but the other day, he lost his parents in an accident. Therefore, this house has taken him into custody, but… Joshua, is there anything you would like to ask?”

Joshua: “Anything, I would like to ask?”

Father: “Indeed. Julius is three years your elder… if we raise him under the custody of this household, he will adopt the position of being your elder brother. —In that case, your own position and circumstances will be altered in no small way.”

“In no small way”, Joshua thought the phrasing was very characteristic of his father.

For a moment, the emotion that flashed through his father’s yellow eyes, were likely something like feelings of guilt that he could not suppress. And, Joshua was perfectly aware of the sin that served as its genesis.

By birth, Joshua’s weak constitution had caused trouble for many people, starting with his parents. Any such child would naturally learn how to read an adult’s complexion.

That was the case for Joshua. Hence, he was able to surmise his father’s true thoughts—while apologetic to Joshua, he prioritized a sense to fulfill the duty of House Juukulius, feeling the turmoil between his two positions of father and Knight.

In the first place, Joshua bore no right to object to the decision that arose from his father’s deliberations.

If his father truly felt guilt from his deliberations and inner turmoil, there was no need to harbor it. If only he had been born with a decent body from the outset, no such needless discord would have arisen here.

With that being the case, Joshua thought of himself as needless discord incarnate, and derided himself.

Joshua: “It is alright, Father. If that is what you have decided, Father, I will abide.”

Hiding his self derision behind a smile he had naturally become proficient at displaying, Joshua chose to nod as a reasonable child to put his father at ease.

Hearing Joshua’s response, the ends of his father’s eyebrows lowered in relief. To despair, to reproach his father as one who could not even see through to the true feelings of his own child, would be barking up the wrong tree.

That was the extent to which Joshua had perfected his demeanor of hiding the truth of his feelings.

That was why—

Father: “—Julius, introduce yourself.”

Julius: “Y-Yes, Father.”

Encouraged by his father, his “elder brother” nervously stepped forward. As if to prove his lineage as a Juukulius, the hue of his hair and eyes was identical to that of Joshua and his father.

With those gentle features and a nervous air about him, the boy bowed in a respectful gesture, and,

Julius: “As of today I’ll be living as a member of the head household, I’m Julius Juukulius. It’ll be weird calling myself your older brother even though I came here later, but… it’s a pleasure to meet you.”

Uttering the words he had likely practiced many times over for this without hesitation, the boy—Julius, reached out his hand.

Joshua: "I am Joshua Juukulius. It is I who should be saying that it is my pleasure to meet you."

As Julius sought a handshake, Joshua politely attempted to fulfill the duty without flaw.

This was his first meeting with somebody he would surely go on to have a long relationship with. For better or for worse, so as to not hinder him from familiarizing himself with House Juukulius, he endeavored to take on an amiable demeanor bereft of personality.

So that unlike before, the sinner known as himself would not senselessly hold back the legs of others.

That was what he had thought, and yet—

Joshua: "—Eh?"

The moment they shook hands, Joshua blinked his eyes as he bore witness to an unthinkable sight.

Right after taking his hand, Julius had kneeled down before Joshua. Then, down on one knee on the dining room floor, he softly placed his lips upon the back of Joshua's hand.

—That was a kind of formality that a Knight would perform whilst facing a lady.

Julius: "For the many years to come, I'll be in your care."

With that, as Julius said that whilst down on a single knee, his ears flushed red from the deed he had yet to be accustomed to.

His voice had trembled, and his eyes had been darting about, but his expression alone was a Knight's face, through and through.

At that reality, Joshua gulped, and—

Father: "—Pffft, haha! Phwahahahahahaha! Julius, that is for when a Knight greets a lady. It's not the right one to use with Joshua…

pfft, ahahahahahahaha!”

Julius: “Eh… ah… eh… d-did I get it wrong?!”

His blunder pointed out, Julius, having thought he had accomplished it, was tempestuously discomposed.

And as his father pointed it out, he held his sides with the loudest laughter Joshua had ever heard from him. There were other retainers and servants present in the dining hall, and none of them could help but laugh at the scene.

Having won the laughter of his surroundings, Julius only became ever more flustered,

Julius: “P-Please don’t laugh! Even though I messed up, I tried to do my best…”

Father: “Ahh, we know, we know. Well, it is fine as long as you learn your courtesies from here on. As long as you are willing to learn, that will be enough.”

Julius frantically tried to explain himself, and his father answered while wiping the tears that had emerged in the corners of his eyes. Becoming increasingly disheartened by his father’s reaction, Julius suddenly turned to Joshua.

It seemed as though he was surely about to apologize due to embarrassing Joshua by getting him caught up in his own blunder. However—

Julius: “A-Are you alright?”

Joshua: “…Eh?”

Julius: “I mean, you’re crying… are you hurt somewhere?”

Meeting Julius’s worried gaze, Joshua was at a loss for what to say. But, Julius reached out his hand to Joshua’s cheek, and touching it with his fingers, he spoke, “See”,

Julius: “—Tears.”

At the tip of Julius's small finger, it was certain that a droplet of water had been wavering.

Joshua: "—Fh… Khhh…"

The next moment, his emotions ruptured easily to an extent that even he himself could not believe.

That was the muddy torrent of unknown emotions that he had not realized were being held back by an embankment.

Unable to do anything about the vigor of that as it all came bursting out, miserable tears overflowed wretchedly.

Julius: "Wah, wa-wah! Uwah-, Father! What should we do?!"

Father: "J-Joshua, what's the matter?! If something is wrong then say so, what's the matter?!"

As Joshua suddenly burst into tears, Julius and his father began to panic.

At the unusual behavior of his son who until now had not been difficult to deal with outside of his physical constitution, his father, as well as the other adults, were all discomposed as they gathered all their efforts to stop Joshua's tears.

—Ultimately, it ended up taking a while for Joshua to stop crying, and the feast meant to celebrate his first meeting with his "elder brother", was left as a memory of everybody eating a cold meal.

5

—The scenery outside the window always appeared as a dream his hands could never reach.

???: "I wonder, will my condition be fine today?"

With shallow, short breaths, Joshua muttered with his hand over his own chest.

Every morning, it was important for him to ascertain that sensation to determine how well he would be able to move. If one did not discern that, humans were creatures easily prone to error.

All the more so in Joshua's case, since the degree of that error was directly relevant to his own life.

He exhaled a faint "Fuuu…", however, Joshua would not overly rely on his self-diagnosis.

After all, in the past few days, Joshua's physical condition had reached an extremity of violent fluctuation. Immediately after being assailed by feverish nightmares, he was suddenly in the best condition he had been all year, greatly troubling the members of the household. His intention had not been to impose on his surroundings, so he had wanted to remain on either of the two sides.

As for which of the two sides he ought to lean towards, his mind was in a state of indecision, and that indecision ended up being reflected in the state of his own body, so he thought.

Joshua: "…"

Lying on his bed with his eyes closed, what reached Joshua's ears was a sound from outside the window he had yet to grow accustomed to—at some point in these few days, he had learned that it was the sound of wooden swords trading blows.

Slowly taking his time as he got out of bed, Joshua pulled open the shades and narrowed his eyes at the beams of sunlight, ascertaining the scenery outside the window; there were two figures clashing in the mansion's courtyard.

One of the two figures was the current head of House Juukulius, Joshua's father, clad in well tailored garments and with a wooden sword in hand, he stood leisurely with such leeway that he had yet to even draw sweat. Facing him, with a white shirt dirtied by sweat and dust after having shed his tunic was Julius, breathing heavily as he clutched his wooden sword with both hands.

—Julius Juukulius's special training regiment had commenced the very next morning after their introduction.

Every morning, Julius would receive direct tutelage from his father like that, making it routine for Joshua to hear the clashing of wooden swords in the early morning from his bed.

This morning was no exception, with a do-or-die spirit writ upon his face, Julius resolutely brandished the wooden sword—

Julius: "—Hk."

Father: "Do not lose focus. Your concentration is yet lacking, Julius."

The tip of his father's wooden sword sprang up elegantly, disarming the weapon from Julius's hand. Then, the fluttering blade was fastened to Julius's neck, and holding his breath, Julius dejectedly hung his head saying, "I-It is my defeat".

The voice admitting defeat oozed with frustration, and his father suddenly smiled,

Father: "It takes a great man to feel frustration over a loss against myself. I may look like this, but I too am a Knight of the kingdom. My blade has been honed for the sake of protecting the Kingdom, you shall not catch it lagging behind so easily."

Julius: "That's…! That's, I understand. But, that doesn't mean it's not frustrating. If I didn't feel frustration upon losing, then that wouldn't be me anymore."

Father: "—. I suppose you have inherited that strength of will from your father. Indeed, you are much like him."

Hearing Julius's words, his father held a distant gaze for but a moment. Julius was taken aback by the gaze that seemed to long for someone, and then his father shook his head with a "No".

Father: "By admitting your inability to defeat an opponent whom you well and truly cannot beat, you may waver in your meaning for holding the sword… I too have had to answer to these words. I wonder when it was that even my frustration faded."

Julius: “Unc… Father, I’m…”

Father: “It is unavoidable. Well then, go pick up your sword. Get changed, and then it is time to have breakfast.”

Julius: “…Yes.”

As his father indicated the end of their early morning training, Julius nodded with a look of incomprehension on his face, and then went to pick up his wooden sword. Then, upon gathering it, he noticed the presence of a spectator watching from the open window.

Joshua’s mouth opened with a brief “Ah” as he exchanged gazes with Julius.

For a moment, Joshua held his tongue at the awkward sensation, and Julius, after blinking several times,

Julius: “Ahh ummm… good morning, Joshua. Did you sleep well last night?”

Joshua understood that this was his elder brother’s best attempt at closing the distance, with it not having been very long since they had become siblings. Hence, as Joshua clutched his pajamas close to his chest, he forged a smile.

Joshua: “Yes, good morning to you. It seems like you have been working hard this morning, Nii-sama.”

As he prayed that no unpleasantness could be heard in that greeting, he wore that artificial smile.

6

Julius: “Originally, I never so much as even thought of anything like becoming a Knight.”

It was after they had finished eating breakfast together in Joshua’s room that Julius began to speak about that.

As long as his days of poor condition continued, Joshua would primarily have his meals in his own room.

The same went for this morning, but this time Julius had brought his own food there, and so they ended up eating together for some unknown reason. —No, to say it was an unknown reason would be a lie.

Ever since Julius suggested that they eat breakfast together, it had been clear to Joshua that he had wanted to talk about something. Julius's gaze restlessly glanced at Joshua to hasten him to finish his food, and as soon as they could talk did he begin with those initial words.

But then again, as most could probably imagine, the contents were regarding the special training regiment he was being given.

Joshua's father—who was now also Julius's father, but the head of Juukulius was now absorbed in eagerly training Julius, and his feelings of guilt concerning Joshua had vanished into thin air. Be that as it may, this was the Knightly education his father had been eagerly awaiting to give, so it was no wonder why he was so enthusiastic.

Of course, for Julius, who was actually undergoing that enthusiastic education, it must have been tough. —But, was it a sin for him to think it a blessing, even if it seemed difficult?

Julius: "I never thought that it would end up being like this. Every day is filled with things I didn't know."

Joshua: "—Back when you lived with your family at your old house, what did you spend your time doing, Nii-sama?"

Concealing his own inner thoughts, Joshua provided an outlet for Julius's woes.

Two siblings, a familial relationship that would go on for a long time, his own position within the family hereafter—nothing good would come to House Juukulius if he had a bad relationship with Julius.

Joshua had scored his family minus points at the very moment of his birth. He could not afford to incur any further losses.

At Joshua’s innocuous question, Julius titled his head saying, “House?”,

Julius: “At my house, I mostly just did things to help out mom and dad. If I wasn’t doing that, I would play with my friends near my house… I had no idea that I had relatives from such a house this big.”

Joshua: “…Did your late father tell you anything of House Juukulius?”

Julius: “Nothing at all! That’s why, when Uncle… when my current father came to get me, I was so surprised.”

Julius threw his arms up in an exaggerated gesture, to which Joshua narrowed his yellow eyes.

His father’s younger brother—Julius’s true father, the person who was his own uncle was somebody Joshua had heard many stories about. An eccentric of House Juukulius who did not become a Knight, immediately getting married to a town’s woman after his elder brother inherited the family headship, and started life like that without relying on his family.

Favoring the town life unthinkable for one born a Juukulius, he was a person who had abandoned the path of the Knight and chosen to live a modest and common life. It was not as though he was shunned, but he had little contact with his relatives.

The reason that that uncle and his wife passed away was due to a deluge from a river that had happened in the town where Julius had been living with his family; the two of them had been swept away by the flash flood whilst rescuing others.

Joshua: “They must have been admirable parents.”

Julius: “…”

Joshua: “Nii-sama?”

If the cause of their death was saving others, it was the result of their just and virtuous behavior.

In the end, even if he had drifted away from House Juukulius, his uncle had died in a manner befitting a Knight. That in itself could only be described as irony, but Joshua thought he could honestly respect his uncle and his wife.

Only, having hushed silent at Joshua's words, Julius bit his lip,

Julius: "Dad and Mom, they weren't anyone so special. But, everyone keeps telling me that they did something admirable, even Father says so. But…"

At that point, Julius sniveled. And then, with tears in his eyes, he continued.

Julius: "But, even if it wouldn't have been as admirable, I just wanted them to keep living. Is it strange for me to think that?"

Joshua: "That is…"

That was a question which Joshua could not find an answer to.

He had just thought so a moment prior. His uncle had died as a Knight, even if he had left House Juukulius. To Joshua, that seemed like a happiness greater than no other.

Born to a lineage of Knights, Joshua was a sinner who had lost that qualification from birth.

As a Juukulius, if Joshua could live and die like a Knight, then the only possible method to do so would be one akin to his uncle's final moments, such was how it seemed—.

Julius: "Mom and Dad both died, then Father brought me here to this house, and you became my little brother, Joshua, all sorts of things have changed all at once… however, I'm still worried."

Joshua: "…What, are you worried about?"

Without realizing, Joshua's question became stiff, and pointed.

He had a body he could move freely, he had a real father who had died like a Knight, Joshua's own father was happily providing him with the necessary training to become a Knight, the path that was supposed to have been walked by Joshua Juukulius, would from now on be walked by Julius Juukulius without question from anybody.

Even if not a Knight by birth, his elder brother would struggle onwards until he became a Knight. —Following the path desired of him, just what did Julius have to be worried about?

Joshua: "…"

With his head hanging down, Julius did not notice the sharp stare of Joshua's yellow eyes. Only, forcefully wiping his eyes with his sleeves, as his eyes went red,

Julius: "Just, just what am I supposed to do? Is it really fine for me to just keep doing as Father says? If I do that…"

—Would he become someone capable of repaying his dead mother and father?

As Julius could not find the words beyond the pause, in his place, Joshua comprehended the sentiments that he had wanted to say, that had perplexed him, tormented him, and distressed him.

For a discussion between young, newly-made siblings, this was surely a proposition that was too heavy.

However, at this time, Joshua earnestly deliberated. He pondered. Attempting to give the best response that he could to Julius's anguish, he fretted earnestly.

Why he was attempting to do such a thing, he knew not. —Only, he suddenly had a thought.

Julius Juukulius was a person who, as a Knight of House Juukulius, would go on to walk the path originally meant to be tread by Joshua Juukulius.

That was something he could curse. But, at the same time, was it not also possible for him to choose to not curse it?

—Despite having been born into a family of Knights, Joshua would live as a sinner who had failed to become a Knight.

—Despite having been raised as a commoner, Julius would go on to live as a Knight from a family of Knights.

These two lives were deeply intertwined by a complex destiny.

However, was that not precisely why meaning could be discovered therein?

The footsteps of Julius Juukulius would surely tread the unfulfilled path of Joshua Juukulius.

Joshua: “Hero…”

Suddenly, Julius widened his eyes with an “Eh?” at the word Joshua had muttered. As Julius looked at him in surprise, Joshua looked back into his elder brother’s eyes, and smiled.

Neither was it a smile hiding his self-derision, nor was it one to keep up appearance; it was a true, proper smile.

Joshua: “Nii-sama, your parents were admirable people. In that case, if you wish to be worthy of those parents, then Nii-sama must become a hero.”

Julius: “He-row… what’s that?”

He blinked his yellow eyes, however, his question harboring an unconcealable expectation, Julius enquired.

At his elder brother’s gaze, Joshua cast his eyes towards the bookshelf in his room. It contained various books from all sorts of times and places that his father had gathered for Joshua’s sake.

Within those books were Joshua’s aspirations, and the history that would become Julius’s ideals.

Julius: “Books…?”

Joshua: “So many histories, so many stories, so many legends. And in all of them, there are heroes.”

Julius: “I don’t get it… Are you telling me to become someone who would be written about in books?”

Joshua: “That is not the number one objective. But, neither is it a dream. If you become a hero.”

Julius: “So then what’s a hero?!”

Smiling at his elder brother, whose eyes were darting about, eager for the answer, Joshua contemplated.

Quietly, leisurely, he would impart unto him the tales of those heroes.

To his new “elder brother”, in order for Joshua Juukulius to entrust him with his wishes, he would sincerely impart them.

Joshua: “To begin with, who should I teach Nii-sama about first?”

When he thought about that, he got a little, just a little, excited.

Ever since this occasion, Joshua would eagerly await Julius’s visits to his room.

Thus, that was the day upon which the two of them became the Juukulius siblings for certain.

—The path for a Knight of House Juukulius to become a hero, the two brothers would thus walk it together.

7

—The scenery outside the window always appeared as a dream his hands could never reach.

Joshua: “Listen up, Nii-sama. A Juukulius must conduct himself with formality worthy of their name. And so, Nii-sama must go above and beyond that.”

Julius: “Even if you say to go above… what should I specifically do?”

Joshua: “Have I not told you many times already? —It is to be a hero.”

Asserting so, Joshua shoved the thick book in his hands towards the chest of his elder brother.

Even since the morning of the greatest vow of Joshua’s life, it had become a daily routine for Julius and Joshua to eat their breakfasts together, and discuss various things like this as siblings.

Most of the time, the contents of their discussion was Julius complaining about the strict Knightly education he was undergoing, as well as Joshua’s strict lectures brimming with aspiration on what it meant to be a Juukulius.

Thus, the book he just handed over was also a part of those hopeful lectures.

Julius: “Joshua, it can’t be, this book is…”

Joshua: “Indeed, I have finally gotten my hands on the continuation. “The Legend of Reid Astrea”, depicting the entire life of the first generation Sword Saint, Reid Astrea, this is the sixth book of the fifty total volumes.”

Julius: “Ooh, yes! After he beheaded that blight dragon, I’ve been curious as to what happened next!”

Eyes gleaming at the book at hand, Julius’s high spirits caused Joshua’s lips to curve into a smile.

Concurrent with his father’s Knightly education regiment, the progress of the hero education Joshua was giving to Julius was going smoothly. His elder brother, who had initially not been familiar with even the sound of “hero”, had been completely mesmerized by them after a short while.

To begin with, the honest and straightforward Julius was grounded in training. Just as a brand new blank canvas could be painted on, Julius was getting closer to Joshua's ideal day by day.

Joshua considered that growth of Julius's as equal to his own growth, and felt as if the adventures unfolding around Julius were great adventures for himself.

The scenery outside the window that he could absolutely never reach, to make it as if his hand was reaching it—.

Julius: "…Hm? What's the matter, Joshua? You're making a strange face."

Suddenly, Julius, who had been immersed in reading the book, looked up. Rather than the contents of the book, it seemed like he had been bothered by Joshua's gaze as it looked at his own side profile.

In response to Julius's question, Joshua forced a smile with a "No",

Joshua: "It is nothing important. Only, I am delighted that Nii-sama has taken such an interest in heroes."

Julius: "That isn't thanks to me, but rather because of how incredible the people in these books are."

Perhaps out of embarrassment, Julius averted his gaze and scratched the tip of his nose. Seeing his elder brother slightly flush red in the face, Joshua sighed, and,

Joshua: "Is it not all too much?"

Julius: "All too much?"

Joshua: "You have sword training with Father, as well as learning many other things, is that not so? On top of all that, you also have study sessions about heroes with me, and recently…"

Julius: "Ah, my Divine Protection? Yeah. I was also surprised by that."

As if to say it was no big deal, Julius laughed off the matter of his Divine Protection of Gathering Spirits.

It was roughly a month prior that Julius became aware of his Divine Protection—on a day upon which the siblings had ended up talking until it got dark, Joshua had screamed upon seeing the various faint lights accompanying him as they returned through the garden, and it was discovered that they were actually a gathering of Lesser Spirits.

Julius: “Since a long time ago, I’ve always had a vague feeling that I had somebody by my side, but I had no idea that those were actually Spirits. Thanks to them, I was never lonely.”

Joshua: “Is that so…? But, because of that you now also have more training for your Divine Protection, correct?”

Julius: “Ahh, you were asking if that was all too much? Hm, it’s a bit troublesome, but it’s not too much. For me, I think a little bit of troublesomeness is just right. I feel like I’m suited to doing troublesome things.”

Joshua: “Suited to doing troublesome things… fufu-, what is that supposed to mean, silly?”

Hearing a pride of the sort he had not heard before, Joshua involuntarily chuckled. Seeing his reaction, Julius folded his arms, saying “Ah, you laughed”,

Julius: “Listen, just think about it. It even applies to this book, but aren’t all the heroes always going through troublesome things? They overcome them, and have their names left in history… all of them are experts on troublesome stuff!”

Joshua: “So you mean to say, that being suited to troublesomeness gives you the makings of a hero, Nii-sama?”

Julius: “Exactly! That makes you glad too, doesn’t it Joshua?”

With a cheerful smile, Julius pounded his chest. That attitude made Joshua half-exasperated, and half-hopeful, so he nodded with an “Indeed”.

Regardless if that was truly the case, the fact that Julius was being spurred on by his own perception was more important than anything else. Joshua wanted his elder brother to walk the path of the Knight, the path to become a hero with his chest puffed up in pride, not reluctantly.

In order to grant the dearest wish of Julius Juukulius, and by extension, of Joshua Juukulius, that would surely play a part.

They were both still children. Without rushing, they would steadily progress step by step.

That was the siblings', Joshua and Julius's, path as Knights of House Juukulius.

That road, steep and long, they would take their time and walk it together—

—The moment he laid eyes upon the boy of red-hair, he realized that such an ideal was entirely naive.

Joshua: "…"

Blazing red hair, and blue eyes that captured a clear azure sky. Treading with a gallant air atop the carpet laid out was a child the same age as Joshua, yet to even turn ten years old.

Ascending to the Royal Castle, and granted an audience with the King to receive his exalted words, it was an important occasion.

Once a child born of the lineages of Knights and nobles serving the Kingdom reached a certain age, they would be brought before His Majesty the King in a ceremony held for them to pledge their allegiance into the future.

On this day, the siblings Joshua and Julius were brought by their father to ascend to the Royal Castle.

Originally it was supposed to be an opportunity to unveil Julius, but wanting to see his elder brother's big moment, Joshua had begged and pleaded to be taken along.

The King and the old men of the Council of Wise Men, the audience gathered of the people at the center of the Kingdom of Lugunica, Joshua proudly awaited the moment to find out what sort of evaluation they would give to Julius.

That young, naive outlook was shattered without a trace by the mere sight of a “hero” walking.

Joshua, who admired “heroes”, and had aspired to tailor Julius into one, clearly understood.

Unmistakably, that was a “hero”. That was the very definition, of a “hero”.

He might have been a child, but a child was naught more than the form he took. He might have been a human, but a human was naught more than the form he took.

Joshua: “—Ah.”

Chancing upon the intensity of such a “hero”, Joshua felt a violent sense of suffocation, and cast his gaze down. Immediately after looking down, he became curious as to the reaction of Julius beside him, and peered his way.

Joshua thought his elder brother might be experiencing the same level of impact as he was, wondering if his eyes had maybe clouded over—

Julius: “—That, is the real deal.”

Indeed, as Julius unconsciously vocalized his admiration, none of the selfsame humiliation felt by Joshua tarnished his side profile.

—Humiliation, realizing his own thoughts to be such, Joshua was astonished.

Joshua: “…”

Humiliation, yes, it was humiliation.

What Joshua experienced upon witnessing the sight of that “hero” was unmistakably humiliation. Today, all of Joshua’s diligent studies up until this very moment were entirely denied by the nature of that “hero”.

The matter of still being a child, the matter of only having just begun learning, all of that was nothing more than excuses, the existence of a “hero” who ought to have had the same amount of time denied him.

Then, Julius, who ought to have received the same impact as Joshua, was watching with eyes gleaming. —It was just as if he had ended up discovering a different dream, a different ideal, a different path to walk than those belonging to Joshua.

Father: “—Hk, Joshua!”

It was too late by the time they noticed.

Unable to breath, Joshua clutched his chest and collapsed, his father’s arms promptly supporting him. However, Joshua’s consciousness faded away, and his world went black.

His father’s voice, Julius’s voice were both calling out to him, but he could muster no response. —In truth, he had no proof that Julius had actually been calling out to him.

Perhaps Julius was not even looking at Joshua, and was even now staring at that “hero”.

To be able to say that such was not a possibility, Joshua could not find enough value in his own existence.

Only, if there was anything he could say for certain, there was just one thing. —The path walked by Julius Juukulius, and the path walked by Joshua Juukulius, were by no means the same.

8

After that, Joshua’s physical condition rapidly declined.

Unable to get out of bed, his days assailed by feverish nightmares continued for a while.

The healers and members of the household all told him to rest well, but he could not rest. Whenever he closed his eyes, he would recall the events in that audience chamber, destroying Joshua's heart many times over again.

The catalyst, had been the existence of that "hero".

But, what truly shattered Joshua's heart was not the nature of that "hero", but rather—

???: "—Joshua, how are you feeling?"

Joshua: "…Nii-sama."

Opening the door of the room by a crack, the voice that came in was Julius's, worried about Joshua. Having received a response, his elder brother sighed, braced his expression, and walked over to him.

So as to not show Julius his weak face, Joshua clawed at his own arms and forged an expression.

Joshua: "Today is, somewhat, I guess… Nii-sama, how are you?"

Julius: "I'm… no, I am progressing favorably. Father also seemed quite surprised that I had changed."

Whether it was to relieve him, or if it was just his true feelings, Julius's expression had a certain strength to it.

His elder brother's demeanor had somewhat settled, clearly distinct to before when his objective had been uncertain, it now appeared as the strong will of one who had firmly decided on the path they were striving towards.

And, the moment in which Julius had determined his path was one in which Joshua had also been present.

And yet, even though they ought to have beheld the same sight, why, for Joshua, was that path—

Julius: "Joshua, is there anything you would like to do?"

Joshua: "…Anything, I would like to do, is it?"

With a neat expression, Joshua regurgitated the question, and Julius nodded as a Knight would.

As that reaction caused his heart to ache, Joshua pondered for a moment, and then glanced outside the window.

Outside the window of his room was the courtyard in which Julius would be instructed in swordsmanship every morning. There was an appa tree growing at the edge of the courtyard—it was something that had been planted to celebrate Joshua's birth.

Currently, he could see that the appa tree was bearing fruit of a bright red hue.

Joshua: "…Appa."

Julius: "Hm? Appa… ahh, those appas?!"

Following Joshua's line of sight, Julius clapped his hands when he noticed the appa tree. Then, Julius forcefully pounded his chest, saying, "Alright, got it",

Julius: "Leave it to me. After all, this Nii-sama of yours will make you happy!"

Jumping to conclusions, Julius vigorously charged out of the room. To his back, Joshua reached out his hand with an "Ah". But, it did not reach him.

The hand that had failed to reach him, was not something that Julius even noticed.

Joshua: "What a fool I am."

In high spirits, with vigor, the back ran off. He had been mistaken to think he was the same as him.

Having gotten the mistaken idea in his head that he could be the same, he was laughable, utterly foolish, stupid, and pitiful.

Swiftly climbing up the distant garden tree, Julius quietly secured the appa. As if to celebrate the deed performed out of consideration for his younger brother, the radiance of Spirits could be seen surrounding him.

Unable to bear the sight of that, Joshua covered his face with his hands, averting his eyes from the window.

And then, for the first time in a long while, he keenly felt it. —That he, was a sinner by birth.

Joshua: “—Ah, why is it that I am still alive?”

As soon as he admitted his own sins, his foolishness, Joshua felt his body getting lighter, and laughed.

As the tears besmeared his cheeks, he laughed, laughed, he continued to laugh.

—Ever since then, Joshua had firmly reevaluated his own existence.

He must never get the wrong idea. He must never set his sights too high.

He must never disdain that wonderful elder brother, Julius Juukulius, as being the same as himself.

In place of his inadequate self, all the righteousness, all the magnificence of a Juukulius, would be fulfilled by Julius. Accomplished, by Julius. Proved, by Julius.

It was fine for Joshua Juukulius to be nothing more than a straw mat to be walked over on that path.

9

???: “…”

Alongside the old, nostalgic memory, Joshua recalled an ache in his heart, and narrowed his eyes.

Having departed Anastasia’s office, Joshua had come to a halt in the hallway, and at the sense of deja vu from the scenery outside the window, he perceived the presence of a red appa similar to back then.

He would not think of that as a bitter memory. He considered the accompaniment of pain as a necessary wound.

Joshua: “Though, it is ironic that ever since that happened, my constitution has stopped breaking down.”

The members of the household joked that it was the effect of the appa that Julius had given him.

In actuality, that day had been a turning point for Joshua’s condition to dramatically improve, and he was no longer assailed by fevers in bed. —As if his feelings to not get in the way of his elder brother had borne an effect on his body.

And now, Joshua’s way of living ceasing at that alone was nothing he would deem acceptable.

Joshua: “No matter what, I need to be useful to Nii-sama.”

That was the best course of action that Joshua could take as the younger brother of Julius Juukulius. For him, unable to reach the “Finest”, it was the “Best” he could do.

???: “Golly, Joshua, why’re ya standin’ ‘round like a fool ‘n yer face all pale! Not feelin’ well?!”

Then, upon renewing his feelings, a voice boomed so loud that it made the window he was touching shake. When he turned around, there was a large dogman striding towards him with large steps.

Joshua: “Ricardo-san… I am actually surging with energy. Can you not tell by looking at me?”

Ricardo: “Ohh, that so? Couldn’t tell in the slightest! Yer face is way too pale as always!”

Joshua: “Hmm, that is a bit upsetting…”

Upon Ricardo's words that sounded like an angry shout, Joshua adjusted the position of his dislodged monocle.

In reality, it was the truth that motivation was welling up inside him. Since a long time ago, Joshua's body would begin to produce energy the moment he decided on something as his objective. There was no doubt that this was of the same pedigree.

Ricardo: "I'd completely thought that ya'd be in a huge panic over bein' sent over to the elf lady's place! If ya ain't down in the dumps, then I can rest assured even with Mimi goin'! Countin' on ya!"

Joshua: "If it was just a bit prior, I would not have been able to earnestly accept the encouragement, by my current self is alright. Please leave it to me. I will firmly fulfill my role in supervising Mimi."

Ricardo: "Gotcha, gotcha, that's darn wonderful! Well, go do yer best without overdoin' yer best, yeah?!"

With a bit of difficult advice, Ricardo clapped Joshua on the back with his huge palm.

Crying out a "Gyan!", Joshua's monocle fell off and tears emerged in his eyes as he stared at Ricardo. As expected, he did not have any energy to resist physical damage, so he burst into a coughing fit.

Joshua: "Ghoghhh, Ricardo-san! If you act like that to everyone, the reputation of our Camp will…!"

Ricardo: "Darn it, happened again! My bad, my bad! Wahahahahaha!"

Joshua: "This is no time to be "wahaha"-ing, truly!"

Ricardo patted his own head casually, prompting Joshua to take a very deep breath.

However, contrary to Joshua's feelings, Ricardo's expression was somewhat amused. Joshua glanced back with a "What is it?", and,

Ricardo: "Nothin', ain't nothin', I was just impressed at how familiar ya've become with the lot of us, Joshua."

Joshua: "That is… well, now that you say it, I suppose that is so."

Ricardo: "See? That's the spirit. Even if they've got beef with the Miss over at the elf lady's place, they ain't gotta have beef with us."

Joshua: "…"

Ricardo laughed as he flashed his fangs, and when thinking back on it, even this smile had been something he had been afraid of.

That had also been the case with the triplets of Mimi, Hetaro, and Tivey, and it had even been the case with Anastasia. To begin with, Joshua was not good with the world around him expanding, and many times had he stopped in his tracks.

Only, it was Joshua's doctrine to have just the right amount of caution so as to ensure prudence, without going too far and ending up with cowardice.

Joshua: "Hence, I will humbly be taking that with a grain of salt."

Ricardo: "Kah! Now ain't ya a cheeky one!"

As Ricardo heartily burst into laughter, Joshua did understand his point. But, it was fine.

Led by Julius's hand, those present in his unexpectedly widened world were Anastasia and the members of the Iron Fang, so Joshua would not think to desire more than that, nor would he wish for it.

—Even if he reached his hand out towards the appa, he would never be able to reach it, such was Joshua's life.

10

—Via such ideas, Joshua Juukulius's job as an envoy was fulfilled.

There should be no problem in asserting such. In truth, Mimi's worried-for rampage or the danger of the Emilia Camp per rumors, had not exhibited enough hazard for Joshua to be on guard.

Above all, it was not that there had been no problems.

The run-in with the “Lolimancer” in question had left him with an unanticipatedly queer impression, Mimi recklessly getting entangled with the combat attaché of Emilia camp, many scenes had wracked his nerves.

But, looking at the overall picture, with there having been no obstructions on the way to and fro, and having safely delivered the letter, he could praise himself as having scored perfectly as an envoy.

However, what was delivered to Emilia was only an invitation—as a member of Anastasia camp, whether it would serve useful to his master and affiliated Julius would come down to what happened thereon.

—A convening of the Royal Candidates, in the Watergate City of Priestella; the success of which would determine that result.

And right now, with the reassured addition of Emilia Camp, the day after confirming the arrival of Crusch Camp and Felt Camp, Joshua had been entrusted with a vital task from Anastasia and was currently away from the inn.

His mission was—

???: “—So it was very much this letter! Then I would very much be honored to have been of help!”

Faced with the youth smiling from his heart as he pronounced so, Joshua responded with a “Yes” as he lowered his eyelids in relief.

Joshua: “It was an extremely, exceedingly, invariably important letter. I would not be able to show my face before anyone had I been unable to return with this. You are, um…”

Schult: “Ah! I very much am Schult, Onii-san.”

Joshua: “—Schult-kun. Had you not been there, House Juukulius would have faced an enormous blemish to its name on this day. Thank you for safeguarding the history of my family…!”

Schult: “It is very much my honor!”

Before the bowing Joshua was a youth embarrassed but not fully unwelcoming of the gesture—Schult. Whilst expressing gratitude to the sheepish boy, Joshua ascertained a sensation on his chest.

In the interior of the coat his hand touched, was a singular letter—which he had received from a messenger at one of the city’s great entry gates under Anastasia’s instruction.

Unsealed was the letter. Its particulars even Joshua ignorant of, he knew on this day it would bear an important integrand to the assemblage of the Royal Candidates invited to Priestella. Such that one candidate had carried themselves all the way for the purpose of this very letter’s content.

Only this crucial, vital letter could he not lose—

Schult: “But, when I saw Onii-san speed walking after the letter flitting about in the air, I was very much surprised as well!”

Joshua: “Ugk! I-I apologize for the tremendous inconvenience… for the record, I was not speed walking but sprinting.”

Schult: “Is that very much so! Thanks to Onii-san’s slow scuttle, I’m very much glad I was able to catch up timely! I was very much able to deliver the letter as well!”

Schult with his wide smile bore no ill-will, the cause of his perturb fully being Joshua’s deficit stamina and slow feet, so he resignedly perturbed.

Anyhow, Joshua was rescued from a self-induced failure by Schult thanks to him picking the letter kidnapped by the mischievous gale. He could do anything to repay the favor.

And to Joshua’s subsequent proposal, Schult bashfully covered his eyes,

Schult: “The truth is, very much embarrassingly so, I got lost. Should it pose no problem, I’d very much like if you could find my master with me…!”

Alongside the boy who gave an unprayed opportunity for repaying a favor, Joshua walked.

Coincidentally upon hearing the details, the place Schult strayed away from his master seemed to be in close proximity to the Water Plumage Pavilion where Joshua and everyone else were lodging, relieving him that he could guide him there.

Joshua: “To propose repaying a favor and then being of no assistance, precisely that would make me lose face.”

Schult’s circumstance of being a lost child was capable of eliciting smiles, but this was Priestella, counted among the five great cities of Lugunica. Pathways complicated connected to the waterways spread throughout the city, and with no signboards, it was an artificial labyrinth where grown adults could lose sight of their destination.

Joshua: “The truth is, the city was structured as a trap against hostile, apparently. Therefore, the complicated routes are an arrangement to that end.”

Schult: “Whoa~, Onii-san, you are very much extremely knowledgeable. Where did you learn of such a thing?”

Joshua: “All of it is what I have picked up from books. Not something I learned from personal firsthand experience, none whatsoever.”

Waving one finger, as he recited a part of Priestella’s history, Joshua then expressed a bitter smile. But to his bitter smile, Schult enunciated a “Is that the case?” as he tilted his neck,

Schult: “My master also often reads books. And, often says this. — True knowledge is to haul substance what is learned from books at the necessary moment.”

Joshua: “…”

Schult: “Therefore, Onii-san, who properly apprised me of what he studied from books, is an upstanding and cool person is what I think!”

Joshua gulped a single breath before Schult, who clutched his hand to his chest in emphasis.

No superfluous concern or pity towards Joshua lodged in the words of the sincere youth. Schult was merely vocalizing the philosophy he had learned and believed in.

And that was something Schult had learned and received from his master.

Joshua: “Schult-kun, you respect that person, do you not?”

Schult: “…Yes very much! So much so that the word “respect” is insufficient to convey it! Do you also have someone you respect, Onii-san?”

Joshua: “—. Hehe. I was awaiting that question.”

Schult: “Oh! I am very much glad I was able to live up to expectations!”

Joshua nodded as Schult pleasedly raised both of his arms, subsequently pointing his palm towards the sky. Pulled along in the same direction, Schult raised his face, ahead of his sight the sun.

Of course, peering directly at the sun would scorch the seer’s eyes.

Joshua: “And, for me, my Nii-sama is truly someone of such radiant gleam.”

Schult: “Onii-san’s onii-san is it! He very much seems amazing somehow!”

Joshua: “Precisely! Nii-sama is amazing. He can do anything, and he is endeavoring to be capable of doing everything. His way of being, his stride of life, his will, truly the Finest!”

Schult: “That is very cool! Radiant like the sun… very much like Priscilla-sama!”

Joshua’s mood also ascended as Schult listened on in high spirits.

Yes, Julius was amazing, wonderful. Despite befitting such indefeasible commend, his elder brother's evaluation of himself was far too low. He wished for him to recognize his own efforts, his devotion more.

Therefore, he must in perpetuity keep saying, you are amazing.

In Joshua's stead who was a disappointment for an heir, this was the elder brother's, House Juukulius's successor's–,

Schult: "Truly, you love your brother, Onii-san!"

Joshua: "…"

Schult: "Listening to it, I very much became happy as well! Ugh, I would very much like to meet Onii-san's onii-san!"

In obedience and innocence had Schult taken his words, to which Joshua blinked a few times and subsequently inhaled, deep.

It was truth that whenever he thought of Julius, ancillary noise he did not wish to listen to conjured within him. However, in response to Schult's sincere reply, he had a singular thing he could say.

About what Joshua thought of Julius, his upstanding, apogee-willed elder brother.

Joshua: "—. Yes. My Nii-sama is perfect, so once you meet him, Schult-kun, I'm sure you would become incapable of withstanding his charm. You might start wanting to change where you serve."

Schult: "Th-Th-Th-That very much is not true! I am singularly devoted very much to Priscilla-sama!"

Joshua smiled as Schult bashfully flurried his limbs and exclaimed.

The thought he had of wanting to have him meet his elder brother, was true. Having delightedly listened to the anecdote of his elder brother, he would assuredly immediately get along with Joshua's elder brother whom he took so much pride in. Finding it heartwarming, just by the anticipation Joshua felt his chest lighten.

Naturally, he must prioritize his work pertaining to the Royal Selection, including delivering the letter, so he must consider Schult's matter afterwards–,

Joshua: "…"

It was an instant afterwards that an abrupt sensation of unrest tickled Joshua's tympanic membrane.

Schult: "—? Huh? What, happened?"

Noticing the same aberration as Joshua, Schult too halted his march and tilted his head.

Ahead of the two who had been heading towards the inn, a commotion proliferating in an avenue of the lively city, feeling its progressive augmentation was drawing imminent to them–,

Joshua: "Schult-kun, please make haste and run."

Schult: "Onii-san?"

Upon discerning the identity of the uproar, Joshua addressed Schult. To the perplexed youth who rounded his eyes, Schult, Joshua proffered a hand.

What lay present in his hand was the vital letter Joshua bore the responsibility to deliver.

Joshua: "Please take this. Such that your master, delivers it to my Nii-sama."

Upon Joshua's voice that allowed neither assent or dissent, Schult accepted the letter with a trembling palm. Joshua then took a further step forward of Schult, and loudly vociferated,

Joshua: "Run!"

Abiding by his voice, Schult dashed in the opposite direction as though strummed. As though pursuing the scurrying young boy, in the same direction a stampeding crowd hurtled.

Whilst crossing against that shrieking crowd, Joshua advanced towards the other side all the more.

And—

???: “—Gluttonous drinking-! Gluttony-!”

Brutish and violent, resounding a voice oozing with arousal, his short limbs swung and spattered blood onto the avenue.

Leaking a bitter grumble, flicked away were the guards charged with protecting the city. The soldiers, armed with swords, armor and will, however, were minced and diced like scraps of paper in atrocious cruelty.

The one to execute this, was a lump of black agilely crawling like a worm. —Not a clod of mud or shadows, but a being with hair grown long enough to veneer his short frame, abetting notice of the maleficent glint in his wicked glare.

???: “Haha~! That won’t do, won’t-do-won’t-do, completely won’t do-! Even though there’s so many people, doesn’t alleviate our starvation at all-! If it’s like this, we won’t be fulfilled-!”

Tenaciously expressing so, the proprietor of the ominous glint lorded over his surroundings. Colliding with his line of sight, was a crouched and cowering woman delayed in her escape, shouting “Hk”. Seeming as though her legs were incapable of harboring strength, towards the shrunken lady, slowly and steadily, footsteps drew closer.

???: “Judging from looks, Onee-san seems to be more the type to be Roy’s responsibility, isn’t i~t. But, there’s also the possibility of perchance being a delicacy, for the sake of trying let’s just try and see~.”

???: “P, lease… please! Please, forgive m… ~hk.”

???: “—Nope.”

The plea of the tearful woman resolved for death, the short frame, whilst exhibiting his sharp fangs, blasphemed upon.

His slender hand slowly reaching on, lethal weapons that had turned the soldiers into piles of blood, and the woman in identical manner, would afterwards be ended. —Right on its verge.

Joshua: “…That is, not beautiful.”

???: “E~h?”

One eyebrow raised, the blasphemer of life leaked an utterance doused in keen interest. His evaluating gaze, towards Joshua, who had broken into the space between him and the lady.

Of course, merely wedging his body in between, he could never obstruct the blasphemer’s intent of hazard. Henceforth, Joshua borrowed the sword of one of the collapsed soldiers, and repelled the opponent by charging at him with a blade.

Joshua: “Even if you can only manage crawling, please run. While I, have his attention at me.”

???: “—~Hk, I’m so sorry!”

Positioning his feet forward, Joshua faced off against the blasphemer, and the woman understood to leave that behind to run and escape.

He received an apology, but that was fine. He wanted her to run. Should the blasphemer attempt to obstruct her escape, he would—

???: “A~h, it’s unneede~d, that concern. That kind of prey seeming to be so sticky compared to that flavor, it’s not worthy of being placed on our platter either you see~. Rather than that, it’s you, yo~u.”

Joshua: “What about, me?”

???: “Feels mellow and rich. We love, people like Onii-san who have various emotions like condiments or spices abou~ndingly mixed in. Gonna start drooli~ng.”

In the eye of the blasphemer sticking his tongue out and licking his lips, witnessing a marked appetite overflow in literal accordance with his words, chilling shivers assailed Joshua's spine.

Though he did not possibly want to consider being the target of a will to seriously eat a human—

Joshua: "Even if that is taken to be the case, that is all the more reason to not leave you as is…!"

???: "Though the might didn't seem any good, the might is ni~ce. Even if that is serious or bluff, it's a pleasing touch of seasoning for enhancing and augmenting the scent and flavor you see~! Gluttonous drinking-! Gluttony-!"

Clasping his hands to which daggers were tied, before his chest, the blasphemer clanged a shrill note of applause. Listening to that, Joshua quietly calmed his own heart.

Joshua: "—Nii-sama, please remain safe."

Gripping fast to the sensation of the sword, Joshua comprehended that his worst moment was right before his eyes, imminently approaching him.

What awaited him, was the ineluctable end. Yet, Joshua's heart had fallen lifelessly silent, even though his self was normally scared by everything, he was unable to understand himself.

—Merely, sword in hand, at this very moment of confronting the blasphemer of life that terrorized people, he surmised.

Joshua: "Someone like me, seeming as though I were a Knight…"

In days past, when he was yet a child, when his mistaken self had spoken to his elder brother, he thought back to.

Just as Julius's father, who had stepped away from House Juukulius, Joshua's uncle had lost his life, his stride of death befitting that of being a Knight, that alone was the solitary way, Joshua Juukulius could become a Knight.

???: "—Let's eat-!"

The irony, cognizing the arrival of that moment, Joshua smiled, and raised his sword overhead.

Gallant, unwavering, the sword's shimmer drawing an arc, was unmistakably the sword of Juukulius swung to protect people, to protect the weak.

—A younger brother worthy of the "Finest", the guardian sword of Joshua Juukulius.

END

Joshua Juukulius’s Careful Encyclopedia Ex (Edited Machine Translation)

1

—The scenery outside the window always looked like an illusion that was out of reach to me.

“—Joshua, what are ya doin’?”

“Wha?!”

Suddenly, a voice called out to him from beside him, making Joshua’s shoulders jump up and down like a child who had been caught playing a prank.

“Sorry, sorry, I startled ya by calling out to ya out of the blue, huh?”

“N-No, that’s not true. It was because I was spacing out…”

As Joshua turned around, adjusting his monocle that had shifted out of place, he responded to the gentle smile of his master—Anastasia.

In truth, it was Joshua’s mistake. Anastasia hadn’t tried to hide her presence, and she probably had no intention of surprising Joshua. After all, she wasn’t Mimi.

“But speaking of intentions, Mimi doesn’t mean to surprise anyone either. She just surprises people with her honest words and actions…”

“Fufufu, it seems like Joshua has gotten to know my children well. I’m very happy that they’re gettin’ along. And…”

“And?”

"Ya seemed to be starin' intently at them just now, didn't ya?"

Stroking the white fox scarf around her neck, Anastasia, who was standing next to Joshua, turned her light blue eyes to the outside of the window—to the Iron Fang's training being carried out there.

The garden of the Juukulius mansion in the royal capital was quite spacious and was now filled with about twenty people, giving it a lively appearance. At the center of it all was Ricardo with a large hatchet on his shoulder, and the people around him—all beastmen—were attacking him one by one.

It was a scene of Ricardo, the leader of the Iron Fang, harshly treating his members.

Naturally, among the people Ricardo was fighting was—

"Hey! Captain, it's time to finish this!"

"Ya idiot, if you're gonna surprise me, keep quiet! But you're energetic, that's one of yer good points!"

Raising a spirited voice, Mimi also jumped from behind Ricardo.

As per his sound advice, the surprise attack that revealed the attacker's presence was easily avoided, and Ricardo caught Mimi's robe with his hatchet and threw her far away.

"Yikes, I can't watch this. I'm glad they didn't get hurt."

"Ricardo is skilled and Mimi is also agile. Besides, I don't think there aren't any injuries. Training is about getting hit and getting hit and learning from that."

"—Hm?"

Anastasia covered her face with her hands and watched the members of the group train through the gaps between her fingers. She gave Joshua a meaningful sidelong glance in response to his answer.

Joshua blinked and said, "Ah."

"S-Sorry! I was being too bold! I'm just standing here watching the training and pretending to understand…"

"What? There's no need ta panic like that. I'm not angry at all, I'm actually impressed. Joshua is the son of a family of knights after all."

"The son of a family of knights…"

Anastasia mediated, but Joshua was at a loss for words.

Those expressions and titles were the least suitable for Joshua Juukulius at the moment. He would have preferred to keep his mouth shut if he was to receive such an evaluation—

"Joshua? Why did ya go quiet?"

"Wha?!"

As he slowly lowered his head, the woman peered at his face so closely that he could feel her breath, and Joshua screamed as he crashed into the wall behind him. The crash sounded so loud it seemed as if the window in the hallway would break, and Anastasia put her hand over her mouth.

"Yer such a hectic kid. I think my face isn't that good-lookin' though."

"I-I think Lady Anastasia is cute and beautiful!"

"I feel like I made ya say that. But thanks."

"It's just, well, I wasn't mentally prepared for it…"

Feeling his own heart pounding in his palm, Joshua was busy trying to control his face, which was turning red and blue, along with the emotions that were linked to it.

Of course, what he said was not a lie. Her large, round, light blue eyes brimming with curiosity, her pretty features that were perfectly positioned, and her long eyelashes that could rival Julius's were all very attractive.

So Joshua's current panic was due to the thorn that had been stuck in his heart for so long.

"If you're the son of a family of knights, you should be standing on the other side of the window, not this side. Instead of speaking wisely, you should silently prove your position with your sword… To give me such an evaluation is not only a waste, but disrespectful."

"…"

"That's why! My brother who perfectly embodies the ideals of a knight is wonderful! With abilities and achievements like his, there's no need to be silent. On the contrary! From the perspective of the other person, it's only natural that they'd want advice on everything!"

Clenching his fist tightly, Joshua emphasized how amazing Julius was, a man who went above and beyond the typical image of a knight.

Yes, Julius was a true knight. The only one who deserved to be called "the son of a family of knights" was Julius, who had accumulated the achievements that one should have. But he exaggerated a bit. The other knight families were also surely striving to be worthy, even if they weren't as good as Julius.

Unworthy strays were far more rare and far more wrong.

"—. Julius really is important to Joshua, huh?"

"Yes! I think it's presumptuous to say that, but even if I gave…yes, even if I gave everything, it still wouldn't be enough; he's an amazing person!"

Though Joshua felt a slight sense of discomfort at the implication, he answered Anastasia with vigor. Anastasia nodded several times, saying "I see, I see," and then turned her gaze out the window again.

"Maybe it's because of that? Joshua seems to have pretty sharp eyes. It seems like ya even saw Mimi bein' sent flyin' earlier."

“That’s… That may be true. I’ve always watched my brother train with my father since I was little. In that sense, I was in an environment that was the envy of the kingdom’s knights.”

Joshua clapped his hands, realizing that Anastasia’s point had that kind of aspect to it.

Certainly, Julius’s training was something that many knights would be willing to pay to watch, as he was one of the elite of the Royal Guard and was even called the “Finest”. If you had watched him improve steadily since he was a child, it was understandable that you would have discerning eyes—

“No one can imitate Julius’s trainin’ anyway, so if we made a spectacle of it, how much…”

“L-Lady Anastasia? I heard some really impure calculation…”

“Oh, sorry, sorry, don’t worry about it. Whenever I see somethin’ that could lead to a business opportunity, I can’t help but think about how I can make money from it.”

“That being said, if you could not include my brother in that…”

Julius was a generous and caring person, so if any knights asked to watch his training, he would gladly accept. Joshua was frustrated that Anastasia had turned this into a money-making scheme, as if Julius’s humanity and cultivated skills were being converted into money.

His inner thoughts must have been more apparent as Anastasia laughed and said, “Don’t make that face.”

“I’m sorry if my bad habit made ya feel uneasy. It’s Joshua’s privilege to be able to watch Julius’s trainin’. I won’t take it away.”

“No, that’s not what I meant! Please don’t embarrass me…”

As if she was enjoying teasing Joshua, Anastasia’s smile deepened even more, so Joshua turned away from her and narrowed his yellow eyes, looking at the soldiers training once more.

Not having learned her lesson, Mimi came running back and jumped on Ricardo again—

“It looks like this time Hetaro and Tivey will join.”

“Really?”

“Yes. Look—”

As Anastasia tilted her head, she looked towards Ricardo, but Mimi, who looked like she was going to jump straight at him, suddenly turned around at the last moment, and while he was distracted, Hetaro and Tivey, who had quietly approached, launched a surprise attack from the side of Ricardo.

However, the brilliant teamwork of the three siblings was ineffective against Ricardo, who was swinging his large hatchet.

“It wasn’t bad! Mimi, yer eyes were wanderin’ too much! Hetaro and Tivey, ya need ta hide yer presence better!”

“You got us! Captain, you’re amazing!!”

The three of them who were hanging from the end of Ricardo’s hatchet were being spun around above his head by a laughing Ricardo, and they could be heard squealing with joy and screaming.

Joshua, watching from afar, smiled at Anastasia beside him and said,

“It turned out just as I said, didn’t it? But Ricardo who didn’t seem bothered by that is incredible. He is worthy of being Brother’s training partner.”

“…”

“Lady Anastasia?”

Joshua was impressed, but then he suddenly noticed that Anastasia hadn’t said a word and became worried that he had upset her somehow.

However, Anastasia shook her head in response to Joshua's question and replied,

"It's nothin', it's nothin'. …Joshua, ya really have good eyes."

"I-I'm sorry to hear you praise me so many times, but… Ha! Maybe this is a prelude to a big request or a big scolding?! That's why you're being so kind today…?"

"Hey, hey, hey, I'm always kind, ain't I?"

Anastasia's hand suddenly reached out and pinched his cheek, and Joshua murmured, "It hurts." Anastasia laughed mischievously at the answer, leaving Joshua very confused.

It was true that Anastasia was generous and kind to her family. Joshua was relieved to think that not only Julius, but he, too, was included in that group.

However—

"Is it just my imagination that the way Lady Anastasia looked at me just now is the same as when she was thinking about making money earlier?"

2

"—Joshua, that kid, is it possible he could become somethin'?"

After finishing up her day's work and looking over the firm's income and expenditure report, Anastasia asked this to Julius, who had invited her over during her break.

Julius was a little surprised to hear his loyal master speak of his younger brother, but he didn't show it on his face and continued,

"Joshua? I'm glad that my younger brother is being praised, but what did you notice about Joshua, Lady Anastasia?"

"Today my kids were trainin' in the garden, right? Ricardo was in the middle, and Mimi and the other members of the group were jumpin' on him."

"I heard the same thing from the members of the household. … Don't tell me, did Joshua join in?"

"No, it's not that bad. I just happened to come across him while watchin' in the hallway."

"Is, that so?"

Julius sat down, having almost risen from his seat, and played with his bangs with his fingers, smiling bitterly. Anastasia's cute brow quirked in response to Julius's reaction.

"Hm~ What, what? From yer reaction just now, there must be somethin', right?"

"As expected, you have a keen eye. …Did you notice anything as Joshua watched the Iron Fang's training, Lady Anastasia?"

"I thought his eyes were good. There were other things too, but that was the main thing."

Anastasia pointed to her own eyes with two fingers, and Julius sighed softly.

Anastasia, a great merchant of Kararagi, had an eye for beauty that could discern not only things, but also people. And if something met Anastasia's eye,

"As expected, Joshua has something extraordinary."

"Ya say as expected, but ya weren't certain of it, were ya?"

"Unfortunately. As you probably know, Lady Anastasia, Joshua was weak when he was young and was unable to receive a proper knight education."

"It seems so. He seems to be in much better shape now, and apart from bein' a little too thin, I don't see any signs of weakness at all."

"Yes. As he grew, those problems faded away. That in itself is something to be pleased about, but…"

Julius stopped talking and turned his gaze out the window.

In the corner of the garden of the Juukulius mansion, which could be overlooked from the room prepared for Anastasia, there was a tree with appas growing on it. He remembered the day Joshua first asked for that appa.

While recalling those distant days—

“I often heard from my father that Joshua had been forced to give up his education due to his health condition but that he had a natural talent for swordsmanship.”

“…It seems like yer father had a good eye for that too.”

“After all, it was his own son. But that was why he was so frustrated. Because of that, I received very strict instruction from my father.”

“But thanks to that, Julius is who he is today.”

“Yes.” Julius nodded vigorously to Anastasia’s words.

As a child, despite his actions and words, Julius sometimes resented the hardships that befell him, but now he was deeply grateful for them.

His father’s regret and frustration became the strict guidance he gave Julius, shaping him into the person he was today.

“And it’s not just my father’s guidance. If Joshua ever decides to take up the sword, I don’t want to be a big brother who loses so easily.”

“Oh, that’s surprisin’. Ya also have that competitive spirit, huh, Julius?”

“Of course I have pride and dignity. I may not show it much to you, Lady Anastasia, but I’ve always been quite competitive. However…”

“However?”

"The reason I don't want to lose to Joshua isn't because of my pride as a knight or a man, but because I want to be an older brother that my younger brother respects."

Slightly relaxing his lips, Julius defined his feelings for Joshua in this way.

In every sense, he was in a privileged environment. His father taught him the Juukulius way of life, his friends taught him how to be a knight, and his younger brother taught him how to be stubborn.

"So I am happy that Joshua is being praised by none other than Lady Anastasia. Although, I think that Joshua himself is not very keen to take up the sword…"

"—Ya know, Julius."

Julius was about to continue, saying that it might be difficult, but Anastasia stopped him. Anastasia stoked her fox scarf and smiled sweetly as usual.

"Ya know this, but I don't like things that are wasteful. It's not that I particularly think it would be good if Joshua became a great swordsman, but I can't stand the idea of him livin' his life with the mistaken idea that he's not worth anythin' at all."

"That's…Then, what are you going to do?"

"Right. …For now, I'll give him more work, especially work with more responsibility. Somethin' that's closely related to the royal selection would be good. How 'bout bein' an emissary to the other candidates?"

Anastasia's hands were clasped in front of her chest and her eyes were shining as she made the suggestion, and Julius widened his eyes slightly before giving a wry smile. —It seemed Joshua had touched on her troublesome nature.

And that would surely bring about a desirable change for Julius as well.

“Hoshin’s saying! ‘Confidence makes a man. Confidence is created by achievements’! I’ve decided, I’ve decided. Now that Joshua’s part of my family, I have to make him happy.”

This philosophy, so typical of Anastasia, gave Julius a premonition that it would bring a new wind.

It was the same as when Julius had sensed that she was a suitable candidate for the royal selection and a person fit to be king.

—The new wind blowing through the Juukulius household seemed like a sign that would bring about change in his younger brother’s future.

END

Petra’s Emilia Camp Struggle (Translation Pending)

Mimi Pearlbaton’s Bite of Love and Passion

1

The moment she caught a glimpse of that person, lightning rumbled and thundered throughout Mimi’s entire body. “Woaaa.”

“Huh? What’re you starin’ at, ya little pipsqueak?”

Boom! While being struck by the lightning, Mimi forgot the impact within an instant and stared at her opponent—a golden-haired boy that had crinkled his nose. He had spiky gold hair, sharp emerald eyes, jagged teeth that had been forged by chewing on hard objects often, and somewhat of a wild-style, edgy outfit. Everything about him rumbled and thundered through her.

“I see, I see. You are quite good. Mimi has liked you quite a lot.”

“Huh?”

“Name! You are good to tell Mimi your name! Mimi is Mimi! Duper strongest Vice Capain!” Mimi pointed her hands towards the sky and energetically announced her name.

The boy was puzzled for a second after he heard her announce her name, but he immediately changed his expression into a competitive one. He proudly hit his chest and shut his mouth, making a loud sound with his fangs. “Hah! That’s really bold of you to declare yourself the strongest in front of my amazin’ self! It’s the thing called ‘Galaown’s declaration of war’!”

“Galaoun! I have no idea what that is! Is that your name?”

“Not at all! My amazin’ self is Garfiel Tinzel! Lady Emilia’s Shield and the Perfect Guardian! I’m the Gorgeous Tiger!”

“Oooh! That’s super duper amazing! Which one is your name?!”

“Garfiel Tinzel!”

“Garfiel!” Mimi repeated excitedly.

The boy’s—Garfiel’s—introduction came with energetic poses made by bending, stretching, and spreading his arms. Mimi responded by perking up her ears and jumping up dramatically. The staff in her hand slipped out and hit Joshua, the slender young man sitting next to her. Impaaminence.

“Ouch?!” the young man screamed, but Mimi paid him no mind.

“Garfiel… Mmm, Garfiel…”

“Don’t mumble my name again and again. Are ya stuck or…ouh!” Garfiel frowned at Mimi, who’d crossed her short arms and was groaning, then screamed and hastily looked behind him.

A pink-haired maid stood imposingly behind Garfiel. “How long are you going to keep our guest standing at the entrance? Hurry up and show them the way, Garf.”

“Well, ain’t it your job as a maid, Ram?”

“You don’t get it at all. A man who is good at things should naturally take over the work of a woman who can’t do anything… Wait, who are you calling a useless woman? Ram is going to smack you.”

“My amazin’ self hasn’t said anythin’!”

“Hmph.” The maid sneered at Garfiel after making an unreasonable demand.

Mimi’s eyes widened with surprise at the exchange of words occurring in front of her and then jumped, landing on the foot of the young man who had picked up the staff. “Not again!” he screamed tearily.

Mimi, not seeming to care, pointed her finger at Garfiel. “Garf! Garf seems better! Mimi will call ya that too! Garf it is!”

“Hey, only my family can call me… Ahh, she’s seriously throwing me off my game. The hell is she?” Garfiel roughly scratched his head, his expression a mixture of caution and confusion.

“She’s a guest,” Ram informed him. “A rather cuddly-looking one at that.”

Mimi nodded repeatedly as she watched the maid next to her hugging her elbows. “Garf,” she repeated the short yet pleasant sound under her breath. It felt good, as if she had rolled the lightning that had struck her in her chest into a ball and juggled with it. “This is probably the thing that Roshi was takling about! Rumble rumble boom’s passionne!”

This was Mimi Pearlbaton’s first impression of Garfiel Tinzel when she met him for the first time, and all of her feelings after that.

2

Mimi Pearlbaton was the eldest among the three siblings, which essentially made her the strengthiest by default. It probably was neither logical nor made any sense, but that was ok to Mimi. She was the elder sister to her two brothers Hetaro and Tivey, so she had an obligaetion.

In order to protect them, being the strenghiest was the best way, so she was the strenghiest. The eldest sister is strong and kewl—that was the reason and philosophy that made Mimi who she was. It was a conclusion the pink and blonde-haired maid would strongly agree with, and in fact, the reason why she had been living with full vigor until now was rooted in this.

The people who are supporting Mimi’s philosophy are ma’lady, Anastasia, and apart from Ricardo, who’s the capain, and everyone in the Iron Fang, Mimi will include Julius and Joshua in it too. Joshua might cry if Mimi forgets about him, so it can’t be hepled. And someone to not forget is Roshi, who taught Mimi a lot of things in the beginning. Roshi is a strange old man who saved the three of us when we were wandering around Kararagi’s slums and on the verge of death. He’s something of a savior to us.

“If it hadn’t been for Roshi back then, it would have not ended well for Mimi!”

It was when Tivey was about to get caught by the kidnappers and Mimi, who had obstructed it, got stabbed in the belly by Mimi's opponent. Mimi got stabbed four times when she was two years old, so Mimi was only at the beginning stage of being the strenghtiest, so even Mimi's life was in extreme danger.

While they were running for their lives while Hetaro was dealing with a stomach wound as bad as Mimi's, an old man suddenly appeared in front of Mimi when her wound started to feel better.

"Blease zave, big brro and elder zuster…"

Mimi remembers Tivey crying and screaming with us on his back when we were in a dangerous situation. Even Mimi deeply reflected on that. It's a failure of the elder sister to make her younger brother cry. That was the only time Tivey had ever cried like that. Whenever Mimi asks Tivey about that time, he responds with, "There wasn't such a time, there wasn't." He is extremely forgetful.

Mimi is getting way off topic. Anyway, the old man who appeared was Roshi. He took us, who were worn out in many ways, to his shack, tended to our wounds, and provided food.

"Well, there isn't any deep meaning behind it," Roshi said. "It's justa that I felt like I wanta live a life that the Sun would be proud of, so I couldn't leave the three dirty cats abandoned on the street behind."

Roshi, who had picked up Mimi and her siblings, laughed with his dirty clothes and his ugly face lacking a few teeth. After that, the three cat's and Roshi's life began. The three of them didn't know anything, as they were just kittens. The three kitten siblings were taught the means to survive and they steudied and were taught this and that by Roshi, who was very knowledgeable.

The energetic and strenghtiest Mimi was taught how to fight. The kind and crybaby Hetaro was taught how to live cautiously. And the wise and high-strewng Tivey was taught a lot of knowledge. Roshi had always said that it would definitely help the three of them in the future.

There was something else he said often; Roshi often talked about three important things.

“Listen, Mimi. Don’t talk bad about people. And don’t be someone who breaks promises. Just one more thing: have one thing that you’re second to none in.”

“Hmm, hmm, hmm. Hmm! Why thouhg?”

“It’s obvious. A person who talks bad about others will end up being alone. It’s far wiser to not speak bad from the beginning. A person who breaks promises will also end up being alone. So, it’s obviously better to follow this advice. And the last one…”

“The last one is?”

“…You’ll see tons of good and bad things while you’re alive. You might only see the bad things in the people you are with, but it can’t be helped. But it isn’t like everything about that person is bad. Humans are just a cluster of flaws. So, be the best you can be at one thing, and that will…”

“And tat will?”

“Give you full points. My cute, dirty, cat daughter, you will be able to be a full point.”

After saying that, Roshi smiled, showing off his chipped teeth. His teeth were yellow, his face was full of wrinkles, and his balding head with patches of white hair seemed like it hadn’t been washed in a while and reeked, but Mimi liked that smiling face. And the word ‘full point’ made her heart flutter. She felt like a full point was something amazing. A woman who’ll become a full point, Mimi.

“So, what if it was a hundrd things instead?” Mimi asked.

“Hm?”

“If ine can be a full point then what would it be if there were a hundrd? Would Mimi be more amazning than Roshi?”

“—Aha-ha-ha, ha-ha-ha! That sounds amazing! A hundred you say!

A hundred things that you are second to none in! In that case, if one can give you a full point, then a hundred things will make you a hundred full points!”

“Oooh! A hundrd full points! That sounds really amazining! Mimi would be a giant ameng men!”

Roshi slapped his knee as Mimi laughed and hopped around. The walls of the shack broke and tilted since they were going wild, but the two didn’t care about that at the moment.

Roshi picked up Mimi and lifted her up to the point that she almost hit the ceiling and said, “Listen, my hundred full points daughter! You may have many things happening in your life from now on, but don’t forget my teachings, and keep up that high spirit of yours… Well, it’s not something that I need to tell you!”

“Yeah, you don’t need to tel me! De-ha-ha-ha-ha!”

“Oh wait, you need to stop laughing like an idiot like that. Since you won’t be able to grasp hearts that way.”

“Grasp hearts? What’s that? Mimi is strong so everything can be grasped easily!”

“Whoa, this has nothing to do with strength. But it’s difficult to explain. And on top of that, I guess it’s parental love? It makes me feel deeply uneasy when I think about whether you’ll be able to grasp hearts or not. Bloody hell!”

“Bloody hell!” Mimi mimicked Roshi’s energetic voice and waited for him to continue.

Seeing her wait, Roshi scratched his nose, looking uncomfortable, and continued. “Whatever, the hell with it. Listen, Mimi, I won’t feel like explaining it no matter what. But you’ll know it anyway when the time comes. Oh, you know what lightning is, right?”

“The one that goes rumble rumble boom?”

“Yeah, that. A time will come when the lightning makes your chest go rumble rumble boom. That’s a sign, so hold on to it tight and don’t let it escape.”

“Tight… What should I not let go of?”

“Heh.” Roshi laughed at Mimi’s question. And after taking a pause, he smiled at her with his chipped teeth. “It’s obvious—the thing called fate.”

“Fait!!”

3

And so, the rumble rumble boom has happened now, and this is Mimi’s fait. Mimi hasn’t asked about it in detail, so Mimi doesn’t know much about it, but if the person who has made the rumble rumble boom happen is Mimi’s fait, then Mimi’s fait is Garfiel.

“Stare, stare.” While shaking her legs on the sofa in the drawing room, Mimi gazed at Garfiel sitting on the other side.

Mimi has been carefully looking at him for a while now, but her first impression hasn’t changed. It hasn’t changed, but Mimi’s face and heart are burning intensely and passionnattely. Fait is something to be feared. Mimi thought that Mimi was just going to be Joshua’s guared today, but Joshua went down the priority ladder.

“Nom.”

“Mi-Mimi? I want you to stop chewing on my sleeve…”

“Ooh! Oh, your clothes are kinda damp, Joshua, what happened?”

“You chewed on it! What on earth is up with you?! You’ve been acting weird for a while now!”

Joshua, who’s next to Mimi, is playing around and swinging his drool- soaked sleeves. ‘A kid who isn’t calm in someone else’s house isn’t a good kid.’ That’s what ma’lady had told Mimi. Mimi let out a deep sigh. “Joshua, don’t be too noisy, alright? We didn’t come here to play,” she said, urging him to take the situation into account.

With Mimi giving a proper lecture, Joshua slumped his shoulders and began reflecting. “Argh… I have a lot of things to say, but to make things short, you are right about this…!”

The silver-haired girl in front of them—Emilia—laughed when she saw how the two of them were acting. “A-ha, you two are reaaally close, aren’t you? It felt funny watching you two.”

“I’m… I’m embarrassed to show you such a thing as a messenger…” Joshua said with a reddened face.

The greenish person sitting next to Emilia lowered his brows at that. “No, don’t worry about it. It might not be the right thing to say, but I feel closer to you this way…”

Joshua replied to that response with a “No, no,” and the other person responded with “No, no, no.” Mimi blinked her eyes wondering what they were doing and heightened her alertness.

Joshua is thin and weak, so Mimi has to protect him as a guared. Julius has properly requested Mimi to do that. Mimi accepted Julius’s request saying it can’t be helpd. Just like how Mimi is the eldest sister, Julius is also an elder brother, so he carries a lot of burdens too. So, Mimi is going to concentrate on being a guared and—

“Yo, pipsqueak. Do you have some business with my amazin’ self?”

“Woahaaa!”

Mimi thought of concentrating on being a guared, but she got called out by the reason why she couldn’t concentrate at all, which startled her and caused her to jump up and land on Joshua’s lap. Joshua was startled by the sudden turn of events and exclaimed, “Ueee!” but Mimi had no time to spare any attention to that. Hang in there, Joshua.

Instead, Mimi didn’t let her eyes off Garfiel, who had his eyes wide open in surprise. “Wh-Wh-What’s wron’ with you?”

“—? Why did Mimi just jump? Everything is a mysterie!”

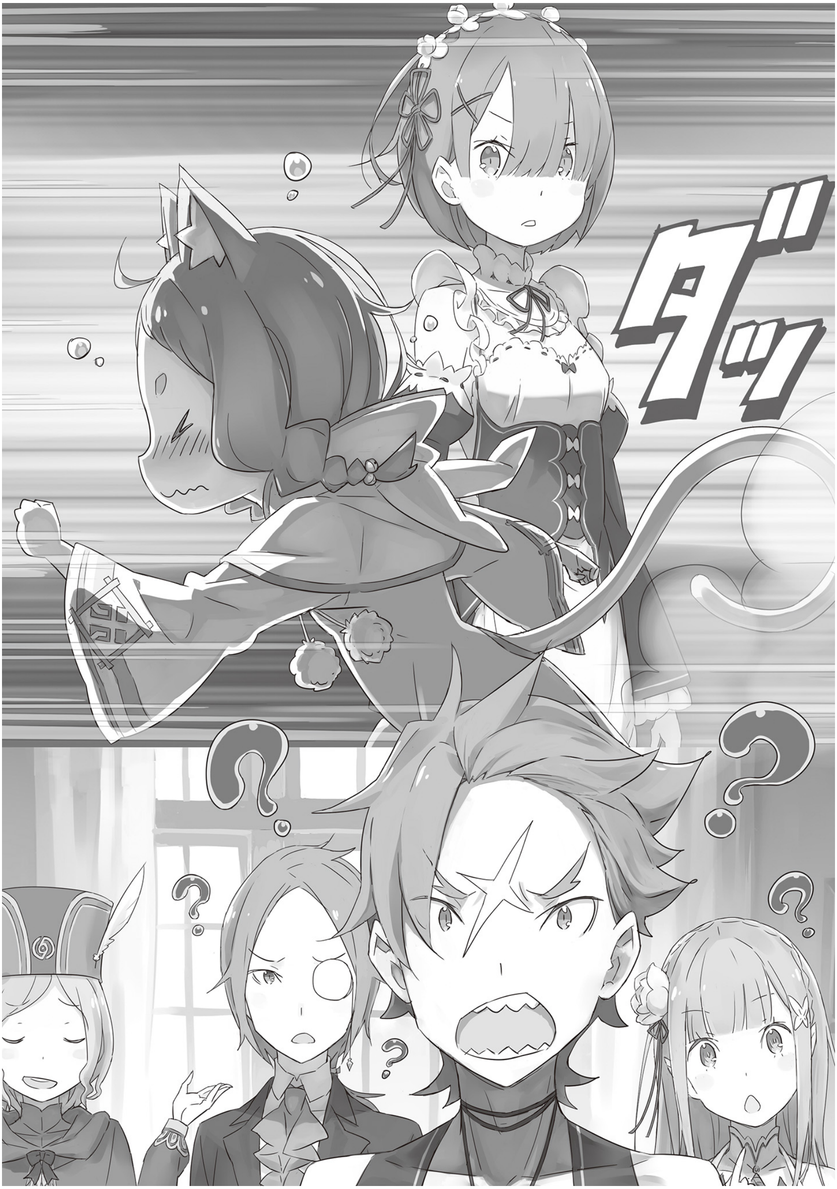
“Ain’t it about you? Nobody is gonna know if you don’t,” Garfiel said, smiling lethargically.

Mimi understood that as his ferocious and wild smile and became more and more restless. And there…

“Excuse me. I had Petra go get Barusu just now. He will eventually… Oh my.”

“Hiyaaah!” Mimi shouted. The pink-haired maid had opened the door at just the right time, so Mimi slipped past her side and jumped into the hallway. At that time, Joshua, whose abdomen had been used as footing, cried, “Ugh!” but she left him behind like a gust of wind and retreated swiftly.

“Ayaya, ayaya, rumble rumble boom!!” Mimi couldn’t stay in that place and had no option but to run with all her might, carried by her impulse.



ダッ

“What was all that about?” Ram asked everyone present in the room while looking at Mimi’s back, who had suddenly ran out.

“Beats me.” Garfiel responded to her question, scratching his head. “My amazin’ self has no idea either. And wouldn’t it be dangerous to leave her like that?! Who knows what that little pipsqueak will do inside the mansion.”

Ram scowled with her well-defined brows at Garfiel’s words. Then she glared at him and closed the door softly behind her back.

“Hey, Ram? The hell are you thin…gaa ouh?!” When Garfiel challenged her decision, the maid flicked his forehead and sighed in exasperation.

“Shut up, Garf. She isn’t going to do anything bad even if we leave her be…it’s simply that it was getting hard for her to be here.”

Garfiel, Emilia, and Joshua, who was rubbing his abdomen in pain, looked confused at Ram’s words; only Otto had a bitter smile, expressing that he knew what was happening, but Ram thought that it also was an annoying response.

“Ah well…leaving aside Lady Emilia, you men are so inconsiderate.”

“—? Why was I given special treatment?”

Emilia tilted her head, and Ram didn’t respond. She just recalled the side profile of the small kitten-human girl as she slipped by her and ran to the other side of the closed door. I’ll keep the fact that her face was as red as an appa to myself, Ram thought. That was her own way of showing mercy as a fellow maiden in love.

END

Priscilla’s Cheers for Me, Drunk Father Part (Translation Pending)

Ex 6:
Sword Demon Battle Ballad
(Comic Alive)

Prologue

—The hot air of the fire burns his lungs. He can’t help but cough, cough and violently cough.

???: “—Ugh.”

He searches for fresh air in order to keep breathing, shaking his head back and forth.

However, the only air available was consumed by the flames. Covering his mouth with his sleeves, trying to prevent his lungs from filling with the toxic smoke, he moved forward.

—The city lay beyond recognition.

The once vibrant streets, which had once been filled by people going about their daily lives, were now devoid of even their shadows, a symbol of the destruction which now painted their lives.

Scorched roads, trees engulfed in violent flames, and collapsed buildings all wailed of the resounding sorrows of the people.

???: “…”

Gritting his teeth, opening his eyes against the smoke that infiltrated them, he moved forward. —Moved towards the battlefield.

Indeed, a battlefield. This place was a battlefield.

Once again, he found himself in the familiar hell of a battlefield; a hell utterly submersed in blood, smoke, and death.

Heat submerged him, followed by the memory of his first battlefield.

—On that day, he had also been submerged in heat, as his lonesome, bloodied figure strode across the battlefield.

Unaware of the rhythm of the battlefield, lacking in a means of survival, they were merely pawns in a struggle of death, a struggle so brutal that it was unbearable to watch, were these helpless amateurs.

To survive one's first battle came neither from an awakening of some hidden skill, nor the triggering of human instincts of survival, nor the descent of any savior.

Luck was all that mattered. Having better luck than the ones who perished on that battlefield.

—Then, what about this time? Would it be the same way? Could luck bring survival.

???: "—tch."

—No. Absolutely not.

This time, it was different from the first battle. This was not a battlefield where warriors could survive with luck.

Furthermore, the tune his heart followed had entirely changed. Back then, he had no reason to fight; merely conformity, masked a shallow show of heroism.

There was no reason to fight. There was no desire to live, only a desire to not die. If his present self hadn't changed at all, his feet would have directed him far away from all this. If he wanted to survive, he should have run.

—But, that path was closed to him.

His legs took him to the center of the city; the front line of this battlefield.

???: "—Hic."

A sky, torn asunder by shades of red and of destruction—a resounding roar, engulfing the city.

Eclipsing the sorrowful howls of the people, burying the demolition of collapsing architecture, and dissatisfied even still, a sound which forced itself upon the world; that was the thundering cry of the Black Dragon.

Trembled by the mighty roar of the Black Dragon, countless soldiers and blades fell. All that was left was pressing onward. Ceaselessly onward. Without pause. Ever onward.

Because, in that godforsaken place where the Black Dragon’s fangs gnashed and claws slashed, their comrades stood.

???: “er/,—hmm…!”

Those old wounds ached. The names of beloved comrades, of cherished lovers; neither could escape the parched, broken throats.

Even still, they cried on. Endlessly searching.

He found his spirit rejuvenated. There, his comrades stood. There, the Sword Demon waited.

Black Dragon: “KRUAAAAAAAAAAAGH—!”

???: “—GRAAAAAAAA.”

In that moment, the roars of two shadows, cutting across the scorched crimson sky, collided. The wingspan of the shadow that lay ahead of him reached impossible lengths. And yet, dwarfed by that immensity, a shadowy figure darted through an opening, raining countless beams of silver upon his massive enemy. However, effortlessly, that massive shadow swerved away, countering with its deadly claws.

Continuous were the sounds of metal clashing, the rain of destruction, the impact which bid tears from the heavens, the explosion of murky clouds, the birth of light itself.

Overwhelming. Truly overwhelming, was this peak of swordplay, forever unparalleled.

Entering that battlefield was impossible. Only those who transcended ability itself had that right, something that most people needn’t even give up on.

???: “…”

—Even so, he would embark on this journey.

Because the Sword Demon, Wilhelm, his comrade, his dear friend, fought there.

A battlefield, scorched with searing flame, a whirlpool of chaos and lament; even in that hell, the fetters of trust and camaraderie remained sound.

???: “…hn̶g̶,̸ ̃hu̸.”

I’m on my way. Setting out, right this second. Without fail, I’ll reach you.

—I won’t let you fight alone. Ever.

Carrying his determination and enlightenment, the young man, Grimm Fauzen, embarked on a journey through the blood-stained city.

That sound is a roar, the roar of the Evil Dragon Valgren with Three Heads

Still not lost in the chaos, The Sword Demon Wilhelm is about to shed its blood.

—The flames of The Subjugation of the Evil Dragon burned ever brighter, as if mocking the infinitesimal resistance of mankind.

(TL Note: To represent Grimm’s broken voice I am going to use “cursed text” effects as a TL choice. In your head, read them as hoarse, cracked chipped things.)

Act One

1

???: “—That’s the end of my report.”

Terminating his speech there, Wilhelm tucked his chin down and straightened himself up, placing his hands behind his back.

Dressed in his white knight uniform, the handsome man stiffened his good-looking, fearless face. The sharp glint in his eye, and his frigid appearance gave off a fierceness like that of a razor-sharp sword.

Anyone who’d have known him before would likely have likely been extremely impressed by just seeing how he stood. At any rate, the appearance of the resplendent sword that was sheathed in Wilhelm’s scabbard right now marked a great difference to his previous attitude of that even though a sword was a sword, a drawn blade was plenty enough to cut down anyone without heed.

???: “…”

Wilhelm spat out a wordless curse seeing the emotions that dwelled in their silent gazes, showing no concern for them.

—No matter how many times he was called there, the atmosphere around the main conference room was something that he never got used to.

He had grown accustomed to not showing those feelings on this face, but the good and bad feelings which he felt about this place were a matter of his temperament. His nature wasn’t something that would change so easily.

???: “Hmmm. You still aren’t used to this place, even with all the times you’ve been called here… It’s written all over your face.”

A voice echoed out in the Assembly Hall, correctly guessing what Wilhelm was feeling in his heart. The one who’d spoken out was a gentle-looking man who was standing along with the big-wigs on the lowest section of the assembly hall; a pleasant smile adorned his face.

The man's name was Miklotov McMahon. He was a wise individual who had taken the post of Assistant Prime Minister for the Kingdom at a young age, and was familiar with Wilhelm.

As soon as he saw Wilhelm contorting his cheeks at what he'd pointed out, Miklotov cheerfully loosened his lips, and said:

Miklotov: "Your face has unwillingness written all over it. That won't do from the head of the Zergev Corps… Although, let me express my sympathy for the misfortune that struck you during your travels with your Lady."

Wilhelm: "What does the Zergev Corps have to do with this right now?"

???: "Nothing at all. You mustn't go getting all stroppy like you're sulking…"

As soon as he'd voiced his objection to Miklotov's words, Wilhelm was struck by a reprimand from a different angle this time. The individual who'd spoken out was a giant of a man with short blue hair, Bordeaux Zergev. He'd known Bordeaux since the time he'd been a conscript, and even now, Bordeaux was still something like a direct superior of his.

Therefore, he did not lift his head up.

Bordeaux: "Wilhelm, you and your squad will no longer be evaluated separately. From now on, you will aim to reflect on your own actions."

Wilhelm: "…I came to the castle to give the necessary report. Why are you singling me out with your criticism despite that?"

Bordeaux: "Every single time you show your face, it ends up with me regretting your behavior which prompts reflection each time."

Bordeaux's words were curt and straight to the point. It was an awful day in all, having been dragged to this detestable assembly hall and reprimanded.

Miklotov: “In any case, we cannot ignore Wilhelm-dono’s report. Surely, saying that someone from the Empire was inside the Kingdom… And what’s more, his opponent was the Eight Arms as well.”

Council Member: “The living War God, the Eight Arms Kurgan…”

Someone uttered out his alias in response to the ponderous Miklotov’s mutter.

The Eight Arms Kurgan—That was the name of a well-renowned warrior in the Vollachian Empire, a Great Country that ruled over the southern part of the world. He was a hero of his species that had elevated the status of the Multi-Arm Clan almost instantaneously.

Amongst the Demi-human clans which were endowed with various different features, the Multi-Armed Clan had been in a position where they had been treated coldly due to their grotesque appearance.

Kurgan was a hero who with his prowess in battle and his incredible (even for a Multi-Arm Clan member) number of arms had proved the usefulness of his species to the Vollachian Empire and had been granted an order of merit directly from the Emperor.

He was unmistakably one of the strongest warriors in this day of age—Rather like with the Sword Saint, his name would likely continue to remain in history, even after his death. For certain, he was an individual of greatness.

A few days ago, the Eight Arms and Wilhelm had crossed swords—Unfortunately, Wilhelm had been in the middle of his honeymoon with his newly wed wife.

In the end, his duel with Kurgan had been interrupted, thus leaving it unsettled. Partly due to having been wounded, his honeymoon had to be called off, and he returned back to the Royal Capital where he gave his report of what happened.

Bordeaux: “Even so, you went toe to toe with the Eight Arms and you managed to survive. You’re a damn lucky guy.”

Wilhelm: “If I was lucky, would there really have been such impediments in my trip? It was sheer skill that allowed me to survive when crossing swords. If there hadn’t been so many interruptions, I would have lopped off his neck, regardless of him being the Eight Arms.”

Bordeaux: “What a cheerful guy you are.… Although, if you say so, it must be as you say.”

Wilhelm snorted, giving off a sarcastic laugh at Bordeaux who’d finally relinquished an agreement, and also giving off a sarcastic laugh.

His battle with that monstrosity with eight arms that suited his alias had been really intense, but even so, Wilhelm didn’t think he’d been inferior in his sword play one bit, or such.

Regardless of how many arms he had, he only had one neck to connect him to his life. Given that the numbers of neck were one, he should be able to remove it. The outcome was always rather simple.

As Wilhelm was getting himself worked up, Miklotov cleared his throat and placed his hands together with a frown.

Miklotov: “Although the presence of the Eight Arms is important, I’m more worried about the one that got in your way… the unidentified person that you said accompanied the Eight Arms.”

Wilhelm: “He called himself Stride. If my Honored father… if Bertol Astrea is right, he is likely a noble from the Empire.”

Miklotov: “Not much information can be expected from the Vollachian Imperial Government about that.”

Wilhelm gritted his molars in frustration at the bad feeling he got from the reply. The customs of the Vollachian Empire were fundamentally different to those of the Kingdom of Lugunica.

The Empire’s people should always be strong, those were the teachings of the Empire; that ideology was spread all throughout their nation. Those with strength stood at the highest echelon, ruling over the subdued weak; leading them was considered a justice.

In this Empire, even the line of succession is a mere formality, and the social position of each individual is determined in respect to their deeds. Thus, even if they were a so-called noble…

Council Member: “I’m still unable to judge whether they’re an upshot or from a distinguished family whose name gets passed down.”

Council Member: “At the very least, there are no records of someone called Stride amongst the names we know.”

Council Member: “However, this is far more than it being some weirdo, considering that he was accompanied by the Eight arms.”

The Assembly Hall broke into a commotion, with each of the faces of the intellectuals of the Kingdom clouding over as they exchanged words. They seemed to have no idea, and Wilhelm too had no more information other than him being called Stride.

He still had no idea what that man had been planning in the City of Picoutatte.

Wilhelm: “For sure, it felt like Stride dragged Theresia… The Sword Saint to the venue of the duel with the Eight Arms.”

Council Member: “Even if he’s the strongest in his country, what recklessness led him to making him fight against the Sword Saint.”

Council Member: “Isn’t the Empire slighting the Great Calamity too much? Not paying any respect to the name of the Sword Saint who subdued the Witch is idiotic, barbaric, and beyond reckless.”

Council Member: “…Don’t go calling challenging the Sword Saint ‘reckless’ too much. We’ve got a guy who’s self-conscious about that here.”

Council Member “Aah!”

The mentions of Stride’s reckless behavior ended up spilling over to Wilhelm somehow. Turning his cold eyes in acknowledgement of that, Wilhelm scrunched up his face. Wilhelm had been the very man who alone had managed to recklessly challenge the Sword Saint.

However, Wilhelm’s challenge bore fruit. That’s why he was married with Theresia now.

Wilhelm: “Don’t compare me with that reject. Besides, I will not let Theresia take up the sword. Ever again.”

Miklotov: “That was His Majesty Gionis’ declaration as well. An agreement that ought to protect the prestige of the Kingdom…And yet, what’s the real meaning behind our opponent wanting the Sword Saint?”

Wilhelm: “—Ah, I see why.”

Wilhelm gave a curt reply to Miklotov’s anxieties.

He had tried to get the Empire’s Strongest, Eight Arms, and the Kingdom’s Strongest, the Sword Saint, to fight each other. Whatever his endgame was, the short-term goals of the fight were easy to imagine.

The strength of the Kingdom would definitely drop if they lost the Sword Saint—that was plain enough to understand.

Miklotov: “Please, be careful about your Lady’s safety.”

Bordeaux: “We will investigate into the man called Stride. Whether the Empire will respond to us is dubious, but don’t do anything rash and certainly don’t get up to anything stupid.”

Wilhelm: “I won’t, but I can’t say that about our enemy.”

Having been given this warning out of the blue, Wilhelm tch’ed in utter discontent. It was his opponent who'd picked a fight with him back at Picoutatte.

Why had they told him that he'd gone and accepted it here?

In that, in this, in everything, Stride and Kurgan were the ones at fault.

2

Theresia: "So, even the meeting ended up bearing no results, huh?"

Puffing out her red cheeks, Theresia plainly expressed a look of dissatisfaction at the contents of the report. She was a pretty woman with clear sky-blue eyes and flaming red hair. The time where it would have been appropriate to call her a girl had already passed, but she was still quite childish in her speech and behavior.

Honestly, it enhanced her charm, so Wilhelm didn't really want to change that. In short, Theresia was the most beautiful. That's all there was to it. Full stop.

Theresia: "Wait up a sec…, Wilhelm? Are you listening to what I'm saying?"

Wilhelm: "Sorry, I was listening."

Theresia: "Really, how?! Weren't you like in a world of your own right now? What were you thinking about!"

Wilhelm: "—? You of course."

Theresia: "Eh, A-Ah… I-I see. I see. In that case then, um, alright then…"

Wilhelm: "—?"

Theresia, who had butted in, blushed hearing Wilhelm's truthful answer. Wilhelm inclined his head at Theresia who was still stuttering over her own words. And out of the blue, a voice butted in,

???: “Wilhelm… You bastard, you’re doing that on purpose, aren’t you?”

Wilhelm: “Don’t start insinuating things you’ll regret. I guess I just said what was on my mind.”

???: “If that’s the case, then your damn lack of self-awareness is irritating me more and more.”

A woman who was sat in this place butted in between the conversation of the married couple, shrugging her shoulders with a look of astonishment. She was rather beautiful, with features that gave an impression of toughness, just a bit. Her golden hair draped down to her shoulders—She was Carol Remendis, Theresia’s attendant.

Carol: “Please get used to it as soon as you can, Theresia-sama. It should already be plenty known that this man is like that. It’s not like you’re blushing like that everyday, right?”

Theresia: “Y-Yeah, of course. Yeah, for sure. I get like this when Wilhelm tells me… Around about once every t-two days?”

Wilhelm: “Only that much? …That’s not enough. I never get tired of seeing your face like that.”

Theresia: “~~~~~hh.”

Carol: “WILHELM!”

As expected from her, had she understood that he’d done it on purpose right now? Carol raised her voice in anger. Next to her, Theresia was blushing; it felt like steam was about to spout out from her head if she didn’t stop.

Of course, it wasn’t just a joke. It was one of Theresia’s virtues that every single one of her rapidly changing supervening expressions were adorable. Her blushing face, her angry face, and even her sullen face. Although, her smiling face was the best.

Theresia: “L-Let’s get back on topic. Yeah, like before!”

Carol: “…Be grateful for Theresia-sama’s consideration. So, does what was said at the meeting end there?”

Carol got on the same wavelength as Theresia did, who’d clapped her hands together and gotten them back on topic, her face still red. Wilhelm gave a curt nod at Carol’s question and replied with an “Mhm.”

Wilhelm: “It ended there. Still without any concrete conclusion… Even if we ask the Empire, it’d be hard to imagine that they’d answer saying they know Stride.”

Carol: “It doesn’t seem likely that guy’s intentions are in line with the Empire, but…”

Wilhelm: “Even the representative of the Suwen Company said that was the first time he’d met Stride. Although, we should think that he planned everything beforehand, all the way up to having targeted Theresia-sama.”

It was a problem that the Elders had come vis-a-vis with, which they’d had no answer to, back at the conference room. There were three of them here now, but it didn’t seem likely that they’d find an answer to it.

Theresia: “Though, I really wonder what that person wanted to achieve.”

Wilhelm: “—That guy said we can still enjoy ourselves.”

Wilhelm reflected back on the words Stride had left him when he heard Theresia’s question. Stride had interrupted Wilhelm and Kurgan’s duel and leisurely fled away leaving those words behind.

—’Endless amusement’ he’d said。

Carol: “Fleeting moments of hedonism, a sadistic criminal ruled by a doctrine of destruction… You think he’s like that?”

Wilhelm: “It’s too much to be just that. He involved the Eight Arms and dragged Theresia into it… Must be because Theresia is the sword of the Kingdom.”

Theresia: “In regards to my public image, yeah? I’m Wilhelm’s now.”

Mentioning that she had moved on from being the Sword Saint, Theresia took Wilhelm’s arm. It seemed to be a declaration of intention that she told herself rather than something that came out of her playfulness.

—In reality, off the record Theresia had abandoned her role as the Sword Saint.

First things first though, being the Sword Saint was something that was inherited by inheriting the Divine Protection. She couldn’t quit out of that out of her own free will.

In fact, The Divine Protection of the Sword Saint still remained in Theresia even now. Until it went to the next generation, she wouldn’t be budged from being the Sword Saint.

Carol: “…”

Wilhelm understood that Carol was thinking the same thing on seeing her taciturn expression. The scars of the Demi-human War weren’t just carved between Humans and Demi-Humans. The scars of the Sword Saint Theresia van Astrea had been left between the Kingdom and other countries too.

Thus the Empire, Stride, had set their sight on the Sword Saint Theresia.

Wilhelm: “I won’t let them.”

Theresia: “…Wilhelm?”

He suddenly spoke out with a low voice. Theresia looked up at Wilhelm who was embracing her. Wilhelm merely hugged her slender body more tightly without looking at his surprised wife’s face.

He held her a little too tight. That was Wilhelm's clumsy way of embracing her.

Wilhelm: "I won't let those bastards lay a single finger on you."

Theresia: "Yeah, I know. I know, Wilhelm."

For them being the words of a vow they were crude, and if he was trying to reassure her, they were quite blunt. Theresia showed her understanding of her husband's love by affectionately returning his embrace.

Together, so the thoughts they'd share were the same.

Carol: "…Jeez."

Struck by the couple's exchange in plain sight, Carol's cheeks reddened as she let out a sigh. However, she was reminded of her sweetheart who wasn't here, niggling at her all too much.

3

For a while, each day passed by embroiled in tension, ever since that sequence of events.

Of course this brought a turbulent sense of foreboding to both Wilhelm and Theresia, as well as to the higher echelons of nobles who helped govern the Kingdom.

Especially in the Kingdom of Lugunica, where the nearly ten year long Civil War had finally come to an end.

Rebuilding the country came after, and they wanted to firmly avoid interference from other countries. It was the country's dignity that they'd reigned as one of the four noted major powers in the world ever since its conception.

Thus, the Kingdom firmly sought an explanation from the Empire regarding both Stride and Kurgan whose names had surfaced up in this matter. However, the Empire's response was plain and simple.

—There is no imperial individual who goes by the name "Stride", and the location of the Eight Arms is unknown.

???: "—THIS IS RIDICULOUS!"

The one who'd bellowed in anger at that ridiculing reply was Bordeaux. In an office inside the Royal Castle of Lugunica, Bordeaux had looked through the letter which the Empire's envoy had sent them, and reacted in anger at what it said. An answer like this was completely unacceptable.

Bordeaux: "THIS REPLY… IT CLEARLY SHOWS THAT THEY WEREN'T GOING TO REPLY WITH HONESTY FROM THE GET-GO!"

The Kingdom had rightly demanded an explanation and apology from the Empire.

They'd demanded an investigation and the handing over of those Imperial individuals responsible for the acts of hostility against the Kingdom, and a public apology if possible—However, the Empire's response contained none of those things.

It was doubtful whether they'd even conducted an investigation into the person known as Stride, let alone whether it was a sincere response.

Bordeaux: "THEY SAID THEY DON'T EVEN KNOW THE LOCATION OF THE EMPIRE'S STRONGEST WARRIOR, THE EIGHT ARMS…? THEIR REPLY IS MAKING A MOCKERY OUT OF EVERYTHING! ISN'T THIS JUST AS IF THEY MADE A DECLARATION OF WAR AGAINST THE KINGDOM OF LUGUNICA?!"

Wilhelm: "Calm down! It's getting on my nerves, Bordeaux."

Bordeaux: "Gnnnnnh…!"

Bordeaux, who was on the verge of completely losing his temper, somewhat managed to get ahold of himself after he was scolded. The giant of a man took several deep breaths and sat back down on the chair he'd stood up from without realizing.

Causing his chair creek, he looked up at the ceiling. His boiling anger had cooled down a bit.

Bordeaux: "…Apologies. I was besides myself."

Wilhelm: "Don't worry about it. If I'd read it first, our positions would have been reversed…They're fucking around with us, aren't they?"

Bordeaux: "Yeah, they sure are. Does the Empire wish for war?"

Wilhelm gazed at the letter that Bordeaux, who had closed one of his eyes, had thrown down and shrugged his shoulders.

Wilhelm had been called to Bordeaux's office because the latter had notified him that they'd received a reply from the Empire.

Although it was down to Bordeaux's consideration that he'd tried to notify him of the Empire's attitude as quickly as possible, it had ended up a mess—Despite having prefaced the meeting with 'Don't lose your temper, no matter what their response is'.

Wilhelm: "There was no use in you getting angry before, when you prefaced it like that."

Bordeaux: "What on earth has gotten into me, I'm ashamed. Pivot wouldn't have been impressed by this."

Wilhelm: "Jeez."

Pivot had been Bordeaux's adjutant who had perished in the Civil War. Pivot, who'd been Bordeaux's attendant, courageous and strict as he was, had fretted over the somewhat rash Bordeaux all the way until his death.

After Pivot's death, Bordeaux had been fairly subdued; however, sometimes the face of the man they once called the Mad Dog would resurface every so often. In all honesty, Wilhelm was more familiar with that side of him.

In any case, the issue at hand wasn't in Bordeaux's irreparable psyche, but rather in the Empire's agenda.

Wilhelm: "Does the Empire want… war? That may not be too far off the mark."

Bordeaux: "…Even if those guys tried to attack the Sword Saint to weaken us, interference from different countries is an issue on a completely separate scale than civil war. If it becomes an invasion that threatens the existence of the country, the Divine Dragon should stir."

Wilhelm: "The Divine Dragon Volcanica… the dragon that guards our country, who made a covenant with the Kingdom of Lugunica?"

Speaking out its name, Wilhelm frowned, grooves forming along his brow. The Divine Dragon Lugunica—That was the name of the great dragon who'd defeated the Witch of Envy and saved the world from the calamity that had once threatened to destroy it.

After the conflict, the dragon had made a covenant with the King Lugunica of that time and promised him the removal of foreign threats who disturbed the Kingdom's prosperity, as well as long-lived prosperity for the Kingdom itself.

From then on out, the Kingdom of Lugunica was called the Dragon Kingdom and it acquired a prosperity that surpassed that of other countries.

However, no one truly knew whether the agreement that bound the Kingdom with the centuries old Dragon from their covenant was still in effect to this day.

Wilhelm: "In effect, even during the long Demi-human War, the Dragon still kept its silence."

Bordeaux: "The war definitely was something serious that concerned the existence of our nation. But that was a civil war. The Dragon promised they'd help us out if a foreign threat came to light… That's what the Kingdom concluded in regards to the Demi-human War."

Wilhelm: "What's your personal view on this? What do you think?"

Bordeaux: "…"

Having told Wilhelm the common consensus, Bordeaux kept silent at his question. That in itself was an answer. Realistically speaking, almost nobody in the Kingdom believed that the Divine Dragon would save them from a crisis which threatened the Kingdom's existence, or such.

—No, many of the people of course who had no clue about the reality of things were probably thankful for the Dragon's existence, and probably believed in the covenant's execution.

Wilhelm: "The country's big wigs don't believe it. And the guys who partook in the Demi-human War also all don't."

The dragon wouldn't rescue the Kingdom. Even if it did centuries ago, it wouldn't now. He didn't know whether it was due to a change in the times, the whim of dragons, or a matter of the Divine Dragon being dead or alive. However, he understood this much. The dragon wouldn't come.

—If the dragon would come, there would have been no way it'd have left the horrific war in that state.

Bordeaux: "The Empire must think that too. So, why aren't these guys coming out in numbers?"

Wilhelm: "…The Demi-human War probably deepened their conviction."

Bordeaux: "With us coming to the verge of ruin from our infighting, our last ray of hope, the dragon, showed no signs of showing his snout. It's only natural that they'd make light of us. And as for the reason why they didn't invade in great numbers…"

Wilhelm: "They're still at the prodding at us stage. They probably wouldn't take things leisurely for a full-blown invasion."

His view wasn't pessimistic. It was safe to say his view was realistic and a pretty decent prediction. If the Empire was amassing their strength right now for an eventual full-blown attack, then…

Bordeaux: "By the way, what will become of us if it comes to war?"

Wilhelm: “Do you mean how long will the Kingdom last?”

Bordeaux: “…Enough, for now.”

Wilhelm sighed at Bordeaux’s parched reply. There was a considerable difference in strength between the two nations. And that was natural. The Kingdom had been exhausted by the long civil war and had no chance of victory if it came to war with the Empire, which had kept stipulating its Rich Country, Strong Army policy and maintained a firm imperial rule.

Wilhelm: “Anyways, it’s gotta be because the Kingdom hadn’t experienced war for centuries until the Demi-human War.”

Bordeaux: “An army that’s only there for show, a royal army in name only…At the outbreak of war, anyone, Demi-humans included, would be able to see that our numerical inferiority has continued. And we simply don’t have enough strength if we get into a war now. We’re surrounded on all fronts.”

The more the going got worse, the more they shared in their dry laughter. In fact, there was no sadness shared even between the two of them in regards to these pessimistic subjects.

Of course, right now they were in a situation where they had moved forward with everything with the worst-case scenario in mind—

Bordeaux: “—We need to rack our minds so it doesn’t end up coming to that. First of all, we need to teach the Empire, who refuse to listen, the notion of properly coming to a mutual understanding.”

Wilhelm: “With those words, how about picking up your ax and laying waste to the Imperial Capital. Surely then those guys would understand that.”

Bordeaux: “That’d make them go pale in the face… Were we, the Kings people, to become savages, we’d end up laying waste to them, is that what you’re implying? Don’t be so foolish.”

Wilhelm straightened himself in his seat after he traded that dangerous joke. He couldn’t say things had ended up like he’d wanted them to be, but his business from being called here was done. He would try and leave as soon as he could.

Bordeaux: “Though by all rights I’d wanted you to bring back good news home.”

Wilhelm: “I know that our enemy is coming to pick a fight. That’s a hundred times better than not knowing anything.”

Bordeaux: “…Be on the lookout for Theresia-dono’s safety. Even though it’s needless for me to say I guess.”

Wilhelm: “Aah, must be ‘cause that Carol girl’s all fired up… I’ll make sure to let her know, though.”

Wilhelm sincerely accepted Bordeaux’s worries, gave him a bow and left the room. When he left, Bordeaux’s gaze never left him until he was out of eyeshot. A wry smile slipped onto his face as if it were saying, what a worrier you are.

He had been promoted, and his position had changed considerably, but Bordeaux’s roots still remained the same. Another wry smile appeared on his face at his own awareness that he’d taken that well.

However, the worries Bordeaux had were natural. There may come a day soon where the disturbing topics they’d discussed in his office, and their fairly pessimistic assumptions couldn’t be laughed away.

Wilhelm still had something which he had to do as well so that it wouldn’t end up coming to that.

Wilhelm: “…”

Wilhelm’s figure left the Royal Castle and slipped into the streets of the Royal Capital, now not garbed in his uniform.

It wasn’t because today was his day off, though most of his paperwork had been given to his deputy head, Grimm and his advisor, Conwood.

He didn’t have the disposition for deskwork in the first place; his squad members didn't really utter any complaints about that either, considering they knew it all too well. He usually took advantage of their consideration, and oftentimes spent his time swinging his sword at the training ground.

—Though not this day. He had a different goal.

Wilhelm: "…It's gotta be this shop."

He'd come out from the Noble District of the Royal Capital, went into the Shopping District and made his way to a back-alley. The inside of it was lined up with storefronts that had somewhat suspicious, peculiar appearances drifting about them. He found the signboard which had the name of the store he was looking for on it.

Located in a dingy back-alley, the deserted bar was the perfect place to hold a private talk.

Wilhelm: "…"

When he pushed open the door and went inside, its interior was dimly lit despite it being daytime. There was a clerk wiping some glasses at the other side of the counter—In contrast to the atmosphere about the store, that man, who was clad in a strangely elegant air, gave a nod his way. Looking at him from the corner of his eye, Wilhelm ran his gaze around the store's interior.

He should be meeting them here, but—

???: "Weeeell, this way, this way. Isn't it a pleaaaasure that you came earlier than expected."

Someone greeted him from within the store, waving their hand, beckoning him over to a table of four. He stopped in his tracks when he heard that joyous voice. However, unfortunately, the familiar face belonged to the person that he had an appointment with, there was no mistaking it.

Right now, their lips had split into a beautiful smile whilst they rested their chin against their hands on the table.

???: "You came early, were you perhaps so eager in wanting to meet with me? You're suuuuuch a sinner."

Wilhelm: "I just wanted to do my business as quick as possible. Don't speak such poor insinuations."

???: "What a cold reply. Though, that too is your style, isn't it?"

Bringing one of their hands to their mouth with a giggle, they gave up their frivolous chatter with their beautiful voice that tickled his brain directly.

Wilhelm briskly crossed his arms and firmly brushed away their temptations.

He'd never had any interest in that to begin with, it was as if his attitude indicated that he'd come here as a last resort.

???: "Such cute resistance. Though, even I sorta don't have any desire to tease you, and try anything with you, since you became a married man. That's our friendship. Wouldn't it be great if you opened your heart to me just a little bit?"

Wilhelm: "Don't. Speak. Such. Poor. Insinuations… Jeez."

Punctuating each word he spoke out, Wilhelm once again let out a sigh after he made his point. His sigh wasn't out of rejection, but rather was full of resignation. Having sensed that, his opponent seemed delighted.

She was a beautiful woman with long indigo hair, who liberally gave off an alluring impression.

Though her face, her glossy hair, and her curvaceous body were brimming in appeal that would catch one's attention, her heterochromic eyes were what was most alluring about her—The radiance of yellow and blue which shone bewitchingly were trying to sneak into Wilhelm with the temptations of a succubus.

Her name was Roswaal J Mathers—She had been his comrade de guerre who had fought alongside him in the Demi-human War, and as far as Wilhelm was concerned, a dislikable woman who he mustn't let his guard down around. That was the gist of it.

Although, she was his benefactor too, so he couldn't forcibly keep her away.

Roswaal: "I want us to be more better connected in a good way, thouuuuuuugh."

Roswaal smiled sweetly as if she had read Wilhelm's innermost thoughts.

—That was what was dislikeable about her. Thinking that, Wilhelm frowned in distaste.

4

Roswaal: "Even so, it's such an unromantic topic when I consider that you got in contact with me after such a long time. Wouldn't it be a bit better for you to take some lessons in deaaaaling with women?"

As if inviting an opportunity for idle talk, Roswaal leaned her head towards the seated Wilhelm. Wilhelm narrowed his eyes at that gesture, and tch'ed crudely,

Wilhelm: "It's none of your business. In general, people don't go around bringing such ridiculous topics up to married men. Theresia is the only one in this world that I treat as a woman. You aren't covered by this!"

Roswaal: "Treating someone as a woman for you doesn't stop past treating them as an object of your desires I guess? I think we should call that your imagination running wild, or your stereotypes… Weeeell, it's whatever."

Having launched yet another comeback at him, Roswaal snapped her fingers in front of the mumbling Wilhelm. The clerk walked as if he were gliding over to the table to the sound echoing through the air. He placed two glasses on the table, and left without making a sound.

Roswaal: "Well, to start with, let's give a toast to celebrate our reunion. Huh? There's no need to worry about paying for it."

Wilhelm: “It’s daytime.”

Roswaal: “In other words, it’s the time where the best liquor is at its tastiest, wouldn’t you think?”

Roswaal held out her glass that was full of amber liquid and flashed him a mischievous smile. Understanding he had no way to avoid the toast, Wilhelm had no choice but to raise his glass and let it clink against hers.

He tilted his glass with ice in it, letting his tongue be moistened by the liquor. He wasn’t particularly attached to alcohol, but even so, he immediately knew that this wasn’t cheap liquor.

Roswaal: “Luckily, the family business is going rather well. I’m rather fond of high grade liquor y’knooooow.”

Wilhelm: “I ain’t listening to this.”

Roswaal: “Jeez, you’re such a brash person… In that case, shall we start talking about what you want to hear?”

It had been a while since they’d last met, but he had no intentions at all of talking with her about what they’d been up to as of late. Roswaal didn’t take any offence to that attitude of Wilhelm’s, and closed one of her eyes. Reflecting him in her blue eye, Roswaal prodded the ice in her glass with her finger, and said,

Roswaal: “It’s about the person called Stride that you requested, right? Even after I tried to pursue my connections, I didn’t get anything tantamount to concrete about what kind of person he is.”

Wilhelm: “…You’re acting terribly pretentious, aren’t you?”

Roswaal: “My apoooologies. If I could have, I’d have hoped that what you’d requested of me could’ve been solved immediately by the perpetual wisdom of Roswaal J Mathers, but I am not aaaaapt enough.”

Wilhelm: “Then, did you call me to expressly apologize for not finding anything?”

Wilhelm posed this question back at Roswaal, quite a bit of dejection lapping against his tongue.

—Whilst Bordeaux and the others had formally enquired about Stride's background from the Vollachian Empire, Wilhelm had got Roswaal to dig into it from a different angle.

It didn't imply he'd had any idea about what had been written inside the letter that was delivered to the Kingdom, but he'd always had some fear that things beyond anticipation couldn't be known about it.

It was a presentiment that only Wilhelm, who'd actually come into contact with Stride, felt, and even though his feelings were something like guesswork—

Roswaal: "I had a bad feeling that your hunch was correct. Though, it looks like our opponent's movements are far more shrewd than expeeeected. This sort of thing is rather reminiscent of the likes of Valga Cromwell in the Civil War. The part where I can't read his movements may be what makes him so detestable to me thooooough."

Wilhelm: "…He's a bastard who first put Theresia on the game-board, and now is trying to make his exit. I have no doubt he's up to no good in the Kingdom. How do you see things?"

Roswaal: "Right now, even the covenant with the Divine Dragon is far off. Eventually, a failure had to come into sight. It may be like that now, but… What happens afterwards with that won't be amusing, even for me. That's why I made some preparations."

Wilhelm: "Some preparations?"

Roswaal winked meaningfully at Wilhelm straight after he'd tried to sincerely inquire about what she had said. Wilhelm raised his eyebrow at the manner she had spoken about it and her behavior.

Roswaal: "Mhm, some preparations. Since things didn't end up being fruitful, I have to keep face; after all, you managed to swallow your own pride and relied on me. I want to reward you for that, wouldn't you think?"

Wilhelm: "All this tedious talk is all well and good. What did you do?"

Roswaal: "Didn't I tell you? That I searched but I couldn't find anything concrete. That just naturally means our opponent carefully concealed his own traces, but… I tried to keep digging."

Wilhelm: "…"

Roswaal's tone of voice grew a little lower during the latter half of her speech. Wilhelm recognized the emotion of peril that was lodged there, and held his breath—And then, immediately after.

Wilhelm: "—tch!"

In an instant, the already dim light of the store interior went out, and its interior was covered in a shallow darkness. The visibility around them had fallen, and even the sunlight streaming in through the windows had been blocked out. In other words, the darkness was man-made, intentional.

And under the cover of darkness, a gust of air whistled. Something was drawing nearer to Wilhelm at high speed—

Wilhelm: "Too slow, dumbass."

—No, calling it "High Speed" was a mistake. As far as Wilhelm was concerned, it was going way too slow.

Kicking his chair back, Wilhelm dropped down moving towards its back. He reached the chair's back and span back around. If he drew out his beloved sword whilst his toes were still touching the floor, he would intercept the attack that had been released from within the darkness which bayed for his blood. A shrill clang rang out, and that which had been thrown at him was deftly deflected by his sword blow.

It was something black, with a sharp pointed tip—a throwable weapon that was called a Kunai which assassins someplace far away used.

After he deflected all seven of them, Wilhelm stepped forward into the darkness without any hesitation. His eyes hadn't grown accustomed to the artificial darkness, and his sight was still covered in black.

Yet even so, he stepped forward with no hesitation. That was due to the fact that lurking within the darkness, his enemies' poorly concealed thirst for blood had informed him where they were lurking.

Wilhelm: "…"

There were many of them dressed in black garb that melded with the dark. They held their breaths, having realized that their first attack was a failure.

However, they got over the shock of it straight away and immediately switched over to close-quarter combat, resuming the fight.

That decision was a mistake already. They should have fled instantly when their first attack failed.

Wilhelm: "—GRRRRRHHHHAAAAA!"

Right after they put themselves on guard, the roaring Wilhelm rushed forward letting loose a flash of silver.

His opponents met his bifurcating blows with their own weapons; however, one by one, each of them who had tried to parry his attacks were cut in two. Blood of a darkish hue splattered around the jet-black room.

Amongst the deaths of his companions, an enemy immediately tried to take advantage of a gap left in Wilhelm's defenses. However, what they'd thought as having been a gap produced as a result of his sword blow was in fact merely an invitation.

An invitation that he'd offered half in jest to say you shouldn't take it up if you ain't first rate—Of which, the second-rate neck which took it up ended up being lopped off next.

Roswaal: “My, you two sure do work fast.”

She said that accompanied with an uncharacteristic sigh at the place of battle. Suddenly, a light shone through in the darkness.

The light shone from Roswaal’s fingers, who still sat at the table without having moved. A flickering illumination like candlelight clearly lit up the store interior which could’ve been mistaken for night.

Wilhelm: “…”

The enemies, which were garbed in black from head to toe, flickered against the light.

There were seven of them dotted around within the store, nine if he counted the two which had already died—No, it wasn’t quite like that.

There was another black outfit that lay collapsed against the wall, different to the one which Wilhelm had defeated. And the bar’s clerk was standing beside it.

Wilhelm: “Hey, is he really just a store clerk?”

Roswaal: “You think that I’d involve simple bystanders in this attack? I’m shoooocked that you think of me to be such a cruel woman as to do such a thing. First things first, this is my store. So of course I made sure to bring along this kid along in caaaase a fight broke out.”

Store Clerk: “It’s as Madam says, but I endeavor myself in focusing on self-defense so as to not divulge my initial position as a reserve. I’m the rearguard. By all means, our esteemed Sword Demon went all out. A characteristic exhibition.”

Roswaal replied to Wilhelm’s question, and then, the store clerk took over from her. Though he was graceful, his tone of voice gave off somewhat of a sluggish candour. However, Wilhelm had seen his true strength, there was no mistaking it.

He could definitely be made use of. —With that settled, he'd try not to let that weigh on his mind anymore now.

Wilhelm: "Rotten luck for them. Their decision making is slow and their skills are tepid at best. What I mean by that is that they aren't suited for this job."

Enemies: "…"

Wilhelm: "Will you throw away your weapons and surrender at once? If you show some good faith, we here don't plan to kill you all. So how about it?"

The situation quite clearly favored them. The enemies had lost the advantage of the cover of darkness along with three of their companions. Meanwhile, Wilhelm's side had avoided their surprise attack with Roswaal not even needing to get up from her seat.

If they had the gall to recognize the discrepancy between their respective strengths, then they'd find it a good idea to throw away their weapons at once.

However, the attackers had prioritized their given duties over their lives.

Wilhelm: "—Fools."

Half of them drew out their throwing weapons, whilst the other half drew out short swords—Those brandishing the weapons they classified as short swords let out battle cries.

They lowered their bodies down, and aimed their blades at his vital points without a shred of hesitation. Though their technique wasn't half bad, they were still poor opponents, as he'd said many times.

An opponent approached him, swinging his blade, and as he did, five times did his sword rage up a storm. He severed his limbs, his neck, his body. Stepping over the fallen body, he flung a Kunai that had been thrown at him right back at the guy who'd thrown it.

With his eyes peeled wide open having witnessed this feat of superhuman skill, the assassin received his own throwing tool straight to the middle of his forehead and met his demise instantly. Their enemies were in a rout.

Just two assassins remained, and after having made it this far, the option to flee finally took root in them.

Wilhelm: “Why are they trying to escape after losing so many of their numbers till now…”

As he muttered half in shock at their unintelligible judgement, the assassins split into two and tried to leave the battlefield. Since they couldn’t get past from Wilhelm’s side, the two of them chose different escape routes—

Roswaal: “Whoops, looks like some dirt’s gotten into my glass.”

As she said that, she swung her fist and punched the man’s face as he tried to cross past her. The floorboards split open due to her blow, with the man crashing right through them, his neck half torn. Roswaal tugged at her cloak which was fluttering from the force of the blow and gracefully took a sip from a glass.

Roswaal: “How annoying my high-grade alcohol has just been spoiled. Though I’m drinking from yours, you’re not gonna get mad at me for that riiiiiight?”

When he took a closer look, Wilhelm realized that the glass that Roswaal had been holding in her hand was his own one which he had left on the table. Of course, he’d had no time to spare to care about alcohol or such in the midst of battle. The glass hadn’t ended up getting toppled thanks to Roswaal swiftly securing it in place. There’s no way he’d have devoted any attention to doing that in the middle of a fight where life and death was at stake, but nevertheless,

Wilhelm: “Do what you want.”

Roswaal: “Oh my, has the old you grown up perhaps? You used to get waaaaay more angry. Still, love and then marriage change people, don't they? How splendid, how splendid!"

Roswaal gave a small chuckle and then snapped her fingers once more. This time the room's lighting came back properly and the state of the store which had become a carnage was laid bare to the naked eye.

Everywhere he looked, the inside of the store was littered with numerous slain bodies—For sure they would have to shut their business for a while.

Roswaal: "I've opened this shop every once in a while as nothing more than a pastime from the get go. I don't really care what happens so long as my store of alcohol which I put here for safekeeping isn't stolen."

Wilhelm: "I wasn't worried about that. Let's set us aside for now; what about you over there? You alright?"

Roswaal had replied to Wilhelm as he gazed around the store with a response that didn't hit the mark of his worries. Brushing aside her answer, Wilhelm called out to Roswaal's subordinate—The store clerk.

The man gave an incredibly polite bow at his words and replied with perfect decorum.

Store Clerk: "My deepest thanks for your concern. Gratitude. But there's nothing wrong with me. If I couldn't deal with a scrap like this whilst humming along then I'd not be fit to be Mathers' butler. Lacking."

Wilhelm: "A butler? The butlers I know don't have practicing their fighting skills as part of their job description though."

Roswaal: "It's becaaaaause our family has many enemies. Doing things like this is necessary you see. Although, Clind is quite the special butler amongst them."

Clind: "Your praises honor me; delighted."

Without changing his expression, the man—the individual named

Clind placed his hand against his chest. He exuded sophistication in every inch of his behavior, literally meaning that he was well acquainted with every manner of etiquette.

Of course as a waiter at the bar, but also in his fight with the assassins.

Wilhelm: “I wasn’t able to see it clearly, but how did you defeat them?”

Clind: “By combining the best butler-techniques passed down from generation to generation. Efforts.”

Wilhelm: “…”

Clind: “I was joking. A jest. However, I keep the details of what I do a secret. Concealment.”

In some sense the answer Wilhelm had received was even vaguer than Roswaal’s. He bent his lips into a frown at what he’d been told. In fact, the assassins which Clind had defeated were all dead, but he couldn’t ascertain how they’d died from just looking.

Their causes of death didn’t seem to be from either a sword, a blow or magic from what he could see.

Roswaal: “Anyways, they weren’t that skilled but we managed to fight them off without incurring any damage. As eeexpected of us.”

Wilhelm: “We were targeted by them, stop speaking so lightly about it. Also, did you let one of them escape on purpose? What were you thinking with that.”

Wilhelm frowned in doubt as he wiped his bloodstained sword on their dark garb. At the end the two remaining assassins had chosen to flee. One of them had been silenced by Roswaal’s fist, however the other one had managed to slip by and escape through a window.

Originally, Wilhelm wasn’t planning on letting them escape but Roswaal herself stopped him.

Wilhelm: “You sent him out alive. Information of this will get out across.”

Roswaal: “That was my aim. Like I mean even if we’d destroyed them all the results would’ve probably ended up the same. Just, it’ll be a problem if we don’t find out a few more details, even if they send out a bunch of low-grade assassins.”

Wilhelm: “…”

Roswaal: “For now the guy I knocked out is still alive, but I doubt I’ll get much out of him. So I think we can’t discount the possibility that they’re linked to that individual known as Stride.”

Wilhelm: “Stride…”

Roswaal placed her hand against her chin, the picture of someone immersed in deep thought. Wilhelm finally grasped the situation. Now he knew why she had provided them a place which was easy to target.

Wilhelm: “So you made the investigation easier for us and manipulated our enemy without them knowing?”

Roswaal: “Since it’s nigh impossible to follow a trail which has been extinguished it’s easier to manipulate our enemy and set up one ourselves. Of course, I wouldn’t have been able to do this without having faith in your ability, so why don’t I give you a hug, what do you saaaay to that?”

Wilhelm: “I didn’t need to hear that.”

Roswaal: “Even if you didn’t, I still wanted to tell you it.”

Roswaal gave him a captivating smile, and Wilhelm, feeling he was being twisted around her little finger, clicked his tongue.

Meanwhile Clind had been inspecting the corpses that had collapsed in the bar without paying any notice to their exchange. He called out to Roswaal and said “Madam.”

Clind: “I’ve examined them thoroughly, but there seems to be no clues which point to their identity or who they work for. Regrettable.”

Roswaal: “Weeeell, it’s not like they’d be that careless, no? What’s your opinion on what we can expect to find anything out from our Survivor-kun?”

Clind: “I just peeled off their mask and their kind is scattered thin. But, they definitely seem to be Shinobi of Kararagian stock judging from their garb and weapons. Confidence.”

Wilhelm: “Shinobi… I’ve heard about those.”

Wilhelm replied as well to the word “Shinobi” which Clind had mentioned as his opinion.

Shinobi was a title given to assassins who could only call themselves that as a result of having gone through special training like never seen elsewhere; they were said to have originated from the Kararagi City States in the West.

Kararagi was renowned for giving birth to its unique culture. However, from within its culture, the Shinobi were a novelty amongst novelties. There were many mysteries to them including the means by which they passed down their training and skills.

Wilhelm: “Though considering all that, they weren’t that skilled…”

Clind: “I’ve heard that the Shinobi have their own particular ranking system, but I think these guys are low grade students who aren’t worth their salt. An actual Shinobi’s fighting skill is not of this quality. Rule of thumb.”

Wilhelm: “Hey, Roswaal, why’s your butler so damn weird.”

Roswaal: “He comes in handy. The weeeirdness comes with the package.”

Where on earth could butlers comment on the true strength of a Shinobi based on rules of thumb?

Well whatever, Wilhelm didn’t have any objection to Clind’s verdict. If they'd been sent out to scout things out in force then these guys shouldn't have enough information to spit out.

Though, if their opponent's thinking took a bit more of a turn for the worse than today, then more skilled enemies would appear the next time.

Wilhelm: "But they moved in to snuff us out just as the search had begun… Could our enemy have lost his composure too, maybe?"

Roswaal: "I thought so too, but I never felt that we were in danger. —Sometimes there are things that are hard to understand. Our enemy is one who puts careful consideration into his conduct, in both meticulously erasing all traces of himself and in the diplomatic deterioration between the Empire and the Kingdom. I was the one who baited the attack this time… But, the way they handled things feels naive."

Wilhelm: "Naive…?"

Immersed in her thoughts, Roswaal posed her speculations about the personality of Stride, who should have them enclosed on his board.

Roswaal: "Sending out such awful assassins as soon as we search for him despite how unwise that is and taking such poorly thought-out measures… It feels way too clumsy."

As if to say, "Something's not quite right here", Roswaal's doubts in regards to Stride's handiwork weren't dispelled. At the very least, Wilhelm couldn't laugh at this when he stopped to think about her indications.

If their enemy had been an average player at the game then they could have reluctantly agreed that their poorly thought out decision had just come from making a blunder. But, the unfathomable amount of intelligence that the look in that man's eyes had held didn't convince them of that.

Roswaal: "What I want us to think about right now is the case where Stride predicted our move. There'd be no issue if we were simply overestimating him, or if we were incompetent enough to allow our enemy run amok. But, that's not the case here…"

Wilhelm: "Then what are you saying is the meaning in this half-assed attack?"

Roswaal: "There's a chance he simply may've just wanted to tell us "I'm watching you." It was partially a warning, probably."

Bringing her train of thoughts to an end for now, Roswaal shrugged her slender shoulders as if saying "Oh dear."

Roswaal: "I agreed to this because I'm doing a favor for you, but our enemy this time seems to be quite troublesome. I don't mind getting involved, but it maaaay be a good idea for me to send Clind back home to protect my family again."

Wilhelm: "…You didn't bring him with you back during the Demi-Human War, right?"

Wilhelm raised one of his eyebrows at the sigh-stricken words of Roswaal. Wilhelm and Roswaal had met during the Civil War and it was getting close to 5 years that they'd known each other, but in all that time Wilhelm had never seen Clind with her.

During the civil war, it had actually been Carol who'd accompanied her throughout numerous battles.

Wilhelm: "From what I've seen though, he seems pretty on par with Carol."

Clind: "Quite so. Gratitude. But in fact, I was at Madam's side as well during the Civil War. I turned myself invisible so that people wouldn't see me. Concealment."

Wilhelm: "—tch! Really?!"

Clind: "No, I was lying. A joke."

Wilhelm: "…"

Clind: "I'm really such a child. Please find it in your gracious heart to overlook this.”

Clind raised both of his arms up and declared his surrender with an innocent look on his face. If this had been Wilhelm back when he had no restraints to him during the Civil War, this exchange might have ended up turning into bloodshed. Such had been his character back then.

Watching over their exchange, Roswaal lifted her arms up, which had been crossed against her large breasts, and spoke out,

Roswaal: “Back then the situation was what it was. During the Civil War I was called in to analyze the methods which the Demi-Human Alliance employed which, was so to speak, an important secret of the Royal Army’s operations. Of course, I’d taken into account the chances that not just me, but my family too would be targeted; so I sent Clind to protect them.”

Clind: “Luckily, no one pointed their fangs at the mansion whilst Madam was away. Fortuitous. Thanks to that I was able to concentrate my efforts on looking after her little boy without any trouble cropping up. Immaculacy.”

Wilhelm: “Right, I see… Wait a sec.”

Although Wilhelm had accepted her words in his stride, he got caught up on one of them that had caught his attention. Then, he immediately scowled at Clind (who’d been on the receiving end of his scowls a few times already), and said,

Wilhelm: “What you just said now, is that one of your bad jokes?”

Clind: “Hmm, let me see, I’m not sure what you’re referring to a joke here. Uncalled for.”

Wilhelm: “You said “her little boy”. From how you phrased it in saying “her little boy” it’s as if you’re talking about her actually having a son!”

Wilhelm reproached Clind for the mystifying way he spoke, and Clind cocked his head in bemusement still with a look of innocence on his face. Then he turned his face towards Roswaal and spoke, Clind: “Even if you talk like that, the fact of the matter is that I was entrusted to look after Madam’s son. Sincerity.”

Wilhelm: “Sincerity, even now I don’t believe a word you’re saying…”

Roswaal: “Nooooono, he really is telling the truth? I’ve entrusted him to look after my son. It’s just that it’s gotten to the point where he doesn’t have to look after him around the clock, so today I brought Clind wiiiiith me.”

Wilhelm: “…”

Now it wasn’t just Clind, but also Roswaal who had proclaimed it true. Wilhelm, in response to that, sunk into a brief silence and then clapped his hand against his forehead.

Wilhelm: “So in other words, you’re married, and yet even now you came and said those things to me…?”

Roswaal: “Whoa there, you’re making a misunderstanding. I’m not married. I did painstakingly give birth to him, but I don’t have a husband that tied a marriage together. Hence I’m raising my son by myseeeelf.”

Wilhelm: “Aren’t you a noble? Are you, as the head of the Mathers Family, in a position to do that?”

Though the Trias Family had now become extinguished, Wilhelm was originally from a noble family. He knew all too well how much weight was put on the hereditary system, especially in the Kingdom of Lugunica.

Whether as a subsidiary-noble family before the Civil War or now that the importance of magic had been looked at again, the position of the Mathers Family shouldn’t have changed. Their current head had given birth to a legitimate child out of wedlock. —Really how far did they deviate from the norm?

Roswaal: “In that sense, we already have people who let their families determine who succeeds them, rather, my family is welcomed to it.”

Wilhelm: “Typical nobles don’t do that…”

Roswaal: “Unfortunately there’s no one who can complain about that in our family. That’s because for me as well, both my parents and my siblings have died. That has allowed me to do as I pleeeeeease.”

Roswaal spread her hands out and chuckled. However, Wilhelm couldn’t hide his distress from her smiling face. It’s as if he was always being messed with in their differences in thinking, and that included the fact that she had a child.

Roswaal: “My oh myyyyy? Did I hurt you by the fact that I’ve already given birth to someone else’s child? Isn’t that quite a perverse jealousy you’re showing here?”

Wilhelm: “It’s just that for me you’ve become a person that’s becoming impossible to comprehend. There are people who love each other and even have children, but you can still poke fun at them.”

Roswaal: “Married people are a separate matter there. Don’t you think it cruel that you’re seemingly saying “Don’t look for another guy” to a widow…? You should keep that opinion to yourself.”

Wilhelm restrained himself from pressing her further when he heard Roswaal’s subdued answer. He wanted to see at least once what her son was like, just out of curiosity.

A son of Roswaal which was being raised by Clind. It sounded pretty scary.

Clind: “—Madam, let’s stop the pleasant chat here. Interruption. The palace guards are coming. Turmoil.”

Roswaal: “They finally arrived? Weeeeelll, as we’ve been so noisy, the guards were bound to come. It’d be better if they took care of the resulting investigation. We’ll just… Oh dear.”

In response to Clind’s words, Roswaal turned to look back as she nodded her head. But, Wilhelm who should have been standing there was already gone. He’d pushed the cleanup onto Roswaal and Clind and rushed back as fast as he could to his beloved wife.

Roswaal: “Although the chances he gets to tease me have diminished, he’s still the same at his core. I think that too is something rather likeable about him.”

Clind: “It’s as you say Madam, he seems like an interesting individual. I think it would be quite okay for him to meet with Karl-sama at least once. Suggestion.”

Roswaal: “Clind, are you saying that you are fond of his personality? Letting him meet Karl, eh…? I think perhaaaaps so, after we figure out how to settle this incident down, for now.”

Roswaal gave a curt nod to Clind’s words and then turned to look towards the direction which the ruckus was gradually approaching them from. How would they explain this bloodbath when the palace guards came rushing in?

For the time being she would have to suitably mislead them about Wilhelm,

Roswaal: “At any rate, Lugunica has just gotten out of a Civil War. It’s not been foreseen whether anything will happen at this point in time. Though, it’s still unclear if this is going to end up not being that big of a deal, or if this is something that exists outside of the course of history…”

Clind: “…”

Roswaal: “Whatever it may be, we have to overcome it for the opportunity that will come in the near future. And for that reason, me, you and even Karl will have to be used, riiiiight?”

Roswaal muttered that out quite coldly without looking at anyone.

Clind didn’t reply because he knew that her words were not meant for him. Nevertheless, the elegant butler gave his mistress, who was only talking to herself, a deep bow.

What awaited in the future reflected by those mismatched eyes of blue and yellow?

—The morrow ahead can’t be seen like so; in Lugunica, the saying goes: Only the Dragon knows.

5

Wilhelm left settling the matters with the bar to Roswaal and Clind and returned back to the Mansion as quickly as he could.

Originally, Wilhelm was going to stay back at the bar and assist with the guard’s investigation. And even if he hadn’t, he would have returned to the castle and met back up with Grimm and co., who were covering for his paperwork, and told them everything about what had just happened.

But Wilhelm did neither of those things; he felt that he shouldn’t.

It wasn’t because of something childish like he felt like he could cope with the situation alone or that he felt like he had no one he could speak the truth to. It was for a far simpler reason.

Wilhelm’s alarm bells were ringing, telling him to get back to the Mansion immediately.

And when he did, the Sword Demon’s intuition was—

???: “—So you’ve returned? You kept my venerable self waiting; you sure are quite the bold fool, aren’t you.”

Wilhelm: “…”

Wilhelm had swung the gate open as if he was about to break it and strode into the Astrea Residence which was his home. Keeping his pace quickened, he’d gone into the main hall to look for his beloved wife who should have been at home.

He was greeted there not by whom he’d expected, but someone he’d guessed would be there.

Wilhelm: “—Stride.”

Stride: “You kept me waiting, Wilhelm van Astrea. That was your name, wasn’t it?”

Stride listlessly replied to Wilhelm, who’d spat his name out in disgust, without any indication of being perturbed by him.

The man tilted his head forward as if he were mocking Wilhelm whilst unreservedly acting like he was at home, at the Astrea Residence where both Wilhelm and Theresia lived.

Stride: “I heard that all of you were clumsily scurrying about hither and thither in search of my venerable self. Thus, the deeply merciful me expressly came here. Come now, entertain me.”

He narrowed his eyes, which held not a shred of mercy, and declared that to the petrified Wilhelm.

Act Two

1

The Mansion's Great Hall was filled with a never seen before tension.

Wilhelm: "…"

Wilhelm stood petrified at the Hall's entrance, his blue eyes were emanating a cold, sharp sword aura. The reason he had that look to him was thanks to the shrewd, well-dressed man standing in the hall in front of him acting as if he owned the place (rather than Wilhelm, the actual owner).

At this moment, the man called Stride was an enemy which merited the utmost vigilance from the Sword Demon Wilhelm van Astrea—To be blunt, their relationship was the sort where no one would bat an eye at him if he were to suddenly lop off his neck.

In fact, he had no doubt that putting that idea into practice would solve many of his problems at once.

Wilhelm was driven by this urge of wanting to yield his body to that snap decision and swing his sword.

However, he didn't do that. He couldn't. And that was because…

Stride: "Are you just going to stand there and make that doddery expression? My venerable self bid you to entertain me. Or are Kingdom-style welcomes always meant to be such a bore? If so, then my venerable self could commiserate tolerating it.]

Wilhelm: "Where did you take Theresia to?"

Stride: "…"

Stride's thin lips cruelly curled up as he spat out his maliciousness to no end. Wilhelm glared at his cold eyes and quietly asked him—About the whereabouts of his wife.

Stride kept his silence at that question and merely narrowed his eyes. Anger started to boil up within Wilhelm when he realized that he was making no progress and he firmly clenched his teeth.

Wilhelm had finished his business, went back home, and he'd been greeted with this reception. There was no way that Theresia, who should have been home, would have let his man in. —Him being here was certainly something that he'd cooked up.

Wilhelm: "Where is Theresia. Don't make me say the same thing again."

Stride: "Giving orders to my venerable self, now that's the mark of an impudent man. Are women really that important? You've even quenched down the urge of firing yourself up, sealed the reason why you're called the Sword Demon within your sheath, and here you yet remain, facing my venerable self."

Stride's eyes were full of scorn. He heaved out another sigh at Wilhelm as if he were disappointed at him. Wilhelm tch'ed at that.

Wilhelm: "Hey, don't you dare run your mouth. —This is no misunderstanding."

Stride: "Oh, a misunderstanding you say?"

Wilhelm had unsheathed his blade and pointed it straight in between Stride's eyebrows, only the width of a hair separated the blade from his skin. However Stride's expression didn't change a bit despite seeing how sharp the sword tip was; instead he closed one of his eyes in interest.

Faced with Stride's behavior, which never showed signs of wanting to acknowledge the actual situation, along with his relaxed attitude, Wilhelm spoke out.

Wilhelm: "The fact of the matter is that you turned up here without a care in the world, you showed your face without bothering to even bring that lumbering colossus. Right now it's thanks to Theresia, and no one else, that your head is still connected to your body. Only whether she is safe or not remains your lifeline. Your life is in Theresia's hands, don't you forget that."

Stride: "…"

Stride's expression changed for the first time in response to Wilhelm's hostility and murder-laced threats. Unexpected emotions flitted across Stride's slightly widened eyes, and for the briefest of moments, he'd turned back to being a man rather than a demon of arrogance.

Of course, it was only for a brief moment. Stride broke into a hostile smile immediately afterwards and said,

Stride: "Ghahaha, how amusing of you. Your woman is the one holding my venerable self's life in her hands? Only a fool or hero would be able to say such things in a situation like this. So, which one of those are you?"

Wilhelm: "There's no difference in how fast I will swing my sword regardless of which one. If you don't want it to be tried out on your neck, then—."

Let's see if you can blabber away with one or two of your arms cut off, Wilhelm thought as he began to spring into action.

However, he had to change his course of action immediately.

Wilhelm: "—tch."

In an instant Wilhelm turned his sword away from Stride and parried the attacks that had come from behind him with his steel. The shock of the blows, which were accompanied by a shrill grating noise, resounded through his wrist. The weapons he'd deflected now stood sticking out from the floor and walls.

They were clumps of steel which shone with a dull dark hue—The same kind as he'd just seen when he'd been attacked at the bar before returning to the Mansion: they were called Kunai. Naturally the first thing that popped into his mind was their connection to his enemies from earlier.

If this Shinobi had been of the same quality as those he'd come across at the bar then he would have been able to launch a direct counterattack; however, this was not the case here. In terms of speed and aim, this one was far more skilled.

Wilhelm: "This guy's better than the ones from earlier?!"

Wilhelm yelled and turned to look around; a shadow jumped out from the corner of his eye as he did. The shadow jumped on the walls and ceiling and flew all over the hall with incredible speed and trajectory.

Tching at this extraordinary spectacle, Wilhelm hung close to the wall. He avoided being attacked from all sides and leant his back against the wall setting himself up to parry the attack.

That way he could he could immediately counterattack regardless of whether the attack came from the left, right or front. However—

Wilhelm: "—Gnh."

The attack that shockwaved through him from the wall had been one that had been completely out of his imagination.

It wasn't magic. This was a type of technique called a "Wall Strike" where you could manipulate the Mana circulating inside your body. He'd heard that soldiers typically used techniques like these to unconsciously direct their body with Mana—This particular technique boosted that as a battle art. The blow he'd received just now was quite similar to that.

In fact, although his enemy's attack hadn't left him any visible wounds, it had caused some serious damage inside his body.

Wilhelm: "Gh, ukh…hk."

Stride: "You're going to die here? That's really a bit of a let down."

Wilhelm: "—tch!"

Wilhelm crumpled to his knees, letting out an anguished cry as Stride's parched scorn grated against his eardrums. Both Theresia's smile and Stride's scornful laughter flashed through his mind in quick succession. A blaze raged into life from deep withinside him.

Wilhelm: “GHHHHAAAAA—!!”

He put his right foot down hard on the floorboards and forcibly kept his collapsed body up. In a flash, his unwithering sword spirit spread explosively through the hall and now he could clearly make out where the shadow was, on its way to deliver the finishing blow.

Wilhelm flicked his wrist around and stabbed at the shadow bearing down on him from above. His stab had the potential to deliver certain death as it pierced through the wind, but his enemy managed to twist his neck back and barely avoided it. His black mask was cut across vertically and the hachigane wound across his forehead was grazed by his sword; sparks leapt up.

The two of them clattered into each other and the shadow that had landed beside him kicked out at him.

Wilhelm: “—Gnh.”

A fierce shockwave racked Wilhelm’s body and he gritted his teeth to withstand the trauma of his internal organs being knocked about. He realized that he hadn’t succeeded in killing him. His enemy immediately tried to jump back behind the wall.

—And that’s when Wilhelm brought the pommel of his sword down, mercilessly smashing it into his enemy’s face.

Wilhelm: “—tch?!”

???: “RRRRRRRHHHHHAAAA—!”

Wilhelm’s unexpected riposte had ended up being the decisive blow that had clattered his opponent down to the ground. He had driven his blow with enough force to beat his opponent to death, however he had tch’ed at their reaction. There’d been enough force in his blow to kill his opponent if it had been a direct hit. But it hadn’t been one

The enemy’s hachigane had taken the sting out of his blow just like it had done when he’d stabbed him.

Stride: “Hah, you’ve gone beyond my venerable self’s expectations. Even with the fact that the Shinobi belonging to the General should have been somewhat skilled amongst my pieces.”

Dozens of seconds had elapsed, and while that was only a short amount of time, the place had become a spectacle of their mortal struggle.

And amongst all that Stride was chuckling to himself as if he were enjoying the show. His behavior felt completely disingenuous here. He didn’t have a single care in the world about his Shinobi’s defeat who lay collapsed in a pool of his own blood,

Stride: “As I thought, his duel with the Eight Arms really wasn’t a fluke, eh? I tried testing things out, but the results were mostly as expected.…What a dull affair.”

Wilhelm: “You bastard, what the fuck are you trying to do…”

Stride: “Hrm?”

The man had sunk into thought, paying no more heed to the two who had fought, or to the hall whose reception-sofa had toppled over, tables had been smashed and paintings and ornaments strewn all over the floor.

Stride’s very being seemed so absurd to Wilhelm that it went beyond unnerving. The first impression he’d had of him back at Picoutatte hadn’t been wrong.

—I need to take this man’s life as quickly as possible.

Stride: “Your eyes are the epitome of inelegance. What’s more, you pose to me a question that is ripe with your insipid slander. What does my venerable self intend to do? Well, shouldn’t I have told you that from the very beginning. —Everything is for my entertainment.”

Wilhelm: “Are you seriously saying that you’re carrying out all this nonsense out of sheer whim?”

Stride: “You speak such drivel. Why do you lump entertainment with whim? Entertainment is exhilarating because you set a plan in stone, think things through and then take the time and effort to prepare things.”

Wilhelm: “…I’d forgotten how pointless it is to speak with madmen. No point going on any longer.”

Wilhelm deemed that further conversation with Stride, who just shrugged his shoulders, was pointless.

Stride showed no signs of divulging Theresia’s condition. Before returning back to the fight, Wilhelm was going to lop off the Shinobi’s head and then put the question of his wife’s safety to Stride’s body.

He slowly stepped towards the Shinobi who lay face-down in a pool of his own blood—

Stride: “By the way, do you remember my rings?”

Wilhelm: “…”

Wilhelm’s breath caught in its tracks at the words Stride had suddenly uttered.

With his hands spread out, Stride flashed the rings he wore on his fingers; Wilhelm’s eyes were drawn in by their bewitching radiance. There were 9 of them in total—As for the missing ring, it had already been used to cast a curse on Bertol (who was Wilhelm’s father-in-law and Theresia’s actual father) that had bound his life until they’d managed to destroy said ring.

Stride had declared to him the amount of rings he had left, which totaled nine, when he’d bid him farewell last time. The light of one of those rings, the one on the middle finger of his left hand, glowed brighter,

Stride: “Our earlier amusement ended up as a trial-run, but this time that isn’t going to be so. —Nine, Once all the preparations are in place I shalt give you the show of a lifetime.”

Wilhelm: “…So you came to cast a curse with your rings on me so that you can finish your preparations or something?”

Stride: “If I let myself be carried by whim and place a curse on you that would be but middling entertainment. But things aren’t so simple. The curse rings have their own kind of procedure that has to be followed. The reason I came here was only so that I could extend my every courtesy.”

Wilhelm: “Your every courtesy?”

Wilhelm was shocked to hear something he’d never ever expected to hear from him. A faint smile formed on Stride’s face on seeing his reaction,

Stride: “According to things, you have the potential to be one of my venerable self’s players in the game. Is it not courteous to say a few cordialities before moving a piece on the board? When it comes to entertainment, logic is an absolute.”

His ring shone. Wilhelm tried to move towards Stride whilst keeping his eye on the unfolding situation. Perhaps he’d kept talking so nonchalantly because he’d been planning to try and fulfill these conditions of his curse rings.

However, Wilhelm’s concerns were off the mark. —The rings had already cast their curse.

Stride: “Neither money nor loyalty are decisive enough factors in linking a pawn to its master. In order to make someone your pawn, the most efficient way is to bind their life.”

Wilhelm: “—tch.”

Astoundingly, something burst out of the pool of blood in response to Stride’s words. That something was the body of the Shinobi, who had collapsed there from Wilhelm’s blow, leaping up. A red light, identical to the one from the curse casting ring, was shining from the Shinobi’s eyes hidden underneath his torn mask.

Stride was controlling the dying Shinobi by force using the ring’s power.

Wilhelm: “JUST DIE ALREADY!”

Stride: “That too would be mirthful. A difference that tantamounts to no more than just dying by the palm of mine venerable self’s hand or dying flashily upon the verge of death.”

The Shinobi didn’t react to Wilhelm’s shout so Stride responded on his behalf—Wilhelm himself couldn’t understand what Stride had meant. He gritted his teeth and held out his sword, but the Shinobi, who was now standing up, dug his own nails into himself as if he were tearing up his body.

Straight after he did that, a pale blue seal rose up on his body visible from a gap in his black garb. As it rose a ghastly aura accompanied by a fighting spirit surged up; Wilhelm bent his knees, expecting a fight to break out—

Stride: “Oh yeah. There was a woman in the mansion, but she’s tied up above. You’d better go pick her up.”

Wilhelm: “Huh.”

Distracted by Stride’s nonchalant words, a flurry of light exploded, taking advantage of his momentary lapse.

Then, the Shinobi leaped up utilizing all of his strength—He grabbed Stride by his thin waist, broke one of the windows and jumped outside of the mansion.

The Shinobi tore grass up from the garden’s lawn, and then with just one kick, he took off from the stone wall and left the battlefield. Of course, that meant that Stride was getting away as well, so Wilhelm rushed to the garden to try and pursue them.

But there were no signs of the enemy already by the time he reached the garden. This had been the result of them pouring all of their strength into their escape.

Wilhelm: “Shit! Damn those guys, acting however they please…”

With unbearable anger welling up in his jaw, Wilhelm set out back to the mansion. He would need to set aside the credibility of Stride's words for later, for now he needed to rescue Theresia who should be somewhere upstairs.

But Wilhelm was greeted by someone as he turned back to the Hall with that in mind—

???: "H-Hey, Wilhelm?! What on earth happened here?"

Wilhelm: "Theresia? Grimm, you too…"

Theresia, who he'd thought had been restrained by those guys, was looking over at the disastrous state of the Hall in astonishment. Grimm was standing behind her as well, clad in his usual attire.

There was nothing amiss with either of them other than the confusion they showed wondering what had happened. There were no signs of any injuries on them and Theresia still looked the same as when he'd said goodbye to her this morning.

Wilhelm: "Wait, doesn't your face look a little bit pale?"

Theresia: "N… no idea, but anyone would feel paler and be as surprised as me if they came back to find their home in this state! Wilhelm, you're the one that's hurt…"

Wilhelm: "…It's nothing. So long as nothing happened to you."

Theresia rushed over to him, half-running, and frowned when she saw the state Wilhelm was in.

Luckily, he hadn't suffered any external wounds during his fight with the Shinobi. Even so, the Hall was in complete disarray and there was a pool of blood adorning its floor. It wasn't like nothing had happened.

Of course, if Theresia was safe, the damage to the mansion was no big deal.

Wilhelm: "…Wait up. If that's the case, then the woman that guy mentioned was…"

It didn't matter if he'd just been bluffing. They'd be all hunky-dory if he’d just been using that as an excuse to escape. But, he wasn’t prepared to believe that so easily, he’d already let down his guard around that bastard too much.

Wilhelm: “We need to go upstairs!”

Theresia: “Huh?”

Wilhelm grew paler and yelled those words out, to which Theresia reacted in shock.

Grimm: “—h̸̆k̵!”

As soon as he heard Wilhelm’s voice, Grimm, immediately sensing the urgency of the situation, rushed towards the hallway. Wilhelm took Theresia by the arm and followed behind Grimm out of the Hall. He would not leave her behind. He pulled her by her slender arm and rushed up the stairs together.

Then, in the room that was just above the Hall…

Grimm: “—Ŗ̉õ̶̰l̶.”

Theresia: “—CAROL?”

Grimm’s broken voice and Theresia’s high-pitched shriek echoed across the mansion as soon as they saw Carol’s unconscious figure strewn down onto the floor.

2

???: “There’s really no more doubt that Stride’s aims are against you and your wife.”

???: “…”

Enveloped by a heavy-laden atmosphere, Wilhelm closed his eyes at the conclusion Bordeaux had informed him.

He had no room to deny it. They had broken into the Astrea Residence in person in broad daylight. Of all the things they could’ve done, they’d managed to slip through the Noble District undetected, a district which should have had the highest levels of security in the Kingdom.

And that meant that it was no exaggeration to say that things were graver than what had transpired.

Bordeaux: “If we don’t keep our guard up around this guy, I’m pretty sure he’d even be capable of slipping in and out of the Royal Castle considering what he’s done!”

Wilhelm: “We sure are in a mess where we can’t just laugh it off as us overthinking it, huh. Of course, all the members of the Royal Family, starting with His Majesty, have had their personal guards strengthened. The upper echelon of nobles too, but…”

Bordeaux: “This isn’t something we can keep up forever. He’ll be able to clearly see that we’re being drawn thin.”

It was pretty conceivable that Stride would start moving in the very moment that they sat down to take a breather. If they kept reading too much into what was happening, then the ones who’d end up being unable to move about would be themselves.

However, the recent attack on the Astrea Residence had left behind a profound effect on the Kingdom.

Bordeaux: “What have your wife… and Grimm been up to?”

Wilhelm: “They visit Carol’s bedside quite often. She still hasn’t opened her eyes… According to what the Healing Arts User said, there’s nothing out of the ordinary to her body though.”

Bordeaux: “Everything rests in our enemy’s palm in that matter too, eh? This is goddamn unbearable.”

Bringing his hand to his forehead, Bordeaux let out a sigh. Watching this display, Wilhelm gritted his teeth and kept his silence. He wished that he could let his natural short temper boil its course and take care of their enemies like that but things were never so simple.

Due to both his wife and his camarade-de-guerre’s sake, Stride was no longer the sort of enemy they could just kill.

—Five days had already passed since their uninvited guest had turned up at the Astrea Residence.

Carol hadn't opened her eyes even once since the day she had been discovered at the mansion. The Healing Arts User had diagnosed that her life wasn't under any threat and that the cause of her slumber remained a mystery. Theresia stayed always at her bedside and continued to nurse her.

Carol was more to Theresia than just a long-serving attendant. Their relationship was more like that of close friends or sisters. Because of this, leaving her alone in the mansion that day was for Theresia like an irremovable thorn driving into her that continued to torment her mind.

And it was safe to say that there was someone who was taking it even worse than Theresia…

Wilhelm: "—Grimm… I hope he doesn't beat himself up too much."

Bordeaux: "I figure that he's blaming himself too… Since Grimm's intuition is always spot on."

Grimm was Wilhelm's comrade in arms and Carol's lover. He was blaming himself the most out of all of them about what had happened to Carol.

Because Grimm had been the only one who'd sensed the danger of Stride's current attack.

Bordeaux: "Feels like he's being a bit too hasty in that too. Though, for sure his intuition works darn well."

Bordeaux muttered that out. He understood why Grimm was blaming himself, but he was also trying to deny him the blame. But that wasn't an easy thing to do; everyone in the Zergev Corps knew that since Grimm's intuition for danger was impeccable.

Bordeaux's consolations probably wouldn't do Grimm much good due to his pride in that.

Wilhelm: “He won’t accept them no matter how many times we say it. How many times have we ended up being saved by that guy’s intuition till now. I think he’s proud of it. So that’s why…”

He’d ended up thinking that the danger was likely looming near Theresia and had chosen to be next to her instead of Carol. For that, Grimm found it impossible to blame anyone but himself.

Wilhelm: “Changing the subject, how are things going with finding out Stride’s whereabouts?”

Bordeaux: “I haven’t gotten any reports bearing us that news. As long as we know that he’s accompanied by skilled individuals like the Eight Arms revealing our hand carelessly will just invite them to wreak more havoc on us.”

Wilhelm: “When we find him, we’ll encircle him with my troops. I’ll make him pay for fucking about with us so much.”

Bordeaux: “My troops, huh? I see that you’ve started to become aware of your role as their commander.”

Bordeaux lowered his eyebrows slightly at the eager Wilhelm. His reaction felt a little out of sorts, and more so than that, his words felt too blithe. That made Wilhelm raise his eyebrows.

Wilhelm: “Stop talking like you’ve suddenly aged 60 years. We don’t have an infinite number of people assigned to the bodyguards. Those who can fight will defend themselves. Don’t you have your ax somewhere in the room?”

Bordeaux: “I do. Behind the frame on the wall. —But, some progress should have been made.”

Wilhelm: “…”

Wilhelm felt relieved hearing that Bordeaux’s weapon of choice was still hidden in the room. Then, he cocked his head in confusion. Bordeaux rested his elbows on his desk and then gave a short nod. And following that…

???: “—I’m sorry to interrupt y’all while you’re in the middle of your discussion.”

The office door silently swung open and a man poked his face in. Wilhelm’s eyes widened in surprise when he caught sight of that individual, who’d come barging in whilst giving them that slightly uncourteous greeting.

He knew his face. He was tall, had long hair, and a sweet face that felt somewhat feminine—In fact, he was a former convict who’d once been thrown into the Prison Tower for taking advantage of several women at the same time.

The man’s name was Orphe, a con artist who went by the name of Six Tongues who’d womanized six women at the same time.

He’d been Wilhelm’s cellmate in the Prison Tower for a brief period of time.

Wilhelm: “What the hell is that heartbreaker of a lothario doing here? As you can clearly see there ain’t any women here!”

Orphe: “Heh, even after suuuch a long time, he’s still the same ol’ unfriendly guy. I really don’t feel like stayin’ here too long without being told. I am still busy after all.”

Wilhelm: “Still haven’t learnt a thing and misleading women, are you?”

Orphe: “Yeah, yeah, that’s right. —But now I mislead ‘em for the good of the Kingdom, don’t I?”

Orphe flashed him a smile. An aroma of flowers that felt weird coming from a guy was faintly drifting off from his body.

It looked like he’d had his hands full before coming here for the “Good of the Kingdom” or however he’d called it.

Bordeaux: “I do understand your misgivings, but it was you who introduced this man to me in the first place. He’s proved his usefulness as a man of quick-wits since then. But I do understand your misgivings.”

Orphe: “Why, do I really have to be made out as being so shady by my immediate boss?”

Bordeaux placated Wilhelm who had been showing his mistrust at the shady-looking Orphe. Orphe, though disgruntled at what he’d said, had had his position confirmed and thus cleared his throat,

Orphe: “Anyways it’s as Lord Zergev says. Both you and I are pretty much one and the same in the sense of being our Master’s right hand men… Though well, are roles are as different as that of a Knight Sword and a Sword-Cane, you can be sure of that.”

Wilhelm: “Since when am I Bordeaux’s adjutant…”

Orphe: “Since you took over the Zergev Corps—also when things crop up you come running to report them to our Master. Saying you aren’t on good terms with each other sounds more like the sort of pitiful excuse a bastard who hops from hooker to hooker would say.”

Wilhelm: “…”

Having had his instinct to protest slammed shut by Orphe, Wilhelm reluctantly kept his silence. He’d be fighting a losing battle, even if he’d argued, since this guy was the Six Tongues—Wilhelm didn’t have a hope in hell of matching him tit-for-tat in talk and coming out the winner.

Wilhelm: “So what is it that the quick-witted Six Tongues is doing as Bordeaux’s Sword-Cane?”

Orphe: “I was granted a few subordinates who act as our Master’s eyes and ears in various places… That’s the rub of my position. With this, I’ve been allowed to spend time surprisingly not in boredom.”

Wilhelm: “So that’s how things are.”

In other words, they made use of Orphe’s ill-famed tongue to gather intelligence. They weren’t worried about his sociable behavior precisely because he’d originally been a man who’d been caught for wooing women from the cream of society. If they tightened the reins around his vices then they could more than adequately treat him like the talented person he was.

Bordeaux: "He's still only on his trial period right now, but where possible I'd like to eventually increase the area he operates in. I intend to get a comprehensive overview of the frailties of the Kingdom which are present both now and back during the Civil War."

Orphe: "I'm pretty certain the Kingdom is being shaken about as seen fit. I'd recommend, to a certain extent, arranging it so that I'm connected with the people who are keeping their eyes on our most crucial areas. Like with Lord McMahon I suppose."

Bordeaux: "I'll think about it."

Lord McMahon—He was referring to Miklotov McMahon. He had a good eye for battle strategy, even though he was a Civil Servant. He was one of Wilhelm's acquaintances as well, and he'd helped him out before.

Although Bordeaux's concerns about the Kingdom's future were important Wilhelm was more worried about the immediate future for now. Bordeaux had purposely kept Wilhelm in his room and let Orphe come in with his report, so that meant that…

Wilhelm: "…You have some news about Stride?"

Orphe: "For now all I can guarantee is that this guy has an unusually suspicious nature to him. I could barely find any traces of him despite having gallivanted his name out. The response from the Empire wasn't great… But well, setting that aside, I feel like something far different is afoot too."

Orphe gave a short pause as that was his opinion and then he swiftly shifted his course of talk.

Orphe: "It was like that at Picoutatte, but I guess they've got their eyes fixed on the Sword Saint with all the ruckus they've started to kick up towards the Astrea Family. Nevertheless, his goals are hard to read. Who knows whether he wants to kill her or wants something else before he does…”

Wilhelm: “I will never let him do that.”

Orphe: “Now that’s some zeal I’d make off with, that’s the spirit! The more beautiful women remaining in the world for me too, the better.”

Wilhelm gave a silent frown at Orphe’s implicit remark about Theresia’s beauty. Orphe let a wry smile slip onto his face as he sensed Wilhelm’s piercing animosity and shrugged his shoulders saying “Dear oh dear,.”

Orphe: “Whatever he’s scheming, he’s going to do it in the Kingdom of Lugunica. That’s for sure. Wilhelm heard he was preparing his entertainment, and he’s become bolder in doing so. He’s most likely turning up in different places as part of his preparations.”

Bordeaux: “You’re taking too long to get to the point, Orphe. Tell us your conclusion. Where is Stride?”

Orphe: “I don’t know exactly where he is, but I do know a place he’s been to several times.”

All traces of joking about had vanished from Orphe’s expression. He’d answered Bordeaux’s question in a hushed tone. Both Wilhelm and Bordeaux’s facial expressions stiffened in response, and Orphe gave a deep nod.

Orphe: “It was a pain in the ass. But at any rate, when that guy turned his attention to that place…”

Wilhelm: “And, what was “that place”?”

Wilhelm pressed Orphe to get to the point as he tried to start his story about all the hardships he’d faced. Orphe reluctantly shook his head at that simple question and said,

Orphe: “Shamrock Valley. A dismal place that is always enshrouded by a thick fog.”

Shamrock Valley was a cursed land known far and wide to be a haunt of evil. It was located in South-Eastern Lugunica on the map. As Orphe had said, it was notorious for always being covered in a thick fog.

Fog was seen as an ill omen not just in Lugunica, but in the whole world. Since the fog made it so you could barely see and the weather was unpredictable, Shamrock Valley was regarded as a natural stronghold that kept people away.

But it wasn't the fog that clung over the Shamrock Valley that was their issue right now.

—Shamrock Valley was rumored to be the place where the Witch had settled.

???: "Many still shcoff at dh' rumoursh. But, it's true that dh' Witch once shettled in Shamrock Valley. At leasht, that's what Libre told me."

Having been informed about the rumours of the Shamrock Valley, the wizened figure let out an exhausted sigh.

He was an old individual with a queer-looking body. He had scaly green skin, a yellow cockscomb on his head and a really long tongue rolled up behind his thick lips which darted in and out of view. At first sight, he looked similar to a Lizard Person or a Frog Person but his eyes were closer to that of a fish than a reptile's.

He was from a Demi-Human Tribe that was regarded as a subspecies of the Lizard People; there weren't too many of their kind around. However, his standing had no relation to his origins as he was an important figure who had been pivotal for the Demi-Human Tribes.

The wizened individual's name was Cragrell Dawson—He had been one of the three commanders who had led the Demi-Human Alliance during the Demi-Human War. And he'd represented the Alliance after it fell.

To cut a long story short, he was the current representative of the Demi-Human Tribes in Lugunica. He was the key figure who'd met with King Lugunica at the signing ceremony to put an end to the near decade-long Civil War.

Cragrell: "That being shaid, I'm jusht a feeble old man who washn't expected to fight. I was jusht there to serve Libre and Valga. After they died I was left to bear their heavy burden. And now I've been kept hidden in dh' Kingdom, and since it'd be troubleshome if I were to turn up dead I'm living a hermit's life… Without a care in the world."

Cragrell scratched his head with his three-fingered hand, his voice listless.

They were in a room of a mansion in the Royal Capital granted to him by the Kingdom. Of course Cragrell's whereabouts hadn't been made public and only a few people knew that he was here.

If Cragrell were to die due to some plot then the thirst for Civil War could once again erupt. The amount of vigilance the Kingdom took had drastically increased ever since Stride's presence had come to light.

A stout defense had been placed in the mansion because of that. Their talk too was being held in absolute secrecy.

Cragrell's eyes were laced with complex emotions; and in front of him—facing each other, a woman with long indigo hair was reflected in his eyes.

Cragrell: "But, that's how fate rollsh. Those who hated and killed each other from dh' start, thish time ended up trying to protect me at dh' rishk of their very lives."

Roswaal: "When circumstances change so too does one's treatment. It's rather straaaange to say this but I'd like you to be tolerant and accept it this time around. That's because we've been wanting to avoid a situation where our country goes up in flames for a while now, and it isn't just us, but also your brethren Cragrell-dono."

Cragrell: "Fate, shpeak of dh' irony, it's around you too… I never expected to get lucky enough to get a chance to talk to you like thish after dh' Civil War ended."

Faced with Cragrell's complex tone of voice, the woman—Roswaal J Mathers let a smile appear on her devilishly beautiful face and nodded as if empathizing with his feelings.

Face to face like this, it was fine work indeed that Cragrell was just about keeping his cool. At any rate—

Roswaal: "From your perspective it's because I was one of your greatest enemies who prevented your victory, riiiiight?"

Cragrell: "Victory? You say such shtrange things. Victory, where was that in that war?"

Roswaal: "…Hmmh."

Roswaal raised her eyebrows slightly at his unexpected counterpoint. Cragrell then shook his head with a look on his face that had "Give me a break" written all over it.

Cragrell: "It was like letting your temper flare up too much. The Demi-Human Tribes launched into battle with unbearable anger courshing through them. We had no chance of winning and only Valga gave it some sherioush thought. I ran around like a headlessh chicken and Libre was alwaysh searching for a compromise. — Valga was deluded by the Witch as well and losht his bearings on everything."

Roswaal: "…"

Roswaal looked down as soon as she heard the word "Witch" come out. Immersed in his past, Cragrell didn't notice the swirl of emotion that filled her heterochromic eyes of blue and yellow.

Nevertheless, both of them had their thoughts about the Demi-Human War. Even in regards to the topic of the Witch that had surfaced now both of them held complicated feelings that they couldn't express into words.

Cragrell: "I don't even know where Valga brought that Witch from.

But before I knew it she was our backbone. Shamrock Valley was cleared out for dh' Witch's plan."

Roswaal: "…What we managed to find out is that Sphinx's Testing Grounds lies in that land of fog. I've been there to check the place out a few times, but I didn't manage to get any results."

Cragrell: "That's becaushe I've heard it's down to dh' Witch's Dark Artsh. Take care around her refuge; only Valga and Libre were told how to enter it, or so they say."

Roswaal: "It's a dangerous place to scout out without resorting to tricks. You have be well prepared."

Roswaal bit her lip in response to Cragrell's answer who had told her that finding the Witch's refuge was difficult.

Though Roswaal was the type who'd always try to keep her cool from habit, when it came to Sphinx—Only when it came to that being who was labelled "That Witch", did she find it hard to keep her cool.

—That was because Sphinx and the Mathers Family shared a long, long history. Destroying the defective product of that Witch without leaving a single trace of Sphinx's existence behind was one of Roswaal J Mather's lifelong goals.

Therefore, it was probably suitable to call Sphinx's Testing Grounds, which lay hidden in Shamrock Valley, a Testing Grounds when you took into consideration Sphinx's history. Not being able to find the Testing Grounds was a real thorn in Roswaal's side.

—Not just for her own goal but also for everyone she'd forged friendships with.

Cragrell: "You have quite dh' troubled look on your face. Why are you so attached to that place? You're a mage. Could it be that you're trying to retrieve the research reshults that the Witch left behind."

Roswaal: "Sorry but the magic I was taught is for making people happy. It's absolutely incompatible with that being's quintessence.

My goal is…”

“To completely erase all traces of that Witch”—she tried to firmly declare that but for some reason she hesitated with her words.

Roswaal: “…”

Roswaal licked her chapped lips, providing them moisture, and then cut off her hesitation in an instant.

Roswaal: “It’s moreso that some comrades of mine are interested in that place and one of my friends was hurt. I’ve been saved by her many times. —She’s the rare sort of friend whom I desire for her happiness.”

Carol was still sleeping even now. During the Civil War she had accompanied Roswaal on numerous of her rash excursions as her escort. In her role she hadn’t been able to go against Roswaal’s opinions, and she didn’t know what she thought of them, but Roswaal was quite fond of her.

Of course that was completely uncomparable to Mathers’ most cherished desire. Even so, when it came to the conditions of friendship that Roswaal personally embraced, she filled those plenty enough.

Cragrell: “…Your pershonality is so troublesome to dh’ point that I’d rather shympathize with you.”

Roswaal: “I know. But I can’t reflect on that.”

She didn’t know why she hadn’t gotten angry at the words the old man had spoken that had felt like he’d seen right through her. Either way, Roswaal had nothing more to gain so she started to get up from her seat.

Cragrell: “—The last time I shpoke with Libre was before the Battle of Aihia.”

Out of the blue, Cragrell turned his eyes not to Roswaal but into empty space and muttered out those words.

“Libre”, Roswaal pondered over that name that had cropped up several times already in her mind, and then she spoke out,

Roswaal: “He was one of the leaders of the Demi-Human Alliance like Valga and Sphinx. Libre Fermi.”

Cragrell: “He was shomething like a friend to me, someone who I knew for a long time. This is what Libre told me. “If Valga doesn’t cool his foolish head down the Alliance will meet its end when all of us are dead. I will leave it to you to broker peace for when that time comes.”“

Libre was renowned for his prowess in battle having crossed swords with many of the Kingdom’s Soldiers on the frontlines.

After the war it became clear from the testimonies of people who’d known him that in contrast to what he was renowned for he’d been the person who’d most wanted a reconciliation with the Kingdom amongst the three leaders.

It made sense from Libre’s point of view to designate Cragrell as the Post-Civil War leading delegate.

Cragrell: “In the end, Libre’s intuition was spot on. Only I, a feeble old man, survived and now I’m caged here until I kick the bucket under the pretense of being under the Kingdom’s protection. Enough of that, I intend to fulfill my duty towards my brethren, but…”

Roswaal: “…”

Cragrell: “If truly I am to fulfill Libre’s final requesht, then I should do this.”

Cragrell’s eyes, which were gazing into empty space, swayed with emotion. His distant gaze wasn’t fixed upon the wall of his dreary room. It was probably fixed upon the past with his now-lost friends. Eventually…

Cragrell: “—tsh.”

Cragrell jerked his chin up and let his tongue unroll from behind his puffy lips out towards Roswaal. For a second, Roswaal tensed up as if expecting something untoward, but she immediately realized what the old man was doing soon after.

—A glittering crystal stone rested against the tip of Cragrell's long tongue.

Cragrell: "This shtone has a portion of dh' Witch's Od confined in it. Libre told me when he handed it to me that with it you can remove the Refuge's conshealment mechanishm. Though with how shtubborn I am I was planning to take it to my grave."

Roswaal: "But you didn't do that. Why?"

Cragrell: "—The war ended a long time ago. I see that you too are simply just a pershon who gets sad when one of your friends is hurt. I've turned my back to the battlefield when I didn't fight, and now I don't have the strength left to persevere."

Cragrell slowly shook his head and Roswaal took the crystal from the tip of his tongue.

She could feel a sinister aura faintly emanating from it as soon as she set it on her palm—That aura was the miasma of that diabolical Witch which seemed to almost be telling her "Part of me has lingered behind in this world, even after death."

But Roswaal's aim had been achieved thanks to this being left behind. She'd told her friends "Leave it to me" and then made her way over here. She would not lose face with her friends.

Relieved by that, Roswaal bowed and prepared herself to leave this place. But before she did—

Roswaal: "You have my gratitude, Cragrell-dono. Also, although I may be overstepping my marks here I'd like to say just one last thing."

Cragrell: "What ish it?"

Roswaal: "You fought well on your battlefield. That is something I can assure you, having come here to meet you like this. You have nothing at all to be ashamed about in regards to your friends.”

She didn’t intend to comfort him nor overly worry about him. Even if none of her words reached his heart, there wasn’t anything unusual about them not reaching a mutual understanding with that Civil War between them.

Even so, Roswaal left those words behind and Cragrell looked down wordlessly.

—As one of the conclusions of the Demi-Human War, merely that was enough.

4

Roswaal returned with the good news and the decision to mobilize the operation was taken immediately after.

With Stride’s movements discovered by Orphe, and the Testing Grounds left by the Witch Sphinx presumed to be Stride’s objective —They prepared to set out there to shed light on the situation.

And if things went well they would prevent whatever Stride was planning before it came to fruition and throttle the life out of him—

???: “So you’re going to that Shamrock Valley, famed for its danger, for that purpose?”

In preparation for the operation, Wilhelm was changing into his Royal Knights outfit. Theresia frowned at him as he was putting on his white jacket and then asked him that question.

Sliding his hands into the jacket’s sleeves Wilhelm gave a short nod and replied with a “Yeah”

Wilhelm: “That Roswaal girl got information about the Witch’s Refuge from Cragrell of the Alliance. After several investigations turning up nothing, we should make a bit more progress with this.”

Theresia: “…You really do believe in Roswaal-san, don’t you?”

Wilhelm: “Believe in, now that’s a pretty unappetizing way of putting it.”

Theresia reached out to his jacket and smoothed the wrinkles on its back out with her palm. Wilhelm couldn’t see what look she had on her face from where he was. But a wry smile spread across his face in response to her words.

He’d sought out her help before in regards to Stride, and now he’d sought out her assistance in regards to the matter of Shamrock Valley as well. He felt a bit reluctant to declare that he believed in her, but in actual fact he probably did.

Roswaal too had been one of his comrades whom he’d fought alongside with in the Civil War. There was no questioning that.

Theresia: “That place also has a lot of Witchbeasts living in the perennial fog… Do you think a clue to wake Carol can really be found in a place like that?”

Wilhelm: “You think it’s a trap he deliberately showed off to lure anyone trailing him in? For sure that would be a plan that would match up with that bastard’s rotten nature, but…”

Stride might have let Orphe acquire that information and set a trap to capture all of the people pursuing him from the Kingdom in one proverbial net. For certain he was the kind who’d be capable of doing that.

However—

Wilhelm: “No matter how cautious we are of that, Grimm isn’t going to stay put. There’s no way I am going to send him out alone in the fog.”

Theresia: “…Grimm-kun has been constantly blaming himself, hasn’t he?”

Wilhelm: “You aren’t one who can speak about others either.”

Theresia, having been concerned about Grimm’s emotional state, had completely shunted her own self aside. But, in terms of being sick and worried for Carol, Theresia rivalled him too.

Theresia: "You know you sound really like yourself when you start speaking like that. You just used to argue with Carol all day… Aren't you lonely without her now?"

Wilhelm: "I'm just as surprised at myself too, though."

He'd never expected he'd feel so lonely not hearing Carol's quibbling. Besides, even if he put the matter of Carol aside, there's no way he could overlook Shamrock Valley.

Wilhelm: "A combination of Stride and the Witch is just about the worst thing I can imagine. In a sense they're a more ill-natured duo than her and Valga… If they were all together I'd have no idea what the hell'd happen."

Theresia: "…Could Carol too have ended up like father did?"

Theresia, who showed signs of apprehension, mentioned that because of the stuff that had happened during their honeymoon. — Back at Picoutatte when they'd first come face to face with Stride, Theresia's father, Bertol, had been gripped by the ring's curse and his very life had almost been at risk.

Even if Theresia was similarly uneasy when looking at the comatose Carol, it didn't serve any use.

Wilhelm: "Just like with what happened to our Honored Father, the diagnoses that mages like Garritch gave differed from the usual kind. With all these kinds of things we have no choice but to get them from Stride's mind directly."

Theresia: "I understand… So please, even if you push yourself, come back safely okay?"

Wilhelm: "Don't you usually tell me to not push myself?"

Theresia: "Don't you still push yourself whenever I say that?"

Wilhelm: "…It depends on the time and situation."

Wilhelm was aware that he usually pushed himself too hard. Since Theresia knew that too she replied with "I know right?"

She then turned to the front, and said:

Theresia: “Because you’re you, you’ll end up pushing yourself. I won’t ask you to do anything you can’t do. But I’d like to hear you promise me that you’ll come back safely.”

Wilhelm: “…”

Theresia: “Mphm.”

Wilhelm didn’t reply to the smiling Theresia with words, instead he replied by gently bringing her into his firm embrace. Though it surprised Theresia at first, she then put her head on Wilhelm’s chest straight after.

They broke the embrace after a while, biting down their reluctance to let go of each other.

Wilhelm: “You and Carol will be protected by Bordeaux’s men while I’m gone. It’ll probably get a bit stuffy, but please bear with it.”

Theresia: “Honestly though, it’d be better to let them guard other people of importance than me. Like why not…”

Wilhelm: “I don’t want to hear any more of this from you. This is mine, Bordeaux and everyone’s final decision on the matter.”

The words that she’d have followed up with would have probably been related to her Divine Protection of the Sword Saint. Even if she didn’t say it, they were fully aware of these things.

Theresia, who had been placed under their protection, was stronger than anyone here.

Wilhelm: “If all goes well, I’ll be back in less than 10 days. I promise you that I’ll definitely come back with results.”

Theresia: “The promise is your safety Wilhelm. As well as Grimm-kun’s, Roswaal-san’s, Conwood-san’s and everyone else’s.”

Wilhelm: “Of course.”

Having been reminded of that, Wilhelm returned his nod without any hesitation this time around. Theresia puffed out her chest in satisfaction at his encouraging response.

Theresia: “Well then, take care my dear. —For the sake of my family, thank you.”

Wilhelm nodded again without checking as if that denoted who it was.

5

They left the Royal Capital and set out to investigate the Shamrock Valley. That was the mission the Zergev Corps had to carry out led by Wilhelm—Or more precisely, the mission of the Corps was to provide escort for the members of the investigation team. And, the members that had been picked out to investigate the Witch’s Refuge included—

???: “—Doesn’t it perhaps remiiiiind you of the time when we first met when we do on-the-spot investigations of the enemy’s territory like this?”

Leading the front, the Corps members stepped through the unsteady earth and cleared her out a path that was easy to walk through. The person who’d spoken out whilst she followed this impromptu path as if she were taking a leisurely stroll was whom they were escorting, was Roswaal.

Still the same as ever, she wore a costume that didn’t appear fit for the occasion of investigating this dangerous area. She would constantly talk to the Zergev Corps who were cautiously combing out the surroundings for danger, especially Wilhelm who was walking beside her.

Of course his placement had been intentional. It made sense to place the strongest Corps member beside the most important one. Wilhelm had ended up getting the short end of the stick thanks to that excuse.

Roswaal: “Back then it was because we went to investigate the Magic Circle in Castor Plain, right? We were investigating all the troublesome stuff left behind by the Demi-Human alliance… It feels like deja-vu.”

Wilhelm: “You never shut up. At this rate you’re gonna run out of breath.”

Roswaal: “No need to worry. I take daily runs to keep myself in tip-top shaaape. If we’re going to keep travelling through poor terrain then I doooon’t intend to lose out to your men.”

Roswaal replied to Wilhelm’s scathingness without sounding particularly concerned. In actual fact, her legs weren’t tired. Whereas the heavily armed Corps members were about to reach their limits before her.

Nonetheless, that wasn’t to say that his men were weak.

—Because the Shamrock Valley which the Zergev Corps had stepped into, that haunt of evil, had already bared its fangs at them.

Wilhelm: “…”

Wilhelm ran his sword spirit through the barely visible surroundings and focused on keeping his troops’ formation.

The valley was full of fog as rumored. The fog itself was more noxious than rumored, it was as if it was trying to sap their strength from them. Something always felt out of place, as if they were being watched by something they couldn’t see. That sensation frayed at their nerves and reduced their alertness levels; if they weren’t careful, they could start losing members of their team to it.

They had to keep their wits about them at all times so it was inevitable that his thoughts turned to worrying about how much energy they had left.

Wilhelm: “Luckily it doesn’t seem to be a Witchbeast paradise like the rumors said.”

Roswaal: “No matter what they are, rumors tend to be stretched. Few people bother to tread into such dangerous areas like Shamrock Valley. It's all too natural that the rumors end up being exaggerated. Weeeell, I can't say that as a rule though, since there are way more Witchbeasts in the Augria Sand Dunes than the rumors say."

Roswaal shrugged her shoulders. Wilhelm gave an indifferent nod and then wordlessly turned to the end of the column where his deputy commander was bringing up the rear.

Although the man's facial expression was indistinguishable in the fog, the drive that exuded from him was hair-raising; it was Grimm. He'd sustained a wound to his throat in the war, but right now he was speaking little (and it had nothing to do with his wound), and his step was heavy-laden.

Though, he'd expected him to be a little bit more optimistic since he was doing this for Carol's sake—

Roswaal: "His self-reproach won't show itself in his actions. If his overly strained nerves led to some sort of accident it would be easy to point fingers at him… Grimm-kun too, as talented as he is, is suffering."

Wilhelm: "Don't go reading into what's in people's minds so casually."

Roswaal: "You don't deny it, I never expected you to become so human. There's a certain charm to you even when you've given up being a sword. Such a pity thouuuuugh."

She spoke to Wilhelm in typical Roswaal-fashion as if there was something meaningful in what she'd said.

